Quote-of-the-week: "Sen. Taft is not built for whistle-stop touring," said GOP Sen. Smith of New Jersey.

THE whistle-stopping was under way. Taft began a 19-state air tour and Truman leaves Washington by train Sept. 27 on an 8500-mile tour to the Far West. Ike's special train was criss-crossing the Middle West, while Stevenson at the weekend was on the East Coast.

The General picked up the American Medical Association's "socialized medicine" line, bag and baggage, called it a "foolish experiment." Truman replied with a new call for prepaid medical insurance as "a goal of enterprise, American enterprise." He said Ike has "horse and buggy ideas."

Footnote: Albert J. Fitzgerald, president of the CIO-expelled United Electrical Workers and chief of the 1948 Wallace labor committee, dismissed the Progressive Party as "not the answer to the working man's problems."

'Bundles-For-Nixon' Club Pays Off For Senator

A "BUNDLES-for-Nixon" club of Southern California big businessmen has paid off $16,000 to $17,000 in bills for Sen. Nixon in the past two years.

Revelation of the slush fund for Nixon came as both the GOP vice presidential nominee and Gen. Eisenhower were whistle-stopping denouncing "graft and corruption" with every breath.

The story of a "millionaires' club" that helped foot the bills for Nixon since his election to the Senate was revealed late last week in the New York Post and Los Angeles Daily News. It came from Atty. Dana C. Smith, who paid the bills for the Nixon "trust fund," and he said the published reports were "essentially correct."

Nixon said he was just saving the taxpayers money.

Ike kept mum on the pay off, voiced more generalities about "boodlers" and an "honest deal."

But from Democratic National Chairman Stephen Mitchell came a demand that Nixon resign as GOP vice presidential nominee "so that he can be replaced on the ticket by someone who has not lost his sense of public morals."

Nixon, Mitchell said, "knows that it is morally wrong." Eisenhower, he said, "knows that this is morally wrong. The American people know that this is morally wrong." And he called on Ike to observe his recent statement that he would "rather not be elected president than to be elected by the help of those who have lost their sense of public morals."

The "bundles-for-Nixon" club, according to the published reports, began operating soon after Nixon defeated Helen Gahagan Douglas in the 1950 California senatorial contest. An estimated $1 million was spent for Nixon in that heated election, and part of it was handled—irregularly—by Henry "The Dutchman" Grunewald, a notorious Washington lobbyist who was working for Sen. Brewster's Senate GOP Campaign Committee.

Some of the biggest financial and business interests in Los Angeles, led by Norman Chandler of the Times, raised the dough for Nixon's high-powered campaign.

And—by the accounts last week—they've continued pungling up to help Dick make ends meet.

As Atty. Smith said, Nixon just couldn't do "the kind of a job that he wanted to do and that we wanted him to do" on a Senator's $12,500 a year plus a tax-free expense account of $2500. So, he continued, "between 50 and 100 people" gave up to $500 a year to the Nixon fund. And the $16,000 to $17,000 went to pay off various assorted Nixon bills.

Why the largess for Richard? Smith explained:

"Dick is the outstanding salesman for free enterprise in the Senate. He is a great speaker and a great personality. . . . Dick did just what we wanted him to do."

Taft Likes Ike

Gen. Eisenhower has rung up the white flag of surrender a full seven weeks before the 1952 elections. He has capitulated, completely and fully, to the GOP Old Guard.

Sen. Taft, who negotiated the unconditional surrender imposed on the Eisenhower forces, wore his typical ear-to-ear grin when he announced the terms. No wonder. The General fully agrees with Taft's interpretation that the 1952 issue is "liberty against creeping socialization in every domestic field."

That is the same phony issue that the Republicans have used in every campaign since Franklin Roosevelt was elected in 1932. It is just as phony in 1952 as in years past.

The issue, in fact, is democracy versus galloping reaction.

Galloping reaction, as the Old Guard Taft Republicans have stated its terms, is very clear. It would undermine and destroy the structure of the New Deal and the Fair Deal. It would nibble away, as quickly as possible, the social gains of two decades.

Galloping reaction would weaken, if not cripple, democratic trade unions. It would threaten the high wage policies which have done so much to produce American prosperity, and bring back vivid memories of Hoovervilles and depression breadlines. And, in the world at large, reactionary isolationism would turn sour the efforts of free peoples to ward off Soviet aggression and infiltration.

Taft is the living symbol of galloping reaction, and Ike is now his captive. The results were quick a-coming.

Ike is now, on the record, in support of Taft-Hartley principles. Ike now embraces the ranting Sen. Jenner of Indiana, a charter member of the team of galloping reactionaries. Ike now pleads with Joe McCarthy, one of the fastest of the galloping reactionaries, to campaign in his behalf.

The crusade about which Ike talked, and which won him the GOP nomination, is now all but forgotten. In its place is a crafty, determined effort to place a Taft-Eisenhower partnership in control of Congress and the White House.

In that arrangement, Ike would be the very junior partner. The distinguished five star general of World War II would take his orders from that hard-boiled top sergeant of the Old Guard, Robert Taft. Their battle plan would be the furiously anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal GOP platform.

That blueprint for reaction can be defeated by the election of Stevenson and Sparkman and a liberal Congress. Events of the last week make their victory even more a matter of crucial necessity for America and the free world.

Cy Ching Retires

The federal government will lose a truly great public servant when Cyrus Ching retires this month, at the age of 76, as head of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

For five years now, Cy Ching has moved in an area of inflamed feeling with a constant passion for calmness and fairness in the handling of labor-management disputes. Out of his great experience—as a streetcar motorman in Boston, as a corporation executive and as a government official—Ching preached the philosophy that there is a rational settlement for every dispute.

He did not always succeed—no man could—though his record of successes is long and rewarding. But in every case, Cy Ching showed himself a truly democratic American; a fine servant of the people; and, above all, a wise and humanitarian citizen.

High Price Of Hams

While Gen. Eisenhower is flashing a full-size dollar bill and what he calls a "Democratic dollar," worth, he says, 25c, Sen. Nixon, chimes in that "living costs" are one of the five big issues of the campaign.

We'll agree with Nixon—who hates to "'fess up" that he once worked for the OPA—about high prices. But we suggest that before Ike and Nixon go any further, they get together—at least to give Nixon time to repair his voting record.

For the record shows that Nixon—way back in '48 when he was in the House, and since '51 in the Senate—has voted against every measure to establish effective price controls, to curb food profiteering and to hold the lid on rents.

Generalities, Ike will find, are safer than the voting record for the whistle-stops.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY, President — ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, Executive Vice President — JAMES B. CAREY, Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

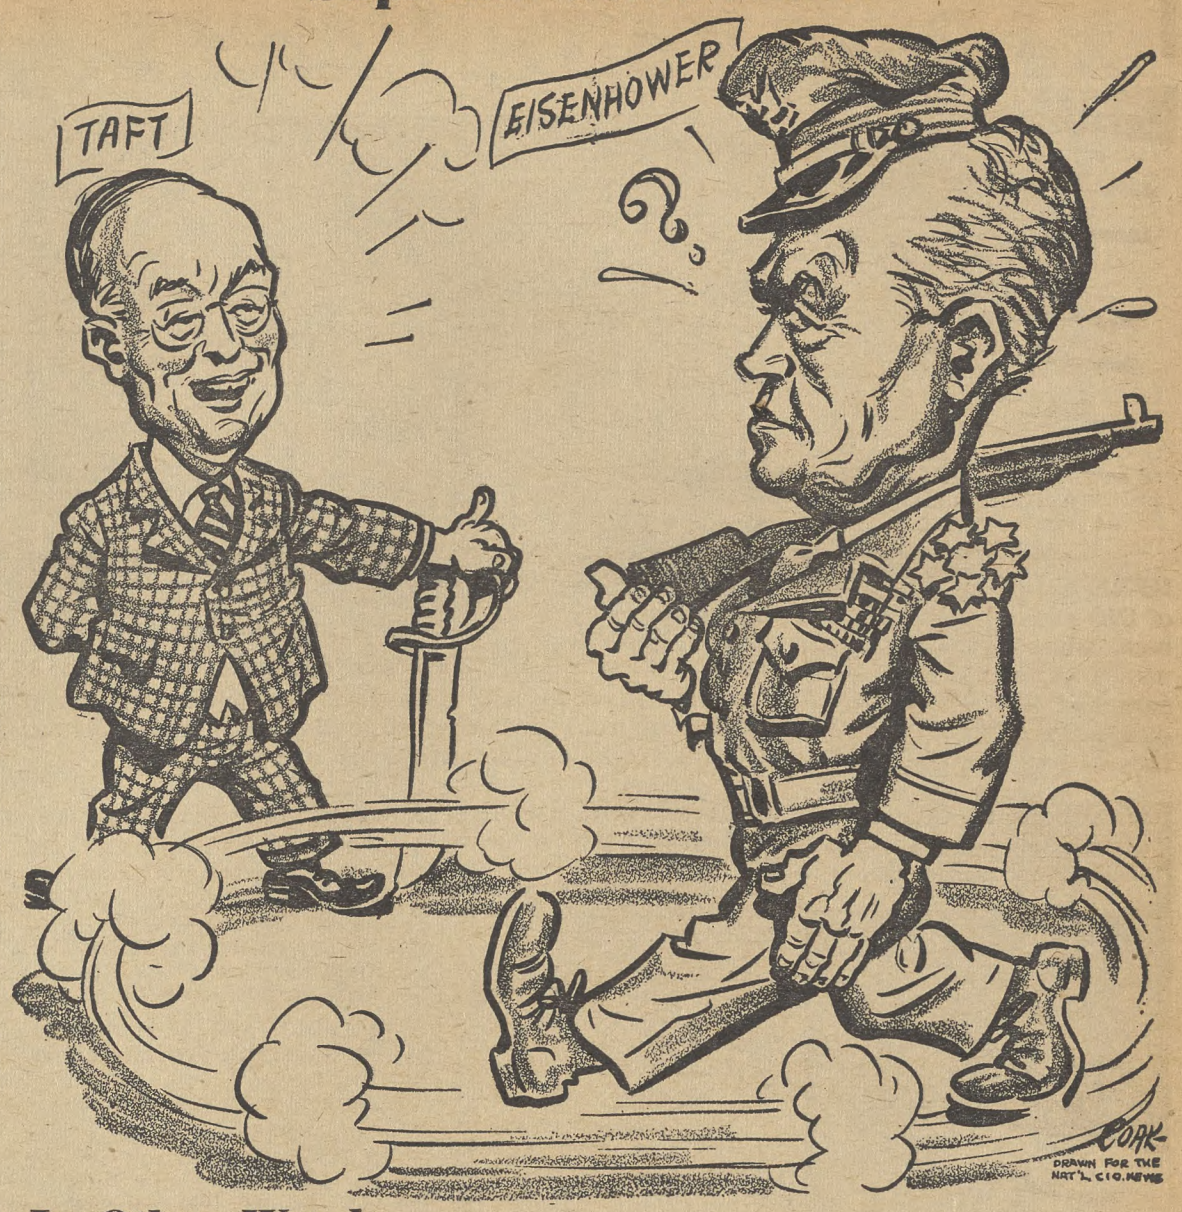
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Vol. XV — September 22, 1952 — No. 38

Supreme Commander



In Other Words—

Speedup a la Russe

The following is from a summary of a pamphlet written by Otto Stolz for the German Federation of Labor (DGB) contrasting productivity programs as applied in Free Europe and in the Soviet countries.

By OTTO STOLZ

THE TERM "productivity" has an opposite meaning on the other side of the Iron Curtain.

Evidence of this fact mounts each day as the Red drive for more production muscles its way through the factories and industries of the Soviet satellites.

Here in the West, "increased productivity" means the production of more with the investment of less—less capital, less materials, or, most important, less labor. In fact, the fundamental goal of the West's productivity program is to provide more goods for more people and to do so without asking them to work harder.

Unlike the Communist community, the Free World does not idealize work—work is not an end in itself. The Free World wants, first of all, a better life for everyone; the less work the better.

Instead of driving people to exhaustion, the West is realizing its productivity program through improvements in methods, machines and materials. And the reward for the worker, instead of a Stalin decoration, will be a higher standard of living.

Producing more with the investment of less means making more goods available at a lower cost. It means that the men who produce these goods will be able to purchase and enjoy more of them, because if costs can be lowered, so can prices. As more goods are sold, the economy as a whole is stimulated. More jobs are created, profits rise and so do wages. . . .

This is where another institution of the West plays its part—the free trade union. In the West, these unions are beholden to no one, except their members. They see to it that those members get a fair share of the benefits resulting from an increase in productivity. Not so in the Red World where labor unions, like everyone else, are told what to do by the State.

All these principles are in striking contrast to those of the Russian campaign. The differences are fundamental. In the West, the object is to improve the lot of the average man so that he isn't forced to trade his liberties for a home and bread. But in the East, the basic objective is to carry out a political program of world domination. This is not fiction. It is spelled out in the published doctrines of international communism.

As a result of this Red ideology, the economies of the Soviet satellites are managed from the Kremlin in such a way as to serve Russia and her program. The lot of the average man is at best of secondary importance.

The plight of the satellites is accentuated by the fact that almost without exception, their living standards formerly were considerably higher than those of Russia itself. Now, these nations and their hapless citizens are being bled for the benefit of the boss to the East. In this category, Czechoslovakia and Eastern Germany are outstanding examples.

To give this shabby picture a coat of gilt, the Reds have taken to creating "Heroes of Work." In Eastern Germany, Adolf Hennecke was the first. He was a miner. He has been followed by "heroes" in most of the other major industries. "Heroes" are created by picking a man likely to play ball, giving him specially prepared tools, setting up a smooth day's work, calling in the press and having him break the existing production record by as wide a margin as possible.

THE "HERO" is then rewarded with a soft administrative job. The obvious angle is, "If Adolf can do it, so can you," and the minimum acceptable standard for production is placed at Adolf's level.

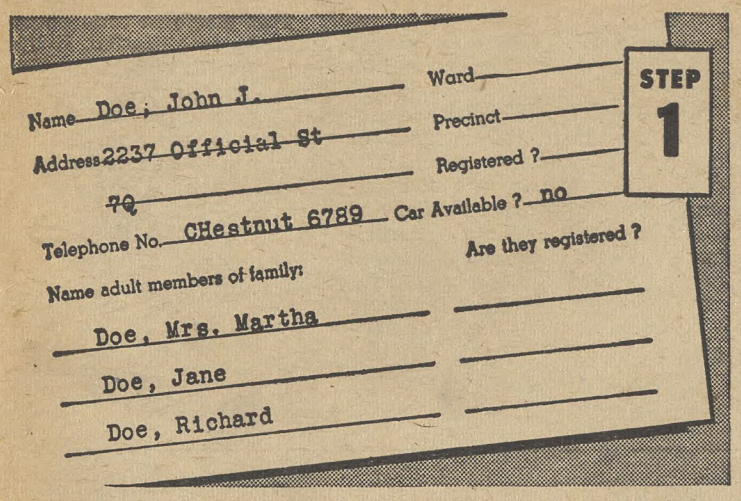
Another gimmick used to squeeze the last efforts out of East German workers is that of "voluntary," unpaid overtime work. To give this a legitimate look, the "Council for Mutual Economic Aid" has the trade unions take the initiative. A proposal for the completion of a work project is submitted to the membership and a deadline is set, such as Stalin's birthday or the anniversary of the Russian Revolution. No cases have been reported where the members have seen fit to reject the proposal.

East Berlin is being rebuilt largely in this manner . . .

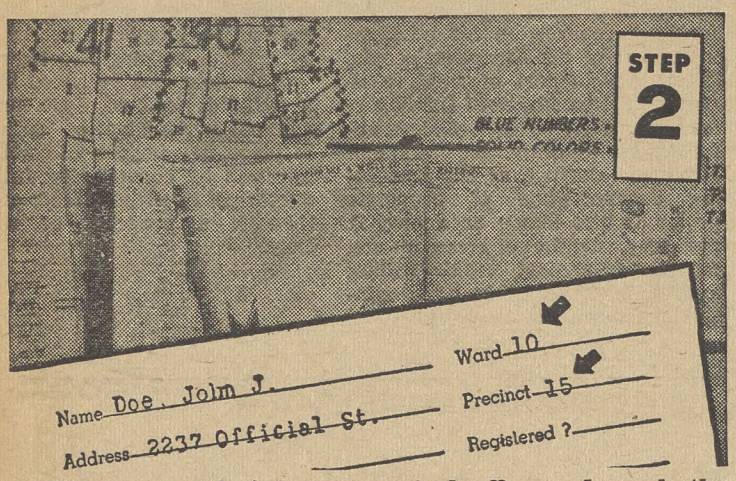
It is every free man's right to ask "What's in it for me?" The West knows this, and in its productivity program has found the answer.

But on the other side of the Iron Curtain, the question is ruled out.

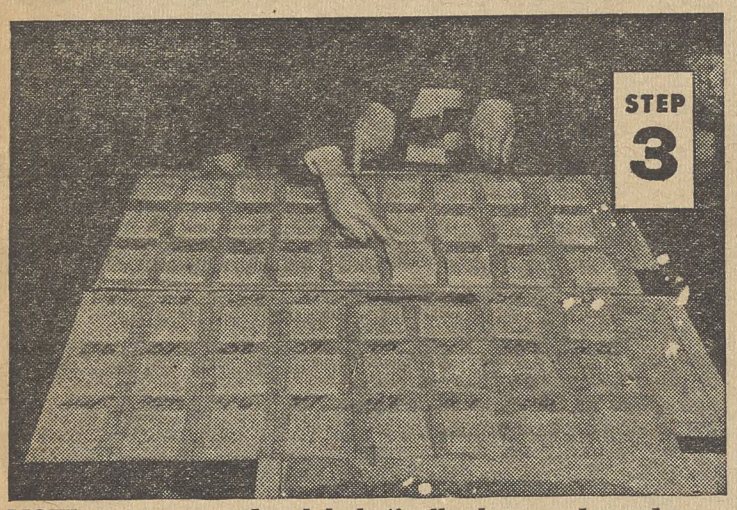
The Choice Before Us On Nov. 4



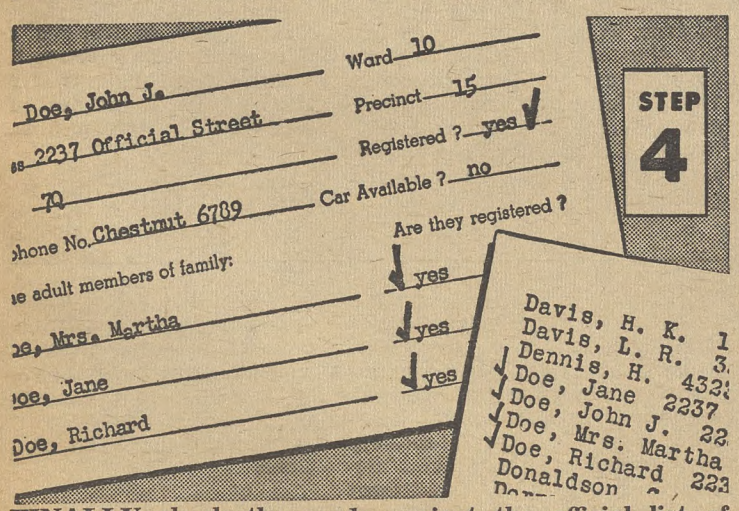
HERE is a step-by-step program for systematic checking of CIO membership rolls to uncover non-registered members, who can't vote unless they register. First place names of all CIO members on cards with blanks for names of family members, address, code mark for union membership, ward and precinct, and whether or not they are registered.



THEN turn cards into one central office and mark the cards with ward and precinct numbers. The city directory may list these. If not, get a map on which wards and precincts are marked.



NOW arrange cards alphabetically by wards and precincts. It is advisable to sort the cards by wards and precinct and later place cards in alphabetical order.



FINALLY check the cards against the official list of registered voters. Send a list of unregistered union members to each shop steward, who will urge them to register. Follow up with letters to unregistered members.

Platforms are made to run on—and to stand on. That's the attitude of CIO. And the national platforms—along with past voting records in Congress—are the best clue to the basic political program of the two major parties.

Here is a comparison of major planks in the platforms of the Democratic and Republican parties, how they stack up alongside the proposals which were presented by CIO.

In the first column, is a digest of CIO proposals as presented by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther to the recent national conventions. In the two following columns are the Democratic and GOP platforms in summary. This comparison was prepared by the CIO Political Action Committee:

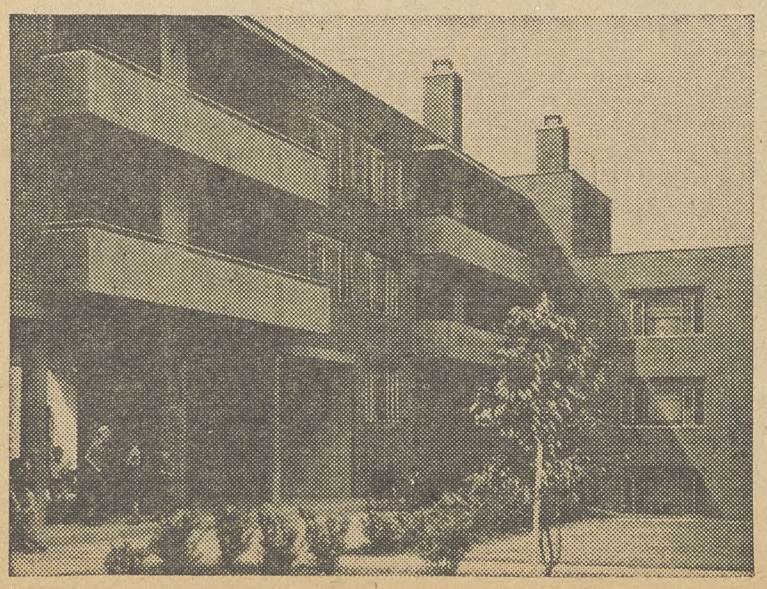
CIO Proposals	Demo Platform	GOP Platform
PREAMBLE
We urge both parties to assure the working people of America that they will be accorded the treatment they deserve for having made the greatest contribution to our way of life and our national well-being. Specifically, we asked the Democratic Party to get back to the Roosevelt-Truman New Deal and Fair Deal policies.	This preamble proclaims once again the Roosevelt-Truman policies for which we asked. It specifically reaffirms encouragement of organization of labor unions and of collective bargaining. It likewise calls for a rising standard of living and pays tribute to the productivity of American workers.	This preamble was devoted entirely to criticism of the Democratic Party principles and policies. Specifically the Republicans charged the Democrats with having a goal of national socialism and of fostering class strife.
HUMAN RIGHTS
We ask both parties to endorse the report of the President's Commission on Civil Rights and to disavow the political coalition between reactionary Democrats and reactionary Republicans.	No statement.	No statement.
THE SENATE FILIBUSTER
We charge that the present cloture rule in the Senate places a veto of any progressive legislation in the hands of a vicious minority. We ask that the rules be amended to provide for majority decision after ample opportunity for free and relevant debate.	The platform has this to say: "In order that the will of the American people may be expressed upon all legislative proposals we urge that action be taken at the beginning of the 83rd Congress to improve congressional procedures so that majority rule prevails."	No statement.
TAFT-HARTLEY LAW
We denounce this law as a legalized attack on the basic human rights of the wage earners of America. We charge both parties with failure to repeal the law because of the reactionary Republican-Dixiecrat coalition. We ask for laws that would improve and extend collective bargaining as a fixture in the American way of life.	This platform advocates the outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law as inadequate, unworkable and unfair; as an arbitrary interference with collective bargaining; as being loaded in favor of management; as a revival of the injunction as a weapon against labor; as a disrupter of traditional American hiring practices and as an outright interference in the right of workers to organize unions of their own choice. The platform recommends an entirely new legislative approach toward the entire labor-management problem.	This platform expressly calls for retention of the Taft-Hartley law and sets forth its alleged virtues in detail. Amendments to be developed by time and experience are recommended. The platform denounces the President's seizure of plants to force the settlement of labor disputes.
CIVIL RIGHTS
We charge both parties with complete failure to carry out their weak civil rights pledges of 1948. We again restate our demands for: 1. Federal FEPC. 2. Federal anti-lynching legislation. 3. Federal anti-poll tax legislation. 4. Safeguards against segregation in all federal appropriations for state aid. 5. Strengthening federal civil rights laws to protect persons and property against any attacks by anyone. 6. Complete elimination of discrimination and segregation in the Armed Forces.	This platform promises federal action under the Constitution. After pledging continued support to non-segregation in the Armed Forces and greater activity by the Dept. of Justice, the platform says this: "At the same time we favor federal legislation effectively to secure these rights for everyone: 1. The right to equal opportunity toward employment. 2. The right to security of persons. 3. The right to full and equal participation in the nation's political life, free from arbitrary restraints. We also favor legislation to perfect existing federal civil rights statutes and to strengthen the administrative machinery for the protection of civil rights."	This platform proclaims the doctrine of States' Rights. Specifically, the Republican platform says this: "We will prove our good faith by: 1. Appointing qualified persons without distinction of race, religion or national origin to responsible positions in the government. 2. Federal action toward the elimination of lynching. 3. Federal action toward the elimination of poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. 4. Appropriate action to end segregation in the District of Columbia. "Enacting federal legislation to further just and equitable treatment in the area of discriminatory practices. Federal action should not duplicate state efforts to end such practices; should not set up another huge bureaucracy."

More →

You read the platforms

Bread-and-butter issues like jobs and fair play for all . . .

. . . high prices for food and our basic living standards . . .



. . . decent homes like these, an end to rent extortion . . .

MOBILIZATION

CIO Proposals

We call for complete military and economic mobilization against the threat of totalitarian aggression. We point out that we can meet the full requirements of military production while building up the basic strength of our economy. We call for establishment of a dynamic and expanding economy that will assure full employment when producing for peace as well as for war. We demand the opportunity for small business to make its full contribution and to maintain its rightful place in our economy.

Demo Platform

This platform reaffirms its intention never again to permit large-scale unemployment and to assure the transition from defense production to peacetime production without the ravages of unemployment. It specifically pledges the maintenance of maximum employment, production and purchasing power in the American economy. It pledges expansion of the military forces required for national security and derides those who say we cannot afford the expense.

GOP Platform

This platform calls entirely military mobilization. It limits reference to civilian requirem to adequate support of all mili means required, including ma power to perform their ap priate tasks in relation to the tional defense.

INFLATION

CIO Proposals

We ask for adequate controls to hold inflationary forces in check. We denounce control loopholes for special interests. We stated that wage stabilization is tolerable only when price controls and rent controls are actually and effectively operated. We say wage stabilization should not be used to destroy collective bargaining. We likewise call for adequate controls of credit expansion.

Demo Platform

This platform pledges continuance of workable controls as long as the emergency requires them. The platform denounces the "weakening amendments which the Republicans in Congress have forced into our anti-inflation laws."

This platfrom endorses the free enterprise system but gives credit for its prosperity to the purchasing power of the American people. It pledges support of small business as the backbone of the American free enterprise. It pledges enforcement of anti-trust laws and expresses alarm over the increasing concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. It pledges protection of investors and consumers against unfair selling and trade practices. It urges continued federal rent control.

GOP Platform

This platform pledges sup of small business. It lik pledges enforcement of anti nopoly and unfair competi statutes.

Its only mention of control as follows:

"We will oppose federal control except in those where the expansion of def production has been accompan by critical housing shortages.

"Our goal is a balanced bud a reduced national debt, an nomical administration and a in taxes. We believe in combat inflation by encouraging full duction of goods and food, and through a program of rest tions."

TAXES

CIO Proposals

We ask for federal taxes to meet the cost of our national operation on a pay-as-we-go basis. We call for the taxing of the standards of luxury of the few before the standards of living of the many. We ask for the closing of loopholes which favor the wealthy and favor industry. We demand restoration of ability-to-pay principles. We oppose the federal sales tax.

Demo Platform

This platform supports "fair and equitable taxation" and opposes the federal sales tax. It supports the principle of ability-to-pay. It calls for closing the loopholes which favor special groups.

GOP Platform

This platform calls for reall tion of fields of taxation to al greater fiscal freedom to states and municipalities. It ca for freedom for the Federal serve system in the field of cr without any control from Treasury or the President. It li wise calls for reestablishment the gold standard.

HOUSING

CIO Proposals

We point out the failure of the private building industry to meet the housing needs of the people. At the same time we declare that the public housing program has been sabotaged by Congress at the behest of real estate and mortgage loan interests. We demand a necessary program of public housing.

Demo Platform

This platform pledges programs of private housing, public low-rent housing, slum clearance, urban redevelopment and farm housing. It denounces the special interests groups which have prospered through government guarantees of mortgages at the expense of housing for low-income families.

GOP Platform

"With local cooperation we s aid slum clearance."

HEALTH

CIO Proposals

We demand enactment of a National Health Insurance program to provide preventive and curative medical care for all the people. We point out that such a program could include full free choice by physician and patient, and also for full participation by the people in solving the national health problem.

Demo Platform

This platform does not specifically endorse National Health Insurance. It does recognize the fact that the costs of medical care are prohibitive for millions of people. The platform endorses the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation, which is seeking a solution of this urgent problem.

GOP Platform

This platform states its outri opposition to National Health surance and equivocates on question of federal aid to hosp construction. It says nothi about federal aid to medi education.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CIO Proposals

We demand expansion and development of the Social Security system to meet the needs of all the people. We point out that delay in realization of a full program is false economy. We urge a full federal Social Security program providing for old age benefits, unemployment compensation, compensation for the physically handicapped, care of the totally disabled, the blind, and dependent children.

Demo Platform

The platform pledges extension and improvement of the Social Security program with specific mention of old age and survivors insurance, unemployment insurance, public assistance, and encouragement of private plans mutually agreed on to complement the federal Social Security program.

GOP Platform

This platform proposes only t preserve present benefits by st ping inflation. It favors extensio of coverage for those justly en titled to it. It promises a stud of universal pay-as-we-go pensio plans.

CIO Proposals	Demo Platform	GOP Platform

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

We demand federal action in the campaign against accident and occupational disease, and sponsorship of a uniform workmen's compensation system, rehabilitation of the physically handicapped and encouragement of the respective states to assume fully the responsibilities which many of them are shirking at the present time.

This platform limits itself to pledging expansion of the program to increase employment opportunities for physically handicapped persons.

No statement.

EDUCATION

We point out the failure of states or local communities makes it necessary for the federal government to act. We urge the highest possible degree of federal aid to every level of education.

This platform states clearly that every American child regardless of color, national origin, economic status or place of residence should have full educational opportunity.

This platform endorses "States' Rights" in the field of popular education. No statement on federal aid to education.

CHILDREN AND YOUTH

We ask for federal programs that will enable American children to grow up into healthy, educated and secure men and women.

This platform calls for adequate provision by government for the needs of children who cannot be cared for by their parents or private agencies. It pledges extension of federal maternity, child health and welfare services.

No statement.

WOMEN

We demand equal status for women with continued special protection afforded by federal and state laws. We oppose the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution.

This platform endorses the constitutional amendment which we oppose but calls for equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

This platform endorses the constitutional amendment which we oppose but calls for equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

MIGRATORY LABOR

We demand federal action to assure an adequate supply of labor for agricultural production with protection of such workers by minimum wage protection, regulation of labor contracts, removal of exclusions under the Social Security Act, unemployment insurance.

This platform pledges improvement of employment conditions of migatory workers and increased protection of their safety and health.

No statement.

FOREIGN POLICY

We declare there can be no return to isolationism for America. We call for the building of a military power by ourselves and our allies capable of crushing aggression wherever it appears. We warn of the fatal pitfall of false economy. We point out that we can defeat Communist tyranny by proving that under democracy men can have both bread and freedom.

We call for continuance and extension of the economic recovery program for the democracies of Western Europe. We demand programs to aid people of underdeveloped lands. We call for strengthening of the United Nations. We voice our opposition to barriers to international trade. We call for extension of the reciprocal trade agreements. We also call for immigration laws that will prove our faith in human freedom.

This platform pledges strengthening of the United Nations. It rejects the doctrine of isolation and calls for strengthening of our allies, endorses the Truman doctrine, the defense of the Americas, the Marshall Plan, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Point Four, the resistance to aggression in Korea, the Pacific Security Pact and the Mutual Security program. It rejects abandonment of the once-free peoples of the European satellite nations. It calls for formally declaring genocide an international crime.

It calls for expanding the Voice of America program, for the support of the nations of the Middle East, for continued assistance to Israel for economic development.

It endorses the good neighbor policy in the Western Hemisphere. It also reaffirms the Wilsonian principle of the right of national self-determination. It opposes any weakening of the reciprocal trade agreements.

A large part of the plank in this platform is devoted to denunciation of Democratic foreign policy and mistakes. Its only reference to Korea is a statement that the situation need not have happened.

The leading concrete proposal is "policies and actions based on enlightened self-interest and animated by courage, self-respect, steadfastness, vision, purpose, competence and spiritual faith." The platform pledges our friendly influence in Western Europe to end political and economic divisions, and to encourage and aid the development of collective security forces. The platform pledges an end to the neglect of the Far East. It pledges continued support to the State of Israel.

It pledges strengthening of ties with our American sister republics and giving to the Voice of America a real function. It pledges continued support to the United Nations.

DISHONESTY AND ETHICS

Pointing out that dishonesty has never been the exclusive earmark of any one administration or party, we demand the elimination of corrupt influences at any and every level in our society.

This platform calls for the elimination of pressure by private interests seeking undeserved favors from the government and advocates the strongest penalties against those who try to exert improper influence, and against any who may yield to it.

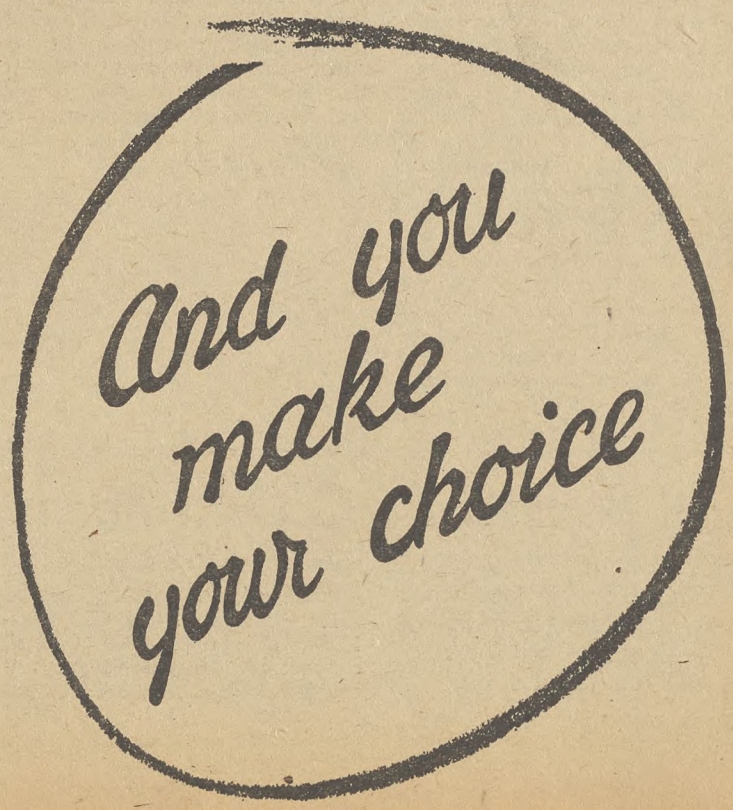
This platform voices a denunciation of current scandals in the Internal Revenue Bureau, in the RFC, in the Department of Agriculture, in the Maritime Commission, and the bribes and pay-offs in contract awards by officials disbursing billions of dollars. The platform pledges an end to corruption.

More →

. . . more schools and a world free of fear for our kids . . .

. . . Adequate health-medical care at a reasonable cost . . .

Security for the aged . . . All these are up to you Nov. 4.



CIO Proposals — Demo Platform — GOP Platform

INTERNAL SECURITY

We demand rejection of the hysterical procedures and denial of basic individual rights that have been foisted upon us in the name of "internal security." We demand that all individuals, government workers and other citizens alike, be afforded the protection of all the rights guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. We denounce the trial of citizens by non-judicial public bodies on accusations of secret informants. We point out that our society is amply protected by existing laws that will protect it against transgressors without resort to un-American procedures by congressional committees, by political demagogues and by private agencies that have secret motives.

This platform deplores and condemns smear attacks upon the character and reputations of government employes. It calls for greater extension of the Civil Service system with adequate pay, sound retirement provisions, good working conditions and opportunity for advancement for government workers.

This platform pledges a personnel program like that of progressive private employers for federal career service. It pledges selection of federal employees under a strengthening merit system. It defines merit as the sole test for promotion in the public service.

NATURAL RESOURCES

We point out the great benefits which TVA has brought to the people of that area and of the nation, and urge the same pattern for similar developments of river valleys elsewhere. On the specific question of production of power, we urge full development by private industry and the public authority alike, to bring low-cost power to the people. We point out that publicly generated power will expand the market to such an extent that unfilled needs can be supplied only by private power utilities. We call for enactment of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Projects. We proclaim the ownership of all the American people of the tidelands oil resources. We demand federal control and regulation of the cutting of timber on private lands to prevent further destruction of our forest resources.

We express our opposition to control by monopolistic interests of the production of atomic materials and atomic power, which have been financed entirely by billions of dollars paid into public funds by American people. We ask for assurance that this great natural resource not be turned over to private corporations to extort tribute from the American people.

This platform reaffirms the New Deal policies for flood control, navigation, irrigation, power, drainage, soil conservation and the creation of new small-family-size farms. The platform cites the progress of the Democratic Party in the arid and semi-arid states of the West as well as in the Tennessee Valley. The platform pledges forest conservation and land management and the use of water from federal sources for irrigation, domestic and industrial purposes. The platform pledges federal programs for conservation of minerals and fuels. It pledges improved progress for domestic fisheries and for the restoration of bird, animal and fish life along with the development of added recreation centers.

In the field of atomic energy the platform pledges vigorous and non-partisan civilian administration; for the development of nuclear energy for civilian purposes; the building of atomic and hydrogen fire power for national defense against aggression; the exercise of every effort to bring about bona fide international control and inspection of all atomic weapons. This platform makes no mention of tidelands oil.

This platform pledges full and orderly development and conservation of our natural resources. Also of our fisheries. This platform pledges restoration to the States of the rights to tidelands oil. The platform endorses execution of water resources programs approved by Congress with immediate priority for those with defense significance, those in critical flood and water shortage areas, and those substantially completed. The platform urges eventual local ownership of federally sponsored reimbursable water projects.

The platform vigorously opposes the establishment of "all powerful federal socialistic valley authorities."

The platform favors restoration of the Republican land policy "which provided opportunity for ownership by citizens to promote the highest land use."

The platform is completely silent on atomic power.

POLITICAL REFORMS

We point out that virtually all of our American electoral machinery needs overhauling so as to keep our methods of selecting government in pace with the times. We specifically ask for the elimination of the electoral college and election of our President and Vice President by majority direct popular vote of the people.

We present a detailed case on the assignment of members of Congress to congressional committees on the sole basis of length of service. We declare that the party in control is charged with the obligation to insure that on every congressional committee there will be a working majority of members who will honestly and energetically strive to carry out the programs which the people have endorsed.

This platform is completely silent on the matter of election of congressional committee members. It does urge a non-partisan study of possible improvements on nominating and electing the President of the United States. It pledges continued support of constitutional government and further efforts to streamline the federal government by continuing reorganization of various governmental departments.

This platform pledges thorough reorganization of the federal government in accordance with the principles set forth in the Report of the Hoover Commission. It is silent on electoral and congressional organization reforms.

Bard Backed By CIO In Pennsylvania

THE PENNSYLVANIA CIO Council last week announced its support of Judge Guy K. Bard for U. S. Senator from that state.

Bard, a Democrat, is seeking the seat now held by Senator Martin (R.). The CIO News Voting Record of the 82nd Congress shows Martin with an all "wrong" voting record.

Harry Boyer, State CIO president, also announced Council support of Harry M. Montgomery for judge of the state supreme court; Genevieve Blatt for auditor general and George Leader for state treasurer.

"We believe the election of these candidates will best serve the interests of all the people," Boyer said.

"On the basis of their past records in behalf of decent, liberal legislation," he added, "their election will better enhance the social and economic well-being of all the people of this great state."

Facts Are Weapons And PAC Has 'Em

Speakers Book of Facts

This handbook, crammed with facts, includes a factual analysis of the records and platforms of both parties. The 310-page book covers all major issues in the campaign. $1 but only 60c to union members.

'52 Facts!

These hard-hitting little books, which slip into your shirt pocket, cover the issues most talked about—Prices, Taxes, Politics, Corruption, Taft-Hartley, Civil Rights, Foreign Policy. 3c each, $25 a 1000.

Booklets

"Battle in Korea," "Facts on Adlai Stevenson," "Registration Manual," all can play a vital role in the campaign. 3c each.

Picture Books

"The Good Old Days" recalls the facts of hunger and unemployment before the New Deal. "Marcus Carcass, the Meat Ball King" is the story of high prices in America. Both free.

Leaflets

"Everything We Have" details the common interest of workers and farmers. "For Roses" tells what we want and why. "How They Stack Up" measures the platforms of both parties beside the policies of CIO. (All for 1c each). "Who, Me?" describes the housewife's political role. (2 for a penny.)

"How to . . . "

A smashing new series of PAC leaflets just off the press. Easy to ready, carry and give away. They tell you "How to . . . Cut You Food Bill, Rent and Tax Bill" . . . "How to Stay Healthy, Get a Raise, Get Along in the World, and Get Along With Your Wife" and "What To Do When You're Out of Work." They are 2 for 1c.

Order Now!

A complete list of publications and other available materials will be supplied on request. Write to

CIO Political Action Committee
1346 Connecticut Ave.
Washington 6, D. C.

The Woman's Angle—

Time To Stop Griping— And To Start Voting

By ESTHER MURRAY
CIO-PAC Representative

WOMEN can change the world they live in with their votes.

Today in this country there are 1.6 million more women of voting age than men. But women won't have any influence unless they go to the polls on election day.

We gripe over our back fences about war and taxes and high prices.

When meat prices go through the roof we're the ones who sit up nights worrying about balancing the budget.

But not enough of us do anything about it.

Most of the things we gripe about depend largely on the kind of person we send to Congress and to the White House.

The way our Congressman votes affects our food budget just as surely as summer follows spring.

We can cut our food bills by eating nothing but baked beans. But a better way is to elect officials who will vote for firm price controls. Then we can balance our budgets and eat steak too.

There are more things to do than vote, too—although that's the most important of all. We can get out and urge our friends to vote. Strangers, too.

Women make wonderful doorbell ringers! Political managers frankly admit that one woman is worth 10 men in getting out the vote.

In the first place, women genuinely enjoy the job. We usually know our neighbors better than our husbands do.

One reason is that we have so much to talk about with other women. Good schools, decent housing, lunch programs for children—these are political issues.

We hear a lot of talk these days about brooms.

Any housewife knows that the most important thing about a broom is who's on the business end of it, doing the sweeping.

Whatever Happens . . . Remember to Register!

Insurance Workers Ask Full Union Charter

By KENNETH YOUNG

THE CIO Insurance Workers are getting ready to step out on their own as an independent and full-fledged international union in the white collar field.

With more than two years of solid growth as an organizing committee behind them, the Insurance & Allied Workers met in Philadelphia and unanimously gave their executive board power to apply for a CIO international union charter and to call a constitutional convention to organize as a separate union.

More than 160 delegates and observers, insurance salesmen from all parts of the nation, joined in the business-packed IAWOC conference. Sessions were held in Philadelphia Sept. 12-13.

Unanimously they voted preparations to expand into full union status.

Perhaps even overshadowing the decision to apply for a CIO charter was the stepping down of CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood as chairman of the organizing committee.

Richard T. Leonard, former IAWOC-CIO secretary-treasurer, was named to fill the post vacated by Haywood. James E. Brisbane, union comptroller, was picked as the new secretary-treasurer.

In resigning as chairman, Haywood said his increased duties as CIO executive vice president made the move necessary.

"When this organization was born," he recalled, "I told you I was not running for any office. The time has now come for me to demonstrate my word."

Speaking slowly and with obvious emotion, Haywood told the delegates: "I have served as chairman of many organizing committees which are today great unions in the CIO family. But this, I think, will be my last organizational campaign.

"I love all of the unions I helped found. I will always love you in the same manner and I will help you in every way I can. I want you to know that I shall never forget you."

MANS GAVEL — Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, stepped down as chairman of IAWOC.

INSURANCE WORKERS MEET—Here's view of delegates at Philadelphia conference of CIO Insurance & Allied Workers, who drafted plans to become full-fledged international union after two years as a temporary organizing committee. Richard T. Leonard was named new chairman of IAWOC, succeeding Allan S. Haywood.

Other speakers at the conference were Robert T. Creasey, assistant secretary of labor, and Irving Abramson, IAWOC-CIO counsel.

Creasey told the delegates their union could make tremendous strides not only for themselves, but for all unorganized white collar workers.

Abramson's reviewed the IAWOC's present fight against the unfair and discriminatory sections of the New York State insurance law which limit the compensation of insurance agents.

Beside endorsing the recommendations of Haywood in picking Leonard and Brisbane to fill two of the union's top posts, the delegates expanded their executive board by electing five new members.

New members are Bill Butler, Walter Pleimann and Paul Tino, representing John Hancock agents; Jacob Berkowitz, representing Metropolitan agents; and W. Norman Hartline, representing the small insurance companies.

After approving the secretary-treasurer's report and hearing Abramson's plea for the services of an actuary, the delegates voted, by an overwhelming majority, to increase their dues to $3 a month. The additional income will be used by the union for organizational and legal activities.

The conference also adopted 12 resolutions ranging from heartfelt appreciation of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Haywood for aid to IAWOC to full support of CIO-PAC.

The delegates also attended special caucuses to discuss individual company problems and negotiating committee planning meetings.

Death In The Fields—

Jersey Farmers Ignore Child Labor Ban; CIO Raps State Inaction

A SIX-year-old New Jersey boy, working on a farm in clear violation of the state's child labor laws, was crushed to death under the wheels of a truck.

Nearly 400 other gross violations of the state's child labor and compulsory education laws have been uncovered by federal inspectors.

The child's death and the illegalities uncovered by federal inspectors result from a "scandalous lack of enforcement" of New Jersey laws by that state's department of labor.

This charge was leveled last week by State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman in a blistering letter to New Jersey Gov. Driscoll urging "adequate staffing of the state labor department with personnel competent to enforce New Jersey's laws so that a repetition of these illegal and tragic violations can be avoided in the future."

Driscoll, an Eisenhower supporter and frequent critic of the Democratic national administration, has "frequently stated that the states can do a better job than the federal government in enacting and enforcing various laws," Holderman recalled.

"Why, then," he asked, "did it take federal agents to uncover violations of New Jersey laws and why has our state government been lax in enforcing these measures?

"Why has your administration and the New Jersey press been silent concerning the death under the wheels of a slow-moving farm truck of a six-year-old child whose life could have been spared by effective administration of New Jersey's child labor laws?"

The child, Walter Giles, was killed on a Pemberton, N. J., farm where he, his 12-year-old sister and a 10-year-old friend, along with Mr. and Mrs. Giles, were employed in a farm labor crew picking beans.

Holderman noted New Jersey's compulsory education law bars the employment of children under 16 while school is in session and the child labor law forbids the employment of children under 12 in agriculture at any time.

Yet, he said, federal inspectors uncovered 280 violations of the compulsory education laws in 1951 and 91 violations of the child labor laws in one 20-day period this year.

"Has the lax administration in the labor department been due to political appointments or a ruthless slashing of the budgets so that the administration could boast of good laws and economy at the same time, while not enforcing the good laws already on the books?" he asked.

GCEOC Seeks Pay Hikes For Panama Local Rate Workers

SERIOUS and sympathetic consideration will be given to the problems facing local rate workers in the Panama Canal Zone, Brig. Gen. John S. Seybold, new governor of the Zone, told some 4000 cheering members of the CIO at a rally in La Boca, sponsored by Local 900, CIO Government & Civic Employees.

Gov. Seybold who took over the job of administering the Canal Zone last May at the expiration of the four-year term of former Gov. Newcomer, was the main guest speaker at the big CIO rally on Labor Day.

Earlier, Local 900 Pres. E. A. Gaskin had outlined some of the main grievances of the Negro local rate workers, particularly the low wage scale under which they are paid as compared to the high wage scale of the Civil Service workers from the States.

The power and influence of the National CIO to which Local 900 is affiliated, is strongly behind the program of the Canal Zone union, CIO Intl. Rep. Ed Welsh said in his speech, closing the two-hour meeting.

Gov. Seybold told of the two conferences he had had with Local 900's negotiating committee during the short time he had been in the zone, and said he "was favorably impressed" by the clear way the problems of the local rate workers had been presented to him.

"I expect to give all problems serious and sympathetic consideration," the Governor said, "and with your patience and with the cooperation of your leaders, I have every hope that many can be satisfactorily adjusted."

LOW WAGE SCALE HIT—Brig. Gen. John S. Seybold (seated, head of table), new governor of the Panama Canal Zone, meets with CIO Intl. Rep. Ed Welsh, GCEOC Local 900 Pres. Ed Gaskin and other officials of Local 900. They asked improvements in low wages paid 5000 local rate workers represented by GCEOC.

Swim Appointed To New MSA Post

Allan L. Swim, former editor of the CIO News, has been named deputy information director of the Office of U. S. Special Representative for the Mutual Security Administrator.

Swim succeeds John Hutchison, who has taken a State Dept. information post in Washington. After leaving the CIO post, Swim was assistant director of labor information for the Economic Cooperation Administration's European office.

CIO Protests Boss Influence On Jobless Aid

AMERICAN employers exercise undue influence on legislation and administration of state employment security programs, Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, charged last week.

Ruttenberg spoke before the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies in Salt Lake City, Utah.

The group is made up of state administrators of employment offices. Its views on unemployment insurance have differed sharply with those of the CIO, which favors minimum federal standards in regard to benefits, disqualifications and other regulations.

Organized labor is "deeply disturbed" at the weight given the employers' viewpoint, Ruttenberg said, and it believes that the federal role should be far greater than it is now under the federal-state unemployment insurance system.

"The chief role of the federal government," he said, "should be to assure that American wage and salary workers receive as a matter of right sufficient unemployment insurance benefits so that they can approximately maintain their customary level of living when unemployed through no fault of their own.

"The present system does not furnish adequate protection to unemployed workers.

"Not enough workers are covered by unemployment insurance; too high a proportion are found ineligible or disqualified for poor reasons; and the amount paid each week is too low for basic needs."

Since the Social Security Act was passed in 1935, Ruttenberg said, "powerful corporations and employer organizations have fought vigorously to free themselves of the unwelcome burden thrust upon them, namely, bearing part of the expense of their failure to provide steady enough jobs for American workers."

The groups have not found it feasible to repeal the federal law, he explained, so have concentrated on the state legislatures. They have fought federal improvements on the ground that such matters should be handled by the states, he said, and in the states themselves "have been energetically opposed to the liberalization of benefits."

Apart from the basic political situation, the CIO research chief continued, the operation of public employment offices often tends to make administrators more deferential to employers' desires than those of workers.

The success of placement activities depends on job orders from employers, he pointed out, with the result that agency policies tend to be shaped so as not to create criticism from them.

"Our members," he added, "frequently report that as a result their interests seem to receive less consideration."

THOUGH the conference has opposed CIO views and has supported legislation favored by the employers, he said, "in contrast, organized labor has backed your efforts to secure adequate funds from Congress for administration of the program."

"I believe," he added, "the employer organizations have not repaid your legislative cooperation by similar support for funds."

Ruttenberg cited the conference program to bolster his claim of undue employer influence on the organization.

"You have scheduled two labor people during the entire conference, both of whom are carefully balanced by employers appearing on the same subject," he said.

"But spokesmen for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Cotton Manufacturers' Association of Georgia, the General Electric Co., the H. J. Heinz Co., the Union Bag & Paper Corp. and the Utah Power & Light Co. have no such counterbalancing labor representatives.

"I gather that there is even greater over-representation of employers in the lobbies and at the cocktail parties. We in labor cannot hope to compete with the corporations in the number of officials and staff people who are free to attend such conferences. Nor can we compete in supplying refreshments."

NAMED — Delmond Garst, CIO regional director in St. Louis, has been named by Pres. Truman as an alternate labor member of the new Wage Stabilization Board. He held a similar post on the old WSB.

'Voters' Leaves' Urged For GIs

"Voters' Leaves" to allow servicemen to return to their homes to register and to vote have been urged, because Congress failed to extend the GI voting bill before it expired recently.

The proposal was made by Sen. Smathers (D. Fla.), who warned Defense Sec. Robert Lovett "there is no time to lose" in allowing such leaves.

CONGRATULATIONS ALL AROUND: Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin (left) exchanges a warm handshake with Herman Soifer (right), head of Brookfield Clothes, Inc., which won National Economy Award from CIO Clothing Workers' New York Joint Board. ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky (center) looks on during the ceremony.

ACWA Praises N. Y. Firm's Year-Round Work Record

FULL year-round employment provided to some 500 workers in an industry known for its "on again, off again" job record has won a union award for Brookfield Clothes, Inc.

At a Washington luncheon, the company received a "National Economy Award" presented by the New York Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers. Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin made the formal presentation to Pres. Herman Soifer of the New York firm.

The company manufactures middle-price clothes for men, and has succeeded since 1946 in maintaining 50 weeks of work each year, in an industry which traditionally operates on a 36 to 40 week work-year.

Both Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated and Vice-Pres. Murray Weinstein, who appeared in behalf of Louis Hollander of the union's New York joint board, hailed the company's record as one of enlightened management and "humanitarian outlook."

Tobin, stressing the great search for security by workers, lauded both the company and the union for helping bring about good labor-management relations as a foundation for steady work around the calendar.

'Built-In Inflation' Of Private Health Plans Told

DESPITE voluntary health insurance written into contracts, CIO Auto Workers are going in the hole to meet surgical charges.

That's what a UAW-CIO subregional director told the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation as it held a panel hearing in Minneapolis recently.

"Surgical charges made against our members are raised as fast as, or faster, than the payment schedules," Ed Murnane testified.

The cost of doctor bills keeps going up and up, spokesmen for the CIO, AFL, and Farmers Union told the commission.

Murnane said that through voluntary health insurance in labor-management contracts, UAW-CIO members and their dependents got $125 million in benefits last year. There's still room for improvement, he added.

Most insurance plans are "built-in inflation," said Murnane, because "doctors commonly charge more than the scheduled allowances provided through insurance." Trying to keep up with the leap-frogging cost of these staggering medical bills puts the problem squarely in the hands of the federal government, he said.

A full-paid, fully-covered insurance plan by the federal government is the only hope for workers, he said. (LPA)

5 Cities Save Rent Controls

FIVE more large and medium-sized cities have joined the list of communities which have acted to extend rent controls.

They are Baltimore, Louisville, Ky., Providence, R. I., Dayton, O., and Altoona, Pa., plus Montgomery County, Md., adjoining Washington, D. C.

With federal rent ceilings ending Sept. 30 unless local communities act, cities with an estimated 20 million population covered by rent controls have acted to extend curbs to next Apr. 30, it was estimated.

Long-pending requests of the CIO Textile Workers that Williamsport, Pa., be declared a critical defense housing shortage area were granted. This clears the way for rent ceilings.

Small Plants Denied Share Of Arms Work

TELFORD Taylor resigned last week as head of the Small Defense Plants Administration, with a blast at the "armed services hierarchy" for denying smaller firms a fair share of defense contracts.

Taylor blamed Defense Sec. Robert Lovett and the armed services command for giving big business the lion's share of military orders.

Smaller firms have been granted only $71 million in defense orders under the multi-billion dollar defense program, the resigned official said. He reported they have been given less than 60% of the defense contracts they are capable of handling.

Pres. Truman named John E. Horn, Taylor's deputy, as administrator of the small plants agency, which was kicked around in the last session of Congress. Early this year, the House Appropriations Committee killed funds for the SDPA, but the action was reversed on the floor after CIO and other groups protested the action.

Taylor charged "hostility" by defense procurement officers has limited contracts awards to small firms. He accused Lovett and his aides of "little or no enthusiasm" and a "cool, not to say uncourtly attitude."

Long Tieup In Detroit Won By Gas, Coke

CIO GAS, Coke & Chemical Workers in Detroit last week won a 104-day-long strike against the Acme Quality Paint Co., a division of Sherwin-Williams.

The 450 strikers voted to accept their first CIO contract, following a marathon 62-hour negotiating session. Negotiations had begun early in April, but little progress was made until the workers struck on June 5. They formerly had been represented by Mine Workers Dist. 50.

Before the strike started, the company sought to saddle the CIO local with the Dist. 50 contract, refused to remit check-off funds, filed several court suits, and resisted all peaceful attempts to negotiate a contract.

As a result of the strike, the workers won wage increases ranging from 7 to 22c, plus a union shop and other important benefits. The two-year contract has a one-year wage reopening clause.

Gerald Smith Gets Candidate

Gerald L. K. Smith, the Jew-baiting promoter of the Christian Nationalist party, finally has a candidate for his projected presidential ticket.

Jack B. Tenney, a California state senator and once head of that state's un-American activities committee, has accepted the Nationalist's nomination for Vice President. The party nominated Gen. MacArthur for President, but he hasn't accepted.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee met in convention in Philadelphia on Sept. 12 and 13. The writer, as chairman of the committee, presided. The organization went on record as fully supporting National CIO-PAC and unanimously supporting Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman for President and Vice President.

In discussing the issues and problems facing the union, there was active participation by all delegates. Each man had a voice in making the decisions that will affect the organization in the coming year. It was recommended and adopted that the per capita tax to the committee be increased from $1.50 to $2, making the overall dues payment $3.

I requested to be relieved of the chairmanship of the committee. In my stead, Richard Leonard, who had done a terrific job as secretary-treasurer, was appointed chairman, and Jim Brisbane was selected to replace Brother Leonard as secretary-treasurer. Si Helfgott will continue as vice chairman of the committee. The delegates voiced their unanimous support of the officers.

It was a great gathering, one that showed determination to go out and continue to build their union.

★ ★ ★

THE writer had the pleasure of addressing the international convention of the CIO Rubber Workers in Asbury Park, N. J. The convention was undoubtedly the largest ever held by the Rubber Workers and displayed more harmony and unity than ever before. Pres. Buckmaster, Vice Pres. Childs and Sec.-Treas. Walker were received enthusiastically by the delegates.

The convention went on record supporting National CIO, including solid support of PAC and of Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman this coming November. Pres. Buckmaster and his associate officers are to be commended for their fine leadership of a great organization.

From Asbury Park, I continued on to New York, where I attended and addressed the convention of the CIO Paperworkers. These delegates and the officers voiced unanimous support of National CIO and CIO-PAC. Approval was voiced for the Democratic nominees in the presidential race.

WHILE in New York I addressed the New York City CIO Council conference, presided over by Mike Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers. Also speaking to the delegates was Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin. Mr. Tobin was enthusiastically welcomed by all of the delegates.

Now that Sen. Taft has taken over the Republican campaign, many people are wondering about the tremendous change that was supposed to have come about when he was defeated for the nomination by Gen. Eisenhower early this summer.

The so-called liberal, middle-of-the-road Republican is a myth. Eisenhower's recent pronouncement on the Taft-Hartley Act was very weak. Many of us remember that Herbert Hoover was talking a middle-of-the-road brand of Republicanism, a policy that resulted in depression and suffering by the people and the country.

We must continue on the highway of progress, we must continue to move forward. We as a nation must continue to utilize new methods and new processes, and as never before we must be prepared to move forward.

★ ★ ★

REG. DIR. Irwin DeShetler reports the following representation election victories: CIO-LIU 78 received 73 votes as against 41 at J. J. Crosette, Watsonville, Calif.; Ship Shape Shed, Salinas, Calif., LIU 78 35, against 1, with Local Board Member Frank Menezes in charge of the campaign; Marine Steel Fabrication Co., Newport Beach, Calif., CIO Shipbuilding Workers won by a unanimous vote; Consolidated Western Steel Co., Los Angeles, Calif., CIO Steelworkers 807, against 35, with USA Field Rep. Herb Finlay in charge; Armour and Co., Los Angeles, CIO Packinghouse Workers 190, AFL 133, and Modern Meat Packing Co., UPWA-CIO 9, ~~AFL~~ 2. UPWA Dist. Dir. Arthur Morrison was in charge of the Packinghouse drives.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that the Packinghouse Workers won a representation election at the Mathieson Chemical Corp., Fertilizer Div., Phoenix, Ariz.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in a representation election at the E. R. Squibb Co., New Brunswick, N. J., the workers favored the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers by the following vote: eligible 1787, UGC&CW-CIO 816, no union 798, 17 challenged. CIO Staff Rep. Emory Ranscom assisted in this drive.

REG. DIR. Edward McCone reports that the IUE-CIO won a representation election at the Gray Manufacturing Co., Hartford, Conn., by a vote of IUE-CIO 157, AFL 89, no union 61. IUE Field Rep. Martin Hogan handled the campaign.

The CIO Rubber Workers won a representation election at the Watertown Manufacturers plant, Watertown, Conn., by the following vote: eligible 282, Rubber Workers 131, Watertown Manufacturers Employes Association 119. Intl. Reps. Bill Fernandez and Steve Rose directed the drive.

Intl. Vice Pres. Claude Ballard of the CIO Woodworkers reports that the IWA-CIO won a representation election at the Coquille Valley Lumber Co., Coquille, Ore., by a vote of 8 to 3 for no union, 1 challenged.

Dir. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee reports that in an election at Holston Steel Structures, Inc., Bristol, Tenn., the CIO Steelworkers were victorious by a vote of 14 to 2 for no union. There were 18 eligible.

IUE Calls Strike Vote In GE Locals, Raps 'Sellout' By UE

THE CIO Electrical Workers were preparing last week for either a strike or peace with the powerful General Electric Co.

The union's GE Conference Board, meeting in New York, called upon all GE locals which have not yet voted for a strike to poll their members on Sept. 29.

They also approved continuation of negotiations, which were being held in New York with federal conciliators, in the hope that no strike will be necessary. But they voted to meet again on Oct. 1, two days after the strike vote, "to take whatever action is necessary."

The board unanimously condemned the "sellout" of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, which settled with the company on the basis of an offer already turned down by IUE-CIO. It called on the rank and file in UE locals to reject the settlement as an "infamous deal."

THE IUE-CIO represents over 71,000 G. E. workers, UE less than half that number. The conference board rapped GE for its propaganda that "57 unions" had accepted the company's proposal, and pointed out that the "57 unions" really are 56 UE local bargaining units and UE itself. The IUE-CIO represents far more than all the 57 units combined, IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey pointed out.

The proposal the UE accepted and IUE rejected will cost the UE members two of their seven paid holidays in 1953. In addition, UE and the company robbed GE pensioners of the $5 to $8.60 increase in social security benefits voted by Congress effective this month.

The pensioners have been getting a combination of company payments and social security benefits. Under the UE agreement, the company payment is cut by the amount of the social security boost — and the pensioners won't feel the benefit of the additional money voted by Congress to offset the increase in the cost of living.

The IUE-GE Conference Board voted to continue the fight for the union's seven-point program, including wages, holidays, the union shop, pensions, profit sharing, health and welfare insurance, and a two-year contract.

Textile Backs Adlai For 'A Better World'

CIO TEXTILE Workers have joined in the CIO recommendation for the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket to gain "a better America and a better world."

The endorsement was voted unanimously by the TWUA Executive Council, meeting in New York.

The union pledged "all means within our power" to help get out the votes of 400,000 CIO Textile Workers members for Fair Deal candidates.

TWUA said its endorsement was based on the contrast in the Democratic and Republican platforms, pointing out:

"The Democratic platform offers sound assurance that the Roosevelt New Deal and the Truman Fair Deal will be carried on. This is a platform for a better America and a better world.

"Against it, the Republican party continues to stand for doctrines of unblushing reaction."

The council praised Gov. Stevenson's "forthright declarations" on campaign issues, while Gen. Eisenhower has "revealed his inadequacies as a civilian leader."

THE TWUA is putting its political action program into effect in Pennsylvania. Some 200 delegates attended a regional PAC rally in Allentown, and joined in the Stevenson-Sparkman endorsement. Other regional rallies were held in Philadelphia and at State College.

Emphases of the TWUA rallies, said Sol Stetin, union regional director, were upon a 100% voter registration drive and over-the-top campaigns for PAC voluntary dollar contributions in textile shops.

Harvester Strikers Start Radio Series

CIO Auto Workers have begun a daily radio news broadcast in their long strike against the International Harvester Co. plant at Oak Park, a Chicago suburb. The program was launched by Pat Greathouse, UAW-CIO regional director.

Cy Ching Resigns After 5 Years As Top Mediator

CYRUS S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, resigned last week, effective Sept. 30.

David L. Cole, of Paterson, N. J., a lawyer with a wide reputation as an arbitrator, was named by Pres. Truman to succeed him.

Ching, a towering figure of a man looking far younger than his 76 years, was director of industrial relations for the U. S. Rubber Co., when he entered the federal service in 1947. As a young man he operated a trolley in Boston.

In his letter of resignation, he wrote the President that "the time has come when I must of necessity give some consideration and attention to my personal affairs."

The President in reply praised his outstanding service, and added:

"You will carry with you always my personal gratitude and the thanks of your fellow-countrymen for the calm wisdom and unflagging patience which you brought to the mediation service and which resulted in the voluntary settlement of so many labor disputes."

CYRUS CHING

Cole, who is 50, was a public member of the National War Labor Board during World War II and has been chairman of the New Jersey State Board of Mediation.

Know The Score On Voting Record

Check your Senators and Representatives! Did they vote YOUR way in the 82nd Congress?

Get the facts from the CIO NEWS 1952 VOTING RECORD. It shows how each member of Congress voted on important issues in 1951-52. Order it now for distribution in your union.

Prices for VOTING RECORD:

5c per copy; 100 for $4
500 for $17; 1,000 for $24
Rates for larger quantities on request.

THE CIO NEWS
718 JACKSON PLACE, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

Enclosed find my check or money order for $....., for which send me ..... copies of The CIO NEWS VOTING RECORD.

Name .....

Union ..... Local No. .....

Street Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Paper Workers Solid In Backing Stevenson

By FRED ROSS

THE CIO Paperworkers put first things first—by endorsing the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket as their third biennial convention began to roll at New York City last week.

A resolution backing the Democratic candidates was adopted unanimously at the second meeting of the six-session convention.

The 50,000-member union, whose locals were represented by 303 delegates and 32 alternates, said in the Stevenson-Sparkman resolution:

"Those ancient principles of obstruction, isolationism and special privilege which would lead the nation down the road to depression and ruin remain at the core of 1952 Republicanism.

"We recall with grave concern the economic chaos into which this nation was plunged by the short-sighted policies of that party. We can detect no change in the fundamental policies of the GOP.

"In contrast we have observed that the Democratic candidate for the Presidency has taken a forthright and progressive stand on the issues which confront our nation today.

"The Democratic candidate and the Democratic platform are in agreement upon all issues while the Republican candidate and the Republican platform dodge the issues and are in disagreement on many.

"Adlai Stevenson has forthrightly and courageously taken a position to protect and advance the great social gains which have been won in our country since Franklin D. Roosevelt led us up the road from near national ruin."

Speakers hit hard at Gen. Eisenhower and Sen. Nixon, the Republican candidates, and the GOP platform, while lauding Stevenson and Sparkman, and the Democratic platform.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers said:

"We are basically concerned with the rights of labor. That's why we're for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and the re-enactment of the Wagner Act with modifications.

"The Republicans might as well have nominated Taft because there is no difference between him and Eisenhower."

Potofsky pointed out that Eisenhower backs Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), who called Gen. George Marshall a "front man for traitors," and Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.)—and so does Taft.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, said "I fear Nixon like I fear Communism." Citing the GOP vice presidential candidate's role in drafting the Mundt-Nixon bill—now part of the McCarran Act—Haywood recalled Gov. Dewey's 1948 condemnation of that measure:

"Stripped to its naked essential, this is nothing but the method of Hitler and Stalin. It is thought control . . . It is an attempt to beat down ideas with a club. It is surrender of everything we believe in."

Haywood, who recently returned from a General Council meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at Berlin, said he saw vivid examples of Hitler and Stalin terrorism, and added:

"There is no distinction between the two kinds of totalitarianism. They both would destroy the right to speak, to assemble and to form free trade unions."

Haywood, who was chairman of the CIO Paper Workers Organizing Committee from which UPA grew, was unanimously re-elected honorary chairman. Harry D. Sayre and Frank Grasso were unanimously re-elected as president and secretary-treasurer.

There were three changes in area directors. George Pescatore became the head of Area 2. Herbert Schwenker was chosen Area 4 director, succeeding Robert J. Davidson, who did not seek re-election. Donald Thoms defeated Burt J. Mason, incumbent, for Area 6 director.

Sayre and Grasso reported that, since the 1950 convention, bargaining rights had been won in 54 plants with a potential membership of 6000.

The policy of the union against aiding rackets was incorporated in an amendment which barred from office in the international or locals any member who promotes rackets, such as the numbers game and bookmaking.

The salaries of the president and the secretary-treasurer were boosted from $5750 to $6250 a year, and of the area directors from $4600 to $5000 a year. The officers and the staff members decided, however, that they would not accept any pay increase while the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. strike continues and that they would give 10% of their present salaries to the striking locals if the strikes continue.

Four members each received a $100 defense bond for outstanding service to UPA: Oliver Hayden, president of the local of the National Gypsum Co., Garwood, N. J., who collected $3 a week from every member of his 100-man local to aid two strikes for 9½ months.

John Jennings, of Local 1004, Monroe, Mich., for his outstanding leadership in the Monroe County CIO Council.

Robert Williams, president of Downingtown, Pa., UPA Local, for his reporting for the Paper Workers edition of The CIO News and for writing a weekly column on trade union matters for the Downingtown Archive.

Clarence Goellner, St. Charles, Mo., for trade union articles for the St. Louis, Mo., Banner.

ENCOURAGEMENT is offered by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, (center seated), to leaders of CIO Paperworkers on strike at three plants of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. Standing to the left and right of Haywood are UPA Area Directors Harry Scott and Charles Bridgwater.

Westvaco Strikers Fight To Keep Industrial Union

MORE THAN 4000 Paperworkers are conducting "the largest effective strike in the history of the union" to protect the principle on which CIO was founded—industrial unionism.

The strike is at three plants of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co.—the sixth largest paper company in the industry. The three factories, struck for a month, are at Covington, Va.; Luke, Md., and Williamsburg, Pa.

Not only does the company want to disrupt industrial unionism by taking 37 watchmen out of the bargaining units, but it wants to make them plant guards to patrol the plants and spy on the workers, according to UPA.

But Westvaco—as the UPA members call the firm—is not going to get by with it. The international has already given $10,000 to the striking locals, and pledges of support have been received from a number of CIO affiliates, including the steel, auto, rubber and textile unions. More than $700 were collected at the UPA convention and pledges of thousand of dollars of additional support were made by locals attending the UPA convention.

UPA negotiators said that the man behind the move against industrial unionism is Robert Bentley, a former FBI agent who has been assistant manager of the Covington plant—the largest of the three—for the past 18 months.

URW Re-Elects Buckmaster

CIO Rubber Workers and Woodworkers held their conventions last week, the former in Asbury Park, N. J., the latter in Portland, Ore. The URW unanimously reelected Pres. L. S. Buckmaster. Full accounts of both conventions will be carried in next week's CIO News.

100 for $1—A Bargain In News

There's a big barrage in the daily press, designed to slaughter Fair Deal candidates. Get the facts on the Stevenson campaign, get them fully—in stories, pictures, cartoons and special features—and get them in the CIO News.

For local unions, councils and PACs, we offer the biggest bargain of the campaign—100 copies of the CIO News for a $1. Each week during October, you'll receive a bundle of 25 copies for use in political action.

This special offer at a reduced rate is good until Oct. 6. If you need bigger bundles, just multiply your order—for example, a weekly bundle of 100 copies, or 400 in all, costs $4; or 500 copies a week costs $16.

So get your order in now!

CIO News
718 Jackson Place, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

——Send me your special 100 for $1 offer, for which payment is enclosed

——Send me a weekly bundle of ——copies at ——, for which payment is enclosed.

Name.....

Union.....

Street Address.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

CONGRATULATIONS on his vigorous pro-Stevenson speech to the CIO Paperworkers convention are extended to Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky (center) of the CIO Clothing Workers by UPA Pres. Harry D. Sayre (left) and UPA Sec.-Treas. Frank Grasso.

'Hear No Evil, See No Evil, Speak No Evil'—

Ike Gulps And Swallows Nixon; Stevenson Hits GOP On Prices

—SEE PAGES 2 & 3

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV | WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 29, 1952 | 82 | No. 39

End Of The Crusade

Campaign Roundup

Ike Gulps, Bows To Taft, And O.K.'s Nixon

"What about that $17,000?"

That was the cry from the crowd as the Nixon - for - Vice - President train was about to pull out of Marysville and push north through California's Sacramento Valley.

"Hold the train," shouted Nixon from the observation platform. "I want to talk about that."

All last week, Nixon was talking about that "bundles-for-Nixon" trust fund set up by Southern California big businessmen.

Gen. Eisenhower was pondering: Would he bounce Nixon off the GOP ticket?

And the GOP brass, led by Sen. Taft, turned enough heat on Ike to keep Nixon.

For the revelation 10 days ago that Nixon, through all his year-and-a-half in the Senate right up to the GOP convention at which he was nominated with Eisenhower, had benefitted politically from a trust fund raised by California business-real estate-banking-oil-manufacturing interests struck directly at the biggest GOP war cry.

"Crime, corruption and cronies," "turn the rascals out," "time for a change"—such were the GOP catch-phrases.

And Nixon, only six years in Congress, had been magnified into a giant of an honest man who would do the job.

Then the whole balloon popped. Enterprising reporters from the New York Post and Reporter Magazine dug up the story of the Nixon trust fund. The story took the steam out of the story Ike was preaching to Midwestern whistle stops, as illustrated by this Washington Post headline:

Ike Pledges 'Honest Deal'; Friends Gave Nixon $16,000

When Eisenhower's party drove through Kansas City, signs on one corner read: "Donate here to help poor Richard Nixon."

IN ALL the tens of thousands of published words last week on the finances of GOP candidate Nixon, the essential factors were fairly concise and fairly simple.

They were that Nixon was a subsidized Senator—subsidized to "do a job" for the big business community.

After the 1950 California election, some 76 of his wealthy supporters chipped in a fund that totalled $18,235—slightly more than first reported—to support Nixon's political activity.

They contributed, in the words of Dana Smith, the fund's treasurer and tax lawyer (who himself got help from the Senator's office on a $500,000 tax refund case), because in Nixon "we had a fine salesman for free enterprise, but he didn't have enough money to do the right kind of a selling job."

The questions, as Gov. Stevenson said in one of his few comments on the intra-GOP wrangle, were:

"Who gave the money, was it given to influence the Senator's position on public questions, and have any laws been violated."

When the Nixon special came through the mountains to Eugene, Ore., a picket sign said: "No Mink Coats for Nixon—Just Cold Cash."

PART OF the answers to the three questions raised by Stevenson were forthcoming.

Within 48 hours after the subsidy was revealed, the Nixon fund treasurer listed the 76 donors and their gifts of from $10 to $500. And he told where it went—printing, stationery, travel, radio, television, etc. All of which was to Sen. Nixon's direct political personal benefit.

As to whether the donation affected Nixon's legislative actions, the most appropriate comment was that of Sen. Taft: "Those who contributed to the fund probably agreed 100% with his legislative position anyway."

Nixon's chief argument in the campaign to date had been to denounce CIO up and down the land. And in Congress he had a "down-the-line" record for rent and price increases and against effective inflation controls, against closing tax loopholes, for the oil tidelands grab and in favor of Taft-Hartley (which he helped draft while in the House).

By these votes, commented Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, the donors to Nixon "earned handsome dividends on their investment every time the Senator cast a vote on the floor of the U. S. Senate."

As to the legal aspects, the Justice Dept. was investigating the possibility of violations of laws governing political donations, and in California the state was checking in the income tax angle.

The Nixon special reached the end of the line in Portland, where a young Democrat was on hand to pass the cup: "Give Nickels for Nixon."

THE DEFENSE offered by Sen. Nixon, and his supporters, was soon established and repeated all the way from Marysville to Portland and back to Los Angeles for his nationwide radio-TV broadcast at midweek.

There was nothing, said Nixon, "morally wrong" in the fund. It was, he said, all a misinterpretation and misunderstanding of the facts. He was, he said, just saving the taxpayers money. And, he added, he didn't get a red penny directly for his own personal use. (Taft said it would have been okeh if he had.)

"I would prefer," said Nixon, "to play it square with the people who pay taxes. The money was used to take care of political expenses which I believe should not be charged to the federal government."

Quickly then Nixon turned from the embarrassing facts of the subsidy into an attack along familiar Nixon lines—an attack echoed throughout the week by Sens. Mundt, Taft and other Old Guard stalwarts.

The revelations of his financial subsidy, said Nixon, were "smears" from "Communists and crooks," "left-wing elements," "the Alger Hiss crowd," etc.

On this claim, the conservative Washington Star commented:

"The cry of 'smear' is no answer to the charge that has been brought against Sen. Nixon. For this charge is not a smear. The admitted facts alone raise a serious ethical question—a question which bears on both the usefulness and fitness of Sen. Nixon as Republican vice presidential nominee."

THE MAN in the middle in the Nixon "mess" was his running mate, Gen. Eisenhower.

Even after the "bundles-for-Nixon" story became the biggest development of the campaign, Ike was saying (as at St. Louis) "we will not only drive wrongdoers and their cronies out of government, we will make sure they do not get into government in the first place."

Ike's first comment was to call Nixon "an honest man" who "would not compromise with what is right. Both he and I believe in a single standard of morality in public life."

But the day after that statement in Kansas City, newsmen on the Eisenhower train were reporting:

"If Sen. Nixon cannot prove to the satisfaction of an overwhelming number of American citizens that his financial

(Continued on Next Page)

—Herblock in the Washington Post.

Death Of A Salesman

—Fitzpatrick in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Practical Mr. Nixon

Nixism

"Anyone who has the responsibility—as I have—of investigating unethical and illegal practices of others must make sure his own hands are clean."

—Sen. Nixon, quoted in Look.

Ikism

"From the beginning, we will bring into government men and women to whom low morals are unthinkable. Thus, we will not only drive wrongdoers and their cronies out of government, we will make sure that they do not get into government in the first place."

—Gen. Eisenhower at St. Louis.

Some Knight

"Poor Richard" Nixon is the "kept man of the California millionaires," CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll said last week. He told the convention of the CIO Stone Workers in Cincinnati:

"Nixon is the same man who wants us to believe he is the pure, the incorruptible, the gallant knight on the white horse leading a charge against corruption. Some knight. Some horse."

Who Gave What—What They Got

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA is a fast-growing industrial area ruled by a tight-knit business community. Oil, real estate, building and manufacturing interests are allied.

Together they helped raise the estimated $1 million campaign fund with which Richard Nixon was elected to the Senate in the sordid 1950 California election.

Together they were represented in the list of 76 wealthy Southern Californians who—in contributions from $10 to $500 each—put up the $18,235 trust fund which backstopped Nixon's politicking since his election to the Senate.

Most prominent in the list of 76 donors released by Dana Smith, tax attorney and fund treasurer, was Herbert Hoover, Jr., engineer and son of the former President. More important were John J. Garland, real estate man related to the anti-labor Los Angeles Times family; Earl Gilmore, oil man; J. B. Van Nuys, wealthy developer; and Bernard C. Brennan, GOP chief.

Accounting of the $18,235 fund showed that $6166.60 went to stationery, $3430 to travel, $2000 to radio and TV, $1280 to mailings, $764 for publicity, and the remainder miscellaneous.

WEALTHY Californians chipped in the $18,000 "bundles-for-Nixon" trust fund because, in the words of Dana Smith, tax lawyer and the fund's treasurer:

"Dick is the outstanding salesman for free enterprise in the Senate. He is a great speaker and a great personality . . . Dick did just what we wanted him to do."

Here are some of the things Dick did—to the benefit of his endowers:

Voted against all measures in recent years for effective price and rent controls and to increase rents in defense housing.

Helped draft and voted for the Taft-Hartley Act; voted for a T-H injunction against the steel strike.

Voted for the oil companies' "states' rights" grab of rich oil lands.

Voted against closing loopholes in the excess profits and capital gains tax; opposed a withholding tax on dividends.

As Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, commented, "the California businessmen who have made contributions to Sen. Nixon's 'mutual fund' earned handsome dividends on their investment every time the Senator cast a vote."

Fund Chief Got Tax Claim Aid

SEN. NIXON'S office helped smooth the path for the treasurer of the "Bundles-for-Nixon" trust fund in pressing his tax refund claim of $500,000 to $600,000 with the Internal Revenue bureau, it was reported last week.

Dana Smith, wealthy Southern California tax lawyer and Nixon fund treasurer, was helped by John J. Irwin, then a Nixon assistant, in sessions with the government, according to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

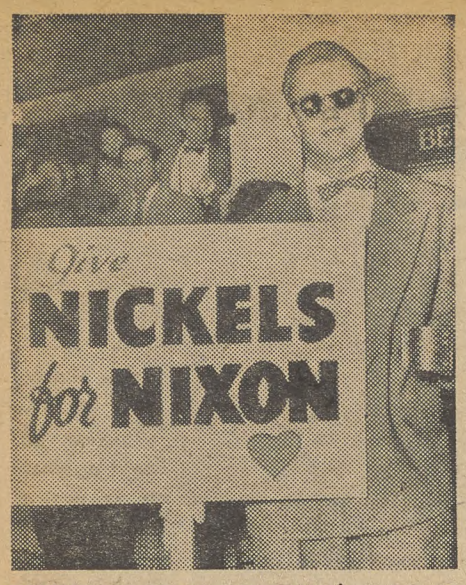
"I'd feel free to walk into Dick Nixon's office at any time," Smith said in explanation. "Why shouldn't I?" He also said he did nothing "illegal, immoral or unethical" and "only used what is the standard approach in such cases."

Smith himself contributed $300 to the Nixon fund.

(Among Nixon's several defense statements was one in which he said of contributors: "None of them ever asked for or received any special consideration from me.")

The tax case involved the Red River Lumber Co. in Northern California, a firm owned by Smith's family.

According to the Justice Dept. Nixon's aide, Irwin, arranged for Smith to confer with a U. S. tax attorney and then sat in on the session on the lumber company's tax refund claim.



NICKELS FOR NIXON — Clark Colby, head of the Portland College Young Democrat Club, held out the tin cup for Nixon when GOP Vice Presidential candidate reached Portland, Ore.

(Continued from Previous Page)

dealings have been clean as a hound's tooth, he is on his way out."

WHETHER or not Nixon was "clean as a hound's tooth," there were a lot of big-shot Republicans who moved in to keep Eisenhower in tow.

Sen. Taft climbed aboard as the Eisenhower train moved across Ohio. He said the $18,000 Nixon trust fund was "perfectly legitimate," that there was "no reason" why Nixon shouldn't have used it for personal expenses, too.

Sen. Dirksen (Ill.) said that there was "certainly no scandal involved."

Arthur Summerfield, the big General Motors dealer who is GOP national chairman, kept close to Ike, joined in the claim that the facts about Nixon's political finances were a "smear."

Correspondent Edward T. Folliard reported in the Washington Post that "organization leaders of the Republican party, almost to a man, are urging Eisenhower not to 'dump' his running mate," Sen. Nixon.

THE NIXON story underscored the big money in American politics.

GOP and Democratic campaign finance reports filed with the House of Representatives. They showed that the Republican National Committee took in $1,227,671 between Jan. 1 and Sept. 1, with expenditures of $717,962. Democratic contributions were $574,399 and expenditures $390,441.

Stephen Mitchell, Democratic national chairman, said his party had turned down as "improper" two offers of large donations, one more than $100,000.

Pres. Truman recalled that it was just a year ago that he had proposed to Congress legislation requiring full publicity on the incomes and finances of lawmakers and U.S. top officials earning $10,000 or more a year. The 82nd Congress sat on that proposal. But Sen. Morse (R., Ore.), who co-authored the bill with Sens. Humphrey (Minn.) and Douglas (Ill.), will revive it next year.

"The voters," Morse said, "are entitled to know the income of all elected officials so they can judge whether there's a relationship between the sources of income and their voting record."

Meanwhile, Stevenson headquarters announced the Democratic nominee would shortly discuss in detail a private Illinois fund for supplementing low state salaries in order to attract qualified persons to appointive state offices.

Nixon, in a typical political gesture, had attempted to confuse this Illinois fund with the "Millionaires Club" and the $18,000 it slipped under the table to the GOP vice-presidential nominee.

THE REPUBLICANS shelled out $75,000 for radio and TV time for Nixon to answer the $18,000 question.

In his carefully-drafted but apparently off-the-cuff address, Nixon brought in everything from his wife's "Republican cloth coat" to his little dog Checkers, from an Abraham Lincoln quotation ("God must have loved the common people . . .") to an audit report by Price, Waterhouse & Co.

Here's what Nixon said about the $18,000 subsidy, which was on top of his $15,000 annual salary, $2500 tax-free expense account and $61,000 for his Senate office employes and operations:

1. "Not one cent" went for his own personal use. He didn't say he failed to benefit from the $1000-a-month available for his personal politicking.

(Nixon's broadcast account didn't square with the story he told Peter Edson, columnist in the GOP Scripps-Howard press. Edson talked with Nixon about his $40,000 Washington house, which required a 50 per cent down payment, and said: "If I had not received this help, I could not have made the down payment on my house.")

2. "It was not a secret fund." He didn't square that with the furor following its public revelation just 10 days ago.

3. The fund actually meant a savings for taxpayers. He didn't ask or answer whether taxpayers want Senators subsidized.

4. No fund contributor ever got any special favors. He didn't mention his voting record.

Then Nixon wound up by asking the Taft-controlled GOP National Committee (rather than Eisenhower) to act on "whether I should stay on or whether I should get off" the ticket. And he urged his listeners to wire their opinions to GOP headquarters.

THE RESULTS weren't long in coming, or unexpected. While GOP stalwarts flooded the wires to Washington, Eisenhower praised Nixon as "a brave man" and one he'd rather have with him than a "whole boxcar full of pussyfooters."

The night after Nixon's broadcast, he met with Ike in Wheeling, W. Va.

The outcome already was decided. The GOP National Committee was polled, 107 to 0, for keeping Nixon the ticket. In Ike's opinion, Nixon had been "completely vindicated."

For Gen. Eisenhower—who already had bowed to Taft and swallowed McCarthy and Jenner—the next step was to hold his nose and keep Nixon on "the team."

Then he went on whistle-stopping, calling for "a top to bottom cleanout of the mess in Washington."

Stevenson Blames Republican 'Sabotage' For Price Boosts

SABOTAGE by Republican lawmakers was blamed by Gov. Adlai Stevenson for the high cost of living which each month is setting new records.

The Democratic presidential nominee called "counterfeit" the GOP campaign oratory on inflation.

Recalling the record of GOP votes in Congress against all effective inflation-control proposals, Stevenson said:

"It is hypocrisy for these men to present themselves now as the defenders, or even the friends, of your dollar."

Stevenson proposed a tough, four-point program to fight inflation. In his speech at Baltimore, he called for:

- Continuation, and any needed stiffening, of present "pockmarked" price-wage-rent controls.
- New controls on private credit.
- Strict government economy.
- A pay-as-you-go tax system.

In a blistering reply to Gen. Eisenhower's inaccurate charges blaming the Democrats for inflation, Stevenson read the record proving the Republicans had sabotaged every anti-inflationary measure in Congress for the past two years.

Gunning for the general, Stevenson noted he had "permitted the astonishing statement to be made for him that he agrees with Sen. Taft on all matters of domestic policy."

"Taft's record as the leader of the inflationary shock troops in Congress," Stevenson noted, "is clearly written."

"Inflation will not be driven out by campaign orators flapping their arms at it like scarecrows," he continued.

"I am convinced in my own mind," Stevenson said with biting sarcasm, "that when the Republican leaders, after sabotaging every anti-inflationary measure in Congress during the past two years, reach out this fall to put an arm around the American housewife, and whisper in her ear that this is all somebody else's fault, they won't deceive her."

Inflation, Stevenson clearly pointed out, is the result of the U. S. defense program forced by the danger of Soviet aggression, coupled with Republican party stalwarts who fought every attempt to adopt stiff controls to strengthen the defense program.

Throughout the week, campaigning on the East Coast, the Democratic nominee outlined his position on other major issues in this way:

TAFT-HARTLEY—Charging the GOP position on T-H was marked by "deceit," Stevenson recalled Sen. Taft had "publicly recognized 23 mistakes in his favorite law." "It seems not unreasonable to recommend that a tire with 23 punctures and 5 blowouts needs junking and not a recap job with reclaimed Republican rubber."

Reiterating his Labor day position on T-H repeal, Stevenson wondered aloud whether Taft had "deleted" important points from the general's address on the same subject, also made to the AFL convention.

Stevenson detailed a five-point program for making the Labor Dept. more effective, in complete contrast to GOP actions over the years, designed to make the agency weak and impotent.

CIVIL RIGHTS—Going into the South to make a strong civil rights speech, Stevenson violated all political traditions and pointed up his opponent's failure to speak up on this subject.

To a cheering and nonsegregated Richmond (Va.) crowd, Stevenson said, "The Democratic party has stated its position (on civil rights) in its platform; a position to which I adhere. I should justly earn your contempt if I talked one way in the South and another way elsewhere . . . I shall not go anywhere with beguiling serpent words."

JOBS—Stevenson promised hard-hit New England textile workers and manufacturers that, as President, he'd see they got a fair break on government orders in the defense program.

He said he recognized that New Englanders are disturbed by the closing of mills and their migration to the South, and he noted that the establishment of fair competitive standards between regions does not mean helping one part of the country at the expense of another.

"Orders," he said, "must be guided to communities where men and plants are idle. It is poor economy to pay unemployment compensation and provide public assistance in one place while defense orders go where labor is scarce."

Ikism

Gen. Eisenhower went another step last week, endorsing ex-Sen. Revercomb of West Virginia, staunch supporter of anti-Catholic, anti-Semitic legislation, who is running again. Tough-stomached Tom Dewey couldn't force himself to do this in 1948.

The Contrast

"It is the history of the Republican Party that it supported, and was supported by, those interests which believed that freedom meant the right to exercise economic power without restraint.

"It is the basic belief of the Democratic Party that only human freedoms are basic, and that economic power must be exercised so as not to curtail them."

—Gov. Stevenson

Tune In On CIO TV

THE "PEOPLE'S Political Poll" now is on television screens across the nation. Sponsored by CIO-PAC, this "grass-roots" TV feature, with interviews of Mr. and Mrs. American Voter, will be aired weekly until Election Day.

Here's the latest listing from CIO-PAC on times and dates the TV program will be on the air in more than a score of cities:

STATION	CITY AND STATE	TIME
WAAM	Baltimore, Md.	7:15 P. M., Tuesday
WAFM-TV	Birmingham, Ala.	10:15 P. M., Friday
WENR-TV	Chicago, Ill.	8:30 P. M., Thursday
WCPO-TV	Cincinnati, Ohio	1:00 P. M., Sunday
WXEL	Cleveland, Ohio	9:30 P. M., Monday
WTVN	Columbus, Ohio	6:30 P. M., Sunday
WFAA	Dallas, Tex.	1:30 P. M., Sunday
WHIO-TV	Dayton, Ohio	4:15 P. M., Saturday
KFEL-TV	Denver, Colo.	10:15 P. M., Tuesday
		10:15 P. M., Monday, Nov. 3
WDAF-TV	Kansas City, Mo.	4:45 P. M., Tuesday
		5:30 P. M., Tuesday
WGAL-TV	Lancaster, Pa.	4:30 P. M., Saturday, Oct. 4
		1:30 P. M., Saturday, Oct. 11, 18
		4:00 P. M., Saturday, Oct. 25
KECA-TV	Los Angeles, Cal.	9:00 P. M., Monday
WABD	New York, N. Y.	8:15 P. M., Thursday
WNAC-TV	New Haven, Conn.	12:00 Noon, Sunday
WFIL-TV	Philadelphia, Pa.	6:45 P. M., Friday
WDTV	Pittsburgh, Pa.	8:00 P. M., Tuesday
WHAM-TV	Rochester, N. Y.	6:00 P. M., Wednesday
KSL-TV	Salt Lake City, Utah	10:00 P. M., Thursday
KGO-TV	San Francisco, Cal.	6:30 P. M., Monday
KING-TV	Seattle, Wash.	6:15 P. M., Saturday
WTTG	Washington, D. C.	9:30 P. M., Friday

The "People's Political Poll" also has been scheduled for a number of additional cities, so check your Local TV-radio log for exact times.

Another CIO TV series, "Issues of the Day," moved into Omaha, sponsored by the Nebraska CIO Council. It will be aired twice weekly on two Omaha stations, at 6:15 p.m. on Fridays on WOW and at 4:45 p.m. on Saturdays on KMTV.

Put In On The Record

Now that the balance in the "bundles-for-Nixon" trust fund has dwindled from $18,235 to $66.13—thereby helping Gen. Eisenhower to conclude that his running mate is clean as a hound's tooth—it's worth recalling a proposal that might have saved the Republicans their currently red faces.

It was just a year ago that Pres. Truman sent to Congress a special message suggesting legislation requiring all lawmakers and top government officials to make public their entire financial status.

Such legislation, he told Congress, would be an important step in "assuring the integrity of the public service and in protecting government officials against false and unfounded charges of improper conduct."

Three members of the Senate—Morse, Humphrey and Douglas, men with records of integrity in public service—joined in sponsoring legislation containing the President's proposals.

What happened to it? Congress—busy shouting from the housetops about corruption—put into the "deep freeze" any proposal to open the books on its own financial operations to the full view of the voting public. With such legislation, taxpayers would know that their lawmaking representatives in Washington represent only the public—and are not beholden to special business interests, as is Richard Nixon.

Last week the President renewed his support for the financial publicity proposal. And Sen. Morse said he will press for its adoption when Congress returns to Washington in January. That will be a good time for some of those public figures who shout the loudest about corruption in government to get off their high-horses and do something about ending it.

. . . Now Comes Taft

While Sen. Nixon argues that there was nothing wrong in his extra private expense account, Sen. Taft—whom conservatives used to hail for his "integrity"—goes farther and tries to give the impression that the Nixon slush fund was a positive good.

The Taft statement is, in effect, a bid for private financial sponsorship of every Republican Senator.

It takes no superlative imagination to picture the effect of his suggestion.

Perhaps corporations, which now spend millions of dollars a year to sponsor soap operas and television dramas, may find that it's even better advertising to sponsor a conveniently willing Senator or Congressman.

Under the new Taft theory of Congressional ethics, we could expect to find that Senator Blank of Ohio is being brought to you through the courtesy of Eastinghouse Corp. or that Sen. Doe of Indiana is made available to the Senate as a public service of the General Electronical Co.

This would certainly bring the companies' names before the public, as advertising aims to do; the idea could be sold in schoolrooms as "another goodwill gesture by great corporations interested only in the concept of free enterprise"; and just possibly, it might keep the Senators and Congressmen in line—uninfluenced, of course, by their financial sponsorship—to vote against Taft-Hartley repeal and for more tax loopholes for the wealthy.

The only fly in this financial ointment is that the American public, in their innate decency, might take an extremely dim view of the open tampering with the legislative process which Sen. Nixon seeks to condone and which Sen. Taft praises as desirable.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY, President — ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, Executive Vice President — JAMES B. CAREY, Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Vol. XV — September 29, 1952 — No. 39

—But Just What Are They For?

In Other Words—

Let's Match The Records

Here are excerpts from the speech delivered by Sen. Sparkman (Ala.), Democratic candidate for vice president, at the CIO Labor Day picnic in Los Angeles:

By SEN. JOHN SPARKMAN

I WANT to talk to you today about what that Taft-Hartley Act means to you in the West. One of the big issues in this campaign is: Shall we have a new labor law which deals fairly with both labor and management, or shall we continue under the anti-labor Taft-Hartley Act?

I voted to sustain President Truman's veto of T-H. I was convinced by his analysis that it was not a fair and workable law. I am proud of my stand against this act, and proud of my party's stand against it.

But before I say more of this particular sin of the Republican Party against labor, I want to point out the Republican stand for Taft-Hartley is a part and parcel of its stand on all the domestic issues which face the country.

The Republicans' anti-labor stand cannot be separated from their stand against the best interests of the farmer and the small businessman. Except for what Gov. Stevenson called the "Republican Liberal Hour" which occurs just before every national election but never when Congress is in session, you cannot count on the Republican Party to be any different in the future from what it has been in the past—the party against the common man.

The American people know today that prosperity for the city family depends upon prosperity for the farm family, and vice versa . . .

Let's match the records. As against our record, let the Republicans put up their record. Their record is the Taft-Hartley Act. That act was passed over the veto of Pres. Truman.

When I voted to sustain the President's veto, I believed, as I believe now, that the Taft-Hartley Act was a subtle attempt to sabotage union organization.

I say "subtle" because not even the Republicans, except for some of their more extreme members, can afford to be openly and honestly anti-union. They are forced instead to sneak through the back door to get union-busting done by more devious means.

The Taft-Hartley Act carefully and deliberately fills the labor laws full of delays of administration. In labor relations, rights delayed may well be rights destroyed. The Taft-Hartley Act gives endless opportunity for objections, for arguments, for delay for its own sake.

Formerly labor and management were able to get elections quickly so they could get down to the business of bargaining. Taft-Hartley deliberately postpones these elections until an ocean of useless talk has been crossed.

I shall not attempt to describe all of the bad features of Taft-Hartley. You know them as well as I. But the worst features of Taft-Hartley have not yet been felt . . .

Even the magazine Business Week says that Taft-Hartley "went too far." That is one of the funny things about the Taft-Hartley Act. Most of the people who have been for it are a little dismayed at what they have built. Everybody thinks it went too far.

Even Sen. Taft wants to rewrite it. The Republican candidate for Vice President (Sen. Nixon), who prides himself on being one of the drafters of the Taft-Hartley Act, says, "As one of the drafters, I believe it should be retained in the public interest, but there is a definite need to amend it to meet the legitimate objections of workers."

THE TROUBLE is the Republican Party does not think there are any "legitimate objections."

The interesting thing about these Republicans who passed the Taft-Hartley Act and ever since have been running around apologizing for it is that they don't do anything but apologize. They don't take action.

In 1952 the voters are dissatisfied with the Taft-Hartley Act. The voters who want a fair labor law, which isn't loaded against working men, can take their choice between the party of apology and the party of action.

I think they will choose the party of action . . .

We are met today after two decades of progress. If we were to come together again, say 10 years from today, would we find that the people of America had slipped backward into the old morass of Republican-fostered breadlines, poorhouses and company unions?

Or would we find a people who have gained evermore not only in the material contentments of life which are the products of the Democratic era, but also in that more important spiritual serenity which comes with the independence of free labor?

If the voters will choose on the record of performance, there is no need for me to speak more.

Stevenson Gives His Views On Big Issues

Here is a digest of Gov. Stevenson's views on major campaign issues:

The Taft-Ike Deal: "The great crusade has now become the great surrender. It now appears brutally clear that Sen. Taft has taken over. It looks as if Taft lost the nomination and won the nominee."

Ike's backing of Sens. Jenner, McCarthy: The GOP slogan is "turn the rascals in."

Corruption: "We want our government clean. We want it honest. We want it efficient. We want it responsive to the needs of the people . . . Corruption in public affairs is treason. Any crooks I ever find in the government will be exposed and punished as quickly as I can catch them."

Time For a Change?: "You'll forgive me if I am a little cynical when I hear shouting loudest for a change the very politicians who have consistently opposed vital changes as far back as most of us can remember."

Democratic Platform: "I stand on that platform. I do not feel the need—so understandably felt by my distinguished opponent—of having my campaign manager say that I will write my own platform."

Civil Rights: "In the case of equal opportunity for employment, I believe it is not alone the duty but the enlightened interest of each state to develop its own positive program. But our platform also favors federal legislation—particularly when the states fail to act and inequalities of treatment persist."

Filibusters: "Every man has a right to be heard; but no man has the right to strangle democracy with a single set of vocal chords."

Taft-Hartley: "The only legitimate purpose of a Federal labor relations law is to make private bargaining work better. And that purpose has not, in my judgment, been served by the Taft-Hartley Act. What we need is a completely new law."

Tax-budget cuts: "Once the defense effort has fulfilled its objectives, very substantial reductions of the budget will ensue automatically. My guess is that those will come in fiscal 1955."

Foreign Affairs: "The essential direction of our foreign policy is right—building the unity and collective strength of the free countries to prevent the expansion of Soviet dominion and control over one nation after another."

Defense: "I believe in a strong national defense, and I believe we must press forward to improve our position and not waiver or hesitate in this interval when the scales are so precariously balanced."

Communists: "We must remember that liberals are not Communists . . . but where true Communists are concerned—men bound to the service and defense of the Stalinist tyranny—we must root them out and expect them to bear the consequences of their treachery to all America holds dearest."

Republicans: "A party of the past . . . the party of fear."

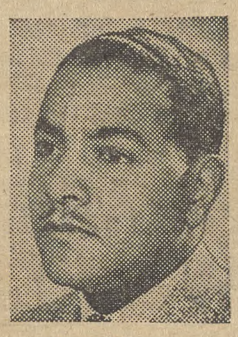
The Right To Differ—

3 Newsmen Get Awards Of Hillman Foundation

Alan Barth

Arthur Morse



Carl Rowan

SIDNEY HILLMAN Foundation awards of $500 each were made last week to three American writers for outstanding newspaper and magazine reporting and for the outstanding work of non-fiction for 1951.

Honored were Carl T. Rowan, Minneapolis Tribune reporter, for a series of newspaper articles dealing with race relations in the South; Arthur D. Morse, free-lance writer, for his article, "Who is Trying to Ruin Our Schools?" in McCall's; and Alan Barth, editorial writer for the Washington Post, for his book, "The Loyalty of Free Men."

The Hillman Foundation was set up in 1947 to keep alive the late labor leader's ideas of enlightened labor-management relations, race relations, world peace and related interests.

Jacob S. Potofsky, head of the Foundation and Hillman's successor as president of the CIO Clothing Workers, made the awards. William T. Evjue, publisher of the Capital Times, Madison, Wis., gave the principal address at the award ceremonies.

ROWAN, southern-born Negro, won the Hillman journalism award for a series of articles, "How Far From Slavery?" They were based on his return visit to the South in 1950-51 and showing the changes that have taken place since his boyhood.

Morse's prize-winning article in McCall's, which won the Hillman magazine award, exposed the attacks made on our school system by groups opposed to freedom and free inquiry.

Barth's book, published in 1951, deals with the questions of loyalty and civil liberties. It was one of the first works to make a comprehensive study of developments in Washington and elsewhere which threaten the liberal American tradition.

In making the awards, Potofsky noted Hillman's contributions to both labor and America as a whole.

"Some of the problems that Hillman faced have been aggravated in recent years," he said. "The right to differ and to dissent is being challenged today as never before. Rabble-rousers are invading new fields and even occupy high office. The technique of the 'big lie' is being perfected and applied to an extent never before witnessed in this nation."

Evjue said that the use of fear as a weapon in subduing the aspirations of the American people is not new. "Fear has always been a leading weapon in the arsenal of the entrenched economic order. It has always been present in the struggle between those who have too much and those who have too little."

Calling communism "the giant problem facing a free world today," Evjue said "the future safety of this country against the aggressions of communism lies with a patriotic, constructive, informed leadership that holds to the idea that the best insurance against communism is the American family that is well-housed, well-fed, and with a reasonable prospect of security for the future."

Hillman Foundation awards totalling $90,000 were made in labor and related fields during 1951. These include: scholarships, grants for research, lectures and similar purposes.

Give A Buck To PAC

Press And Politics—

Big Dailies Sat On Hands, Tried To Bury Nixon's Trust Fund Deal

THE DANGERS of "a one-party press in a two-party country," foreseen recently by Gov. Stevenson, were demonstrated when the "bundles-for-Nixon" political land mine exploded in the Republicans' faces in the past 10 days.

Where Stevenson had praised the fairness and accuracy of most news reports but feared the monopoly of editorial opinion, the Nixon affair revealed to a considerable extent suppression or trimming in the news columns. And that was in contrast to the strong editorial column condemnation of the Republican vice presidential candidate.

THE NIXON affair "broke" on Thursday, Sept. 18—but it was 24 to 48 hours before most readers of the nation's press could begin to discover what it was all about.

Particularly in the GOP-dominated Midwest press was the story backed near the classified ads.

It was so deeply buried, in fact, that Gen. Eisenhower's party had a job getting hold of the facts.

Where Was AP?

Associated Press — the news service on which most U. S. dailies rely—sat on its hands when the "bundles - for - Nixon" story broke on Sept. 18.

First accounts of the Nixon trust fund appeared in the New York Post early that morning, and were soon quoted by the United Press. But the Associated Press just ignored the matter until 5 p.m., when it started carrying Nixon's first attempted explanation.

In Des Moines, reported Correspondent Edward T. Folliard in the Washington Post, "the story appeared in a newspaper, but was buried on an inside page." (The Cowles' Register & Tribune is a monopoly in Des Moines.)

In Kansas City, where the Star is the only paper, "the Nixon story was out in the local papers, buried far back near the funny papers," according to the Washington Star's report.

The result was that people in Kansas City didn't know what Ike was talking about when he preceded a campaign blast at "corruption" with a lengthy defense of Nixon.

Max Lerner of the New York Post (which with Reporter Magazine first revealed the Nixon trust fund), said when Ike defended Nixon, "the eager faces of the audience took on a troubled expression. They were sympathetic but they were also puzzled. You felt pretty sure that most of them had not even heard that there was a Nixon story. How should they have heard when the Kansas City Star which blankets the city had buried the original Post story inside and featured Nixon's denial of a charge that most of their readers had probably missed? Much the same goes for a number of other cities through which the campaign train passed."

THERE was a similar pattern of news distortion and suppression in big Eastern dailies.

The New York Times didn't catch up with the story until Nixon started issuing his stream of denials. The same policy was followed on Col. McCormick's Washington Times-Herald.

In New York, Hearst's Journal-American and Mirror ignored the affair the first day, while the World-Telegram & Sun, in common with other papers of the Scrips-Howard chain, gave only Nixon's "explanation." It wasn't until well into Friday, Sept. 19—when even GOP editors could no longer ignore it—that the press began to dig into the Nixon trust fund.

Two notable exceptions were the Washington Post and New York Herald Tribune.

But, otherwise, the "one-party press in a two-party country" was tried and found wanting on the biggest story to date in the 1952 presidential campaign.

—W.M.

ACWA Backs Fair Dealers, Raps 'Do-Nothing' GOP

CIO CLOTHING Workers last week called upon the union's 400,000 members to support Fair Deal candidates so "America will not change its forward march toward greater security at home and abroad, and continued prosperity for all."

Endorsement of the Stevenson-Sparkman presidential ticket and a call for election of a "forward-looking Congress" were voted by the ACWA's newly-installed general executive board.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky announced the endorsement, which cited 20 years' progress under the New Deal and Fair Deal.

The ACWA praised the Democratic platform for "looking ahead to continued effort to make our country strong, to forge the bonds of freedom with our democratic allies abroad, to improve our economic security and to preserve our civil liberties."

Particularly praised were Democratic pledges to work for an expanded social security program, civil rights legislation, equitable taxes, improved housing and repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In contrast, the ACWA said, the Republicans have "a do-nothing platform" which "ignores the needs and aspirations of the people and turns back the clock to the fear, the insecurity and bankruptcy of the past."

The Clothing Workers said the GOP is "completely under the domination of those reactionaries, special interests and isolationist who would shackle labor, do nothing to arrest the forces of inflation, weaken us in a period of danger and desert our democratic allies in other lands."

Perlis Is Elected

Leo Perlis, director of the National CIO Community Services Committe, has been elected chairman of the National Labor Advisory Committee of Community Chest and Council of America.

If They Win, GOP Has Super T-H

Company-Wide Industrial Contracts Will Be First Target

IT HARDLY seems four years ago, during the heat of the 1948 presidential campaign, that the CIO News carried a five-column headline saying:

T-H Is Only The Beginning, Chums, If GOP Is Winner In November.

What was true of November 1948 is true of November 1952. The Republicans under the leadership of the remaining sponsor of the Taft-Hartley Act, with the aid of their Dixiecrat allies, could of course have passed any kind of a labor law they wanted during the last session of Congress after the campaign they whipped up against the striking CIO Steelworkers.

But with an eye on the elections they forebore, just as they did in 1948. If they win this year the deluge will come next, after they have installed the bewildered and inconsistent Gen. Eisenhower in the White House and organized Congress in whatever way Sen. Taft (R. O.) wants it organized.

—Seaman for LPA

"What Big Ears You Have, Grandma!"

Taft—and also some of the other reactionaries—have a lot of gimmicks up their sleeves for making life more miserable for the workers and their unions if the GOP wins in November.

High on the program of the Republicans' czar is legislation to outlaw industry-wide and particularly company-wide bargaining. Taft calls it an "anti-labor monopoly" law. This is the old beating-a-straw-man technique, which calls for the setting up of an imaginary figure and then whaling the bejabbers out of it. The imaginary figure in this case is, of course, the "labor monopoly," a figure of speech that bursts the bounds of airy imagination and plunges full-blown into the more etheral aura of pure whimsy.

What Taft has in mind is a law forbidding union representatives from negotiating contracts for the employes of more than one company or for all the employes in several plants of one firm. In a few industries, he might be willing to allow negotiations on a regional basis rather than local—but not nationally. In the building trades, one union representative might be allowed to act for workers in a limited geographical area.

Unions violating his law would be treated the same way a company breaking the anti-monopoly laws is treated—by fines—although he says now that he is opposed to applying present anti-trust laws to unions.

The same kind of a provision almost sneaked into T-H when it was bulling its way through Congress in 1947. It passed the House as an amendment was defeated in the Senate by one vote—Taft's, of all people. His reason:

"If we'd gotten that amendment, we might have lost the whole law."

Also on the congressional horizon in case of a Republican victory next month is a bill Sen. Robertson, Virginia Dixiegop, introduced in 1950. Putting all unions under the anti-trust laws, it died in committee. Now Robertson wants it reintroduced.

The Wall Street Journal a few months ago observed:

"If the Democrats win a smashing victory this fall, the chance of Congress passing major labor legislation next year would be slim. But if the Republicans hold their own or gain strength in the House and Senate, it's almost certain that there will be a new effort next year to crack down on the unions.

"And if the GOP controls Congress by comfortable margins, the effort will probably succeed."

Adlai, Ike Give T-H Views

THERE'S a world of difference between the Democrats and the Republicans, and their presidential candidates, over Taft-Hartley.

The Democratic platform, without qualifications, calls for T-H repeal and enactment of a new, fair labor-management relations law. Gov. Stevenson supports this view, calling T-H a "tire with 23 punctures and five blowouts" that needs "junking and not a recap job with reclaimed Republican rubber."

Stevenson on Labor Day called T-H "biased and politically inspired" and said "we must have a new law . . . and start over again."

The Republican platform praised T-H, subject only to unspecified amendments. Gen. Eisenhower admits that T-H "might be used to break unions" but agrees with Sen. Taft on "the basic principles" of T-H and "is opposed to its repeal."

SCABS CAN VOTE but strikers can't under one of the most unfair Ta Hartley clauses. That provision was protested by recent CIO-AFL picket l in Newark in support of striking jewelers. In foreground are Joseph Brud AFL teachers, and Carl Holderman, State CIO president.

'A Few Million Jobless'—The T-H Would Really Hit Home

IT HASN'T been so long since the depression that a lot of workers, even the younger ones, have forgotten in the prosperity of the last few years the grim days of the early 30's.

There were empty stomachs and evictions, shabby clothes and men selling apples on street corners. But behind them were long lines of desperate job-hunters at the factories, stores and offices that hadn't got into the bankruptcy courts or been shuttered by their timorous owners.

Millions of workers—and their now-grown children—remember those days. Like a foul stench that can never be forgotten, they remember personnel managers auctioning off jobs—when there were any—to the lowest despairing bidder. They remember kickbacks, yellow dog contracts, shakedowns, speedups, rankling favoritism and other assaults on their innate dignity as human beings.

It was bad, real bad.

But if another depression comes along, the Taft-Hartley Act will make the 1930's seem like a vacation in the Garden of Eden.

The full effect of Sen. Taft's favorite piece of legislation—blessed by his fellow-Republicans in the platform they adopted at the Chicago convention—hasn't b felt yet, because employment has b generally high since its passage in 194

But once industry can pick and cho its workers, instead of hunting for th the act's undisguised viciousness will felt—and felt hard.

David Lawrence, the syndicated col nist who parrots big business in its m reactionary moments, wrote as far b as July 4, 1947, that T-H would beco "more effective" when the country suffering with a little unemployment.

What he called the law's establishm of "new rights" for employers would crease in importance," he wrote, "w the supply of workers seeking jobs comes greater."

"At that time," he added, "a basis be laid for greater discipline . . ."

Frank, as well as brutal.

Not long after the 1948 election magazine Business Week in an edito said T-H "crossed the narrow line separ ing a law which aims only to regulate f one which could destroy."

The publication pointed out that a p of only "a few million unemployed" wo create conditions in which reaction employers, using T-H devices could "wr the labor movement."

IN THE SOUTH, when the tide for unionism ran strong in the textile industry, as with these workers at the Enka plant at Morristown, Tenn.

. . . TAFT-HARTLEY came along, gave anti-union Southern employe more opportunity to call out the National Guard as at the Enka pla

Act In The Works

Taft, Nixon Agree It's Okeh To Bust Strikes, Slash Wages

SEN. TAFT, the overlord of the Republican Party and the proprietor of its candidate for the presidency, and Sen. Nixon (Cal.), the smooth-tongued reactionary running for Vice President, see eye to eye on a lot of things.

One of them is the right of an employer to bust a strike. Not to settle on a give-and-take basis, but to break it. Another is that it's perfectly proper for southern employers to pay their employes less than northern workers earn.

Taft and Nixon made their views clear in a minority report on the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations' report of its investigation into labor-employer relations in the southern textile industry.

They took sharp issue with the subcommittee majority on its condemnation of the dismaying picture of employer-sponsored interference with the right to organize and the right to join a union, accusing the majority of "distorting" the evidence.

They upheld the right of employers to bargain without good faith. They approved the use of the national guard to "protect" struck plants against picketing, and they can see nothing wrong with injunctions prohibiting or restricting picketing.

And by implication they defended the right of a newspaper or radio station to refuse to sell advertising space or time to a union to answer attacks on it by employers or their trained seals.

They staunchly defended the North-South wage differential, professing to find it "unfortunate" only for "some northern employers who compete with southern producers, but they have the satisfaction of being close to the larger northern markets."

"Most economists agree," they proclaimed, "that living costs are lower in the South."

Most economists DON'T agree to anything of the sort. A few months ago, the Bureau of Labor Statistics published figures showing the annual income required to maintain a "modest, but adequate" standard of living in each of 34 large cities.

Washington—which most people consider a southern city—was most expensive. Of the five next most expensive cities, three were in the South—Richmond, Atlanta and Houston. And four of the least expensive places were in the North.

"The milder climate lowers the southern workers' fuel bill, his housing construction costs, his clothing bill," Taft and Nixon went on. "Often he is close to his food supply or grows much of his own food. His taxes ordinarily are lower."

But the BLS survey showed that it cost more to live in Birmingham than in Boston or Buffalo, more in Memphis than Minneapolis, etc.

"Is there, after all," the pair concluded, "any reason for forcing a cost on southern employes higher than is necessary to give the same standard of living in the South as prevails in the North?"

The SAME standard? When most northern workers have never even tasted things like fatback and sow-belly, but always settle for pork chops and loin roasts?

Full T-H Repeal Urged By CIO

FULL REPEAL of the Taft-Hartley Act and writing of new labor-management legislation based on the Wagner Act is CIO's five-year-long position.

In its last convention, at New York nearly a year ago, the CIO in a resolution listed these consequences of Taft-Hartley:

"The organization of the unorganized has been brought to a virtual standstill . . . the most vicious single effect of Taft-Hartley."

"The Taft-Hartley Act has also seriously hampered collective bargaining . . . "

"The Taft-Hartley Act places serious restrictions on labor's basic right — the right to strike . . . "

"Taft-Hartley brought back the use of injunctions in labor disputes . . . "

The resolution continued:

"The CIO will support a legislative approach which will provide this country with a sound and fair national labor relations policy. Fundamental issues of principle cannot be compromised."

PAC Booklets Offer More Facts

MORE DETAILS about the Taft-Hartley Act are contained in the CIO Political Action Committee's pamphlet, "'52 Facts on Taft-Hartley."

Other PAC pamphlets in the "Facts" series are: "Prices," "Taxes," "Corruption," "Foreign Affairs" and "Politics." All can be ordered at 3c each from CIO-PAC, 1346 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Like Father, Like Son . . .

They're all in the family—the views Sen. Taft has about American labor.

His father was Pres. William Howard Taft, also known as "Injunction Bill" for his actions as a federal judge before and after his term in the White House.

Back in the early 1890s, when the Pullman workers were on strike against the most abject slavery, federal troops were called out to break the protest walkout of the American Railway Union, one of the nation's first industrial unions.

At that time, William Howard Taft wrote his wife:

"It will be necessary for the military to kill some of the mob before the trouble can be stayed. They have only killed six as yet. That is hardly enough to make an impression."

Workers' Cases Stalled By T-H

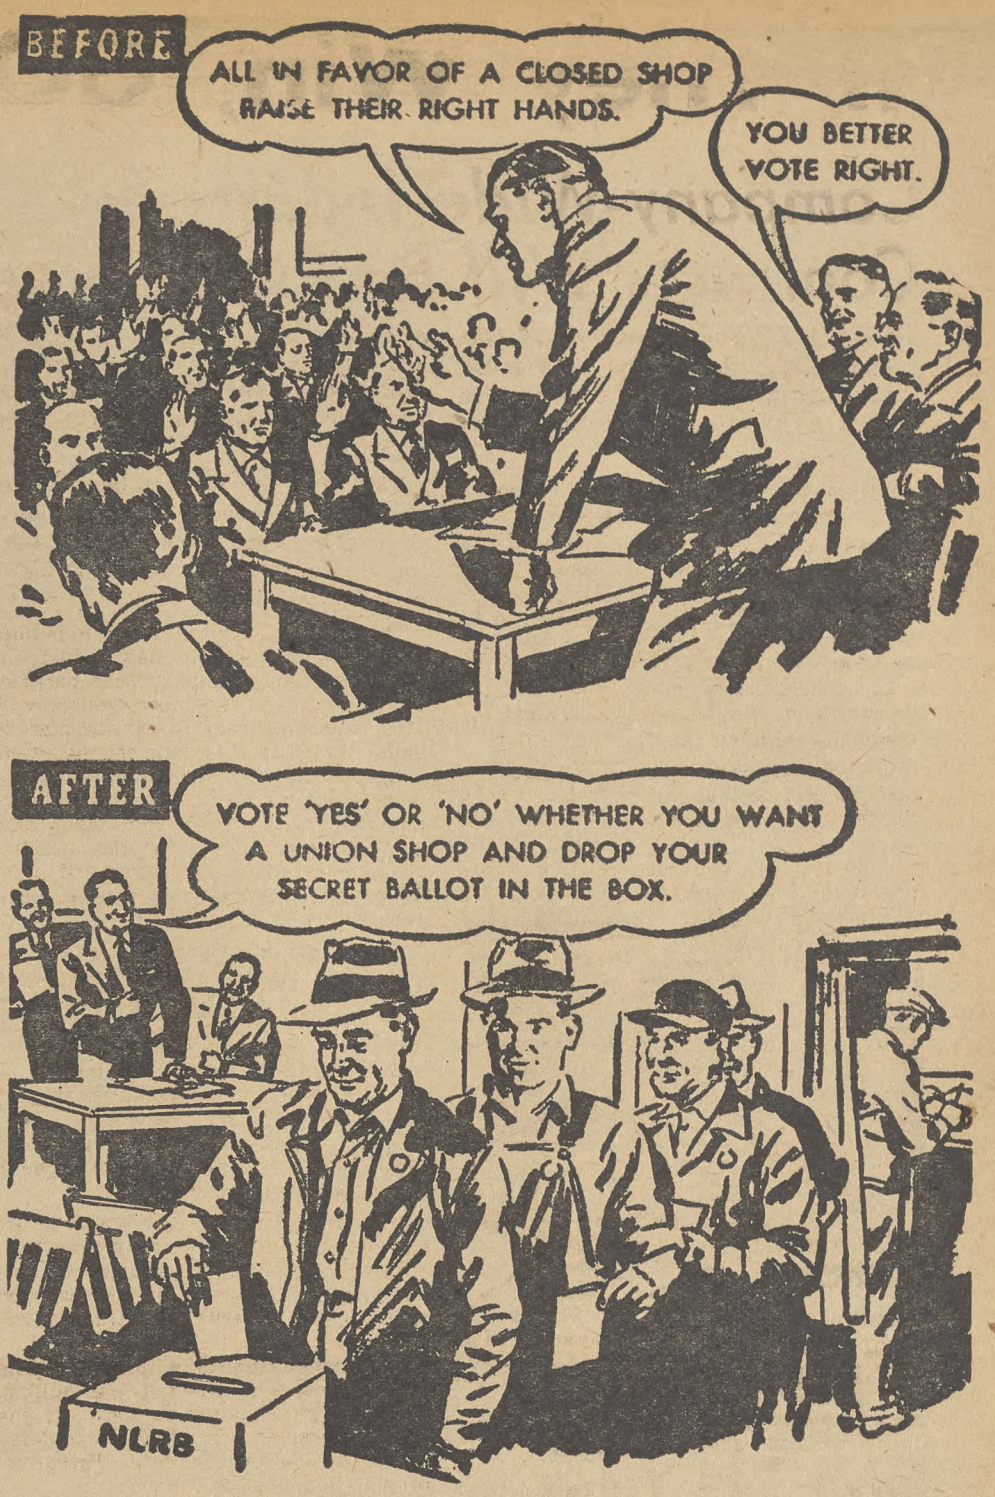
THE SENATE Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, which has been investigating the results of the Taft-Hartley Act, wondered how long it takes the National Labor Relations Board to process a complaint in the manner prescribed by T-H.

Suppose, the subcommittee wondered, a worker was discharged for union activity. How long would it take him to get justice from the NLRB? This is what it found out, step by step:

- From the filing of the protest by the worker or his union to the issuance of a complaint by the NLRB—an average of 159 days.
- From the filing of the complaint to the close of the hearing—an average of 38.4 days.
- From the close of the hearing to the trial examiner's intermediate report—an average of 62.7 days.
- From the intermediate report to the NLRB decision—an average of 146 days.

Total lapsed time, 406.1 days. That's 58.1 weeks, or more than 13 months.

And if the employer wants to appeal to the federal courts, just add a couple of years more.



79% of all workers favor this change.

Despite all their grumbling at Gov. Stevenson's jokes, Republicans again are circulating their "Before And After" comic books which proclaim everything is rosy under Taft-Hartley. But they kept in this page praising original T-H provision requiring elections before union security clauses could be negotiated. Actually, provision was killed by Congress after NLRB spent hundred of thousands of tax dollars to conduct 46,000 elections, of which 97.1% approved the union shop. That outcome exposes basic falsity behind the GOP comic book—that workers, supposedly, don't want unions.

Here's What's Wrong With T-H And How It's Curbed Labor

THERE ARE dozens of things wrong with the Dixiegop shotgun approach to industrial relations that was written into the Taft-Hartley Act.

The CIO Legal Dept. summarized the worst in its report to the 1951 CIO convention, and here they are:

- Serious restriction through injunction on the right to strike, "this most basic of all labor's rights . . . without which there can be no collective bargaining."
- Interference with collective bargaining through the "cooling off" clause.
- Prohibition of "concerted activities which have long been recognized as necessary to free trade unionism," including secondary boycotts and picketing.
- The "confusing and technical" requirement of 60 days' notice before striking.
- The free hand given the NLRB general counsel to obtain injunctions against unions for "unfair labor practices."
- Outlawing of the most effective union security.

HERE ARE some of the things the Republican - sponsored and Republican - praised Taft - Hartley Act has done to organized workers:

Organization since T-H was passed in 1947 has barely kept pace with union losses due to death and retirement; the total of organized workers remains substantially the same as in 1947, although the country's labor force has increased substantially.

The number of National Labor Relations Board elections has decreased 40%, the number of eligible voters 51%, the number of elections won by the CIO 71%, and the number of votes for the CIO 62%.

The T-H revival of the anti-union injunction to "settle" national disputes caused a revival of similar injunctions in the states.

The T-H abolition of the closed shop prompted many states to prohibit other forms of union security, such as the union shop and maintenance of membership.

Rubber Workers Show Democracy In Action

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THERE WEREN'T many people on the boardwalk the cool gray morning of Sept. 15 when the CIO Rubber Workers 17th annual convention opened in Asbury Park, N. J. The summer seaside crowds were gone.

A few late vacationers, a stray year-round resident or two, and some operators of food, candy, souvenir and other stands and stores along the boardwalk looked up and stared curiously at the stream of men and women delegates with big brown manila envelopes tucked under their arms who were walking in groups or by one's and two's toward Convention Hall, a long wooden structure built on piles jutting out from the boardwalk.

Some of the men delegates, ambling up the boardwalk, wore white sweatshirts, with the numbers of their local unions marked across the chest, other were in bright-colored sport shirts, or in business suits. The women had on attractive light summer dresses and coats, or tailored suits.

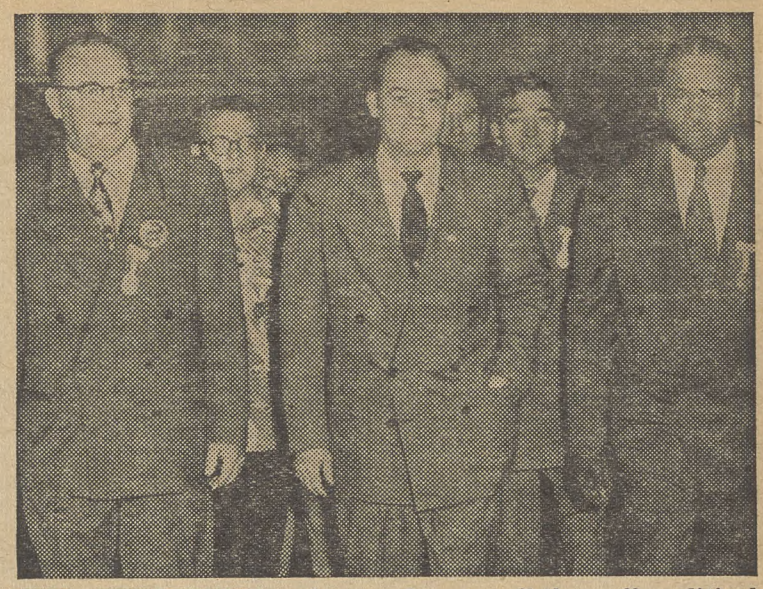
THERE were several family groups with children of all ages to be seen among the people gathered around the entrance and here and there was a father or mother wheeling a baby carriage.

In appearance it was a typical American crowd—neat, well-dressed, quiet—such as can be seen anywhere in the country. And yet there was something about these delegates that gave them special distinction.

The boardwalk strollers and shopkeepers who stared idly at the rubber workers as they passed didn't know it, but they were watching people who had come to this small seaside resort on the Atlantic, not just for an outing, but to take part in something extremely important—the functioning of genuine democracy in America today.

The vital role the trade union and its supreme authority, the convention, plays in our democracy is as yet too little known. Some day it may be more generally recognized that the labor movement has developed one of the most effective instruments for carrying out the democratic principles we preach about so fervently to the world.

THREE TOP OFFICERS of the Rubber Workers with Natl. CIO Vice-Pres. Allan Haywood, a leading convention speaker. URW officers are Pres. L. S. Buckmaster (pinning badge on Haywood), Vice-Pres. Joseph Childs (left) and Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker.



SEN. HUMPHREY, who made an off-the-cuff political speech backing the Stevenson-Sparkman Democratic ticket, was greeted with repeated applause that rocked the old convention hall. Here a URW reception committee escorts him to the rostrum.

The convention of the United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum and Plastic Workers of America, held the week of Sept. 15-21, was from start to finish a shining example of democracy in action.

NO HONEST person could have listened to the proceedings without discovering that it offered its 200,000 members, through the nearly 600 elected convention delegates, a voice in determining how the union should be run, what policies it should follow, what officers should head it and how it can most effectively strive to get for the workers in the industry a high standard of living—without which there can be no real democracy.

It was the very thoroughness of its democratic procedure, perhaps that many have made the convention seem dull to outsiders. It got little attention in the daily press. Only one news reporter, from the Akron Beacon-Journal in the industry's big town, was at the press table to give the proceedings full-time coverage.

Newspapers like to print stories about fights and rows—and there were none of any consequence at the URW convention—not even a contest over the election of top officers. It was on the whole a friendly family affair.

It takes time—much time—as well as patience, to follow democratic procedure at big conventions and give every delegate who wants to speak his mind the chance to do it. This is often boring, particularly to those who don't understand all that is involved.

To the delegates themselves, however, these long debates can be quite exciting. There was no indication at the Rubber Workers' convention that the delegates were ever bored. Their trouble was rather that sometimes they got excited and buzzed at the tables where they sat like a swarm of bees while a delegate was talking over the floor mike.

AT SUCH times Pres. L. S. Buckmaster—a tall, dignified man with gray hair, black eyebrows and gold-rimmed glasses—would pound his gavel vigorously to bring the delegates to order. Now and then his face which ordinarily wore a mild expression would cloud over with anger and sometimes he would sternly chide noisy members.

"Now what do you mean by that!" he roared once, when some delegates booed a speaker. "If we've come to a time when a delegate can't get up on the floor and speak his honest opinion, it's pretty bad!"

It was plain that a deep concern over observation of democratic behavior ran like an undercurrent through all the convention proceedings.

ONE OF the issues that provoked long and heated debate concerned the question of sending local presidents as delegates to conventions "by virtue of" their office, rather than electing them along with the other delegates as at present. The proposal, strongly opposed as granting undemocratic special privilege and opening a loophole for unfair politics, was overwhelmingly defeated by a roll call vote which took hours to complete.

Another motion, voted down decisively after long and hot debate, was a proposal to provide for election of local officers every two years instead of once a year as now, and to change the time of the elections from May to fall or winter.

Altogether 49 proposed constitutional amendments, concerned mostly with the unon's internal affairs, were submitted in advance by members of some of the nearly 300 affiliated locals, and were presented to the convention for action with recommendation for or against acceptance made by the committee on laws.

A printed copy of these proposed amendments bound together in a large blue pamphlet was given to each delegate at the beginning of the convention, together with a bound copy of the 25 resolutions also submitted in advance by local members, so that everyone would have a chance to know exactly what he was voting on.

BESIDES these documents, the big brown folder each delegate received contained a copy of the general officers' bulky report, a copy of the constitution and other handy printed material useful at the convention—altogether quite an armful.

The heavily stuffed folders in a way could have been Exhibit A in the union's factual evidence showing its democratic concern that all delegates should be well informed on every measure to come before the convention. Debates on the floor showed clearly that they were.

Mrs. Ross Gets Post

Mrs. Elizabeth Healy Ross, wife of Sec. Michael Ross of the CIO International Committee, has been named to the newly created post of deputy chief of the Children's Bureau, Federal Security Agency.

Humphrey Rips GOP As 'Most Corrupt Party In History'

DELEGATES to the CIO Rubber Workers convention re-elected their three officers, greeted with bursts of laughter and repeated applause, a major political address by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and endorsed the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket during their Asbury Park convention.

L. S. Buckmaster was returned to his eighth term as president, and Vice-Pres. Joseph W. Childs and Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker were re-elected to fourth terms, all by acclamation.

CIO Executive Vice-Pres. Allan Haywood, who was introduced as one of the best friends the Rubber Workers have ever had," was given a big ovation. He told of the union's bitter struggles for recognition in the dark days of 1936 in Akron—his first CIO assignment—and contrasted conditions then with the benefits workers enjoy today. The CIO has won pensions, paid holidays, vacations, sickness insurance and many other improvements for millions of workers, he said.

Turning to the political campaign, Haywood made a slashing attack on the Republican platform and candidates. Gen. Eisenhower is backing nothing "that is of any benefit to labor," he said. As for Sen. Nixon, Haywood pointed out that the vice-presidential candidate voted wrong on 27 out of 30 issues involving labor.

Humphrey was greeted with a roar of applause that shook the walls of the old convention hall when he said he agreed 100% with the union in calling for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law. He called the act "one of the most inequitable, unfair and unjust laws ever put on the statute books of America."

Humphrey—who was interrupted repeatedly by loud applause and laughter—did not speak from a prepared address. "I do not need any ghosts or any spooks; there are enough of them in the Republican Party," he said. Here are a few of his remarks the delegates cheered exuberantly:

"I am not an expert on humor, but I am willing to wager this—that the biggest joke in 1952 is the platform of the Republican Party. That platform could put you into hysterics! That platform is a joke—unless the Republicans should come into power and then it would be a tragedy.

"They (the Republicans) talk about 'creeping socialism.' My dear friends, the issue in this campaign is not creeping socialism—it is creaking, squeaking Republicanism. You know these Republicans are very clever with words. They ought to be—they haven't had a chance to do anything else but talk during the last 20 years.

"They are the hungriest office seekers that the world has ever known—hungry of course only for power—because we have given them a chance to live like Republicans while continually voting Democratic! And they have lived well. Did you ever see a Republican underfed?

"We, the Democrats, are guilty of a great crime, the Republicans say—that is, the crime of generosity to the people. I have never seen so many people who worried about the moral fiber of other people. They shed tears about it, and if the Government does something for grandpa and grandma, it will destroy their moral fiber.

"The Republican Party stands guilty before the American people as being the most corrupt political party in the history of this land—corrupt under Grant, corrupt under Harding, corrupt under the 80th Congress, and corrupt today, in moral corrosion in its effort to win an election.

"If there is anybody in America who has a right to complain, it is those who are unorganized. It is those who have been the victims of Republican-made inflation. It is not these fat-bellied, corporation executives and Republican hirelings who are running around howling about bankruptcy and socialism.

"They have business machines where their hearts should be. They can only think of one thing—a balanced budget. They never have thought of a balanced diet for a workingman's family."

THESE WORKERS from B. F. Goodrich Co., Akron, were among the 35 women delegates to the CIO Rubber Workers convention. Members of Local 5, they are, (left to right) Eula Hull, Adeline Paris and Florence Franklin.

The Women, Bless 'Em, Are Good Union Guys In URW

LOTS OF people—some of them in the labor movement—seem to think that women who work in industry do it "just to make a little extra money," or aren't serious about their jobs because they expect to get married soon and stop working. For these and other reasons, women often are not considered likely to make good union members.

Interviews with some of the 35 women delegates who attended the CIO Rubber Workers' convention did not bear out these notions. Rather, they confirmed results of recent surveys by the U. S. Women's Bureau showing that a large proportion of women workers today are married, work to support their families and have employment records extending over many years.

There was, for instance, Mrs. Elizabeth Barton, delegate from Firestone Local 7 in Akron. A breezy, vigorous widow with gray hair piled high on her head and a friendly manner, Mrs. Barton works in a defense plant, making parts for rockets. She has 12 years' seniority at Firestone, in addition to time spent on other jobs held at various times.

Mrs. Barton has three children—a son in Korea, another son, married, and a 13-year-old daughter. Besides keeping house, Mrs. B. works eight hours a day, six days a week, and still finds time to be an active union member.

Then there were the three women delegates from Local 5 in Akron who work for the B. F. Goodrich Co. Mrs. Florence Franklin is a big handsome Negro mother with two sons, 14 and 16, both in high school. She trims gaskets for autos at Goodrich's mill No. 4, and has worked there nine years.

Adeline Paris, who looks as French as her name, with her dark hair and eyes and lively face, has worked at Goodrich for 20 years. She inspects valves in the tire division and is the union's department committeewoman.

Snow-white haired Eula Hull who trims piston cups and rings for hydraulic brakes has 23 years' seniority at Firestone. She has two daughters.

TWUA Defeats AFL By Wide Margin In Big Rug Plant

THE CIO Textile Workers last week defeated the AFL United Textile Workers by a vote of 916 to 576 in a NLRB election at the A. & M. Karaghuesian Carpet Co. plant, Freehold, N. J.

This latest TWUA victory added to the string of defeats it has inflicted on the AFL union since George Baldanzi, who formerly was TWUA Executive vice president, signed up with the AFL.

Leader of the TWUA campaign was Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council, who is also TWUA acting state director. He said that the CIO victory cleared the way for increases of at least 9 and 10c.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said that even the salaried leaders of the AFL "secession movement" have given up hope of success and are looking for other jobs. He said that 16 have left the AFL union staff.

"In the last few days, four of those who joined Baldanzi's effort to split our union have quit the ranks of the United Textile Workers, AFL," Rieve reported. "The most recent was Sam Baron, Canadian director of the dual union—who, after four months of effort, has failed to wean away a single local from the CIO."

TWUA last week began contract negotiations in New York City with the American Viscose Corp., which employs 16,000 workers in seven plants in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Virginia.

TWUA is seeking a 15c hourly increase, a union shop, longer vacations for senior employes, and extension to other members of families of company-paid hospital benefits, which now apply to employes and their wives.

We Pay For Dixiegops—

BLS Living Cost Index Climbs Closer To Mars

WORKERS, consumers and housewives are paying a little more each month in higher prices for the hatchet job the Dixiegop-controlled Congress has performed on price controls.

The latest consumer price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics is up again—as it has been every month since last February.

The bureau's so-called "new" index—which actually is an interim figure pending another revision next year—set a new record. It reached 191.1 as of Aug. 15. It was 190.8 the month before. That is a climb of 3% in a year and 12.3% over pre-Korea.

The "old" BLS index—to which many union escalator clauses are linked—already was higher. In the month, it declined fractionally, from 192.4 in mid-July to 192.3 in mid-August.

But in a majority of the nation's big cities, local living cost figures are above the BLS national average. And some of the highest cost cities are in the South.

Congressional action last spring in wiping out food price controls on a large variety of fresh, canned and frozen foods, plus the earlier refusal to allow meat price rollbacks, was reflected again in the latest climb of the BLS index.

Foods and rents—where controls also were weakened by the Dixiegops—climbed .3%. It now takes $2.36 to buy what $1 would buy before World War II. And the food price index now is 16% higher than before the Korean war.

The Office of Price Stabilization, meantime, announced that its program for posting uniform community ceiling prices on many grocery items will begin this week in selected cities throughout the nation.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "old" BLS Index:

Period			Index	Period		Index
1939	monthly	average	99.4	1950:	June 15	170.2
1943	monthly	average	123.6	1951:	June 15	185.5
1944	monthly	average	125.5	1952:	Jan. 15	190.2
1945	monthly	average	128.4		Feb. 15	188.3
1946	monthly	average	139.3		Mar. 15	188.4
1947	monthly	average	159.2		Apr. 15	189.6
1948	monthly	average	171.2		May 15	190.4
1949	monthly	average	169.1		June 15	191.1
1950	monthly	average	171.2		July 15	192.4
1951	monthly	average	185.9		Aug. 15	192.3
1952	monthly	average	190.3

45 Areas On Jobless List

DESPITE an increase of jobs in some areas, 45 communities still have unemployment of 6 per cent or more in the employment survey issued last week by the Labor Dept.

Non-farm unemployment in these 45 areas total 1,951,500.

New York City, and four New England and one Ohio community were removed from the acute unemployment list. The New England areas are Manchester and Nashua, both in New Hampshire, and Biddeford and Lewiston, both in Maine. Work on a vast atomic plant caused the removal of Portsmouth-Chillicothe, Ohio, from the acute category.

Five other cities—Flint and Muskegon, both in Michigan; Greensboro and High Point, both in North Carolina, and Rochester, N. Y. were shifted from "moderate labor surplus" to "balanced labor" categories.

Give A Buck To PAC

Price Index Higher In Most Big Cities

By Labor Press Associated

IN A MAJORITY of big cities, the latest consumer price index is far above the national average reported by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Milwaukee continues in the lead, while three southern cities, Birmingham, Atlanta, and Houston, are among the first five. Here is how the 18 large cities stood as of Aug. 15, when the national BLS "new" index was 191.1:

Milwaukee	199.2	Norfolk	195.7	Philadelphia	191.2
Birmingham	198.5	Cleveland	194.2	Cincinnati	190.9
Atlanta	198.4	Detroit	194.2	Scranton	189.4
Chicago	196.7	Pittsburgh	192.9	Washington	187.4
Houston	196.0	New Orleans	192.7	New York	185.7
Seattle	195.9	Los Angeles	192.0	Boston	183.0

The food price index for the nation was 235.5, but it ranged from a high of 248.7 to a low of 225.5.

Republicans Beware—

Dividends Climb 5% Above Past Record

REPUBLICAN investors in our nation's big corporations had better not listen to their own party's political propaganda. They're going to lose a lot of money if they do.

The G. O. P. has been making a great to-do about how Fair Deal policies and "high" taxes on corporations are "ruining" American business enterprise. To hear its party hacks talk, you'd think that, under the circumstances, anyone who invests in stocks is losing his shirt. Smart business investors who believed them would certainly unload their holdings.

They haven't been doing so, however, and here's why:

The Commerce Department's Office of Business Economics said that publicly reported cash dividend payments to stockholders in U. S. business corporations amounted to more than $4.6 billion during the first eight months of this year. That is an increase of 5% over the total for the same period of record peacetime profits in 1951.

Moreover, the rate is rising, not decreasing. The bureau said that dividends paid in August, "typically a light payment month," totaled $231 million, or 7% more than in August a year ago.

In some business fields, investors did even better. Oil refinery returns have gone up 21%, and non-ferrous metals and machinery manufacturing businesses have expanded dividend disbursements 10%. Textile industry dividends, however, are running 15% below last year.

Big business corporation propaganda has tried to convince the public that nearly every American shares in this bounty. A recent study by the Brookings Institution disclosed, however, that contrary to the corporation-fostered notion that practically every American owns stock there are actually only 6½ million shareholders, less than 5% of the population.

Even that figure is grossly misleading, for the bulk of the stock in the major and most profitable corporations is concentrated in a comparatively few top income families.

During this period, workers' wages have been rigidly frozen by the unfair control laws written by the last Congress. Even where union contract "escalator clauses" have tied wages to the cost of living, they've increased less than dividends.

Contrasted with the 5% average hike in dividends over the last eight months, the rise in the cost of living for the entire year from Aug. 1951 through July 1952 was 3.6%.

Stockholders' returns, in the last eight months, accordingly, have increased at a rate 1.2% better than rising living costs. That rate, remember, is on top of the high boost that came the two previous years out of the fat profiteering on the Korean war.

Obviously the only stock that isn't paying dividends is the G. O. P. propaganda mill's phony stock in trade.

EAST—CIO unionists and workers from overseas joined in resident school on international affairs at Storrs, Conn. In this group (from left) were Ruth Vaughn, ACWA; Jeremiah Mele, TWU; M. Kara, president of Western Railway Employees Association of India; William Hughes, Britain's Ruskin College president; Vincent di Tommaso, ACWA; S. T. Rajah, president of the Malaya Postal Employees Union of Johore State.

AND WEST—Ben Henry (left), Iowa CIO regional director, meets with a group of unionists from France, Italy, Austria and Trieste at Iowa State College world affairs conference in Ames, Iowa. Iowa CIO Council joined with the state AFL, state Farm Bureau and American Labor Education Service in arranging the conference. Some 125 persons, including 30 European unions, participated in the sessions.

1000 Cities Approve Rent Lid Extension

RENT CONTROLS have been saved in a thousand U. S. communities with a population totaling 30 million.

Spurred by CIO Councils, San Francisco, Columbus, O., and Scranton, Pa., recently voted to extend rent curbs to next April 30. Deadline for action on extension is Sept. 30.

The decision to extend rent controls in San Francisco brought cheers from a crowd of almost a 1000 persons, who attended the hearing before the Board of Supervisors. They voted for extension 10 to 1.

Frank White, CIO Council secretary, and George W. Johns, secretary of the AFL Council, joined in arguing for extension of the curbs. The supervisors acted despite the violent opposition of real estate interests, who opposed extension, although surveys by the U. S. Census Bureau and an independent research agency showed that few rental houses were vacant.

As the result of CIO's campaign for extended controls, the Detroit City Council last week voted to reconsider its decision to end controls and was scheduled to act Sept. 29.

In Allentown, Pa., Pres. Charles Heimbach and Sec. Elwood Osman of the Lehigh County CIO Council punctured an Allentown Real Estate Board survey which attempted to show a large number of vacancies. The mayor said that the council would act on the basis of a survey by the regional rent control office, and facts presented by labor and the realtors.

Success did not crown all of the efforts to extend rent control. The Republican-dominated Reading, Pa., City Council voted three to one against extension. Controls also were defeated by the Akron, O., City Council.

But all in all, the CIO Councils throughout the country were extraordinarily successful in extending rent curbs in industrial communities. Their efforts were assisted by the CIO Housing Committee, of which Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers is chairman and Leo Goodman secretary and director.

Even after the deadline, the fight to extend rent controls will be continued in defense areas, where housing shortages exist. The Office of Defense Mobilization Defense Advisory Committee, headed by Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putman, has power to continue curbs in such areas and arrange for new housing.

Reuther has asked Putman to provide relief for such communities. Such Federal action has brought rent curbs to 74 communities of over 5000, including Milwaukee and Indianapolis.

Big Cities Act To Save Ceilings

Here is a score of cities and towns that voted recently to extend rent controls to next Apr. 30:

Cleveland, O.; San Francisco, Calif.; Columbus, O.; Scranton, Chester and Johnstown, Pa.; Brockton and Brookline, Mass.; North Bergen and Hamilton, N. J.; Lewiston, Me.; Watertown, Mass.; Woodbridge, N. J.; Hazelton, Pa.; Burlington, Vt.; Weymouth, Mass.; West Haven, Conn.; Northampton, Mass.; Nutley, N. J., and Metheren, Mass.

Steelworkers Win 15c Raise

A month-long strike of the CIO Steelworkers at the Link-Belt Co. plant at Philadelphia won a new contract calling for a 15c an hour raise.

The contract, which has been ratified by the local, also includes the modified union shop following the pattern set in basic steel, and improvements in job classifications and holiday pay.

Guild Goes on Strike

The CIO Newspaper Guild went on strike last week at the Bethlehem (Pa.) Globe-Times after four and a half months of contract negotiations failed to produce results.

CIOers Go To School, Study World Affairs

A NEW TYPE of working, resident school on labor and world affairs has just been held at Storrs, Conn.

The CIO Dept. of Education and Research and International Committee joined with the American Labor Education Service in conducting the two-week session.

Unionists and staff members from the CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Clothing Workers, Transport Workers, Furniture Workers, Chemical Workers, Insurance Workers and Government Employees joined in the school. So, too, did several unionists from overseas.

They discussed CIO's role in international affairs and U.S. responsibilities abroad. Discussions in classes and workshops centered on U.S. foreign policy, foreign aid programs, national differences in the labor movement, and how labor can make its voice felt in foreign affairs.

Particular emphasis of the school was on carrying the questions of world affairs to the local unions and workers in the plants, through use of films and radio, education programs and conferences and the labor press.

Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and ACWA president, reported to the school on work of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. CIO participants in the staff included Stanley Ruttenberg and George Guernsey, director and associate director of the CIO Education and Research Dept., and Mike Ross, secretary of the CIO International Committee. Also participating were Eleanor Coit, American Labor Education Service director, and three CIO regional directors, Carey Haigler, Birmingham, Ala.; Loren J. Houser, Indianapolis, Ind.; and Frank Carmichael, Boston, Mass.

AMA Forms New Front To Aid GOP

THE AMERICAN Medical Association last week disbanded one front organization and formed another, to aid the GOP.

The National Education Committee, which was formed four years ago to campaign against national health insurance, was disbanded.

The new AMA front is the National Professional Committee for Eisenhower and Nixon. Dr. Elmer L. Henderson, chairman of the AMA Coordinating Committee, and high-powered publicists Whitaker and Baxter, directors of the AMA National Education Committee campaign, resigned to take part in the new committee.

Two past presidents of AMA, Dr. Ernest E. Irons, Chicago, and Dr. John W. Cline, San Francisco, turned up as vice chairmen of the new front group.

'There's No Health Problem,' Says AMA— CIO, Farmers Give HST Board The Facts

WHEN THE President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation held hearings in Minneapolis, it heard completely conflicting views.

Local spokesmen for the American Medical Association said: "There is no health problem here," and "we can take care of our own needs."

But CIO, other labor organizations, as well as farmer and cooperative organizations had far different testimony to offer. And they had facts and figures to back up their assertions.

The 48 witnesses came from Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Montana and Minnesota. Typical of the AMA testimony was that of Dr. R. L. J. Kennedy of Rochester, who blasted the commission hearing for being "poorly timed." He said the hearings were "unnecessary because there is really no situation existing in the health of the nation today which warrants this type of survey."

Those witnesses calling for a national health program confined their testimony to a recital of facts, which emphasized the need for such a program.

Ken Everhart, secretary of the Iowa State CIO Council, was typical of the proponent witnesses. His organization, he said, had members in all of Iowa's 99 counties and was familiar with and concerned with both industrial and rural health.

In commenting on AMA propaganda that there was no shortage of doctors in Iowa, Everhart noted there was "a considerable disporportionate spread of the available doctors."

The national average is one doctor for each 760 persons. In Des Moines, largest city in the state, there is one doctor for every 560 persons. State-wide, the average is one doctor to every 870 persons, a drop from the 1946 average of a doctor for every 823 individuals.

In rural areas, he continued, there are communities of 1500 or more persons "dependent upon the services of one doctor."

Robert L. Gannon, research director for the Minnesota CIO, noted "the phenomenal growth of voluntary health insurance plans is an unmistakable sign of the determination of working people in America to secure protection as a matter of right against unpredictable health costs."

He cited case histories to demonstrate the inadequacy of cash indeminity insurance to meet workers needs and declared local cooperative service plans are the only groups giving positive relief to the high cost of medical care.

Other witnesses detailed the medical associations' fight against cooperative health plans with the result that specialists shun such clinics "fearing the results of ostracism from the medical society."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

Allan S. Haywood, CIO Executive vice president and director of organization, last week was en route to the California CIO Council convention. The following organization reports were received in his absence:

Natl. Dir. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee reports the following representation election victories: Mobile Gas Service Corp., Mobile, Ala., eligible 103, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers 75, no union 22, challenged; Perfecting Service Co., Charlotte, N. C., eligible 36, Steelworkers 20, no union 15, challenged 1.

Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports two CIO representation election victories: Enid Foundry and Machine Co., eligible 27, USA-CIO 18, no union 6, challenged 1; Oklahoma Tire and Supply Co. Warehouse, Tulsa, Okla., eligible 55; CIO-LIU 1790 28, no union 25, challenged 2.

Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley reports the Packinghouse Workers gained bargaining rights for the employes of the Horton Rendering Works, Horton, Kan., by a unonimous vote. The organizational work was handled by Intl. Rep. Frank Brown.

Act. Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports the CIO Paperworkers won a representation election at The Hermaseal Co., Inc., Elkhart, Ind., by a vote of 21 to 17 no union. UPA Rep. Elzie Bush and UPA Local president, Clement Nitka, directed the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports a Furniture Workers' victory in a representation election at the Royal Walden Corp., Walden, N. Y., by a vote of 21 to 11 no union. There were 2 challenged votes.

Robert Edwards, CIO Chemical Workers director of organization, reports that in a representation election held at Linde Air, Essington, Pa., the workers favored the UGCCWA by a vote of 116, 3 no union, 2 void, 2 challenged. The drive was handled by Organizer Frank Podsiadlik.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports the following representation election victories: Twin Coast News Publishing Co., Editorial Dept., Long Beach, Calif., Newspaper Guild 78, 14 against; American Fruit Growers, Inc., Biggs, Calif., CIO-LIU 78 20, against 5. CIO Field Rep. James Spangler and LIU Organizer Clayton Coons directed the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that the CIO Brewery Workers won a representation election among the workers of the Maintenance Unit, Federal Yeast Corp., Baltimore by this vote: eligible 15, CIO 8, AFL 5, neither 1.

Carl Holderman, acting TWUA New Jersey director, reports the Textile Workers won a representation election at the A. M. Karaghuesian Carpet Co. plants in Freehold, N. J., beating back the AFL United Textile Union raid. The workers favored the Textile Workers by a vote of 916 to 576 for AFL, 14 neither.

Westinghouse Gives 7.5c Hike; IUE Demands GE Settle Pact

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week won hourly wage increases ranging from 7.5 to 13c for 45,000 members employed by the Westinghouse Corp.

The wage hike was contained in an agreement which IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey hailed as a "decent, honorable settlement insuring important and worthwhile gains for Westinghouse employes."

The one-year contract also provides for wage re-opening at the end of six months, negotiations on pensions and insurance next January and extension of the modified union shop to all IUE-CIO locals where it is not now in effect upon petitions signed by a majority of the workers in each plant.

Another feature of the agreement is the substitution of two other holidays for Memorial Day and July 4, when these holidays fall on Saturday. Under the old contract workers would not have been paid for such holidays, and would have had only five paid holidays instead of seven in 1953.

The wage increase is subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval, and the entire contract must be ratified by local unions.

Meanwhile relations remained stormy between the IUE-CIO and the General Electric Co., where the union represents 71,000 workers.

IUE and GE resumed negotiations in New York City last week—the same day that the Westinghouse agreement was announced—and the union's GE Conference Board was scheduled to meet Oct. 1 in emergency session in that city.

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, declared the meeting was being held "to take whatever action is necessary to bring the company to a sense of its responsibility to its employees, stockholders and public."

"The larger, more profitable and richer GE owes it to its workers to keep abreast of the industry in wages, holidays, pensions, union security and other benefits."

Auto Workers Ask Gains In Big 3 Pacts

THE CIO Auto Workers are asking the auto industry's Big Three for wage and pension increases in the union's five-year contracts to reflect the present day living costs.

Like all contracts, these long-term agreements can be reopened by mutual consent.

For the past several months at least a half dozen sessions have been held between General Motors and UAW negotiators headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther. Identical proposals recently were made to Ford and Chrysler. The NAW is proposing:

1. Increasing the guaranteed annual 4c hourly productivity raise—the annual improvement factor—to 5c.

2. Adding 21 of the 26c an hour gained in escalator increases since the pacts were negotiated in 1950 to base pay. Only 5c could be taken away from the workers if the cost-of-living dives sharply between now and May, 1955.

3. Adjusting pensions of workers who have retired to give the same purchasing power they had when the agreement was signed. The curent maximum is $125 a month, including social security.

The talks were begun with GM by negotiators headed by Reuther following authorization of the move by the union's executive board last spring.

"It is the policy of the UAW that long term agreements are possible and practical only to the extent both management and labor consider them to be living documents," Reuther said last week.

"Such living documents must provide for the working out of practical problems which the parties cannot anticipate at the time such agreements are negotiated."

The UAW GM Council, which speaks for 350,000 of the company's employes across the country, a few weeks ago adopted a resolution supporting the proposals.

Presidents of UAW Chrysler locals last week passed a resolution calling for making the Chrysler agreement "a living document reflecting present day realities."

Bridges 'Blatant Lie' Denounced By Murray

A "BLATANT LIE" against CIO by Harry Bridges was denounced last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Murray described as "deceit and deception of the lowest order" the claim of Bridges, president of the west coast Int'l. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, that his trial and conviction on perjury-conspiracy charges resulted from political pressure.

After Bridges' conviction was upheld recently, he said "in 1948 I was told by representatives of National CIO and Philip Murray that I must support and do my best to have the union support Harry S. Truman for re-election, or else. I was told point-blank that refusal meant that deportation proceedings would be instituted against me. . . ."

In reply to Bridges' claim, Murray said:

"This statement is a blatant lie.

"There was no such conversation between Harry Bridges and myself. There was no such conversation between any duly authorized representative of the CIO and Harry Bridges.

"The CIO took absolutely no part in the 1949 proceedings against Bridges.

"For Bridges now to 'quote' from alleged conversations which in fact never took place, is nothing more than deceit and deception of the lowest order.

"But Harry Bridges' statement comes as no surprise. Over the years, he has built up, in labor circles throughout America, a reputation as an international prevaricator."

Kansas CIO Joins Fight For Adlai

THE CIO has carried its fight for the election of Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman to the home state of Gen. Eisenhower.

R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, told 300 delegates to the Kansas CIO Council convention at Salina, Kan., that Eisenhower lacked experience in domestic affairs necessary to serve as President.

Thomas also hit hard at Eisenhower for his support of Sens. McCarthy (Wis.) and Jenner (Ind.). His speech was enthusiastically received. A. R. Kinstley, CIO regional director, also spoke.

The convention altered the council's constitution to provide that officers, except the secretary, be elected every year instead of every two years.

It was also decided that the council would conduct a radio broadcast from Topeka, the state capital, every week during the legislative session.

The convention voted to expand its education, legislative and Fair Booth programs and its talent contest. First place in the talent contest, which was concluded at the convention, went to Gayle Larson, who was sponsored by Local 710, Communications Workers, Kansas City.

Joint Labor Group Fights Joe Martin

LABOR is united in the 14th Congressional District of Massachusetts to defeat Joe Martin, long-time Republican leader of the House.

Approximately 200 CIO and AFL unions have set up the 14th District United Labor Committee which is backing the Democratic Candidate for Congress, Edward F. Doolan. He is a CIO-Textile Workers official in Fall River.

Gov. Paul A. Dever of Massachusetts gave his unqualified support to Doolan at a TWUA meeting at Fall River last week.

Dever said that the Taft-Hartley Act is one of the chief reasons that southern textile plants enjoy an advantage over the northern textile plants. Martin supported the act and was House speaker when it was enacted, Dever pointed out.

Pres. J. William Belanger of the Massachusetts CIO Council called on TWUA members to support Doolan and cited Martin as an enemy of everything American workers have sought.

Give A Buck To PAC

100 for $1—A Bargain In News

There's a big barrage in the daily press, designed to slaughter Fair Deal candidates. Get the facts on the Stevenson campaign, get them fully—in stories, pictures, cartoons and special features—and get them in the CIO News.

For local unions, councils and PACs, we offer the biggest bargain of the campaign—100 copies of the CIO News for a $1. Each week during October, you'll receive a bundle of 25 copies for use in political action.

This special offer at a reduced rate is good until Oct. 6. If you need bigger bundles, just multiply your order—for example, a weekly bundle of 100 copies, or 400 in all, costs $4; or 500 copies a week costs $16.

So get your order in now!

CIO News
718 Jackson Place, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

——Send me your special 100 for $1 offer, for which payment is enclosed

——Send me a weekly bundle of ——copies at ——, for which payment is enclosed.

Name.....

Union.....

Street Address.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

IWA Steps Up PAC To Defend Wage Gains

By GEORGE HOLCOMB

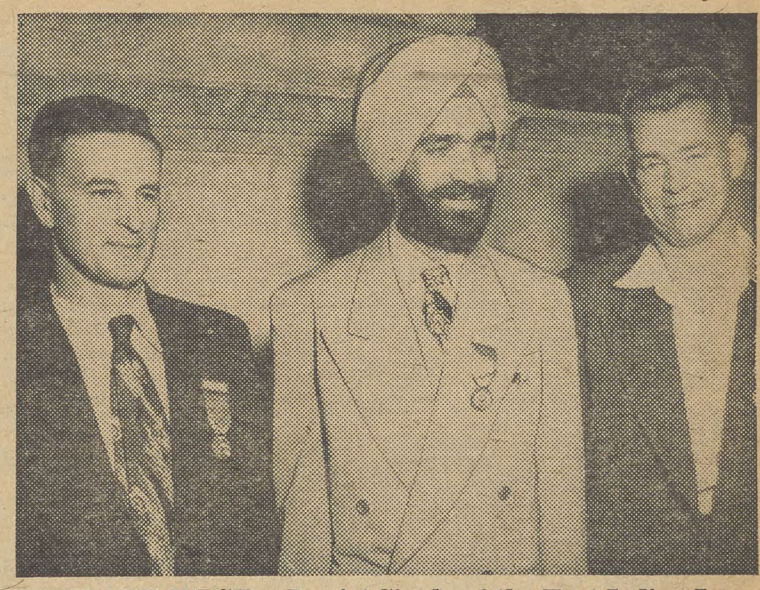
OUT WHERE the Columbia River cuts through the forested mountains to the sea—in a land where Paul Bunyan is a tradition and militant industrial unionism has a long history—the CIO Woodworkers met in their old stamping grounds.

Some 400 delegates and alternates met in Portland, Ore., at the IWA's 16th national convention. They came not just from the Pacific Northwest states and Canada's west coast, but from the Upper Middlewest, the Gulf Coast and the Southeastern states, and Eastern Canada—all areas where the IWA is growing.

"Everything in wood—from the forest to the floor" is an industrial union goal of the IWA-CIO. And in the past 12 months, it has engaged in several important strikes in the Far West in order to advance its economic standards.

At Portland, much of the attention of convention delegates was devoted to building up IWA-CIO political action, so as to protect and defend the economic gains won at the bargaining table or on the picket line.

TIE WITH A PUNCH.—George Roberts (left), CIO-PAC representative in the Far West, trades his "Register & Vote" tie with Carl Winn, CIO Woodworkers secretary-treasurer.



EAST AND WEST.—Ranjet Singh, of the East Indian Lumberworker, gets together with Jack MacKenzie (left) and George Williams at the IWA convention in Portland, Ore.

From Pres. A. F. Hartung came a keynote warning that "Old Guard Republicans are chafing at the bit to return to power," that they can be stopped by "getting the truth to the people."

And Tilford Dudley, CIO-PAC assistant director, spelled out the cost of past victories for political reactionaries.

The Dixiegop coalition, Dudley said, is responsible for the present soaring cost of living. He recalled that under OPA, food prices climbed only 1.8% during World War II. After they were knifed by the National Association of Manufacturers in 1946, they shot up 40%. And under the present "milk-sop" controls since the Korean war began, they have gone up another 16%.

From the congressional voting record, Dudley recalled the House Republican vote of last June 26 of 154 to 40 to kill off price controls. Democrats, on the other hand, voted 141 to 56 to save ceilings.

Dudley condemned Gen. Eisenhower's endorsement of Sens. McCarthy and Jenner and said the GOP presidential candidate is "degenerating from a state of ignorance to a state of danger for the nation."

The Woodworkers heard other political action reports from R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO director of organization, and George Roberts, West Coast CIO-PAC representative, on the issues and candidates in '52.

And they voted support for Gov. Stevenson for President and Sen. Sparkman for Vice President.

In the South, Dir. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee said, politicians and businessmen "who were beating our members" a few years ago are now making speeches from union platforms praising labor.

"They realize that wages are spent, and that wage earners also have votes," he said, "but they wouldn't have if the CIO and IWA hadn't worked and fought to organize in the South."

In a series of resolutions, the delegates proposed investigation of merger of the IWA with the CIO Paperworkers. They turned down proposals for a "no contract, no work" bargaining provision. And they acted on several timber conservation measures, hitting at monopoly acquisition of timber lands and failures of big lumber operators to carry out "sound conservation practices."

"THE GREAT SURRENDER" of Ike to Taft is discussed by old-timers at the IWA, Adolph Germer (left) a CIO representative, and "Chet" King of Raymond, Wash. King, an IWA member since 1917, has been a Washington State Legislature member the past eight years.

'Get The Truth To The People,' Hartung Says

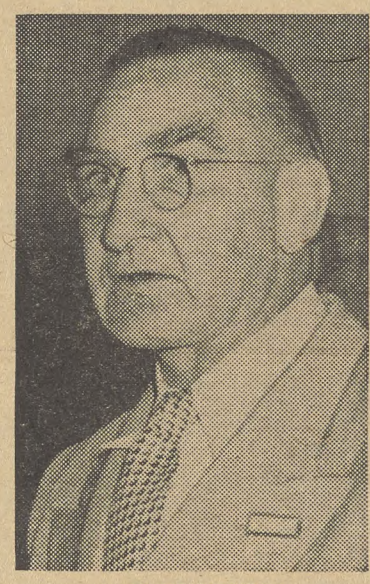
"GETTING the truth to the people" through intensified political action is a big immediate task for the CIO Woodworkers, Pres. A. F. Hartung told the union's convention in Portland, Ore.

Old Guard Republicans, he warned "are chafing at the bit to return to power . . . with plenty of money to spend in the press, on the radio, billboards and magazines. In the 1948 presidential election we were faced with the same problem of getting the truth to the people. We did it then; we can do it now."

Hartung condemned communism and fascism as the world's "greatest evils." And he urged IWA delegates to take union affiliation "out of our pockets and place it in our hearts. There is no power on earth greater than organized labor."

THE OFFICERS' report to the convention said that the IWA—only CIO union with its headquarters on the West Coast—now has a peak membership of 100,000, reaching 140,000 at seasonal peaks.

From its original stronghold in Oregon, Washington, British Columbia and other Pacific Northwest states, the IWA-CIO has extended organization to 26 states and three Canadian provinces. British Columbia, with 35,000 members, is the largest IWA district; eastern Canada with some 30 locals is one of the fastest growing; and the South Atlantic, with 85 locals, is the district with the most local unions.



A. F. HARTUNG

UPWA Out At Cudahy

FIVE THOUSAND CIO Packinghouse Workers last week went on strike at Cudahy Packing Co. operations in four cities.

The walkouts closed plants at Omaha, Neb.; Wichita, Kan., and Sioux City, Ia., and about 50 men went on strike at the Omaha, Neb., Union Stockyards.

The stalled negotiations was the underlying cause of the strikes, but at the stockyards the immediate reason for the walkout were grievances over wages and vacations.

UPWA-CIO contracts with the Big Four packers expired Aug. 11. Cudahy and Armour refused to extend the contracts during negotiations, but Swift and Wilson granted extensions.

Oregon CIO Asks Time Off To Vote

A PROPOSAL that Oregon join the 26 other states which allow workers time-off-with-pay to vote on election day—was approved by the recent Oregon State CIO Council convention in Portland.

The convention, acting on a wide range of resolutions, supported national CIO's recent recommendation for the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket.

The Oregon council congratulated Sen. Morse, the state's maverick Republican, for taking a walk on the Eisenhower campaign because of the General's deals with Taft, McCarthy and Jenner.

The convention proposed creation of a state-operated auto insurance firm, with lower rates, and revision of the Oregon milk control act.

Council officers re-elected were Kenneth Smith, president, cannery worker; Jess Bell, vice president, CIO Clothing Workers; and George Brown, secretary-treasurer, CIO Woodworkers.

Negro Pastor, Local's Head, Says Unions Help The South

IN MISSISSIPPI there's a working member of the CIO Woodworkers who is a pastor and president of his local union.

He is William H. Keys, second pastor of the First Baptist Church and president of IWA-CIO Local 4-443 at the big Masonite plant in Laurel, Miss.

Keys delivered the invocation at the opening session of the IWA convention in Portland, Ore.

Along with working on his job at the Masonite plant, Keys assists in IWA organizing projects in the Laurel area.

He reported during the convention that CIO unionism means more freedom for Negro workers in the South. With the help of his union, Keys said, he was able to register in 1942 and has voted ever since. As result of the work of CIO, he said, race barriers are crumbling in many sections of the South.

W. H. KEYS

Take Your Politics With A Smile . . .

See Center Section For Story Of Marcus Carcass -- 'The Meatball King'

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

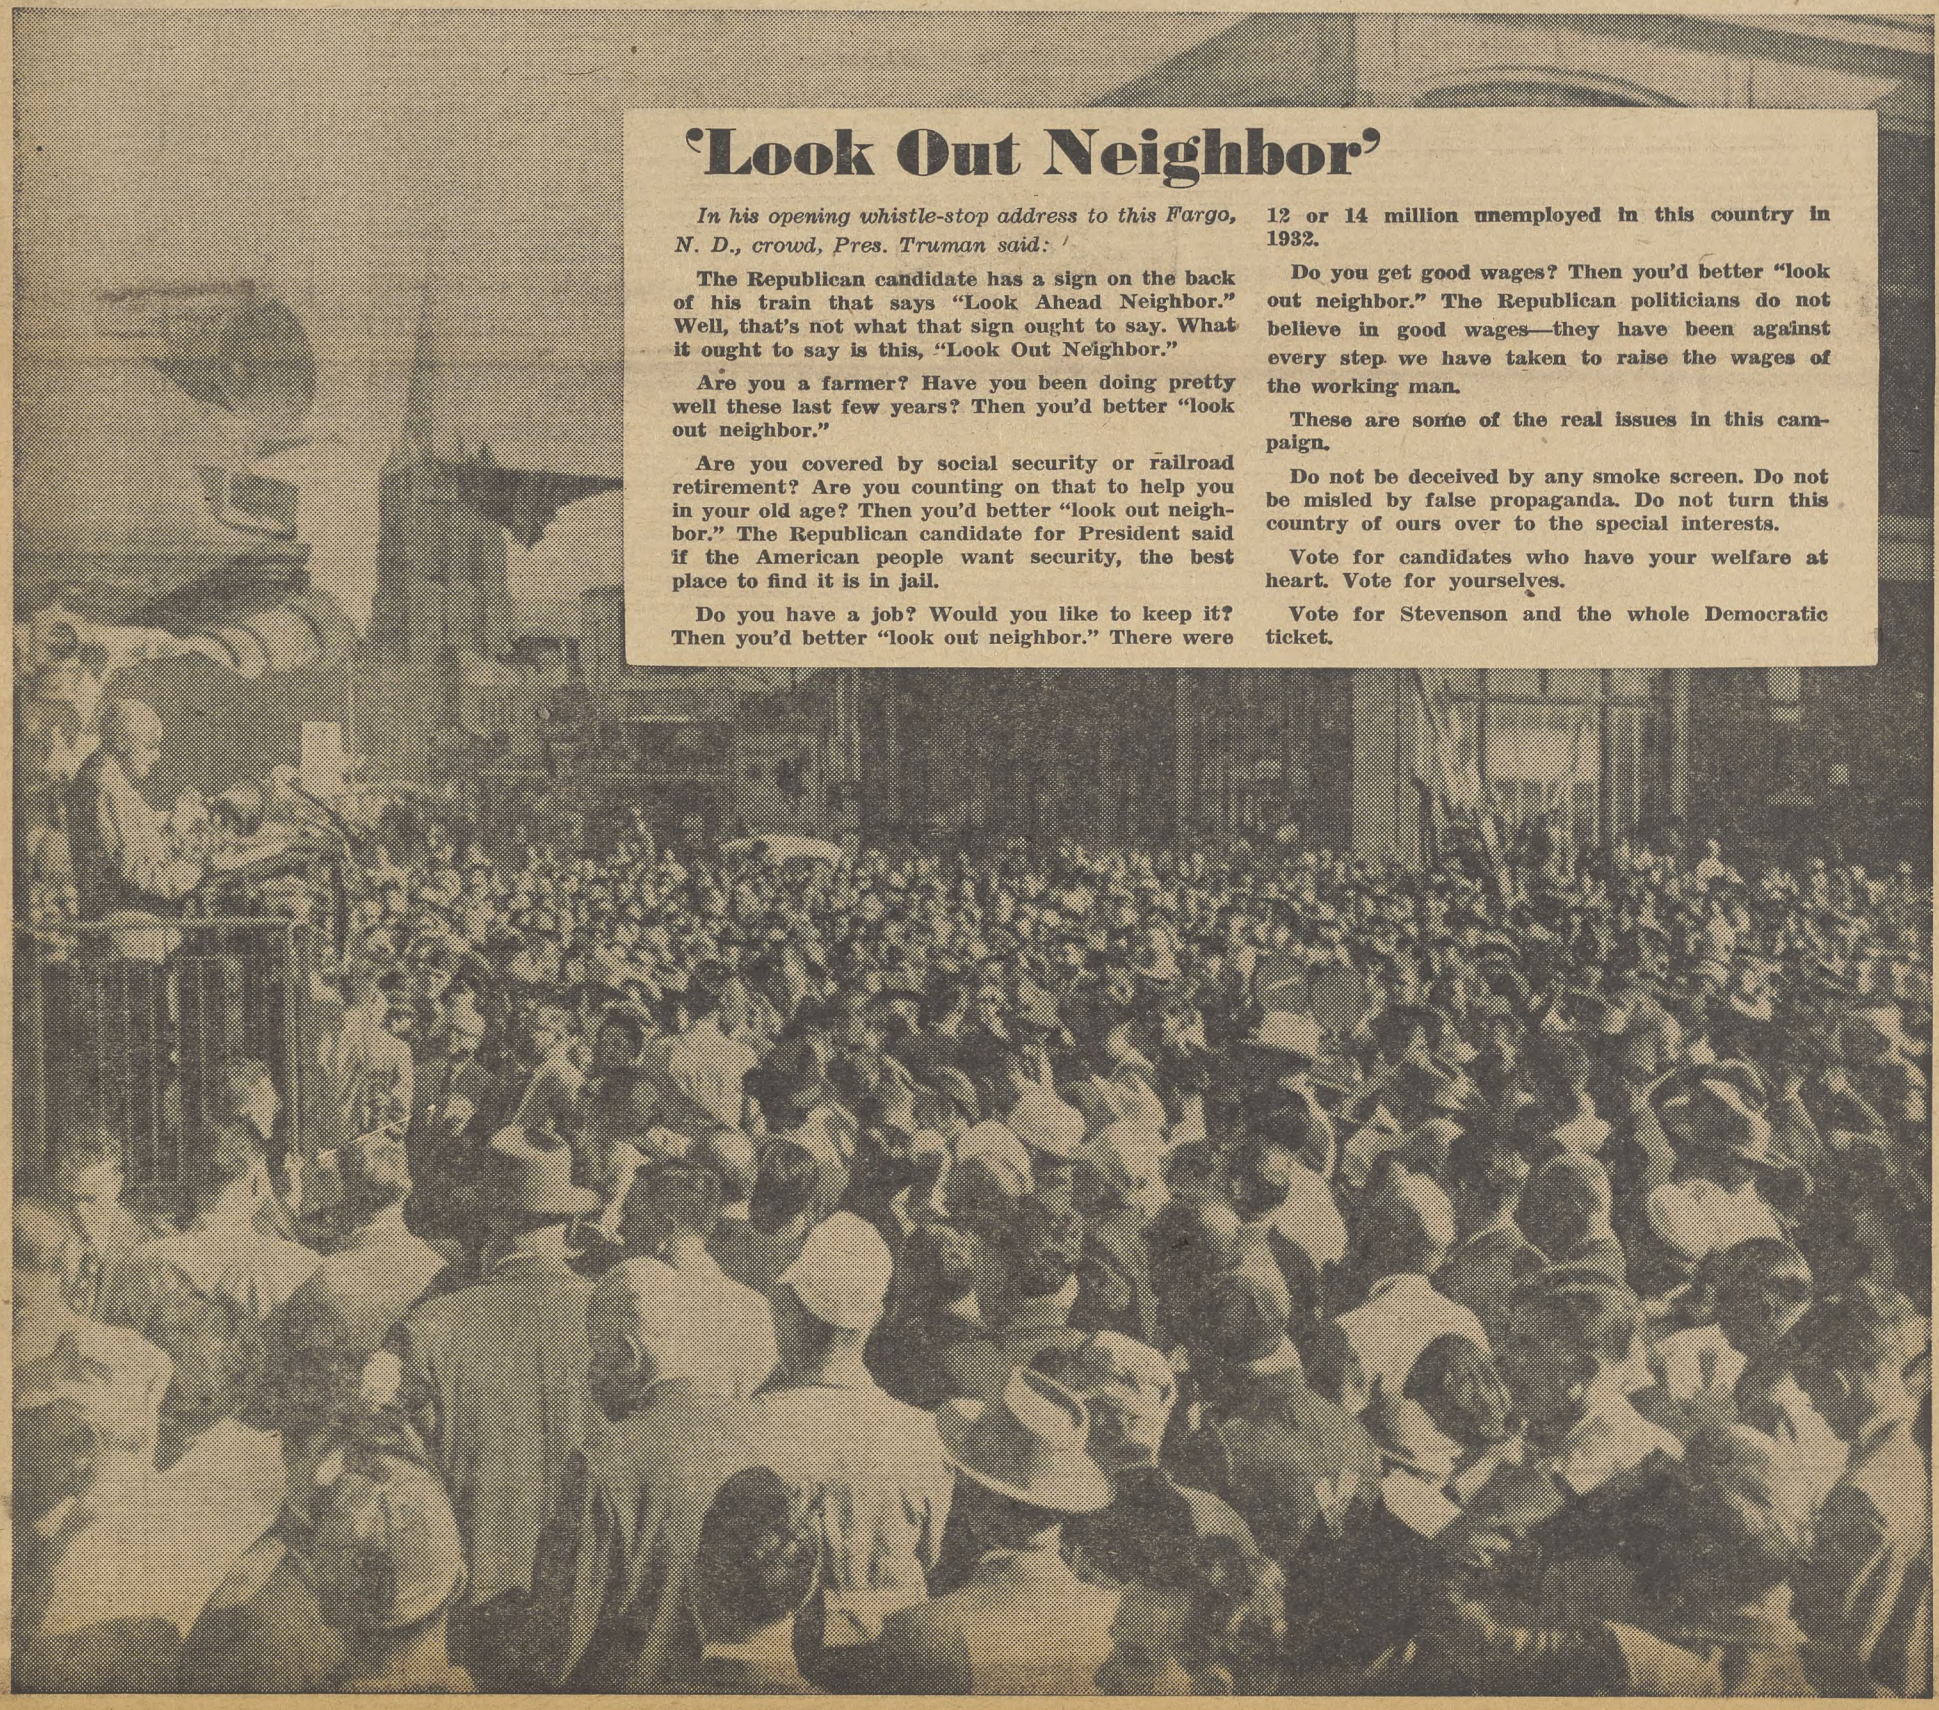
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 6, 1952 82 No. 40

Ike Fronts For Special Interests, Truman Tells Whistle-Stop Crowds

—SEE PAGE 3



'Look Out Neighbor'

In his opening whistle-stop address to this Fargo, N. D., crowd, Pres. Truman said:

The Republican candidate has a sign on the back of his train that says "Look Ahead Neighbor." Well, that's not what that sign ought to say. What it ought to say is this, "Look Out Neighbor."

Are you a farmer? Have you been doing pretty well these last few years? Then you'd better "look out neighbor."

Are you covered by social security or railroad retirement? Are you counting on that to help you in your old age? Then you'd better "look out neighbor." The Republican candidate for President said if the American people want security, the best place to find it is in jail.

Do you have a job? Would you like to keep it? Then you'd better "look out neighbor." There were 12 or 14 million unemployed in this country in 1932.

Do you get good wages? Then you'd better "look out neighbor." The Republican politicians do not believe in good wages—they have been against every step we have taken to raise the wages of the working man.

These are some of the real issues in this campaign.

Do not be deceived by any smoke screen. Do not be misled by false propaganda. Do not turn this country of ours over to the special interests.

Vote for candidates who have your welfare at heart. Vote for yourselves.

Vote for Stevenson and the whole Democratic ticket.

PAC Gets Set For Tough Connecticut Fight

HEADQUARTERS of CIO-PAC activities in the greater Hartford area and some workers who lead the drive.

CANVASSERS—Hartford IUC's effort to get out the vote already has produced record registration, may decide election. Here's how the work gets done.

(This is the first in a series of on-the-spot reports on the current political situation and, particularly, CIO-PAC activities in a number of key states.)

By MILTON PLUMB

ALWAYS AN uncertain state politically, Connecticut this year faces what is likely to be the closest and hardest fought elections in its history.

Realizing that decisions made by the voters in the Nutmeg State next month will have far-reaching consequences upon our national political life, CIO-PAC leaders in the state mapped out the most intensive drive to get out the vote that they have ever undertaken. The first result is the biggest pre-election registration of any year to date.

The issues, so far as labor in this highly industrialized state is concerned, are clearly drawn. The Connecticut CIO-PAC not only endorsed Stevenson and Sparkman for President and Vice President also endorsed all Democratic nominees for Congress.

AFL forces in the state are cooperating with the CIO through a United Labor Policy Committee.

Despite labor's unprecedented efforts, a tour of the state which included personal talks with both Democratic candidates for the Senate, five of the six Democratic nominees for the House, and top CIO and CIO-PAC officials failed to unearth even one liberal candidate "sure" of election. All PAC-endorsed candidates apparently face hard fights —some of them uphill.

Connecticut election results are unusually significant nationally this year because:

1. Both Senate seats are at stake. Only one other state —Nebraska—will also choose two Senators this year.

2. McCarthyism is perhaps a stronger issue here than anywhere outside of Wisconsin. Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), who had the courage to risk his political future by striking back at McCarthy's lies more directly than any other Senator, is up for re-election.

3. If the Republican-hoped for "Eisenhower sweep" is to materialize anywhere, it should be strongest in Connecticut. The state's governor, John Davis Lodge, brother of the Massachusetts Senator, was one of the first to call for Ike's nomination. State Republicans are united behind the General.

All things point to another nip and tuck race, with margins of perhaps hundreds of votes tipping the scales to defeat or victory.

Connecticut, true to its Yankee traditions of independence, always has been unpredictable in politics. It voted for Hoover in 1928 and 1932, but shifted to Roosevelt in 1936, 1940 and 1944.

Truman was beaten by Dewey in 1948 by just 14,457 votes, with Henry Wallace and Norman Thomas also in the race. With both of the latter out of the race this year, the bulk of their combined 21,677 votes in 1948 probably will shift back to the Democratic column.

THIS WILL be offset, however, by the resurgence of Republicanism which has taken place in the state under its Republican governor and administration.

Since control of the Senate is at stake this year, the loss of either Connecticut seat to the Republicans would greatly strengthen GOP chances of controlling the next Congress. One of the state's two representatives with 100% "right" voting records in the last Congress, Rep. Ribicoff, has been named Democratic standard-bearer in the contest for the seat of the late Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.).

Ribicoff is opposed on the Republican ticket by Prescott Bush, a Wall Street Banker whom many Connecticut citizens call a "bedroom resident" since most of his interests are outside of the state. Benton defeated Bush by only 1200 votes when he opposed him in 1950, and the liberal Ribicoff faces a hard fight to stay in Congress now that he is trying for the upper chamber.

Despite his outstanding record in the Senate, where in less than two years he has become nationally known as one of America's most capable legislators, Benton appears to be in definite trouble as he bids for re-election.

His Republican opponent is William A. Purtell, anti-labor head of the Connecticut Manufacturers Association now serving an interim appointment as Senate successor to McMahon. Behind him loom the same sinister forces, spearheaded by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), which by "backstreet alley tactics" brought about the defeat of former Sen. Tydings (D.) in Maryland two years ago.

McCarthy reportedly is anxious to come into the state to campaign against Benton. So far he's been kept out on the theory that he'll do more harm than good when he tries using his smear tactics on hard-headed Yankee voters.

CIO-PAC activities are centered in three of the larger cities, with the Connecticut CIO Council in Waterbury serving as the coordinating center. Council officers Mitchell Sviridoff and John J. Driscoll direct the work.

CIO Regional Director Edward McCrone, with offices in New Haven, also keeps a close check on state PAC activities and cooperates closely with Jack Onofrio, PAC director for the Greater New Haven CIO Council.

In the key city of Hartford, State Sen. Pat Ward, CIO Auto Workers PAC director for New England, assisted by Bill Lawlor, chairman of the Greater Hartford PAC, carries one of the major responsibilities in the state.

"IF WE CAN roll up a Democratic majority of 30,000 votes in Hartford, the Democrats will carry the state," Ward predicted. His remark reflected the close race he anticipates, for in the last election Hartford had a Democratic margin of 28,000.

With every vote counting this year, the Connecticut CIO began its work last spring to insure a record turn out at the polls. Following a plan drawn up by John Glinn, instructor in the Univ. of Connecticut Institute of Labor - Management Relations, the United Labor Committee set up offices at Storrs, Conn., and from March through June hired an average of 50 students daily to survey registration lists.

The survey involved processing over 400,000 names in city directories, transferring the names of all person working in industrial plants or with average incomes to printed forms, and then checking them against statewide registration lists. Workers were paid over the state minimum wage law requirement, with CIO and AFL jointly sharing the $15,000 costs.

Cards for all unregistered names were forwarded to local unions in the area of employment, as well as to local political organizations when they offered help in the registration drive. From this point on, CIO-PAC has carried most of the work of contacting unregistered workers and getting them to qualify as voters.

OVER 100 full-time paid workers have been hired by CIO-PAC to carry through the job of getting the unregistered to sign up before the October deadline. The drive covers all workers in the state and not just the 120,000 under CIO contracts.

"The success of this drive depends upon two considerations," Harold Senior, Connecticut IUC administrative officer, points out. "First, we've gone at it systematically after careful planning, and second, we've used paid help instead of volunteers. The latter has meant we've been able to meet schedules and get the job done."

Statistics bear him out. In January 1952 there were only 75,000 registered voters in Hartford County. CIO-PAC work in the four months from June through September, according to Hartford's Registrar, was the biggest factor in bringing the total up to 83,500. The goal before election is 92,000.

"We know CIO endorsements here mean something," said Tom Dodd, candidate for Ribicoff's seat in Congress. "I know we've got to deserve CIO support before we get it. I want to continue to deserve it."

To which statement all of the CIO-PAC endorsed candidates this reporter talked to said, in similar words, "Amen."

Splinter Parties May Be Decisive

Splinter parties, which probably cost Truman the loss of Connecticut to Dewey in 1948, this year may be the determining factor in the close race liberal Sen. Benton (D.) faces for re-election.

Benton won by only 1200 votes in 1950, when Conneticut's Gov. Chester Bowles (D.) was defeated by 14,000 and Sen. McMahon (D.) won by 40,000. He is being opposed this year by two splinter candidates.

One is Vivien Kellems, candidate of the Independent Republicans, a reactionary Stonington manufacturer famed for her refusal to collect withholding taxes. The other is Jasper McLevy, Socialist mayor of Bridgeport, who has chosen to run against Benton in his first bid for the Senate.

STRATEGY HUDDLE—Rep. Ribicoff (D.), standing, PAC-endorsed senatorial candidate, joins CIO workers at breakfast to plan help for Tom Dodd, Democratic candidate to succeed him in House.

NEW HAVEN CIO conference brings together local IUC-PAC Chairman Jack Onofrio, Rep. McGuire (D.), Sen. Benton (D.) and Connecticut IUC Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff. Benton faces a hard fight.

Truman Calls Ike 'Front Man' For Lobbies

THE 1952 CAMPAIGN really got rolling at top speed last week when Pres. Truman climbed aboard a train and began laying the issues bluntly before the voters in the first of his inimitable whistle stop tours.

The jaunt took him to the Far West, where enthusiastic audiences gave him the same kind of reception he got in the cross-country campaign that spelled victory in his 1948 campaign. Pres. Truman plans to visit 16 states.

The President laid it on as only he can. He started in North Dakota, continued in Montana and Idaho, kept it up in Washington and Oregon.

He stopped pulling his punches on Gen. Eisenhower, the Republican candidate for President.

He described the General as the inept tool of the "unholy crew" that controls the Republican party, and as a soldier who neither knew what the reactionary GOP "special interest fellows" had been doing nor what had been going on in the United States.

"The Republican candidate for President," he said at Fargo, N. D., "says he's going to try to win this election by appealing to the people's emotions, not to their intellects.

"That's why you won't find anything in most of his speeches except slogans, generalities and scarewords. I think it's insulting to the American people to tell them to make up their minds according to their emotions, and not on the basis of the great issues that are before them."

Truman accused Eisenhower of being made the front man for— ". . . the power lobby, that wants to do away with low-cost public power.

". . . the grain speculation lobby that doesn't want the farmer to get the price of the crops he raises.

". . . the railroad lobby that's been jacking up your freight rates in North Dakota—and fighting tooth and nail against the St. Lawrence Seaway so you can't get freight rates down.

". . . the real estate lobby that wants to gouge everyone who needs a home to live in.

". . . the rich man's tax lobby that's always trying to open up tax loop holes for the wealthy.

". . . the tariff lobby that wants to raise tariffs so they can pick up some extra profits for themselves, even though it means losing the world market for your grain.

ON THE WAR PATH against GOP lies, President Truman last week met another Adlai Stevenson, North Dakota Indian shown with him in photo at left. At right, Margaret Truman, accompanying her father on his whistle stop tour, pins a Stevenson-Sparkman button on his lapel.

"In short, it's all the special privilege groups from the oil lobby to the China lobby, and they're all joined together behind the Republican Party."

At Havre, Mont., Pres. Truman turned GOP charges of undue friendship for and knuckling under to Russia back on the Republican standard-bearer. He opened up by praising Gov. Stevenson, Democratic presidential candidate, and Rep. Mansfield, Democratic candidate for Senator from Montana, for their early recognition of Russia as a threat to peace.

"I don't remember that the Republican Party had any such wisdom and foresight," he went on.

WHILE Eisenhower still headed our forces in Europe, the President continued, "he said that he saw no reason why Russia and the United States would not remain the closest possible friends." The President continued:

" 'There is no one thing,' he said, 'that guides the policy of Russia more today than to keep friendship with the U. S.'

"Those are the exact words he used before a committee of the Congress in November 1945. His foresight was not nearly so good as his hindsight.

"Of course, we all make mistakes, but the Republican candidate was then commanding general in Europe and he was in close contact with the Russians.

"His advice carried great weight and it therefore did a great deal of harm. Perhaps if he had given us better advice in 1945, we wouldn't have had so much trouble in waking up the country to the danger of Communist imperialism in 1946 and 1947 and 1948 . . ."

In a speech dedicating the $103 million Hungry Horse Dam, on the South Fork of the Flathead River near Kalispell, Mont., the President hit Eisenhower as a "pliable mouthpiece" of the private power lobby."

AT FIRST, he said, Gen. Ike's views on public power and flood control were correct. But after he was nominated, the President went on, he "adopted the line of the private power lobby."

Pres. Truman was given an ovation in Kalispell despite a provocative editorial in the local newspaper, the Daily Inter Lake, which suggested among other things that the school children might throw tomatoes at him. Instead, they waved flags to greet him, while their mothers applauded and their fathers whooped.

Throughout the week the President stressed his contention that the General is not fit for the presidency because of his military background and his inability to grasp the fundamentals of a civilian economy.

He denounced Eisenhower's claim that a sizable tax cut is possible as "just a damn lie," and his assertion that federal spending, especially on defense, can be cut drastically as "sheer poppycock" and "the lowest kind of demogoguery."

Meantime, Stevenson threw his personal income tax records for the last 10 years open to the public. At the same time he made available the names of contributors to and beneficiaries of a fund from which several Illinois State officials received payments.

His running mate, Sen. Sparkman of Alabama, announced he also will make public the details of his finances, and suggested that Eisenhower and the GOP vice presidential candidate, Sen. (Bundles for) Nixon do the same. Eisenhower agreed, but there has been no reaction from Nixon, who earlier told the public about the slush fund raised for him by California business men whose money proved well-invested.

Stevenson's income tax statements showed that in the decade ending with 1951, his total income was $500,046.84, and his total federal income taxes $211,-980.42, leaving net income of $288,066.42. From 1949 through 1951, the first three years of his term as Governor of Illinois, his state salary was $35,209.68 and his other income $151,110,26.

THE FUND used to help office holders consisted of $18,744 left over from his 1948 campaign fund. Gifts to it ranged from $1 to $7000. Three CIO unions, the Clothing Workers, the Steelworkers and the Auto Workers, gave $2500 each. Frank Annunzio, former secretary-treasurer of the Illinois CIO Political Action Committee, gave the same amount.

Stevenson's two financial statements aroused much interest, but there was a greater response to his television and radio "fireside chat" last week.

During his talk, he declared it is more important for the people to know the truth than it is for him to win the election, and that he is going to continue to call the shots as he sees them on all issues.

Stevenson's headquarters charged last week that the Republicans are planning to flood the country with their campaign propaganda on $2 million worth of radio and television programs in 49 counties of 12 states during the last three weeks before election day.

George Ball, executive director of the Volunteers for Stevenson, said the campaign was conceived by "high-powered hucksters" of New York advertising firms.

The Republicans promptly denied any such plan was in existence.

Maybe the Republicans don't have $2 million to spend on such a program. Or maybe they decided that three intensive weeks of Eisenhower on the television screen and coming over the radio every 15 minutes would be too much for voters' stomachs . . . or maybe, Ball's disclosure killed the whole thing.

Stevenson Text: There's No Cut-Rate Path To Korea Peace

Here are excerpts from Gov. Stevenson's national broadcast last week on the issues of war and peace:

EVERY ONE of us knows in his heart why we had to stand up and to fight in Korea. We all know that when the Communists attacked across the Thirty-eight Parallel that was the testing point for freedom throughout the world.

The men in the Kremlin thought they would be unopposed, and if they were, the whole question of the future could be settled in one blow. If they had been allowed to conquer free people in Korea they could have picked away at the free world and engulfed more millions, piece by piece, one by one.

Sooner or later we would have had to fight, and the later we made our stand the bigger and harder the war would have been. Stopping the enemy in Korea was received with enthusiastic shouts of approval by the overwhelming majority of the American people, and even by the Republican leadership.

Now, however, they attempt to make you believe that it was almost an act of treason, but what do you think they would be saying now if we had not stopped the enemy in Korea, if Japan was threatened and if East Asia was falling bit by bit to the enemy? Would they not be saying now that Harry Truman and Josef Stalin were boyhood friends in Outer Mongolia?

And another thing: the Republican leadership is now telling us that the danger to this Nation is from within, not from without. The danger lies not in Moscow, but in Washington. Your enemy is not Josef Stalin but Harry Truman—or even possibly Adlai Stevenson.

A campaign addressed not to men's minds and to their best instincts, but to their passions, emotions and prejudices, is unworthy at best—now with the fate of the Nation at stake, it is unbearable.

The Republican leadership blows thin drafts of crafty words down your neck, but it fails to tell you the following things. Eighty-five per cent of the Federal Budget goes for past wars and for preserving our future liberty. The world has been at war almost continuously now for 40 years. The intervals between the wars grow shorter; the wars increase in dimension and in destructiveness.

Much of mankind is changing its spiritual outlook upon the world; whatever was is cast out, whatever is is questioned.

Whole nations have sunk out of sight behind the Iron Curtain; whole peoples have disappeared from view. Organized Communism seeks even to dethrone God from His central place in this universe. One by one the lamps of civilization go out and nameless horrors are perpetrated in darkness.

All this is done by an enemy of a kind that we have never faced before. He is primitive, but he is also advanced.

He goes with a piece of black bread in his hand, but in his mind he carries the awful knowledge of atomic energy. He is careful, cool, calculating, and he counts time not impatiently like we do, not by the clock, but by decades, in terms of centuries.

LONG AGO we asserted a principle upon this continent, that men are and of right ought to be free. Now we are called upon to defend that right against the mightiest forces of evil ever assembled under the sun.

Whose task is this? It is inescapably your task. You and you alone will decide the fate of your family for decades to come. You will decide whether you are to be slaves or free, live gloriously or perish miserably.

You may see comfort at the feet of false leaders, who like medicine doctors beat drums to ward off evil spirits. You may listen to false leaders who tell you there is an easy way, that all you have to do is elect them and thereafter relax in a tax-free paradise—the political equivalent of sending 10c to cover the cost of postage.

You may fail to face the facts squarely in this great controversy of our time and you may be so deluded that you run the risk of being beguiled to destruction, for there is no easy way.

Yours is a democracy. Its government cannot be stronger or more tough-minded than its people. It cannot be more inflexibly committed to the task than they are. As the citizens you are the rulers and the ruled, the law givers and the law abiders, the beginning and the end.

Democracy is a high privilege, but it is also a heavy responsibility whose shadow stalks, although you may never walk in the sun.

How long can we keep up the fight against this monster tyranny? How long can we keep on fighting in Korea, paying high taxes, helping others to help ourselves?

There is only one answer: We can keep it up as long as we have to and we will.

This is why we cannot lose and we will pass from darkness to the dawn of a brighter day than ever this thrice blessed land of ours has known before.

Part Of The Job

Starting this week and continuing until the election, The CIO News is publishing a series of special stories on the campaign—and organized labor's role in the campaign.

The "Connecticut Story" by Milton Plumb (see page 2) is being repeated in many other areas, we suspect, where unions are doing a bang-up job of making sure their members register to vote. CIO's contribution to good citizenship in seeking a big voting registration is, in a sense, an old story; but the 1952 version seems better than ever.

Union members should well remember, though, that registering is only half the job. It's the vote, not the registration, that counts on election day. To get out the vote on Nov. 4 must be the prime task of all CIO unions during the month ahead.

One-Sided Campaign

Sen. Nixon won't make any more speeches about his personal finances, a Washington wit remarked the other day—"after all, he has only one dog."

Whether or not the question of the Senator's finances is now finally settled, there is still considerable doubt where the two GOP national candidates stand on a host of issues that have aroused the interest of Americans for many years.

For a time it appeared that the Eisenhower forces might repudiate the Republican platform, which had been drafted by the Taft wing of the party. But then the Eisenhower "liberal" crusade slowed down to a halt, and disintegrated in a statement in which Ike and Taft announced their common agreement on all domestic issues.

As this paper pointed out last July, the GOP platform is a platform of Taft reaction—a platform reminiscent of Hooverism and boastful of the sledgehammer attacks on the Fair Deal conducted by the Republican-controlled 80th Congress in 1947 and 1948.

Every time Ike has wandered off that platform, Taft and Nixon and McCarthy and Jenner and Cain have been on hand to pull him back.

These men have voted wrong on just about every issue affecting American wage earners in recent years, just as they have voted against most of the efforts of the Truman Administration to shore up the free world's defenses against Communist aggression.

The Republicans have campaigned boldly against sin, as if they had a monopoly on honesty and integrity—a claim which history scarcely confirms.

In decrying real sin and make-believe sin, the Republicans have been able to fill up the empty time left by their refusal to talk issues. What would a Republican administration do to avoid a repetition of the 1932 depression and the 1932 breadlines? What would a Republican administration do about social security—after all the last GOP Congress trimmed it down.

What would a Republican administration do about health—after all, the GOP program and the American Medical Association program occupy twin beds. What would a GOP administration do about housing and rent control—after all, the real estate lobby and the Republicans in Congress have worked hand in glove for years.

These are not "smear" questions; they concern millions of us; and the chance of getting answers from the Republicans looks slim indeed.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY, President — ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, Executive Vice President — JAMES B. CAREY, Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Vol. XV — October 6, 1952 — No. 40

Heavy Hitter

The Real Barrier Against Reds

Here are excerpts from a speech by William T. Evjue, editor and publisher of the Madison, Wis., Capital Times, at the recent Sidney Hillman Foundation award luncheon in New York City.

By WILLIAM J. EVJUE

TODAY, Communism has become the perfect scare word with which the entrenched order can club the American people into submission and conformity. Millions of people have been denied the right of free speech through fear of being branded disloyal.

Confidence of the people in their government has been threatened by casting the shadow of disloyalty over thousands of honest and conscientious persons. A campaign of hate, suspicion, distrust, confusion and character assassination has been let loose at a time when there is great need for unity, confidence and a united front to meet a world menace.

This has been made possible, in large part, by the consummate demagoguery of the Senator from my state. In 1949, he knew that he was a dead duck politically unless he could find some way to divert the attention of the people from his miserable record.

It was then, upon the advice of shrewd friends in Washington, that he decided to ride the issue of Communism. Ever since, he has been fiercely using Communism as a weapon with which to place a question mark on the loyalty of those who have dared to criticize his record.

I am proud to say that The Capital Times has been No. 1 on his newspaper list. You know the record—the New York Post here did a great job in exposing him—the $10,000 from Lustron, the $20,000 wrangled out of a sugar lobbyist to support McCarthy's $72,000 loan in a Wisconsin bank, the $5000 contribution from a Texas oil millionaire.

McCarthy voted for the Kerr gas bill and tidelands oil. Isn't it strange that 500,000 citizens in Wisconsin voted for a man who has had to be prodded to pay taxes to support the government that has supported him during the major part of his adult life? Isn't it appalling to think that a man with his record is being accepted by millions of people as the leader who will save us from Communism?

Communism is the giant problem facing a free world today. Disaster is sure to come if we allow political demagogues to represent us in this great emergency.

If Communism ever comes to this country, do you know where it will come from? Another depression. Communism will come when millions of people are hungry and out of jobs, when millions of farms and homes are being lost through mortgage foreclosures and when business is paralyzed because people do not have the money to buy the necessities of life.

That is what Moscow is banking on. They know that mass hunger and poverty have been the allies of communism in its parade across the face of the earth.

The future safety of this country against the aggressions of communism lies with a patriotic, constructive, informed leadership that holds to the idea that the best insurance against communism is the American family that is well housed, well fed and with a reasonable prospect of security for the future.

THE FUTURE of this country must depend on leaders who realize that hunger, poverty, unemployment, the loss of homes and farms pave the way to communism. The political demagogues who have appropriated the issue of communism to serve their political ends, McCarthy, Hickenlooper, Jenner, Cain, Byrd and others in the Republican-Democratic coalition, are poor reeds to lean on in the fight against communism.

These are the men who will be found continually voting on the side of the powerful special interests. They seized communism as an issue with which to divert the attention of the people from their service to pelf and privilege.

Meanwhile, they can always be depended upon to vote against all measures to make life better for more people and to insulate them against communism—protection against dependency in old age, unemployment and occupational hazards, protection for their life savings, decent housing, medical care at a price they can afford to pay, farm price supports based on the knowledge that a healthy agriculture is potent insurance against communism, the blessings of electricity on the farm, the right of labor to bargain for a fair share of the wealth it helps to create and the extension of educational opportunity.

Have you ever seen any evidence of any devotion to this type of insurance against communism on the part of McCarthy, Jenner and their interest-serving colleagues in the Senate?

Issues In The Election

Prices High And Wages Frozen— Dixiegops Planned It That Way

YOU CAN take it straight from top Republican campaign strategists — high prices are one of the major "issues" in the elections.

That is true. But the "reasons" for high prices which the GOP is trying to sell the people certainly are not.

In fact, by even acknowledging that the runaway inflation that has plagued the country since Korea now exists, the Republican Party makes an admission which all but a handful of the GOP members of Congress were blind to throughout the last two sessions.

This Republican blindness runs back a long time.

It was a characteristic of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, which refused to vote curbs on inflation even after President Truman had called it back to special session in 1948. And it characterized the GOP policy position even before that when the NAM persuaded Congress to kill wartime OPA price controls prematurely in 1945 and 1946.

In its platform, the GOP pledges itself to "remove tax abuses and injurious price and wage controls." It adds that the party "will oppose rent control" in almost all areas.

This unwillingness to recognize the serious hardships being worked by runaway inflation and the danger to the national economy has marked Republican policy for years.

In the last Congress, Republicans were the authors and chief backers of the black market Hope-Butler Amendment and the "built-in" inflation provisions of the amendment by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) guaranteeing record profits to manufacturers. And Rep. Cole (R. Kans.) joined Dixiecrat Rep. Poage (Tex.) in sponsoring cost-plus pricing on every stage of production and distribution.

All of these proposals meant an end to effective price control. That this was the real goal of their Republican sponsors became clear when Rep. Talle (R. Ia.) introduced his amendment in the last session that would have ended virtually all price controls last June 30.

The House Dixiegop coalition actually adopted Talle's proposal, 210 to 182, with overwhelming Republican supports, but it was later eliminated in conference.

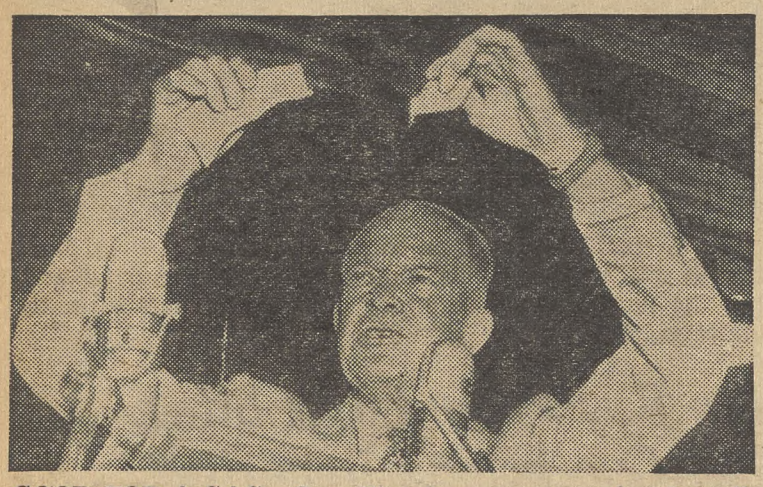
While the Republican bloc in Congress almost to a man chortled in glee at these "victories" at the public's expense, business profits were soaring to all-time records for peacetime. In 1951 the take of corporations amounted to about $18 billion annually AFTER taxes—more than double the $8.2 billion chalked up in the "good old days" of GOP rule in 1929.

But prices were skyrocketing, too. By the time of the GOP convention last July, the official BLS cost-of-living index had gone up 12.2% since the outbreak of fighting in Korea. And since June 1946, when GOP masterminds led the drive to kill wartime price controls prematurely, the index had jumped 48.2%.

Today, it's even higher, and that's probably the reason why the GOP campaign headquarters has suddenly discovered that inflation is a major "issue." For while profits and prices have been soaring, wages for the great majority of Americans have lagged seriously behind.

This, too, wasn't news. The Republicans in Congress, as a matter of fact, could say that, with the help of Dixiecrats, they had planned it that way. The coalition had seen to it that the only section of the original economic controls law that had any teeth in it was that setting up controls on wages.

The last Congress, in both 1951 and 1952, made those controls progressively stronger.

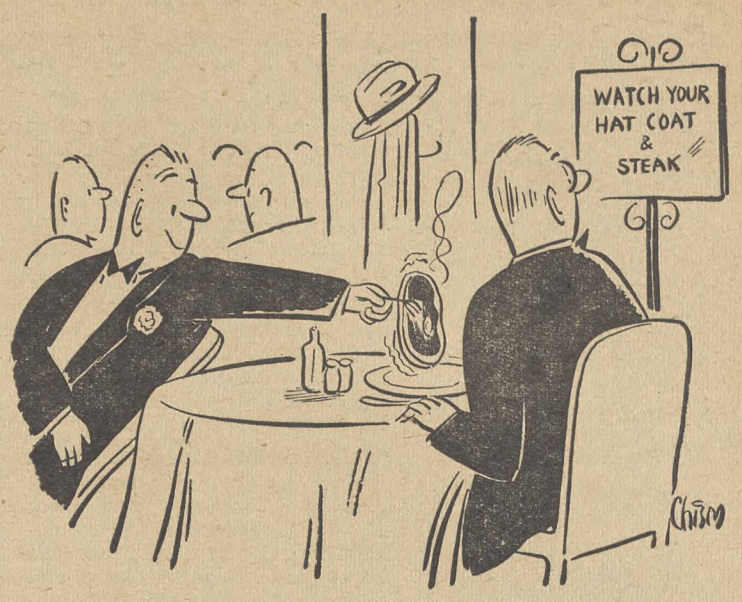


GOOD FOR A GAG—Gen. Eisenhower waves what he calls a "Donkey Dollar" and a pre-war $1 bill at a whistle-stop, but keeps quiet on Republican record in Congress of boosting prices by whittling down inflation-control measures.

Prices...

Social Security...

Getting Out The Vote



While it hacked away at price controls, the Dixiegop coalition kept wages virtually frozen to a 10% formula earlier approved by the Wage Stabilization Board.

Then, in the last session, it took away the board's disputes functions, making a realistic handling of wage issues in major controversies almost impossible.

Frozen wages with rising prices have pinched practically every low and middle-income family in America. Inflation brought on by the Republican-backed amendments to the controls law in 1951 alone is estimated to have cost every American family at least $500 in the past year.

The Housewives Tell Woods: Keep Price Curbs, 3 To 1

THE HOUSEWIVES of the nation are telling Tighe Woods, recently-named price stabilizer, what they think about high prices and price controls.

And by a 3-to-1 margin, in letters to the OPS chief, they are demanding that anti-inflation measures be retained in strengthened form.

Since named to succeed Ellis Arnall, Woods has met with housewives in several cities, including Fresno, Calif., Detroit and other Midwest cities. He plans similar sessions in Philadelphia, Hartford, Newark, Denver, Seattle and other cities.

At Detroit, more than 350 housewives—many of them members of the Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO Auto Workers—met with Woods. Boiling mad at price spirals since Congress whittled down the anti-inflation law, they demanded a price law with "teeth."

"We'd like to feed our husbands and children something besides hamburger," said Mrs. Catherine Gelles, UAW Auxiliaries secretary. "We'd like price control with 'teeth' and a rollback of prices.

"We are continuing our fight for price controls without all the crippling amendments that were tacked on by the 82nd Congress. We will remember their action when we go to the polls and vote."

Wages and Prices—

You Can Pin Inflation Blame On Certain Lawmakers

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

THE ARGUMENT seems so simple that even some union members get fooled. Here's how it goes: Wages shot up, that increased the man's costs, so he had to charge more, so the consumer has to pay more.

So, since they can't deny the enormous increase in prices, especially since the Korean war, anti-labor forces blame the unions for today's high prices. The labor-haters insist that price rises follow wage boosts.

Sometimes they get away with this phony, because people forget so quickly. Let's go back to June, 1950, when the Korean war began.

There was a vast wave of speculative buying immediately. Businessmen itching for a fast buck or a fast million bucks bought frantically, hoarding scarce commodities, and running those commodity prices to dizzy heights. Consumers, fearing wartime shortages, also went on a buying spree.

So prices shot up. Did wages shoot up too? They did not.

Between June, 1950, and February, 1951, when the general OPS price regulation was issued, spot market prices for basic raw materials went up 46%, and prices of manufactured goods at the producer's level rose 16%. How much did average earnings of factory workers rise in the same period? Why, 7.4%.

Between June, 1950, and February, 1951, wholesale prices of all commodities rose 16.3%, but straight-time hourly earnings went up only 3.5%. In other words, prices outraced wage increases by a hefty margin.

The Korean war broke out in June, 1950. Not until February, 1951, were initial price controls put in effect. That was after eight months of speculative buying, profiteering, and hoarding. And it was at this high, inflated peak of prices that OPS ceilings were set.

Wholesale prices hit a peak around March, 1951, and after that prices of many raw materials fell sharply and the entire level of wholesale prices dropped considerably. But did retail prices drop? They did not. The consumers price index kept going up and up. So, what caused higher prices then was not higher wages, but the growing spread—the profit margin—between production costs and retail prices.

Manufacturers' prices for men's and boys' shoes rose 22% between mid-1950 and mid-1951, and retail prices rose 20%. By June, 1952, manufacturers' prices had dropped 13%. How much did retail prices drop? Four percent.

Wholesale prices for men's apparel rose 14.8% by mid-1951, and retail prices 15.3%. By June, 1952, wholesale prices dropped 7.2%, but retail prices only 2.5%.

So it went all along the line. And since any increase in costs first shows up in wholesale prices, these figures show that prices to consumers went up, not because of higher wages, but because the sellers were raking it in at a greater rate than before.

Setting price ceilings at the highest prices existing in February, 1951, was not enough for the greedy ones and their servants in Congress. They connived to put over such gimmicks as the Capehart, Herlong and Hope amendments, which compounded the original felony. They fixed it so the sellers couldn't lose, and the consumers couldn't win.

The worst phony argument of all, of course, is that the increase won by the CIO Steelworkers must mean higher consumer prices. In fact, the steel industry got an average increase of $5.20 per ton, to "offset" the wage increase.

How does that $5.20 break down? It consists of $2.84 under the Capehart amendment; 70c to cover the freight increase authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and only $1.65 per ton to cover the increased steel wage costs. In other words, of the $5.20 average price increase, only $1.66 is due to the wage increase! But the steel industry is passing the entire $5.20 on. So the consumer pays more, and who gets blamed—the unions.

You can fix the blame for higher prices. You can blame the reactionaries who gutted price controls—gentry such as Capehart, Bricker, Butler and Dirksen in the Senate, and Cole, Talle and Wolcott in the House.

P.S. All seven are Republican.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits For Old Folks Go Up But More Improvements Needed

THE DECLINING years of a lot of elderly Americans will become a bit brighter this month.

But only a bit. The virtually nominal increases in social security payments voted by a reluctant Congress last June become payable for the first time with the checks now in the mails.

Inadequate as the increase is, it is a step in the right direction.

Congress approved a boost in payments of $5 or 12.5% a month, whichever is greater. That means the average retired worker will get $5 to $8.60 a month more than he has in the past, with proportionate increases for dependents.

The lowest individual payment under the new benefit schedule becomes $25 a month, the highest $85, with maximum family payments pegged at $168.75.

A retired worker who got $40 in September now will get $45. One who received $68.50 last month will get $77.10 this month.

Total monthly payments, according to Social Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing, will rise from $168.4 million to $190.5 million.

Another amendment permits a retired person to earn up to $75 a month without suffering the loss of his social security payment. At present he loses it if he earns more than $50.

THE social security system includes six major parts—Old Age and Survivors Insurance; old age assistance; aid to dependent children; aid to the blind; aid to the totally and permanently disabled, and unemployment compensation.

The first is a federal program, and the last primarily a state program with the federal government handling funds and paying some of the administrative cost. The others are combined federal-state programs.

Efforts are still being made by reactionaries to whittle down the social security system—as with the Jenner Amendment—and to turn as much as possible of it back to the states.

In 1952 they defeated the proposal for higher benefit payments when it reached the floor of the House. Then the reaction from their constituents set in—and they begged for another chance. When they got it, they approved.

The need for a stronger and more comprehensive social security program is stressed by the rapid increase in the number of Americans 65 years and older.

In the last 50 years, while the population of the country as a whole has doubled, the number of people 65 and over has quadrupled; between 1940 and 1950, the number in the higher age group jumped 36%.

THERE are some 13 million men and women 65 years and over in the U. S. with women outnumbering men by a ratio of 10 to 9. The number is increasing at the rate of 400,000 a month.

Only about three million of them were working.

Recently Ewing released a report showing that nearly two out of every five persons receiving social security payments had total incomes, including the payments, of less than $50 a month, or $11.62 a week.

Only one out of five beneficiaries had total income, including benefits, of as much as $100 a month.

The CIO has taken the lead in the drive for a real pension system.

In the face of 15 years of political inaction in improving social security benefits, the CIO chose to implement and supplement the federal programs by securing, through collective bargaining, programs of assistance for the mass of American workers

THE road-jam has been broken. One result may be employer pressure on Congress to take steps for further improvement of social security legislation.

At its 13th constitutional convention in New York last November, the CIO adopted the following resolution:

"The CIO calls upon the Senate Finance Committee, the House Ways and Means Committee, and Congress immediately to process and enact improvements in the Social Security laws that will establish a well-rounded adequate national system of social insurance for all Americans covering the hazards of old age, survivorship, permanent and total disability, temporary disability, unemployment, and the costs of medical care.

"We likewise support amendments to improve the public assistance program, to federalize the employment service, to extend rehabilitation services, and to improve maternal and child welfare services, as previously recommended in CIO conventions and in statements of the CIO Committee on Social Security."

THIS COUPLE and 4.7 million Americans like them next month will receive higher old-age and survivor payments, but the nation's social security system still lags in many important features.

—From Louisville Times

"Just In Time, By Crackey"

The Elephant Never Learns

THE SOCIAL security which protects the old age millions of Americans was fought with screams of anguish when it was first proposed—by the same characters who today are still bleating about "creeping socialism."

The characters, of course, are the people and organizations who supported Sen. Taft for the Republican nomination for the presidency, and who now are supporting all of the other reactionaries they can find—regardless of office or party label.

Some of their moans, echoing from the 1930s:

"Will facilitate ultimate Socialistic control of life and industry." — National Association of Manufacturers.

"Incalculable harm to the character of the people." — Ohio Chamber of Commerce.

"Destroying initiative, discouraging thrift and stifling individual responsibility." — Illinois Manufacturers' Association.

"Bringing many states to the brink of bankruptcy, if not the abyss."—American Medical Association.

"Will bring abandonment of private capitalism." — American Bar Association.

"It will make confirmed beggars of our states and cities."—Sentinels of the Republic.

"Designed to prevent business recovery, to enslave workers."—Rep. John Tabor (R. N.Y.).

"Going to wreck the nation."—Former Rep. Robert F. Rich (R. Pa.).

Well?

Big Boys Want Tax Bite Put On 'Fringe Benefits'

THE LATEST notion floating around Washington is a proposal to take a tax-bite out of such union-won, non-cash portions of your pay as health insurance, pension and welfare funds, and group life insurance.

One idea is to make the worker pay an income tax on the value of these union-won "fringe benefits." Another is to bar an employer from deducting these costs from his taxable income. Another is to tax these "fringes," but take part of the bite from the worker and part from the boss.

The total of such non-cash "fringes" is estimated at $8.5 billion a year, but it would be hard to get at any more than the $1.5 billion that employers pay into health and welfare funds and group insurance plans. If the tax is slapped on employers, they probably would try to either cut or drop their welfare programs, so that the workers would be really paying the costs of the taxes.

The Chamber of Commerce has just surveyed 736 companies and reports that "hidden payroll" costs, including social security, jumped in 1951 to an average of $644 per employe. The cost to the companies, according to the C of C, averaged 18.7% of total payroll, or 31.5% "per payroll hour," and comes to almost $25 billion a year.

WHAT the survey does not say is that the boss can deduct his share of social security payments as "a business expense," but that the employe cannot. He is taxed on this money, which he never sees. He benefits only when he reaches retirement age. If he dies before, his widow benefits—if she has reached retirement age.

There is one good reason why any federal income tax on such "fringes" would encounter opposition in Congress. And it's not love for the unions. The reason is that the employers also would be hit, and hit hard, for increasingly corporations have gone in for "fringe" benefits — for their executives. (LPA)

U. S. Program Far From Tops

THE UNITED STATES, richest nation in the world, is on a toboggan headed for bankruptcy because of the staggering cost of social security, according to some of the country's better-heeled rugged individualists.

There must be something wrong. A lot of other countries, none of them as rich as the United States, pay a lot higher proportion of their national incomes in social security benefits —and their coverage is a lot more comprehensive.

That's what a preliminary study made by the Intl. Labor Office shows.

It shows the United States, the richest of the lot, spending 4.61% of the national income on social security benefits. It also shows that the United States isn't even the first in the amount it spends per capita; it's sixth.

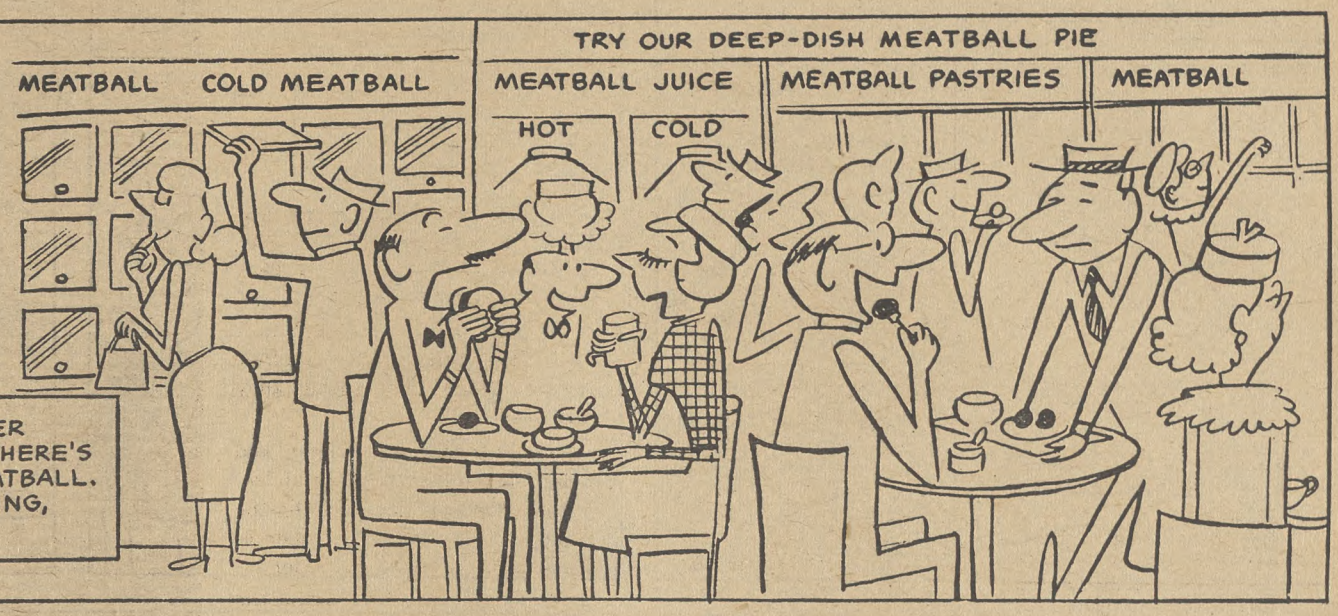
On a percentage basis, the tiny Saar spends more—21.16% of the national income. Germany (West Zone) and Austria, torn by the war as they were, spend 16.49% and 13.43% respectively.

France, New Zealand, Belgium, Sweden and the United Kingdom also spend more than 10% of income on social security. Eleven other nations are passed before the United States is reached—sandwiched in between Australia, with 5.46%, and the Union of South Africa with 3.16%.

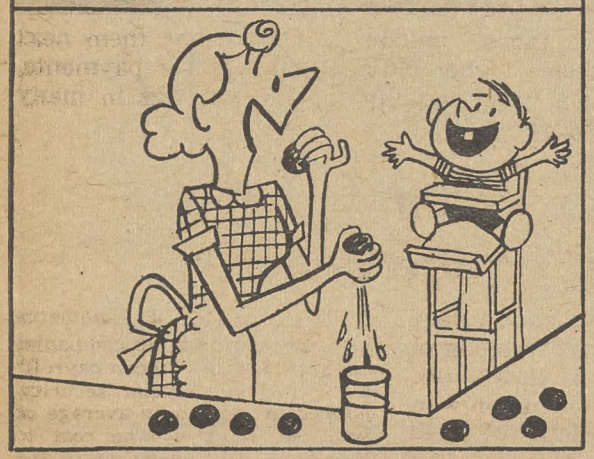
MARCUS CARCASS

THE MEATBALL KING

IN THE LAND OF NOD THEY NEVER WORRY ABOUT WHAT TO EAT—THERE'S ONLY ONE ITEM OF FOOD: MEATBALL. NODDIES EAT MEATBALL MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT...

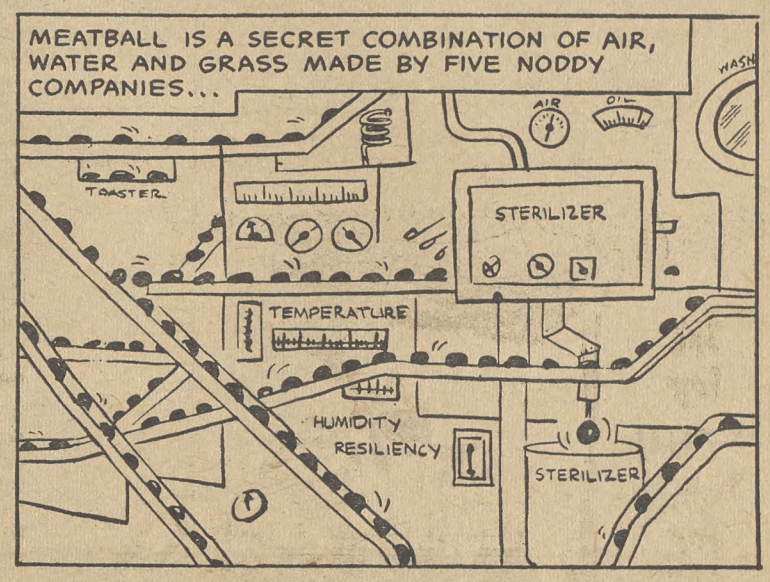


MEATBALL CONTAINS ALL THE VITAMINS AND MINERALS NECESSARY FOR GOOD HEALTH. MEATBALL JUICE IS WONDERFUL FOR BABIES...

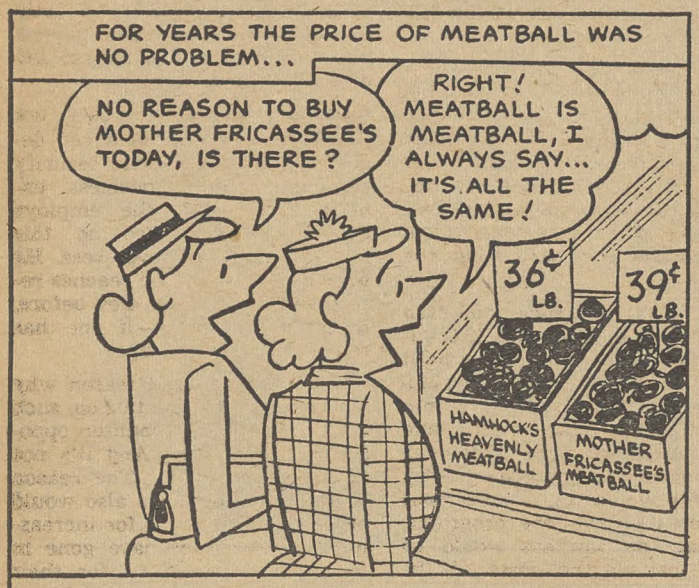


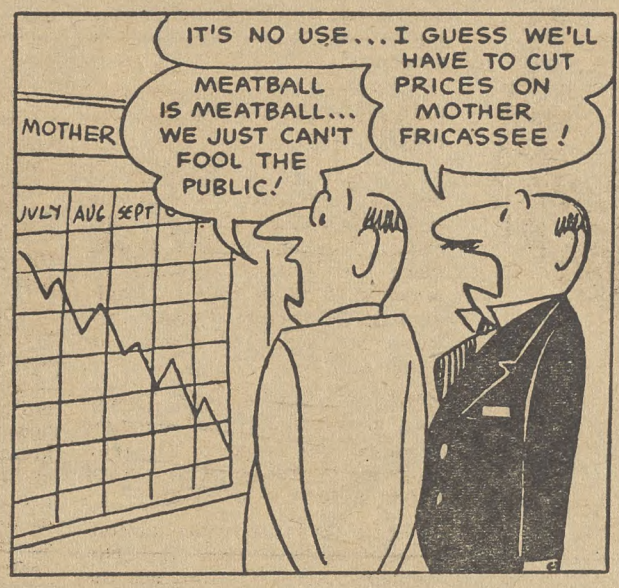
MEATBALL IS WONDERFUL FOR PICNICS, TOO. IT'S ANT-PROOF AND DOESN'T NEED REFRIGERATION AND CAN BE CARRIED IN YOUR POCKET...

MEATBALL IS A SECRET COMBINATION OF AIR, WATER AND GRASS MADE BY FIVE NODDY COMPANIES...

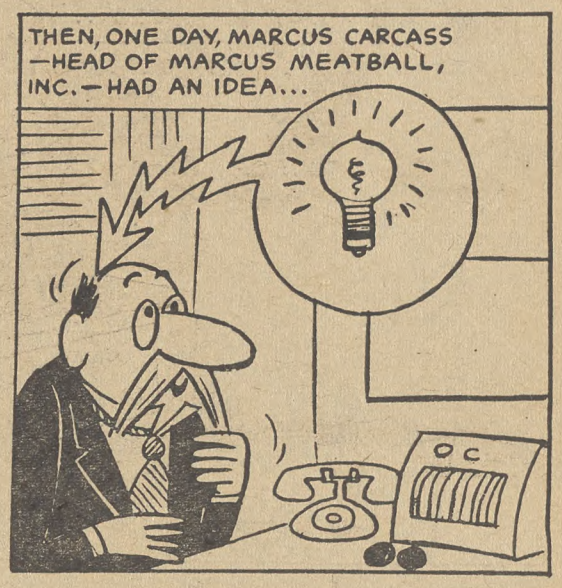


FOR YEARS THE PRICE OF MEATBALL WAS NO PROBLEM...

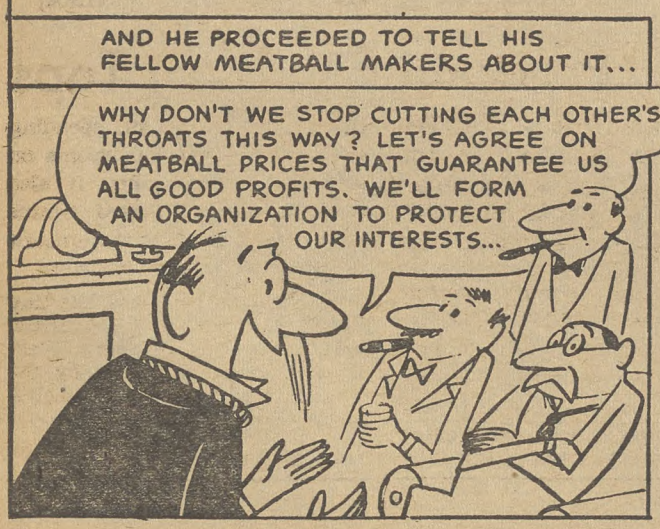




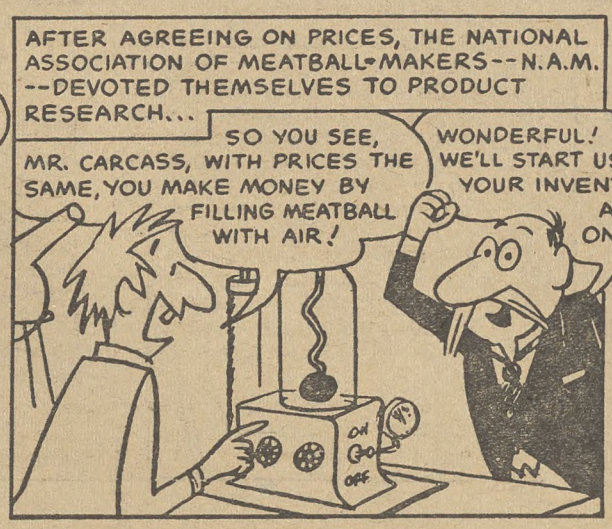
THEN, ONE DAY, MARCUS CARCASS —HEAD OF MARCUS MEATBALL, INC.—HAD AN IDEA...



AND HE PROCEEDED TO TELL HIS FELLOW MEATBALL MAKERS ABOUT IT...



AFTER AGREEING ON PRICES, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MEATBALL-MAKERS--N.A.M. --DEVOTED THEMSELVES TO PRODUCT RESEARCH...



AT FIRST, EVERYTHING LOOKED ROSY...

BUT THE PUBLIC CAUGHT ON QUICKLY...

POP

LOOK! JUNIOR'S FLOATING AWAY AFTER EATING HIS MEATBALL!

SO MEATBALL PRICES WERE KEPT PRETTY REASONABLE, UNTIL...

WAR DECLARED

STUKANS INVADE

WAR!

WAR!

WAR EXTRA STUKANS ATTACK!

AT THIS SAME MOMENT...

WAIT! DON'T DO IT, MR. CARCASS!

WAR!

WHY NOT? THERE'S NOTHING LEFT TO LIVE FOR...PROFITS ARE AS HIGH AS WE CAN POSSIBLY GET THEM RIGHT NOW!

LOOK— WE'RE AT WAR!

HMM...THAT DOES MAKE A DIFFERENCE. NOW'S OUR CHANCE TO RAISE MEATBALL PRICES! EVERYTHING'S GOING TO BE IN SHORT SUPPLY SOON, SO WE CAN GET AWAY WITH IT!

WAR!!

SURE ENOUGH, BECAUSE OF WARTIME NEEDS, NODDY CIVILIANS BEGAN GETTING LESS MEATBALL...

STERILIZER

TEMPERATURE

HUMIDITY

REJECTED MEAT BALLS

NODDY ARMED FORCES

NODDY ALLIES

NODDY CIVILIANS

AND AS THE PRICE WENT UP...

MEATBALL

MEATBALL

...THOSE NODDIES WITH MORE MONEY GOT MORE THAN THEIR SHARE OF MEATBALL—MORE THAN THEY COULD USE, IN FACT...

AT THE NODDY CONGRESS...

THIS MEATBALL SHORTAGE IS GETTING SERIOUS. I'M DOWN TO MY LAST TWO TONS OF 'EM MYSELF!

LET'S GET SOME EXPERTS TO ADVISE US ON WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT.

GOOD IDEA...WE OUGHT TO MAKE A LOT OF HEADLINES!

COMMITTEE ON SMALL AFFAIRS

EXPERT...AFTER EXPERT... AFTER EXPERT...AFTER EXPERT...

THE SOLUTION IS SIMPLE, GENTLEMEN. ...CLOUD-SEEDING!! WE'LL SEED CLOUDS WITH TINY MEATBALLS... LET IT RAIN... AND PRESTO, THERE'LL BE A MEATBALL DELUGE!!

TV

(YAWN) NEXT!

THE SOLUTION IS SIMPLE - DON'T DO ANYTHING! THOSE WHO DON'T GET ENOUGH TO EAT WILL SOON DIE OFF AND THERE'LL BE ENOUGH MEATBALL FOR THOSE LEFT. SINCE ONLY THE RICH WILL SURVIVE, EVERYONE WILL BE RICH AND HAPPY!

(UGH!) NEXT!

UNTIL...

WE DON'T NEED ANY EXPERTS— LET'S JUST WRITE A LAW!

E-EXCUSE M-ME... B-BUT MAY I MAKE A SUGGESTION?

HUH... WHAT? OH, SURE, WHAT CAN WE LOSE?

WHY NOT LISTEN TO THE PEOPLE FOR A CHANGE? THEY KNOW WHAT THEY WANT—THEY WANT YOU TO PUT CEILING PRICES ON MEATBALL AND RATION IT— SO THAT EVERYBODY GETS A FAIR SHARE AT A REASONABLE PRICE!

THAT'S WHAT HAPPENED. THE CONGRESS PASSED AN ORDER PROHIBITING AMBUSHING OF MEAT-BALL CONSUMERS-O.P.A.

SUPER MARKET

SOON, UNDER O.P.A., PEOPLE WERE GETTING A FAIR SHARE OF MEATBALL, AT REASONABLE PRICES...

AFTER THE STUKANS SURRENDERED...

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MEATBALL-MAKERS

LET'S ABOLISH O.P.A.! CONTROLS ARE UN-NODDY! BESIDES, IF WE DROP CONTROLS, THAT WILL STIMULATE COMPETITION AND BRING PRICES DOWN!

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

HEY, THAT'S GREAT! JUST WATCH MEATBALL PRICES COME DOWN NOW!

WELL, I'M NOT SO SURE...

CONGRESS KILLS OPA!

MEATBALL CIGARS 10¢

WE NEED CONTROLS. THINGS ARE STILL IN PRETTY SHORT SUPPLY!..

G'WAN.... YOU'RE NUTS! BEST THING CONGRESS EVER DID!

TWO MONTHS LATER...

YOU BLANKETY-BLANK SOANDSO! WHY DIDN'T YOU TELL ME THIS WOULD HAPPEN IF WE KILLED O.P.A.?

MEATBALL CIGARS ~~10¢~~ 25¢

HMM... 15 MONTHS WITHOUT CONTROLS... HMM... COST OF LIVING UP 22%... FOOD... ER... AH... YES... FOOD UP 40%... LET ME SEE... BLESS MY SOUL... BUILDING MATERIALS UP 42%... HMMM...

GOV'T STATISTIC OFFICE

BY CONTRAST, IN 3 YEARS, FOOD ROSE ONLY 1.8% UNDER O.P.A.—INSTEAD OF 40% IN 15 MONTHS WITHOUT O.P.A.

SOON, FEEDING THE AVERAGE NODDY FAMILY BECAME A PROBLEM...

AFTER PROVIDING BABY'S MEATBALL JUICE...

AND MEATBALL LUNCH SANDWICHES FOR FATHER AND CHILDREN...

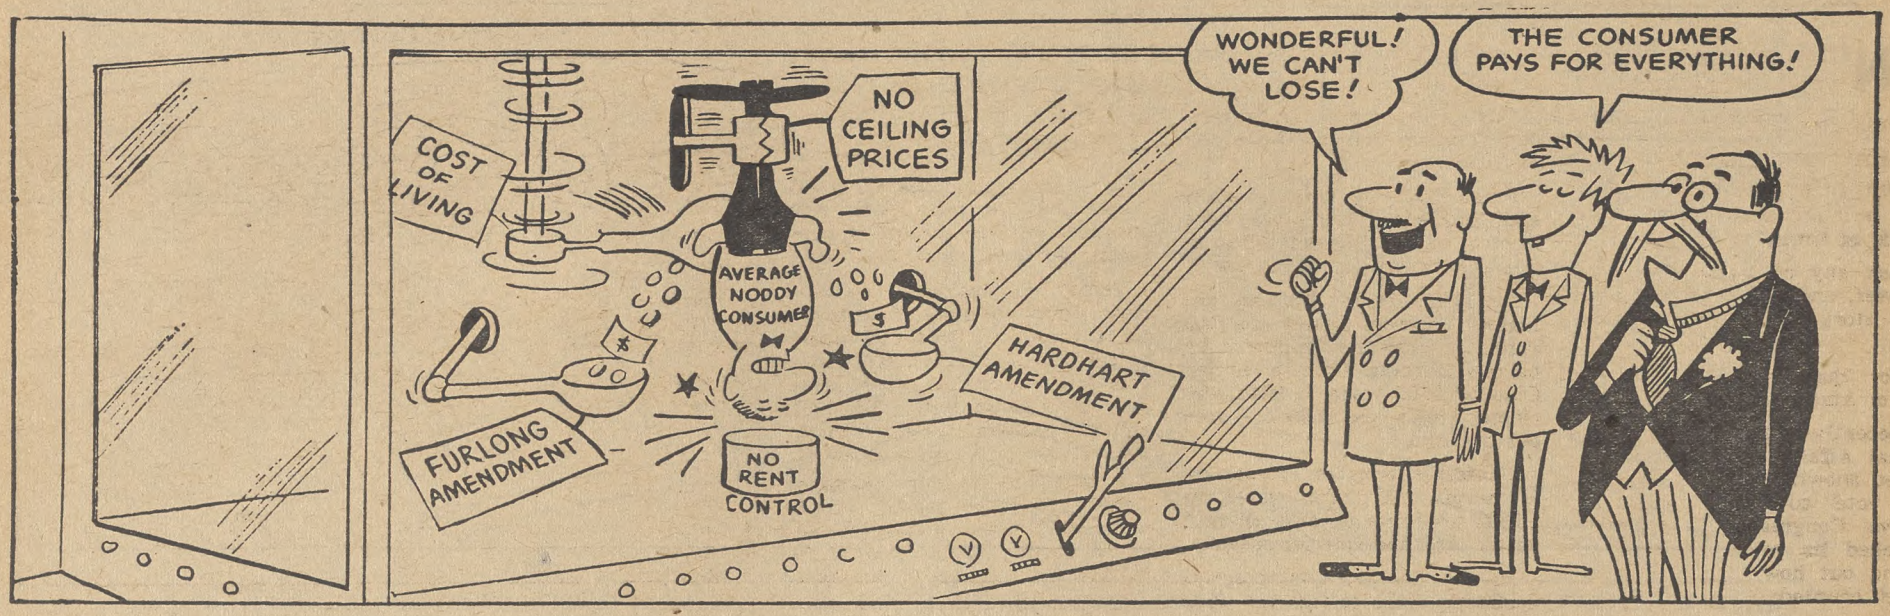
THERE WAS PRACTICALLY NO MEATBALL LEFT FOR SUPPER...

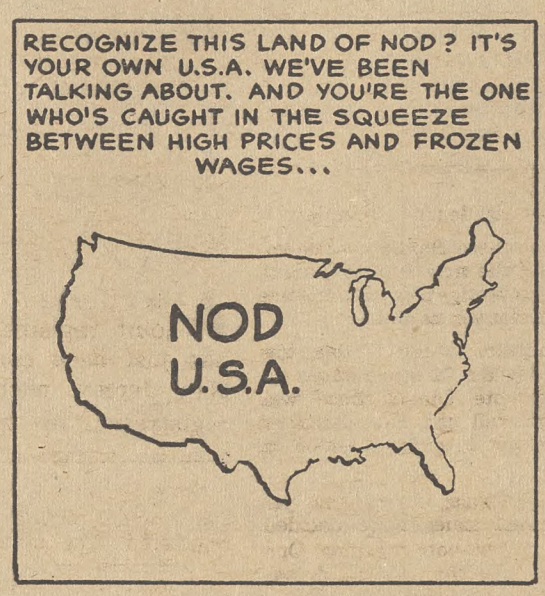
AND AT THE N.A.M....

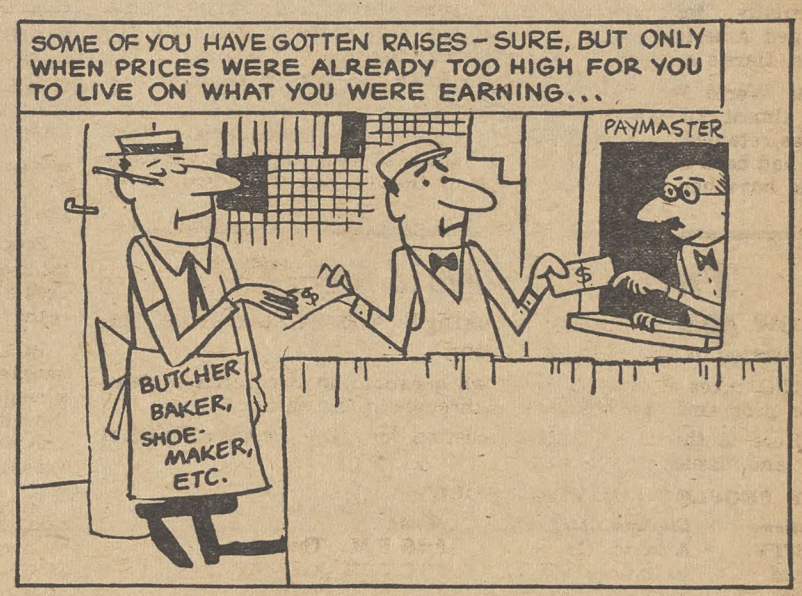
PROFITS ARE BIGGER THAN EVER BEFORE, BUT PEOPLE ARE GOING TO BE BUYING LESS AND LESS MEATBALL BECAUSE THEY CAN'T AFFORD IT. WE'LL JUST HAVE TO AGREE TO RAISE THEIR SALARIES.

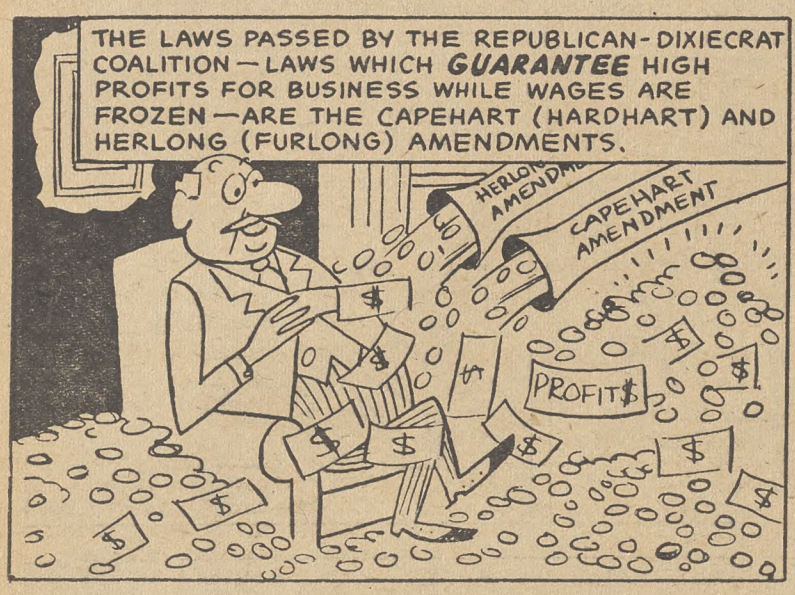
BUT THAT'LL INCREASE COSTS AND CUT INTO OUR PROFITS!

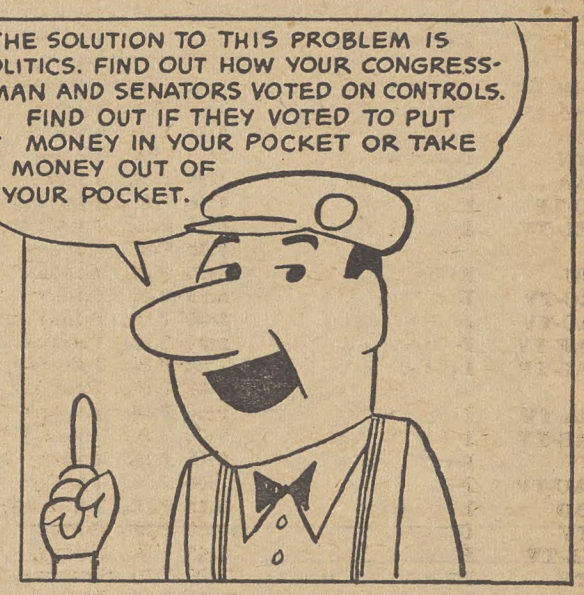
I KNOW— AND I'VE GOT THE SOLUTION TO THAT! COME WITH ME...











REGISTER AND VOTE!

Published by the C.I.O. Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

WHERE YOU COME IN

Just One Vote? Yours Will Count And Count Plenty On Election Day

"NUTS, brother. My one vote won't count."

Ask any CIO shop steward or PAC committeeman how often he's heard that line, and he'll probably report, "Hundreds of times."

Ask any of them what they answer, and you'll probably get this story—a mighty important one.

For "just one vote" counts a lot in America.

Recently the Bureau of National Affairs published a pamphlet showing how much "just one vote" counted. The authoritative Congressional Quarterly checked its voting records and found out how much "just one vote" counted.

Actually, "just one vote" has changed American history many times. Here's a few examples:

The World War II draft act was almost killed in late 1941. It was retained by just one vote. If it had been defeated, the U. S. would have had almost no army when the Japs attacked Pearl Harbor.

The attempt to impeach President Andrew Johnson failed by just one vote.

Presidents Thomas Jefferson and Rutherford B. Hayes were elected to the highest office in this country by just one vote.

In 1948, Harry Truman defeated Thomas Dewey in the states of Ohio and California by narrow margins. Truman carried Ohio by 7107 votes in 9248 precincts. That's less than one vote per precinct.

California went to Truman by a margin of 17,865 votes in 16,802 precincts or only slightly better than one vote per precinct.

In the Senate, Congressional Quarterly reports, in the four years from 1949 through 1952, one vote more or less was all-important in 41 Senate and two House roll calls on issues of concern to millions.

Of the hairline Senate decisions, 17 were tie votes. On eight of the 17 Vice President Barkley voted to decide the issue.

One of these Barkley votes established the now famous Senate Crime Investigating Committee—the Kefauver committee.

In addition to the 17 ties, the Senate decided 24 other issues by a single vote. One of these was the 1952 roll call that defeated the attempt to give statehood to Alaska.

In the House, during this period, seven issues were decided by one or two-vote margins. One of them was the 191-192 defeat of the Korean Aid Act of 1950.

Yes, PAC committeemen have an answer for the person who says, "My one vote won't count."

They have proof it does count—proof that "just one vote" is something to be mighty proud of.

Registration Records Set

The Delaware County CIO Council at Muncie, Ind., reported that 2500 of 3000 voters registered in one week were CIO.

Texas PAC said that in that state where registration is limited to those who paid poll taxes before Jan. 31 more CIO members are eligible to vote than ever before. Reason: 1100 CIO poll tax deputies arranged more than 50,000 poll tax payments.

A CIO-PAC drive in Maricopa County (Phoenix, Ariz.) helped to raise the percentage of eligibles casting their votes there to 11% over the rest of the state.

In Colorado, primary registration topped 222,000, the largest in history.

CIO-PAC credited 100% checking for a record registration in Centra Costa and Solano Counties, Calif.

Your vote won't register if you don't.

Final registration deadlines for the Nov. 4 general election are coming up fast.

Already the books have closed in many states. Here are final dates for voters to sign up in states where registration now is under way:

Oct.
6	Indiana	registration closes
6	Illinois	registration closes
7	Maryland	registration closes in all remaining counties
10	Missouri	precinct registration in Kansas City
11	Missouri	registration closes in St. Louis
11	Connecticut	statewide registration
14	Kansas	registration closes in Kansas City, Wichita and Topeka
14	Michigan	registration closes
14	Minnesota	registration closes
14	Tennessee	registration closes
18	Connecticut	statewide registration
18	Wyoming	registration closes
20	Colorado	registration closes
22	Wisconsin	registration closes
24	Kansas	registration closes
25	N. C.	registration closes
25	Oklahoma	registration closes
28	N. D.	registration closes
28	S. D.	registration closes
Nov.
1	Idaho	registration closes
1	Iowa	registration closes in all but Des Moines

Tune In On CIO-TV

HOW ARE the people thinking? And what are the real issues in the Nov. 4 election?

CIO takes a look at those two questions in two series of television programs now being aired throughout the nation.

Here is the latest program listing for "The People's Political Poll" and "Issues Of The Day":

"THE PEOPLE'S POLITICAL POLL"

Station	City and State	Time
WSB-TV	Atlanta, Ga.	10:30 P.M., Thursday
WAAM	Baltimore, Md.	7:15 P.M., Tuesday
WAFM-TV	Birmingham, Ala.	10:15 P.M., Friday
WTTV	Bloomington, Ind.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WNAC-TV	Boston, Mass.	9:15 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 11, 18
		6:45 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 25
WENR-TV	Chicago, Ill.	8:30 P.M., Thursday
WCPO-TV	Cincinnati, O.	1:00 P.M., Sunday
WXEL	Cleveland, O.	9:30 P.M., Monday
WTVN	Columbus, O.	6:30 P.M., Sunday
WFAA	Dallas, Tex.	1:30 P.M., Sunday
WOC-TV	Dayton, O.	4:15 P.M., Saturday
WFEL-TV	Denver, Colo.	10:15 P.M., Tuesday
		10:15 P.M., Monday, Nov. 3
WICU	Erie, Pa.	7:00 P.M., Monday
KPRC-TV	Houston, Tex.	5:30 P.M., Friday
WJAC-TV	Johnstown, Pa.	6:30 P.M., Friday
WDAF-TV	Kansas City, Mo.	5:30 P.M., Tuesday
WGAL-TV	Lancaster, Pa.	1:30 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 11, 18
		4:00 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 25
KECA-TV	Los Angeles, Cal.	9:00 P.M., Monday
WHAS-TV	Louisville, Ky.	7:00 P.M., Tuesday
WTJV	Miami, Fla.	6:15 P.M., Friday, Oct. 10, 31
WNAC-TV	New Haven, Conn.	12:00 P.M., Sunday
WABD	New York, N. Y.	8:15 P.M., Thursday
KMTV	Omaha, Neb.	10:30 P.M., Friday
WFIL-TV	Philadelphia, Pa.	6:45 P.M., Friday
WDTV	Pittsburgh, Pa.	8:00 P.M., Tuesday (tentative)
WTVR	Richmond, Va.	6:00 P.M., Friday
WHAM-TV	Rochester, N. Y.	6:00 P.M., Wednesday
KSL-TV	Salt Lake City, Ut.	10:00 P.M., Thursday
KFMB-TV	San Diego, Cal.	2:45 P.M., Saturday
KGO-TV	San Francisco, Cal.	6:30 P.M., Monday
KING-TV	Seattle, Wash.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WSYR-TV	Syracuse, N. Y.	2:45 P.M., Sunday
WKTY-TV	Utica, N. Y.	6:45 P.M., Tuesday
WTTG	Washington, D. C.	9:30 P.M., Friday

ISSUES OF THE DAY

City	Station	Day	Hour
Ames	WOI-TV	Tuesday	10:30 p.m.
Birmingham	WBRC-TV	Mon. and Wed.	10:15 p.m.
Boston	WBZ-TV	Saturday	check papers
Chicago	WBKB-TV	Tuesday	10:45 p.m.
Cincinnati	WCPO-TV	Sunday	9:15 p.m.
Columbus	WTVN-TV	Wednesday	6:30 p.m.
Davenport	WOC-TV	Thursday	9:15 p.m.
Dayton	WHIO-TV	Tuesday	6:15 p.m.
Erie	WICU	Fri., Oct. 24	7:00 p.m.
Huntington	WSAZ-TV	Sunday	1:30 p.m.
Indianapolis	WFBM-TV	Sunday	5:00 p.m.
Minneapolis	WCCO-TV	Sunday	1:00 p.m.
Omaha	WOW-TV	Fridays	6:15 p.m.
	KMTV	Saturdays	4:45 p.m.
Philadelphia	WFIL-TV	Thursday	6:45 p.m.

Joint Jersey Drive Ups Registration By 257,000

A HIGHLY-successful joint registration drive has just been concluded in New Jersey, pushing voter registration up by 257,000 from last spring's primary.

Some 80% of the state's 3,354,000 eligible adults have been registered. The statewide total is 2,655,000, with major gains recorded in industrial counties where a concentrated drive was conducted by state and county CIO councils and affiliated unions.

In Essex (Newark) county, the registration increase was 35,000. In Bergen, it was 74,000, and in Camden, 14,000.

Carl Holderman, State CIO Council president, said that Jersey's all-time record registration—above the 1948 figure by 275,000—makes possible "a liberal victory of major proportions." He called for a strong effort to bring out the vote on Nov. 4.

One highlight of the registration drive was signing up of new voters in the Studebaker plant in North Brunswick. But the on-the-job sign-up of new voters was blocked in other industrial countries by Republican election board members.

British TUC Looks At U. S. Elections

AN "IMPRESSIVE" line-up of American workers in support of Gov. Stevenson was seen by British trade unionists in early comment on the presidential election campaign in this country.

The views of British workers, who are following the American political contest closely, are reflected in Labour, monthly publication of the British Trades Union Congress.

"What has blunted Eisenhower's hopes of scooping up wholesale lots of votes from the U.S.A.'s 16 million trade unionists," said the magazine, "is not so much his own record as the union's judgments on the role his party has played in industrial affairs.

"Among the active trade unionists on the other side of the Atlantic, the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947 has aroused as much anger as the Trade Disputes Act occasioned among British trade unionists 20 years earlier.

"Sen. Robert Taft was joint author of the act that American trade unionists were vigorous in resisting and are eager to see repealed.

"But any support the GOP may have gained among trade unionists by settling for Eisenhower rather than Taft as its candidate for the White House it has probably lost by the 'platform' on which the ex-General will stand."

The TUC publication continued:

"The CIO News reported that the Republicans 'came up with a platform that lambasted the New Deal and the Fair Deal—and then offered the American workers and his family a Bum Deal. The program puts the Republicans against rent controls; against repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act; against the President's seizure of plants and industries to force settlement of labor disputes; against national health insurance; against federal aid to education.'

"The damage was done before the candidate was chosen. The CIO announced crisply: 'No backing for Taft or Ike.' Of Eisenhower, they said: 'He does not know the answer to present problems.' Of Taft: 'He is the chief strategist of the anti-labor forces in Congress.' Of both: 'Like the Republican party they have identified themselves with steel interests and with propaganda against workers and consumers . . .'"

"He's looking for words with double meanings, so his campaign speeches will appeal to both capital and labor!"

Southern Local Sets PAC Record

Lumbering in the South is a low-wage industry — which the CIO Woodworkers are only beginning to change.

But it was a Southern IWA local that set a record for political action contributions. With a membership of 560 workers, Local S-475 at Crossett, Ark., contributed $300 to the IWA PAC fund. That's an average of more than 50c a member invested to help elected decent political candidates.

Big CCL Meet Puts Political Action First

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A HARD-HITTING course of political action, combining a broad, progressive legislative program and intensive work at the polls, was endorsed by the Canadian Congress of Labor at its twelfth annual convention in Toronto, Ont.

The meeting was the largest labor convention ever held in Canada. Nearly 950 delegates representing CIO international unions, Canadian national unions, and directly chartered local unions attended.

As part of its political program, the convention reaffirmed its support of the Canadian Commonwealth Federation. The CCF is in power in the province of Saskatchewan and has varying degrees of strength elsewhere, and has had CCL support since 1943

It urged all CCL members to vote for CCF candidates, and aksed local unions to set up political action committees to increase CCF membership.

AT THE same time, however, the Political Action Committee voted to submit the convention legislative program to all recognized political parties in Canada and to ask their stands on specific issues. The last time this was done was in 1943. The CCF was the only party to answer.

But now the CCL is six times the size it was nine years ago —and the feeling is that the other parties may be inclined to pay a little more attention to it.

The need for political action —especially with a national election likely next year — was stressed in the reports of Lloyd Fell, of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, CCL-PAC chairman, and Henry Weisbach, executive secretary of the group.

The Canadian constitution and the power of the federal government are different than in the United States. North of the border, most labor legislation falls within the jurisdiction of the provinces; south of the border, the federal government has most of the authority by virtue of its jurisdiction over interstate commerce.

One of the CCL legislative objectives would bring the situation there a little more in line with that in the United States. The convention called on the federal government to amend the British North American Act "in such manner that all matters which are of common interest to the Canadian people, and of national importance and character, shall be within the jurisdiction of the government."

Specifically, the convention asked for nationwide legislation on a national labor code, covering all industries, as a replacement for the various and often conflicting provincial codes; a national minimum wage act—the average industrial wage is about $50 a week—and a national 40-hour work week law providing penalty rates for overtime.

THE convention also called for resumption of price controls; a sane immigration policy, with admission of new Canadians only when they can be absorbed in the work force and housing is available, and without discrimination because of race or color; revisions of the income tax law to permit the easier deduction of union dues, increase the 4% deduction allowed on medical and hospital bills, cut rates on low incomes, set the exemption at $1500 for single persons and $3000 for the married with $500 for each dependent, and permit a depreciation allowance on tools a worker has to own to carry out his job.

A national health insurance plan was sought, along with an old age pension of $65 monthly at age 65 without a means test and with an escalator clause, and an increase in family allowances, the amount to be determined by the CCL Research Dept.

THE convention got quicker action on one request than anyone anticipated. The day after it called on the federal government to write anti-discrimination clauses into its contracts, CCL Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald was advised by Minister of Labor Milton F. Gregg that such a provision will be put into effect Jan. 1.

CCL Pres. A. R. Mosher, in his address to the convention, stressed that the CCL is not affiliated with the CCF, and makes no assessments on its members for political purposes.

"I should like to repeat my conviction that the next great advance on the part of Canadian labor movement must be in the political field," he added.

"The older political parties claim to be representative of the people, but they are actually responsible to the private interests which provide campaign funds and control political policies

"The only remedy for this state of affairs is for the workers to become organized in the political field as well as in the economic field, and to elect their own representatives to Parliament and the provincial legislatures."

On the organizational front, the CCL instructed the incoming executive committee, with affiliated unions, to launch a major organizational drive in Quebec, the nation's lowest wage area.

The CCL and several international unions, including the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, IUE and Oil Workers, have started joint organization drives in several localities.

The convention endorsed a foreign policy statement stressing the desire of Canadians for peace and pledging support of the defense effort, but insisting upon equality of sacrifice and calling for cooperation without domination by large allies.

Leon Jouhaux, 73-year-old internationally known French labor leader who received the Nobel Peace Prize last year, addressed the convention in French —a language also used by many delegates in speaking from the floor.

Free unions, he said, have the responsibility and should have the right to speak in international affairs in quest of the peace that diplomats have failed to produce.

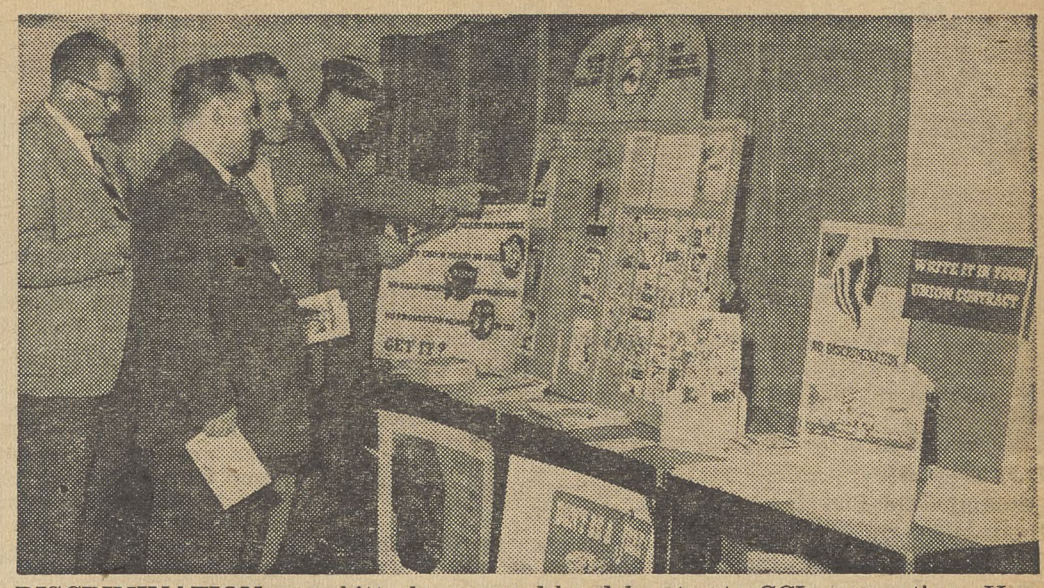
WITHOUT peace, he said, there is no freedom for labor, but "we do not want the peace of abdication — we don't want to kneel at the feet of the totalitarian powers."

The convention voted to increase the per capita tax from 5c to 10c per member per month.

Vice Pres. Claude Ballard of the CIO Woodworkers, Labor Minister Gregg and Arthur K. Musgrave, director of the Co-operative Union of Canada, also spoke. Musgrave distributed apples to the delegates as a gift from the co-op group.

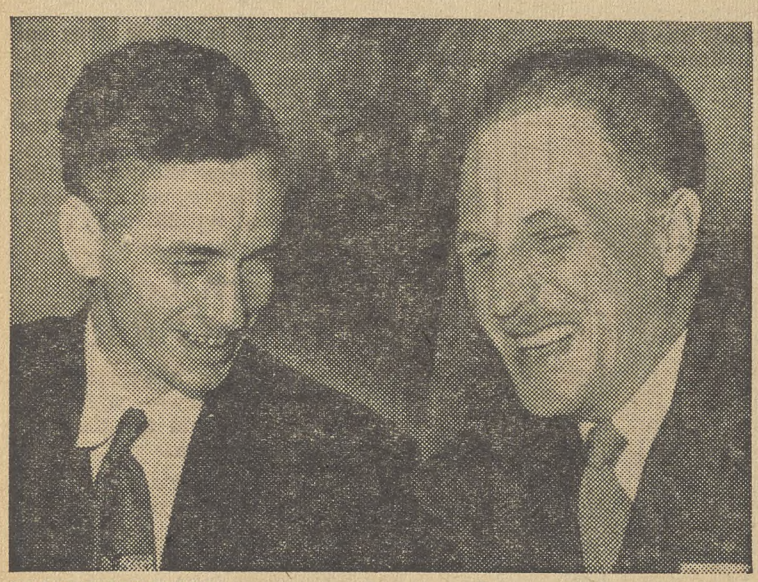
Mosher, 71-year-old leader of the CCL since it was organized, was re-elected to another term. After a fight, MacDonald defeated William Mahoney, assistant Canadian director of the Steelworkers, for the secretary-treasurer's post. George Burt of the Auto Workers, Saul Spivak of the Clothing Workers and Silby Barrett of the Miners were re-elected vice presidents, while Charles Millard, USA-CIO Canadian director, was named a vice president after declining re-election last year.

RE-ELECTED top officers of the Canadian Congress of Labor at Toronto convention are Pres. A. R. Mosher (seated) and Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald.



DISCRIMINATION was bitterly opposed by delegates to CCL convention. Here a group of Auto Workers looks over exhibit of UAW Local 439, Toronto, in convention ante-room. Left to right, Pat Smith, Pres. Tom Paton and Dennis McDermott, chairman of Fair Employment Practices Committee, all of Local 439; and J. H. Beattie, UAW Local 252, Toronto.

LEON JOUHAUX



CONVENTION banquet speaker was James B. Carey (left), CIO secretary-treasurer and president of CIO Electrical Workers. At right is Murray Cotterill, president of Toronto and Lake Shore Labor Council, CCL, who was toastmaster at dinner.

Carey Urges CCL Drive On Commies

AN APPEAL for more help from the Canadian Congress of Labor in routing the Communists from organized labor was made by James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and president of the CIO Electrical Workers, in an address at the annual CCL convention banquet.

The CCL, with which CIO unions in Canada are affiliated, is strong anti-Communist, and has scored notable advances in cutting down the strength of the Reds who once plagued it. During the convention sessions, resolutions to readmit Communist-dominated unions which had been expelled—as from the CIO —were killed without debate.

Carey told the delegates about some of the difficulties the IUE-CIO has been having with the General Electric Co., which has signed a contract with the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers although it has $2 billion worth of U. S. defense contracts.

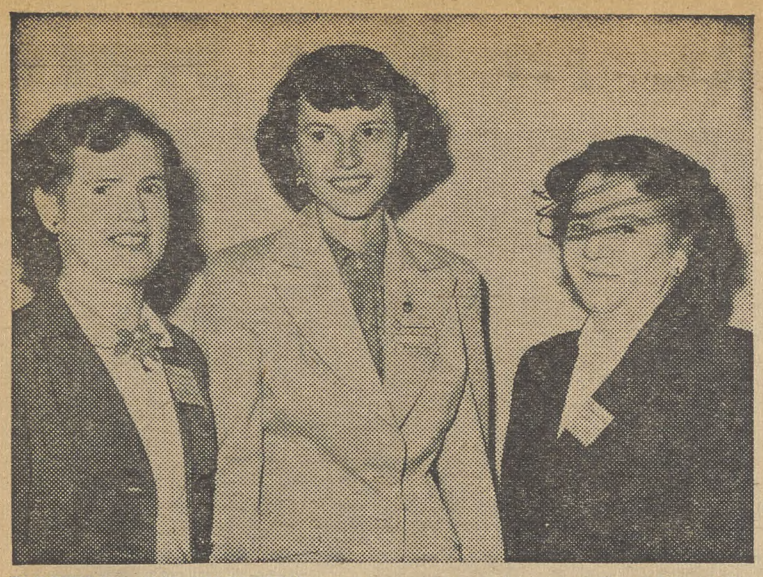
"There are more Communists per square inch in that company," he said in stressing the secret nature of much of its defense production, "than in any other company in the United States."

The UE also has bargaining rights in some GE plants in Canada. The only way to defeat the Communists, Carey declared, is to get rid of them.

"We need all the help we can get for the IUE," he said. "We ask you to assist us in this fight, for the IUE cannot do the job alone."

Carey scored a big hit with the delegates by ridiculing recent allegations "that there has been a growing alienation" between Canada and the United States, and by listing some of the things that Americans like about Canada.

Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers and a CIO vice president, who spoke at a convention session, lauded the Canadian labor movement for heading off the "great danger that Canada, which has so gallantly resisted political domination by the United States, might be conquered economically" during its current boom.



DOZENS OF WOMEN were among the nearly 950 delegates at Canadian Congress of Labor's convention. Among them were (left to right): Mary Borisenko, Saskatchewan Sanitarium Employes Union, Saskatoon, Sask.; Pauline Crosson, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Regina, Sask., and Blanche Robert, Clothing Workers, Montreal.

Minnesota CIO Steps Up Farm-Labor Program

By EMIL J. KRIEG

MINNESOTA CIO is going to expand to the fullest its important farm-labor relations program, increase its legislative research and strengthen its education work during the coming year—with adequate funds to do the job.

The expanded Minnesota CIO Council program was voted at the council's 15th annual convention in Duluth.

In a strong vote of confidence, the delegates voted to up the monthly per capita tax by 3c to 13c, and to re-elect Pres. Robert E. Hess and Sec.-Treas. Rodney C. Jacobson.

The farm labor program, off to a good start in earlier years, was held in a state of abeyance this year largely because the steel strike made adequate financing and manpower impossible.

Adoption of the per capita increase means that the farm-labor program will have adequate financing for full scale operation next year. The farm-labor relations committee will have representation at numerous county fairs in 1953 with direct contact between labor and farmers to tell the story of the economic interdependence of these two groups.

THE INCREASE also means that the State CIO Council will have sufficient funds for effective operation of its legislative, research and education department. More collective bargaining information will be analyzed for use of the locals. And liberal legislators will be given more assistance in the drafting and fighting for liberal bills.

Glenn Chinander, District 2 director of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, made a clearcut and effective talk on why the increase in per capita was necessary. It was the UPWA that pioneered in this area in the farm-labor relations program, which in recent years has been carried on by the State CIO Council.

On a rollcall vote, 346 delegates voted for the per capita increase, 184 against and 27 were absent or passed.

The convention also amended the constitution to provide that the president and secretary-treasurer shall be elected for two-year staggered terms. Hess was re-elected for one year to start the change into effect, Jacobson for two years. There will be a presidential election for a two-year term at next year's convention and the plan then will be in full effect.

Jacobson was opposed for re-election by St. Clair Beeman, president of Local 1160, CIO Electrical Workers. On the roll-call, Jacobson got 382 votes, Beeman 138 and 27 abstained or passed.

The convention adopted reports and recommendations on a broad program of taxation; increased state aid to education; school district reorganization; for a strong, equitable teachers' tenure law; for strengthening and liberalizing the state unemployment compensation law. All the proposals were submitted by the legislative committee.

Adopted resolutions indorsed the union label drive of the CIO Clothing Workers, thanked Sen. Humphrey and Congressmen Blatnik, Wier, McCarthy and Marshall, all DFLers, "for their efforts and hard work in retaining the wage stabilization board" in Region 8, and pledged to carry out PAC on a year-round basis and give financial and moral support to Democratic candidates on the national, state and congressional levels.

Guest speakers included Jerry Voorhis, executive director of the Cooperative League of U.S.A.; Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education; Ira Polley, director of the Region 8 WSB; Joseph Robbie, director of the Region 8 Office of Price Stabilization; and Harry J. Peterson, executive secretary of the Minnesota Association of Cooperatives.

CCL Delegates Bitter Over Canada's Housing Crisis

DELEGATES to the Canadian Congress of Labor convention — from Vancouver to the Maritime Provinces — found common ground in bitter criticism of the dominion government for its failure to solve the nation's drastic housing shortage.

From one city after another—and from one union after another—they attacked the federal government's public and publicly assisted housing policies because, as a resolution put it, they "failed miserably" to satisfy the frantic demand for new homes. The situation, in many respects, is worse than it is in the United States.

A Vancouver Woodworker declared housing is blocked by technicalities. A Toronto Clothing Worker, Percy Yaffe, charged "good brick houses" are being razed to make way for gasoline stations and used car lots. A miner from Nova Scotia declared "there is no such thing as a national housing scheme east of Quebec."

Oliver Hodges, of the Pottery Workers in Hamilton, Ont., called for political action to end the impasse. A Steelworker from the same city complained he just couldn't borrow the money to renovate his old but substantial home, and told the delegates that "all of us have the obligation and responsibility to go home to our communities and work for better housing."

CCL Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald cited the "appalling effect of lack of housing" and the "terrific social and economic impact" resulting from government "abdication" in the field.

The dominion government, he declared, has "apparently adopted a policy of discouraging home building and low-rent housing," although the nationwide shortage has been conservatively estimated at 700,000 dwelling units. Insurance companies, he added, are permitted to invest their funds in "more attractive and profitable" fields.

"There is rationing of housing by purse," he maintained.

PERSONS OF high income can afford housing, he said, but nobody is interested in supplying it to Canadian workers who earn an average of about $50 a week or $2600 a year—although the government "piously" proclaims interest in subsidies.

"Seventy per cent of the workers in this country earn less than that amount," MacDonald said. "Seventy per cent of the people who need homes the worst—are denied the fundamental and basic right to live as decent human beings should."

The resolution called on the Ottawa government to amend the National Housing Act to provide for low down payments and low interest rates, to permit loans direct to home builders, and to build large-scale, low-rent housing projects in crowded urban centers.

Union Membership Climbs To New Record In Canada

MORE workers in Canada belong to labor unions than at any time in that country's history, Minister of Labor Milton F. Gregg reported recently.

Statistics compiled by the Canadian Dept. of Labor show, he said, that on Jan. 1, 1952, a total of 1,146,121 men and women belonged to unions. The figure represents an increase of 117,000 over 1951, but includes 24,000 members of independent unions which were in existence in the past but had not been covered in previous surveys.

The report showed that 108 international unions and 62 national and regional unions are active in Canada, and account for 90% of the union membership. Directly chartered and independent organizations represent the remainder.

There are three major Canadian central bodies—the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO locals are affiliated; the Trades & Labor Congress of Canada, which has AFL affiliations; and the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labor.

"That's the trouble with you fellows with non-union hours! You don't know when it's quitting time!"

Stone Workers Plan Organizing Drive

THE CIO United Stone Workers have acted to complete organizing the unorganized in the granite, cement and brick industries.

USAPW-CIO now sets the pattern of wages and other working conditions in the three industries. Its 7th convention at Cincinnati moved to complete the organizing job in its jurisdiction.

To pay the cost of organizing work, USAPW delegates voted to boost the monthly dues by $1 to a total of $3. Fifty cents of the increase will go to the international, and the other 50c will be retained by the locals.

As part of the organizing campaign, the delegates voted 10c of the international's increased revenue for the strike, relief and litigation fund—for they realized that an adequate strike financing was vital to that purpose. The dues hike also will provide better serving of the locals.

Resolutions unanimously passed by the convention call for Taft-Hartley repeal, greater political action, passage of national health insurance legislation, and federal control of tidelands oil.

The convention endorsed Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman for President and Vice-President—with one dissenting vote.

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll hit hard at Gen. Eisenhower, Republican presidential candidate; his running mate, Sen. Nixon, and Sens. Jenner, McCarthy and Taft.

Kroll declared he wanted "to pay his respects to Nixon."

"He has been kind enough to mention my name in a great many places around the country," Kroll said. "It seems that I am the captor of Gov. Stevenson, that Stevenson is the 'captive' candidate of CIO-PAC. I wonder how well this kind of language fits a man we now find out is the kept darling of a little group of California millionaires."

KROLL SAID Sen. Taft, whose home like Kroll's is in Cincinnati, "has succeeded in snatching victory from the jaws of defeat. He lost the nomination but captured the nominee.

"They thought they could get our boy — our hometown boy, that is—out of the driver's seat. But we know he's a fighter. And we saw him fight and win the battle of Morningside Heights ... we saw him dictate the terms of surrender of our most famous soldier. He came home with the general's shield and sword."

Kroll said that Taft "is calling the tune for the Republican campaign."

Murray Supports GI Blood Donation

The CIO gave further support last week to the national blood donor program, sponsored jointly by the Dept. of Defense, the Civil Defense Administration and the Red Cross.

"At the present time," CIO Pres. Philip Murray wired Pres. Truman, "there is an urgent need for increased contributions of blood by our civilian population for our valiant troops fighting in Korea.

"The CIO is proud to be a part of such a worthy program and I am sure our membership will respond wholeheartedly to this appeal."

UPA Answers Plea From Korean Troops

FAITH in the CIO to fill human needs has come in a letter from far-off Korea.

The letter from Chaplain Clyde F. Straub of the 179th Infantry Regiment to Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, asked for 20,000 sheets of writing paper and an equal number of envelopes for 600 South Korean riflemen, assigned to the regiment.

When Perlis read the letter at the recent convention of the CIO Paperworkers, Pres. Harry D. Sayre promptly assured him that the Koreans would get the stationery.

California CIO Pushes PAC In Key State

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN
Special Correspondent

PROBLEMS of political action—intensified in a key state in a crucial election year—dominated deliberations of the third convention of the CIO-California Industrial Union Council.

More than 300 delegates attended the convention in Santa Barbara, which marked the third year of growth of the CIO union council established after charter of the old, Commie-dominated state organization was revoked by National CIO.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, called on California CIOers to wade into the election campaign "more united, more determined to make a good fight—you never lose making a good fight."

In acting on some 60 basic policy resolutions—a majority of them involving political action—the California convention joined in CIO's endorsement of the Stevenson - Sparkman ticket and urged Pres. Truman to call a special session of Congress to enact stronger price controls.

DELEGATES also condemned Gen. Eisenhower for his approval of Sen. Nixon after the $18,235 trust fund raised by California oil-banking-real estate interests was revealed. The California Senator is the GOP vice presidential candidate.

The convention said Eisenhower's action in the explosive Nixon case "casts serious doubt on your judgement and ability to choose political leaders who can distinguished between the special interests of the privileged, powerful few and the general welfare of the American people."

A report by Pres. Manuel Dias and Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol spelled out the council's gains in the past year. It said CIO now has "more representation in state government than in any previous period of California CIO history." And it reported "the 1952 primary election results are the best in the history of California CIO-PAC."

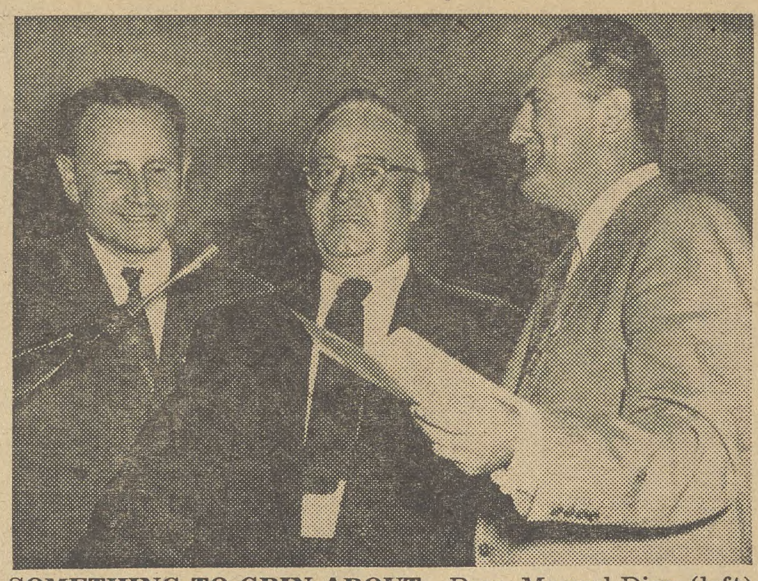
A dramatic highlight of the convention came when C. V. O'Halloran, Region Six director of the CIO Auto Workers, presented checks totaling $15,000 from the international union for PAC work in California. The UAW executive board granted $5000 to the state council, and the remainder to UAW Citizenship Councils in Los Angeles and the San Francisco Bay Area.

In a speech backing Stevenson and Sparkman, Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam lambasted the Republicans for weakening price controls in the last session of Congress.

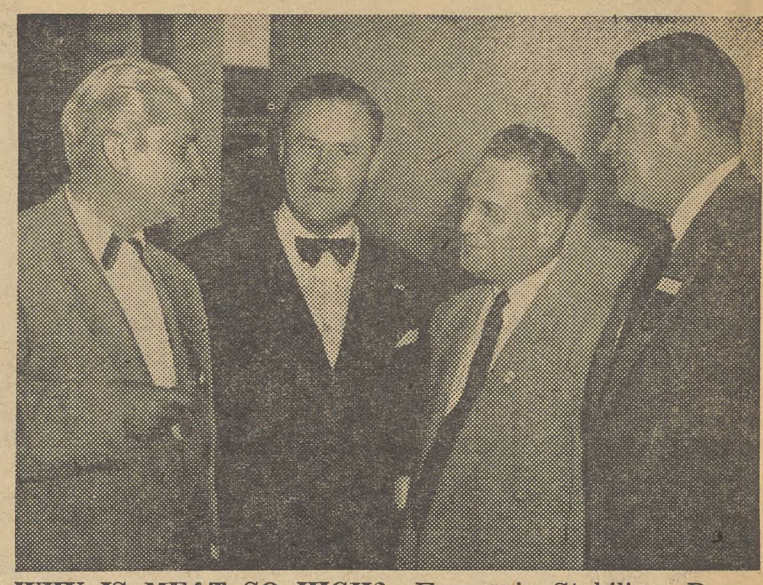
Putnam also charged the steel industry with "precipitating" last spring's strike and said "the steel industry simply blackjacked us into granting a price increase higher than was warranted by the rules."

Other convention speakers included Harry Read, assistant to James B. Carey, CIO secretary treasurer who was unable at the last minute to appear; Richard Leonard, CIO national representative; and Irwin L. DeShetler and Tim Flynn, CIO regional directors in Los Angeles and San Francisco, respectively.

Longest floor debate in the convention was over a proposal to make the office of council president a full-time post, involving a 1c per capita increase. It was defeated by a roll call vote of 56,000 to 34,000.



SOMETHING TO GRIN ABOUT—Pres. Manuel Dias (left) and Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol thank CIO Auto Workers for $5000 PAC contribution presented by C. V. O'Halloran, UAW-CIO Region Six director. International also gave $10,000 for political education.



WHY IS MEAT SO HIGH?—Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam (left center) blamed it on control law "watered down" by GOP. With him (from left) are George Roberts, Western CIO-PAC representative, and Irwin L. DeShetler and Tim Flynn, California CIO regional directors.

Shades Of Old Abe Lincoln

Correspondent Leo Kutcher of the New York Post told the California CIO convention that "Republicans with a social conscience" gave him the first lead of Sen. Nixon's $18,235 trust fund.

"It seems a sorry thing," Kutcher commented, "that the party of Abraham Lincoln, 100 years after it was formed, should have as one of its standard bearers a man who believes in government of the millionaires, by the millionaires and for the millionaires."

Illinois CIO Joins Drive For Adlai

THE EXECUTIVE board of the Illinois State CIO Council unanimously supported the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket at a special meeting called to help guide 300,000 CIO members in the State in their voting on Nov. 4.

The announcement was made by Pres. Joseph Germano. He also disclosed recommendations given candidates for Congress and for various State offices.

For Congress, the CIO Council board gave its approval to all Democratic candidates for the House in the first 24 congressional districts. No endorsement was made in the 25th district.

For statewide offices, the board urged CIO members to vote for the Democratic candidates: governor, Sherwood Dixon; lieutenant-governor, Herbert C. Paschen; secretary of state, Edward J. Barrett; state auditor, Benjamin O. Cooper; state treasurer, Fred A. Cain, and attorney general, Ivan A. Elliott.

Garmatz Backed Social Security

Rep. Garmatz (D. Md.) voted right when the bill to improve social security was before Congress in the last session, he reported last week.

Although absent, he was paired when the bill boosting old age benefits first came up on May 19. He voted yes on final action on June 17.

Garmatz has a record of 14 right votes, only one wrong vote, in the latest CIO News Voting Record.

IT MUST have been a good story that caused Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union (right) to smile so broadly at 10th anniversary luncheon of United Seamen's Service. USS Pres. William S. Nowell is speaking, and in center is Rear Admiral John M. Will. Observance was held in New York.

Red, Tory 'Conspiracy' Ripped By Haywood

A "CONSPIRACY between the extreme right and extreme left" in California — involving Harry Bridges and designed to aid reactionary Republicans — was charged by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president.

Haywood called Bridges—head of the West Coast Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, expelled from CIO as Communist-controlled — an "unmitigated liar" when he claimed CIO in 1948 threatened him with deportation unless he promised to support Truman.

The CIO official told the California CIO convention in Santa Barbara that Bridges and the Commie-line third party are helping the Republicans' this year, just as they did in '48.

Haywood recalled that Henry Wallace, running on the Independent Progressive Party ticket supported by Bridges and the Communists, polled almost 200,000 votes in California in 1948.

"That vote almost tipped California into the Republican column in 1948. It worked in New York, you know, which went to the Republicans because of the Third Party vote, then," Haywood said.

"I CHARGE there's a conspiracy going on between the extreme right and extreme left. Bridges and Pegler. They're playing the same game."

Haywood said that Bridges' recent statement slandered the CIO and Truman at the same time—a move he indicated was deliberately contrived to assist the Republicans.

He detailed a rebuttal to the charge made by Bridges, making it clear that the latter was ousted as CIO regional director in Northern California in 1948 because he flatly refused to uphold CIO policy.

Turning to the current election campaign, Haywood referred to the expose of the $18,235 slush fund for California's Sen. Nixon, who is the Republican vice presidential candidate.

"I don't think its healthy for our country," he said, "for private individuals of wealth to be paying expenses to our Congressmen and Senators."

He said Gen. Eisenhower was a "gallant figure in World War II" but that he is now a "captive," outranked by Sen. Taft, the "six-star general in the camp of Republican strategy."

Eisenhower, said Haywood, has "embraced the McCarthys and the Jenners—and now comes the Prince of Reaction, Robert Alphonso Taft."

He sharply criticized McCarthy "for attempting to smear Stevenson with the Alger Hiss case."

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Tears into Bridges

"McCarthy's game is a dangerous one, as well as a dirty one," he said. "Many Republicans were part of this Hiss thing. When Hiss sought to resign as president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace because of the charges against him, the Board of Trustees tabled his resignation letter.

"And who was on the Board then? Gen. Eisenhower and John Foster Dulles, as well as other Republicans. Why doesn't McCarthy talk about Eisenhower and Dulles in connection with Hiss?"

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

The writer journeyed to Santa Barbara, Calif., to attend and address the California CIO Council Convention, on Sept. 25. The delegates are proud of their council and provided an enthusiatic convention. A number of vital subjects that affect our country and our unions were presented and discussed.

The delegates were particularly interested in the doings and accomplishments of poor little rich boy, Richard Nixon—the one of "soap opera" fame. One and all know in California and across the nation that in every instance he voted against the working man for the benefit and interest of those financed him with additional pay. The "humble little store" of which Nixon spoke happens to be big business. People are not interested in stories about little dogs or about Patricia, charming lady that she is.

The people are concerned about the voting record of the Republican Vice President candidate's voting record. From 1948 through 1951 with a total of 39 votes, Nixon voted against labor 27 times, was absent 3 times, and voted with labor 9 times—these 9 votes were all bi-partisan supported foreign policy issues. On every domestic issue he voted against labor. Those business interest in California who fed Nixon's little "kitty" certainly knew a good investment when they saw one.

In discussing the forthcoming presidential election, the convention delegates displayed enthusiastic support for the Democratic Party platform—they too, as others throughout our country are supporting a program of decency and right. The people are interested in a program that will furnish them with an opportunity to work so that their families can get those fruits of labor each man is entitled too.

Etched deep in the memory of many are the "glorious days" of the Republicans—the bribes of the twenties, soldiers of World War I selling apples on street corners, people starving and despairing for lack of work throughout the country. All this sprang from Hoover's middle-of-the-road policy. In their efforts to get votes this fall, the Republicans will attempt to beguile and deceive the people.

We must remain alert and reject these efforts. I have noticed that CIO people are becoming aroused and displaying great interest in this campaign. They are for protecting their union rights, for human decency and rights and against greed and special privilege.

Clarence Palmer, president of the Utah CIO Council, has just been appointed CIO Regional Director for the area. Brother Palmer can be contacted at the regional office, 25 E. Second Street, South, Salt Lake City, Utah.

CIO Reg. Dir. George Craig reports the following CIO representation election victories: Morris Tube Works, Philadelphia, CIO Steelworkers 13, 8 no union; Enterprise Tallow and Grease Co., Philadelphia, CIO-LIU 1711 Amalgamated Tobacco, Food and Allied Workers 19, 8 no union, 1 challenged. Congratulations to Ben Stahl, CIO Field Representative and George Ardelean, Business Agent, Local 1711, who directed the later campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports: Consolidated Wester Steel Co., Maywood, Calif., USA-CIO 804, AFL 35. At Titanium Metals Corp. of America, Henderson, Nev., the Steelworkers beat the AFL two to one to represent 1200 employes engaged in production of titanium metals.

DeShetler also reports that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were victorious at Tailored Slax, Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 75 to 5 for the AFL, no union 14.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports representation election victories for both the CIO Rubber Workers and the CIO Steelworkers. In an election at the Dryden Rubber Co. plant, Keokuk, Ia., the workers favored the Rubber Workers by a vote of 596 to 433 for AFL, 23 no union. Intl. Rep. Ray Reasnor handled the campaign. The CIO Steelworkers won their victory at the American Plating Co. plant, Des Moines, with the workers favoring the Steelworkers by a vote of 19 to 6 for no union. Intl. Rep. Floyd Piper, assisted by James McDonnall of the Des Moines IUC-CIO, directed the drive.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports the following CIO representation election victories: Cleveland Bronze & Graphite Co., CIO Steelworkers 227, MESA 6, AFL Boilermakers 0, against 56. Intl. Rep. George Turner was in charge of the campaign. Intag Co., Division of Interchemical Co., Springfield, O., CIO Chemical Workers 13, 1 against. Rep. Henry Atkinson directed the organizing.

Rubber Signs 3 Contracts

THE CIO Rubber Workers last week won wage increases ranging from 8 to 10c an hour for more than 3000 members employed by three companies in U. S. and Canada.

The 10c hourly boost was gained in contracts signed with the American Hard Rubber Co., with 1600 employes at Akron, O., and Butler, N. J., and the Killian Mfg. Co., Akron, with 250 workers. Killian will begin negotiations for a pension program after next Jan. 1.

These increases follow the pattern set in settlements with the industry's Big Four, Firestone, Goodyear, Goodrich and U. S. Rubber.

Eight cents an hour was won at the Hamilton, Ont., plant of Firestone after a 17-week strike. URW also won $50 retroactive pay, a non-contributory pension plan, liberalizing of requirements for receiving holiday pay on eight holidays, and a severance pay plan.

CIO Supports Drive To Get Jobs For Thousands Of Handicapped

CIO this week joined in a national program to turn "fourth class citizens" into "first class" workers—to help get jobs for the nation's thousands of handicapped citizens.

Observance of the eighth annual "National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week" is under way.

Climax of a year-around program, the week seeks to focus attention on the need of providing jobs for qualified disabled workers and for providing more funds for carrying out federal-state rehabilitation programs.

The President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped pointed out:

"All told, we have a group of disabled American—possibly 2½ million of them—whose great hope for work and happiness is pinned upon the effort of those who are dedicated to solving the problems of the handicapped."

Observance of the week began Oct. 4 at a "Kick-off Dinner" at Washington, sponsored by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, whose president is Paul A. Strachen.

Members of the sponsoring committee for the dinner include CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers; Martin Wagner, former president of the CIO, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, and Frank Fernbach, CIO associate research director.

Strachen, in the AFPH magazine Valor, listed a number of disabling ailments for which no sure remedies have been found and which have incapacitated "millions of American citizens."

"Meanwhile," he asked, "shall we continue to regard the innocent and the suffering victims of those ailments, injuries and defects as second, third, or fourth class citizens, unwanted as workers in our domestic economy, and often barred from participation in our social life?"

"Shall we deny them an opportunity to earn their own way; to thus assume the duties, as well as the priceless privilege of American citizenship, because of their disabilities?"

Chicago Labor Fights Proposal For Wage Tax

LABOR in Chicago has joined to fight a proposed city payroll tax aimed at the city's 2.7 million wage earners.

Both Ellsworth Smith, Chicago CIO Council secretary, and Stephan Bailey, AFL Council secretary, and Stephen Bailey, AFL Council vice president, condemned the suggested 1 to 1.5% levy. They pointed out it would hit workers hardest.

"The CIO," Smith said, "favors a graduated state income tax law, based on ability to pay, but a city payroll tax is another matter. We oppose such a plan unalterably." (LPA)

TWUA Wins Rayon Strike

AFTER a month-long strike marked by the manhandling of union officials, the CIO Textile Workers have won their initial contract at four plants of the Plaza Mills in the Middleburg, Pa., area.

A 10c hourly raise, including 8c retroactive for two months, was won by the 450 rayon mill workers. Other features include a cost-of-living clause, shift premiums, six paid holidays, and hospital, surgical and death benefits.

During the strike, William Zweiffle, a TWUA representative, was kidnapped but later released unharmed. Local police refused to make any arrests. (LPA)

Your Birthday Is Holiday Under Gas, Coke Pact

EACH of the 155 members of Local 400, CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, employed by the Foote Mineral Co. at Exton, Pa., will have his own personal paid holiday under a new contract.

The pact provides that in addition to six traditional paid holidays, every worker will receive another—his birthday. The agreement also raised wages by 5c an hour retroactive to Sept. 1, and 3c additional effective Mar. 1, 1953, subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval. It was negotiated by a local committee aided by Intl. Rep. Joseph B. Wright.

Give A Buck To PAC

Know The Score On Voting Record

Check your Senators and Representatives! Did they vote YOUR way in the 82nd Congress?

Get the facts from the CIO NEWS 1952 VOTING RECORD. It shows how each member of Congress voted on important issues in 1951-52. Order it now for distribution in your union.

Prices for VOTING RECORD:

5c per copy; 100 for $4
500 for $17; 1,000 for $24
Rates for larger quantities on request.

THE CIO NEWS
718 JACKSON PLACE, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

Enclosed find my check or money order for $....., for which send me ..... copies of The CIO NEWS VOTING RECORD.

Name .....

Union ..... Local No. .....

Street Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

French Harvester Workers Aid Chicago UAW Strikers

MEMBERS of CIO Auto Workers Local 6—on strike for more than two months at the Intl. Harvester Co. plant at Melrose Park, Ill.—manned their picket lines with a new spirit last week.

Their morale had just been given a shot in the arm from one of the last sources they expected such a boost.

It was a sort of Marshall Plan aid in reverse—a gift of 20,000 francs and words of encouragement and solidarity from some of the workers in another Harvester plant, across the Atlantic at Roubaix, France.

The money came from the members of the two anti-Communist unions in the Roubaix plant, the Force Ouvriere (FO) and the predominantly Catholic French Federation of Christian Workers (CFTC). A third union there, the General Confederation of Labor (CGT), is Communist-dominated, although most of its members are not party-liners.

The move started when a Roubaix employe heard of the Melrose Park strike while attending a workers' school near Paris. He went back to the plant and told other FO members about it.

They recalled their own plight when they were on strike two years ago. Other Harvester plants in other parts of the world, including perhaps that at Melrose Park, kept on working. Maybe, indirectly, they helped break the Roubaix strike, and maybe they didn't. At any rate, the French workers went back to their jobs—beaten.

Eventually the returned student talked to Auguste Brabigant CFTC leader in the plant. Between them they had an idea—a gesture aimed at establishing solidarity and unity among Harvester workers throughout the world.

Brabigant and Albert Dutrieux, representing the FO at Roubaix, launched a drive for the 20,000 francs—for the relief of the Melrose Park strikers.

Twenty thousand francs isn't as much money as it sounds. Actually, at the present rate of exchange, it's about $60. In France it will buy about what it does in the United States, more bread and wine perhaps, less meat, butter and eggs.

But it's two or three times what the average Roubaix worker earns.

Brabigant and Dutrieux took a check for the 20,000 francs to the CIO European office in Paris.

"Not even in America can you BUY solidarity . . . It must be given freely by the workers of the world to each other," they stated.

"We hope that the day is not far off when we will meet in an Intl. Conference of Harvester Workers to make plans for one international contract covering all Harvester plants, the world over."

IUE Authorizes GE Strike, Talks Go On

ARMED WITH authority to call a strike when necessary, the CIO Electrical Workers negotiators last week continued contract talks with the General Electric Co., where IUE represents 71,000 workers in 60 plants.

The union is pressing for a four-point program including a 5.75% wage increase with a minimum of 7.5c an hour, seven paid holidays "without strings"; a modified union shop, and a reopening of a one-year pact on pensions and insurance as well as on wages.

One of GE's competitors, Westinghouse Corp., recently signed a contract containing this program.

Main issue is the vacation clause. Both Memorial Day and July 4 fall on Saturday in 1953, and IUE is insisting that GE grant two other holidays in such a case. Otherwise, under the terms of the old pact, GE workers would get only five holidays instead of seven next year.

IUE negotiators last week charged in a report, which was adopted by the union's GE Conference Board, that the company has "a deliberate policy to crush IUE-CIO and is giving the United Electrical Workers (expelled by the CIO for Communist domination) what aid and comfort it can."

The negotiators said that as part of this scheme the company was planning secretly to:

- Seek a law that would require certain union meetings to be held on company property.
- Help local management develop a plan to keep workers in non-union plants from joining the union.
- Conduct a campaign to sell GE stock to workers to discourage union activity.

At midweek last week, negotiations had been discontinued but were expected to be resumed.

The 24-Hour Work Day Is Coming Up

THE DOPE the Communists are feeding the young folks in the Hungarian version of the "workers' paradise" must be powerful stuff, according to a story in the government-controlled newspaper Szabad Nep.

Not for the youth of Hungary is anything as decadent as the 40-hour-week, the article says. Nor even a 48-hour week, nor one of 60 or 70 or 80 hours. Nothing less than a 110-hour work week will satisfy them!

That, at any rate, is what the newspaper quoted the leaders of the Hungarian Communist youth movement as saying. The idea is to fulfill whatever five-year plan happens to be current, and Hungarian youth is alleged to be quite happy at the prospect of spending eight and one-third hours out of 24 for eating and sleeping.

Maybe the next "achievement" of the Soviet zone will be the 168-hour-work week — with no time-off at all. But reactionary American employers shouldn't get any ideas.

UAW Sues Harvester For $1 Million

STRIKING members of the CIO Auto Workers at the Melrose Park, Ill., plant of the Intl. Harvester Co. last week filed a $1 million breach of contract suit against the firm.

The suit, instituted by UAW Local 6, charged the firm has paid no vacation wages due since the walkout started on Aug. 4, although the strikers have met all contractual requirements for the payments.

The union also accused the company of hiring 385 firemen to do work normally done by the strikers.

The Army's Chicago Ordnance District, meantime, was awaiting instructions on moving from the plant completed armored troop carriers which had been built on an emergency basis to fill a major defense need. Ordnance inspectors had been directed by their superiors not to enter the plant while the strike is in progress unless word to the contrary is received from the Pentagon in Washington.

It's A Union Town

A recent survey made by the Swedish Trade Union Federation (LO) shows that in the town of Bollnas, 66.7% of the people are members of unions affiliated with the LO.

CIO Wins U.S. Action To Save Rent Curbs

WITH THE door clanging shut last week on community action to extend rent ceilings, CIO councils in several cities sought direct federal action to prevent runaway rent increases.

The councils and local unions sought critical defense housing designations for several cities, where controls either had run out or were about to lapse.

In a score of cities, such critical housing designations were granted within a four-day period by the Office of Defense Mobilization Defense Area Advisory Committee. Among the cities were:

Denver and Pueblo, Colo.; Columbus, Youngstown, Sandusky, Akron, Canton-Massillon and Portsmouth-Chillicothe, O.; Allentown-Bethlehem and Harrisburg, Pa.; Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kans.; Cedar Rapids and Sioux City, Ia.; Bay City, Mich.; Monmouth, N. J.; Waukeegan, Ill., and Seward, Alaska.

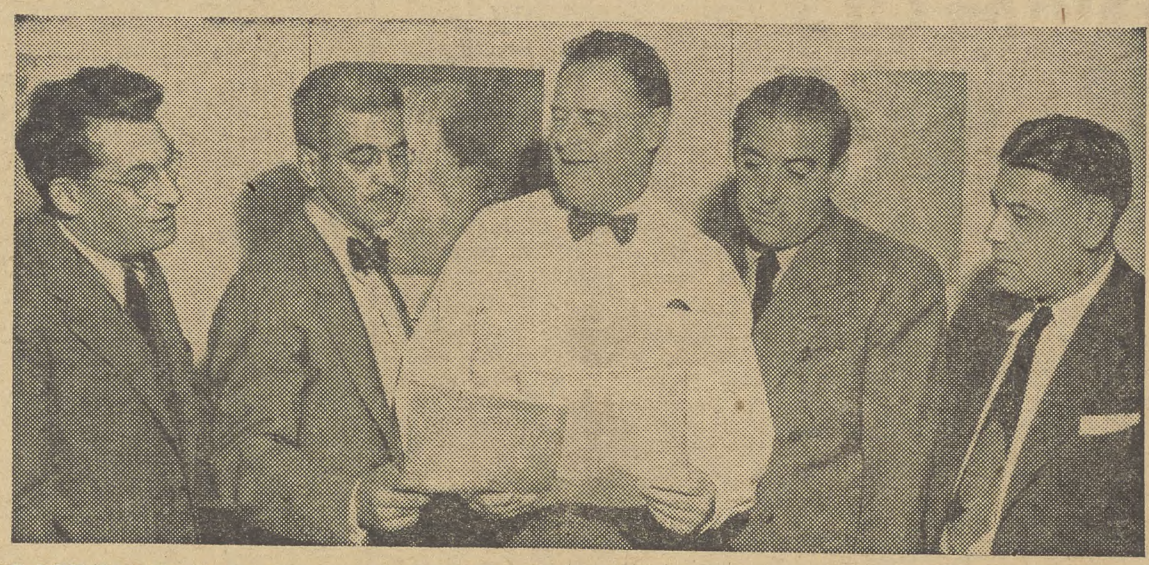
Typical of the CIO efforts to get federal action were the action of union leaders in Akron, Sandusky, and Canton—all of which were designated as critical housing areas. Active in the campaigns were the following: Akron, Gene Carroll of the Auto Workers; Sandusky, Jack Miller and Pres. William Gillingham of Local 710 of the CIO Electrical Workers; Canton, Herschel Kriger, Steelworkers counsel, and Pres. Edgar V. Film of the Stark County CIO Council.

Leo Goodman, secretary and director of the CIO Housing Committee, which is headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, said hearings will be held before final action is taken in these areas. The CIO Housing Committee not only aided the CIO councils in efforts to get federal action, but also to have local communities act before the Sept. 30 deadline.

Figures issued by the Office of Rent Stabilization showed that 70% of the major cities and 1316 communities of 2400 incorporated communities in defense areas voted to continue rent curbs until Apr. 30 and the CIO joined in the drive for retaining controls in many of them.

The largest cities that voted extension included:

Boston, Springfield, Worcester, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; New Haven, Conn.; Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Scranton, Erie, Pa.; Newark, Jersey City, Camden, Trenton, Paterson, N. J.; Chicago; Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Minn.; St. Louis, Mo.; Dayton, Youngstown, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, O.; San Francisco, Calif.; South Bend, Ind.; Baltimore, Md.; Memphis, Tenn., and Louisville, Ky.



LAST DITCH fight to save rent controls in Akron, O., was taken to Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam, after the city council refused to extend ceilings. Meeting with Putnam (center) were Leo Goodman, CIO Housing Committee, Atty. N. C. Syracopoulos, Akron CIO Council Sec. Leo Dugan and Frank Dorson, local rent control board members. They asked defense housing area designation.

N. H. Council Acts On Jobs

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE CIO Council has urged three legislative proposals designed to safeguard jobs for New England textile workers.

Suggested by Mariano S. Bishop, Textile Workers vice president, the state council recommended enactment of a capital assets tax on mills which close or move away, setting of a two-shift 35-hour week in the industry when sales decline, and creation of a textile regulatory and research body.

Proceeds from the proposed capital assets tax—to be applied when a mill closed or moved—would be used to pay unemployment benefits to workers left stranded, and to attract new industry.

The council, meeting in Manchester, re-elected Pres. Michael Botelho. (LPA)

Hear Philip Murray

. . . in a major political broadcast

Tuesday, Oct. 21

Radio: 10:15 p.m. EST on all CBS network stations.
TV: 10:30 p.m. EST on basic CBS TV network (see Page 2).

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 13, 1952 82 No. 41

'Money Grabbers' Rule GOP, Plan New War On Labor, Murray Warns

—SEE PAGE 3

In This Issue . . .

GOP plans "guerrilla war" on social gains.....Page 2
"Murderer's Row" in Senate named.....Page 2
Gov. Stevenson starts swinging.....Page 3
The facts about high taxes.....Page 5
PAC picture-story from Ohio.....Pages 6, 7
PAC picture-story from Massachusetts.....Page 8
AMA debunked at Washington hearing.....Page 9
How CIO's growing in the South.....Page 10
CIO television log.....Page 11
IUE convention lambastes General Electric....Page 12

Getting Out The Vote

Organization is key to election victories, Cleveland CIO folks say, as they plan assignments for 1500 Election Day volunteers. Council Sec. Jim Quinn points out key block as PAC Dir. Al Dietrich (holding book) checks.

Stevenson Charges GOP With 'Guerrilla War On Social Gains'

GOV. STEVENSON, Democratic presidential candidate, continued last week to carefully and fully explain where he stood on major issues.

It was in startling contrast to the Republican nominee, who called names, read worn-out GOP slogans and ignored the issues.

Stevenson, in Minneapolis, noted "the Democratic record is a record, not of being against things, but of being for things. Our party does not believe in heckling America. It believes in building America."

Voters could find reasons for supporting the Democrats, he said, "in debt-free farms, strong cooperatives, homes you own, vacations you take, the size of your savings account, your security against unemployment and old age, in schools for your children and in the plans you can make for the future."

RESTATING his determination "not to run against Herbert Hoover," Stevenson noted "things like the eight-hour day, retirement benefits and farm parity programs are things that we have fought for and won in our own lifetimes."

But, he added, we should not forget the past, and he ticked off "breadlines, soup kitchens, bank runs, foreclosures, evictions, deathly quiet in the flour mills and on the Mesabi (iron ore) range, and food rotting in the fields of Minnesota while in Minneapolis there was hunger in many families."

Stevenson contrasted the Democratic record of performance with the Republican "do-nothing policy of government inaction." Turning to current history, he said the Democrats are insisting on tighter inflation control policies, while the Republicans are "against every move we make."

"They fight our programs," he said, "and they bore loopholes in price controls. They're against inflation—but they're against doing anything about inflation."

For 20 years, he said, they've used the same "slippery slogans . . . For 20 years we have waited for a creative idea." Then, he added, "If the Republican orators are right—if the policies of Roosevelt and Truman destroyed the nation—where would we have found the strength for the extraordinary achievements of the last two decades?"

Stevenson listed personal savings up from 3.7 billion in 1929 to 17 billion; buying power up over $1700 for a family of four; 10 million more home owners; 18 million more homes with washing machines; 35 million more radio sets; 15 million TV sets; electricity in 94 instead of 20 of every 100 homes; replacement of half the rural one-teacher schools with modern facilities; tremendously increased school attendance and doubled college enrollment.

He snorted that GOP charges of "false prosperity" were "as false as money in the bank, fertilizer in the soil, a new tractor and a new washing machine."

"They call for a crusade," he said, "but they prepare for guerilla war against the social gains we have made. They declare for a new morality, but they smear the innocent, prejudge the accused, twist the truth, and make cynicism the first rule of politics."

In Columbus, Ohio, where he called Sen. Taft "the uncrowned boss of the Republican party," Stevenson talked about the "family problems of a democracy." These he listed as "seeing to it that children are fed and educated, that there are hospital beds for those who are sick, that there is dignity for those who have done a life's work and that the scars of slums are removed from America."

"Understanding human needs," he added, "is half the job of meeting them." The Democrats, Stevenson contended, do understand. "We have learned how important it is to approach the writing of laws, themselves cold things, from clear, warm pictures in our minds: of a family sitting around a supper table; of a rent bill coming due when there has been sickness in the family; of a child going off to school dressed differently from the others."

Cataloguing the long, impressive list of Democratic-sponsored social gains, Stevenson took note of Eisenhower's remark that "the best place to find security is in prison." He coupled with this with the General's later comment that social security was not a campaign issue.

Shall we take the Republicans at their word—or at their deed, he asked. He predicted voters would not be "fooled by the Republican leaders who have arched their backs and been dragged, protesting, through these years of advance in human welfare—who even now are saying, on the one hand, that all these hard won social gains are now 'above politics' and, on the other, that they want to destroy, to go back, to tear them down."

LATER, in Detroit, Stevenson stated his position on Communism—"the disease that has killed more people than cancer, tuberculosis and heart disease—combined."

Seeking to dispell the confusion "created by political demagogues, who are hunting for votes much more than for Communists," Stevenson detailed the Democratic record of fighting Communists, while preserving basic civil liberties.

The Communists' greatest threat to America, he noted, came during the depression, created by the last Republican administration. Hungry, desperate men, he said, were ripe for the Communist propagandists, but the great deeds of the Roosevelt administration saved the nation.

Lashing at McCarthyism, Stevenson pointed out the "junior senator from Wisconsin" for "all his bragging and fear mongering," "has yet to produce evidence leading to the conviction of a single Communist agent."

"Catching real Communist agents," he said, "like killing poisonous snakes or tigers, is not a job for amateurs or children, especially noisy ones. It is a job for professionals," he continued, praising the FBI's record.

"We will protect ourselves from Communism—and protect those liberties which, above all, distinguish us from the police state," he concluded.

Tune In Oct. 21—

Murray Sets Major TV, Radio Address

CIO PRES. Philip Murray will make his first television and radio address of the 1952 campaign on Tuesday, Oct. 21.

His speech will be broadcast over the entire 202-station radio network of the Columbia Broadcasting System at 10:15 p.m. EST.

It will also be telecast over the basic CBS-TV network at 10:30 p.m. EST. Difficulties in clearing television time made it impossible to list TV stations carrying the broadcast at this time, the CIO Publicity Dept. said, adding it would notify CIO officials in all cities carrying the broadcast as to time and station.

Murray's speech will be keyed to the issues which mean bread and butter to the American people and peace or war for the whole world.

In his first nationally-broadcast political statement of the campaign, Murray will cut through the propaganda raised by the GOP and pin-point the social and economic decisions at stake in this election.

Listen to Philip Murray on CBS on Oct. 21.

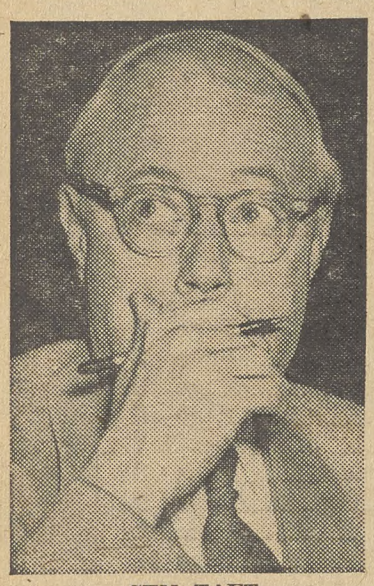
UAW Plans TV, Radio Broadcasts

Two special coast-to-coast radio broadcasts, dealing with 1952 campaign issues, have been arranged by the United Auto Workers, 8:30 p.m. (EST) on Oct. 23 and 30.

The UAW also announced three television broadcasts, on Sundays, Oct. 19 and 26 and Nov. 2. In two of these, UAW Pres. Walter Reutrer will answer off-the-ciff questions from newsmen.

The TV series is expected to be seen in 18 cities. For times and channels, viewers were urged to check their local papers.

'Murderer's Row' In The Senate . . . . . As Nominated By Gov. Stevenson



SEN. TAFT

SEN. CAPEHART

SEN. McCARTHY

SEN. MILLIKIN

SEN. CAIN

GOV. STEVENSON last week "educated" his Republican opponent to the "murderer's row" which would control Senate committees if the Republicans Eisenhower has endorsed win in November.

Declaring his opponent has "cheapened the time-honored custom of indorsements," Stevenson treated the life-long professional soldier with no civilian government experience, to the following description of Murderer's Row:

"Chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, which decides which bills are taken up, which are shelved: Robert A. Taft, political mentor of the general, who even voted against the North Atlantic Treaty, not to mention the rest of the catalogue.

"Chairman of the Labor Committee: Taft, champion of Taft-Hartley, with which everyone disagrees in some measure, including himself.

"Chairman of the Banking Committee which handles price controls and housing: Homer Capehart, champion of the Capehart amendment for built-in inflation; champion of the real estate lobby in opposing low-rent housing and rent controls.

"Chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, which conducts investigations of executive agencies: Joseph R. McCarthy, defamer of Gen. Marshall, champion of the inquisition, champion of trial by ordeal and slander.

"Chairman of Finance, which handles foreign trade matters: Eugene D. Millikin, champion of the protective tariff.

"Chairman of Public Works: Harry P. Cain, champion of the private power lobbies, the first senator from his state in 20 years to oppose low-cost public power projects."

Stevenson also listed Sen. Aiken, "chairman of agriculture, champion of the sliding scale 60 to 90% price supports" and Bourke Hickenlooper, "chairman of Atomic Energy, champion of the abortive charges of 'incredible mismanagement' against the AEC in 1949."

'Body Boots And Britches'—

Murray Charges 'Money Grabbers' Rule GOP

THE "REACTIONARIES have taken over the Republican Party—body, boots and britches," CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week told an enthusiastic audience at the convention of the CIO Electrical Workers in Pittsburgh.

In his first political speech of the campaign, the CIO leader pitched his discussion on what he called the "bread and butter" issues of the election. His advice: don't be fooled into voting for the Republicans.

Comparing the Republican platforms of 1932 and 1952 Murray said: "They haven't moved one solitary inch in 20 years. Their only interest is special interest."

GOP leaders, he warned, "cater to special interests and render service to special groups—the money grabbers."

"You can lose much, if you lose this election," Murray told the IUE delegates. "Nobody wants to go back to that filthy and slovenly situation of 1932."

"Those millions of dollars that are being poured into the Republican coffers are being poured in for a purpose—to give you more Taft-Hartleyism, to use the writ of injunction whenever they can, to weaken if not destroy your union."

Playing strongly on the theme that General Eisenhower is a captive of the Taft forces, Murray charged that "Dewey is in hiding, and Warren's out in California. The liberal Republican leaders aren't in this Cromwellian crusade."

That was a reference to a statement by Eisenhower several weeks ago, comparing his campaign with the crusade of Oliver Cromwell, 17th century British military and political figure.

Murray noted caustically that Cromwell, to whom the GOP candidate had compared himself, was a man who had "butchered thousands of men, and women, and children at Dublin and Wexford in Ireland. His soldiers placed women's heads on swords, they beheaded men, they bayonetted children."

In Ireland and Scotland, the Scotch-born Murray pointed out, Cromwell had conducted a "Bloody Hitlerian massacre."

"Yet what we need in America, according to Ike, is a Cromwellian crusade.

"I want to be generous with respect to Ike, in this regard. I attribute those statements to his spirit of ignorance. But people must say: 'My God, does this man know what he is talking about?'"

The bulk of Murray's hour-long speech was devoted to a comparison of conditions in Republican 1932 and Democratic 1952. Even Republican politicans, "in the deep recesses of their hearts," must agree that we've gone ahead in this country during 20 years of Democratic government, he said.

"Yet from the statements of Gen. Eisenhower, of that fellow who runs the drive-in in California (Nixon), or Cain or Jenner or Capehart, you'd think that people were worse off than in 1932."

The CIO president wanted to know whether the Republicans, in their propaganda for "change," would like to change the record number of cars on the nation's highways; the 14 million TV sets in the nation's living rooms; or the record number of family-owned homes.

The Republicans, he said, are looking backward to 1932, and the people—if they follow Republican leadership—will find themselves far poorer.

Election Roundup—

Stevenson 'Gets Tough,' Starts Swinging On GOP Tories

GOV. STEVENSON roared into the "get tough" portion of his campaign last week, swinging roundly at the GOP Tory opposition.

In a series of full-dress speeches and off-the-cuff airport and motorcade talks, Stevenson let his opponents have both barrels, while crowds roared approval.

One of the most enthusiastic crowds to greet the Democratic candidate was at River Rouge, Mich., site of the world's largest automotive plant, where he received a warm reception from members of the CIO Auto Workers and their families.

ONE OF Stevenson's biggest rounds of applause came in Madison, Wis., when he named the late President Roosevelt as "the man who was more responsible than any other for checking the spread of Communism in America."

Late in the week, campaigning in Pres. Truman's home state of Missouri, Stevenson said, "Harry Truman is certainly a man of Independence. I think that's the thing I like about him most.

"He won't take anything off anybody. No one knows this better than Joe Stalin. Pres. Truman has rallied the free peoples against the mortal threat of communism and Russian imperialism."

But Stevenson also used tough words against the Republicans. He called them the "do-nothing, care-nothing, know-nothing party."

GONE WAS the kid glove treatment of Gen. Eisenhower. Charging the General had become the submissive captive of the GOP Old Guard, Stevenson said:

"For a moment, back in August, the Republican leadership had a sheen of liberalism, of progressiveness, but the sheen has all rubbed off."

"The political hucksters of the Old Guard have a nice, new, fancy, khaki-colored package," he told Milwaukee crowds. "They have an honored name and a trick slogan."

But, he added, the voters "don't like this fast deal." The new package, he said, "is becoming unwrapped. What we see peeking out is alarmingly familiar . . . the same gloomy old product."

Campaigning in Wisconsin, Stevenson lashed out at Sen. McCarthy in bitter words, without mentioning the senator's name. Recalling that the General had gulped and then swallowed McCarthyism, Stevenson said:

"My opponent has been worrying about my funnybone. I'm worrying about his backbone."

He then catalogued Eisenhower's compromises with his principles: surrender to Taft, embracing of Jenner and allowing McCarthy to delete praise of Gen. Marshall from Eisenhower's Wisconsin speeches.

Meanwhile, that veteran of the campaign trail, Harry Truman, was "giving 'em hell" in a cross-country tour that drew huge, enthusiastic crowds.

TRUMAN recalled he had once pledged support to Eisenhower if the latter ran for President. He was wrong, Truman said, for he had misjudged the man.

"What I thought were his deep convictions, turn out not to be convictions at all." The general, he said, "has tried to win votes by playing upon the casualties and sacrifices in Korea."

Turning to the record, Truman dug into Eisenhower's current criticisms of foreign policy, pointing out many of the steps the General now opposes were taken on Ike's specific recommendations when he was chief of staff and NATO commander.

—Herblock in the Washington Post

"Our differences have nothing to do with the end result that we are seeking."

Truman also pounded away at the achievements of the Democratic party: prosperity for workers and farmers, social welfare measures, housing, power projects, and many more. He detailed GOP opposition to all these gains, and taunted the General, who has yet to outline a specific program on any domestic issue.

His taunts got under Eisenhower's skin. By mid-week, the General, who had once said he would not let "personalities" enter his campaign, was talking as though Truman were the candidate.

He was calling Truman a "demagogue," lashing out at "whole-hog federal government" and charging the President with firing "harmless blanks."

BUT "harmless blanks" evidently worried the GOP top brass. They quickly dug up a pocketful of cash to charter an airliner and sent four hidebound Republican senators, Ferguson (Mich.), Case (S.D.), Hickenlooper (Ia.), Millikin (Col.) to follow the Truman train.

These so-called "truthsayers" were reportedly going to answer "false Truman charges." In a matter of hours, they were ignoring Truman charges and merely repeating Republican campaign propaganda.

The "truth squad" did answer Truman's charge that a GOP administration would halt public power and reclamation development. They said this was "fantastically false." In rebuttal, the Democrats dug into the 20 key votes on public power, found Ferguson and Hickenlooper "wrong" 16 times, Case four times in two years in the Senate and Millikin "wrong" on every issue.

Biggest news of the week from the Republican camp was Eisenhower's endorsement of McCarthy. In two major speeches in McCarthy's home state, the General embraced McCarthy's goals, but deprecated his methods; denounced McCarthy critics, but deplored "vigilantism" against freedom of thought.

MORE IMPORTANT than what Eisenhower said, however, was what he failed to say. Both the New York Times and Post reported that first drafts of the General's Wisconsin speeches contained a stirring defense of Gen. George C. Marshall. Marshall is the man Eisenhower supposedly reveres as a "second father." He is also the man whom McCarthy has lashed unmercifully in speeches carefully made on the Senate floor where McCarthy can not be sued for libel.

But, said the Times and Post, Eisenhower deleted his defense of Marshall, after clearing the speech with McCarthy.

Also making campaign headlines, were statements by Sen. Duff (Pa.) and Eisenhower's running mate, Richard Nixon.

Both offered the unusual political thought that Gen. Eisenhower must not be answered by those he had attacked. They said the General was a "great and patriotic American"—which the Democrats had repeatedly pointed out. And, said Nixon and Duff, no one should criticize him.

Nixon, still under attack for accepting $18,235 from wealthy Californians eager to subsidize a senator, refused to make public his income tax statements as had the Democratic presidential and vice-presidential candidates. Eisenhower had promised to do the same, but as yet hadn't produced his reports.

Former Postmaster General James Farley was among those clamoring for Nixon to produce facts, in place of the "soap opera" TV and radio show of several weeks ago. "I don't think he can get away with it," Farley said. "A great many people are aware that he hasn't told the whole story. The American people will want the complete story and they're entitled to know it."

Nixon's campaign manager, meanwhile, admitted the GOP Vice Presidential nominee had used his senatorial franking privilege for free mail for a June "stab-in-the-back" campaign against California's Gov. Warren.

This admission chopped a hole in Nixon's TV claim "that the taxpayers, by subterfuge or otherwise, have never paid one dime for expenses which I thought were political and shouldn't be charged to the taxpayers."

Late in the week, the U. S. Negro newspaper with the largest circulation, came out for Gov. Stevenson in a strong front-page editorial. The Afro-American, after documenting its high regard for the Democratic party and its record, and its low regard for the GOP and Eisenhower, said of Stevenson: "To us he looks like a President, thinks like a President, talks like a President, and acts like a President."

The People Can Face The Facts

An enthusiastic crowd of 5000 greeted Gov. Stevenson last week as he arrived in Detroit and roared approval of his answer to GOP complaints that he was conducting his campaign at too high a level.

He won a tumultuous cry of "No, no, no" when he said he had been criticized for talking "over the heads" of the people.

"Well," he said, "I would rather be charged with talking over your heads than behind your backs."

Ike Pushed To The Rear

Republican campaign bosses last week indicated agreement with the Chicago Tribune claim that Nixon—not Eisenhower—should head the GOP ticket.

They cancelled two of Eisenhower's three remaining major TV broadcasts, then bought time for a network TV broadcast by Nixon.

Remember?

Back in 1929, the year of so-called Republican prosperity, the average per capita income was $1016. By 1932, with Republicans still in control, it had dropped to $760. By 1951, it had climbed to $1443 a year average income for every American man, woman and child, AFTER taxes.

The Ike That Is

Now that the election decision is fast approaching, the Republicans—who are pretty good at dishing it out when it comes to political in-fighting—are demonstrating that they can't take it.

With each passing week, the Gen. Ike That Was has willingly turned himself into the Candidate Ike That Is—a pale shadow of the man who once deservedly had the respect, confidence and admiration of millions.

As a political campaigner, Gen. Eisenhower from the beginning has demonstrated complete ignorance and unconcern for the aspirations of the American people at home.

On most issues, he couldn't be bothered to take a stand. And when he did, as in the few times he spoke vaguely about "equality of opportunity," it was soon belied by his political embrace of Gov. Byrnes—the relic of the South that was—at the capitol of South Carolina.

It is in the field of international affairs—where he was directly involved, as Chief of Staff before Korea and later NATO commander in Western Europe, in organizing the strength of the free world—that Gen. Eisenhower has abandoned all pretenses.

Increasingly there is little difference between the General's pronuncimentos and the "Truman's war" line of Sen. Taft, the Chicago Tribune and the Daily Worker. Already Eisenhower proposes to pull U. S. troops out of the Korea fighting front, to "let Asiatics fight Asiatics"—which amounts to abandoning the people of Korea to Communist militarism.

Last week the General got his well-deserved comeuppance in a cross-fire of criticism from Gov. Stevenson and Pres. Truman. The Democratic candidate exposed Eisenhower as a "khaki-colored" figurehead, fronting for the Taft Gang that's trying to put over a "Fast Deal" on all of us. And H. S. T. etched in acid the General's abasement before the Jenners, McCarthys, Tafts and Nixons.

All of which just isn't cricket according to a couple of Republicans who never followed the Marquis of Queensbury rules—Sen. Duff of the NAM satrapy of Pennsylvania and Sen. Nixon, the "trust"-worthy representative of various California millionaries. To the heavens they shouted and hollered—that the great General was above all criticism.

All of which demonstrates that Republicans can dish it out but can't take the facts on their record.

Questions For You

The facts and the record—of progress in 20 years and plenty of work still to do, versus a Republican opposition that is blind to the world of today—are the real issue in this election.

Just ask yourself a few questions.

Are you better off now than in the GOP palmy days?

How do you stack up your chances for yourself and your kids under the humane, courageous, democratic government which Gov. Stevenson will continue?

Or what would happen to you, your job, your family and your home if Ike were in the White House, the GOP "murderer's row" ruled Congress and the "money grabbers" and "special interests" were running our country and the world into a ditch?

We figure the answer is Stevenson and Sparkman and a Congress that will back them up.

Two-Trouser Suit

In Other Words—

CIO Brings Hope To Negroes

Here are excerpts from an article by Lucy Randolph Mason, of the CIO Organizing Committee, from a recent special issue of The Nation magazine on Southern Negro, 1952. Miss Mason late this month will publish "To Win These Rights: A Personal Story of the CIO in the South."

By LUCY RANDOLPH MASON

EVER SINCE I was a young woman beginning to think about the South with its injustices and inequalities, I have thought that it is not the Negro who has held the region back but rather the shadow of the Negro, which lies dark and distorted in the white man's mind. That shadow has produced strange illusions which in their turn have caused a breakdown in democracy and a tortured history for the South.

It was because of the CIO's concern for minorities, as well as for economically depressed people, that I was drawn to it. This movement contributes more to Southern progress than any other. During the 15 years of CIO in the South, convention resolutions on equality and opportunity for all have become solid achievements.

The intangible—one might say spiritual—progress is equally real and even more important to man's dignity and self-respect. Human relationships are vastly improved. White men seeing their leaders greet a Negro as "Mr. Jones," with extended right hand, follow the example and a new pattern is made.

The mere fact that groups of union folk, white and colored, are sitting down together all over the nation to discuss things of equal importance to all creates a new kind of fellowship. Eating together at a hotel lunch or at a union barbecue is a spiritual experience for these union folk. There is balm for old sores in such simple, natural acts.

In the democracy of mixed meetings, Negroes vote for good white men and white men vote for competent Negroes. It is a heartening thing that both can share responsibilities as they seek to represent all and work for all. In these democratic processes the union is the corrective of 150 years of mistaken history.

A Mississippian said to me many years ago, "the CIO will never organize the South; whites just won't work in the same unions with Negroes." He was a false prophet. It is an amazing and important fact that tens of thousands of Southern white men and women are now enrolled in mixed unions.

In the beginning all union organizers were white. Now there are many Negro representatives both on the CIO staff and with national unions. The CIO conference held in Atlanta in 1949 was participated in by about 20 Negroes. A dinner-meeting for all delegates had been arranged, but the hotel canceled the reservation at the last moment. The affair was called off; the time had passed when white men banqueted while the Negro delegates fared as best they could.

The inner machinery of the union provides means for securing just treatment for Negro members. Our unions have stood four-square for equal pay for equal work. Negroes are included in all social security benefits and in pension plans provided through union contracts. Of first significance to Negroes is the acknowledgment of themselves as persons entitled to democratic respect. Their white brothers in the industrial unions usually succeed in convincing Negro members that they will have not only a better living but also more decent treatment through a CIO union.

At a union council meeting I sat next to the secretary of a new local composed of Negro women—no white person was employed in the small plant. I asked the secretary what was the most important thing she had gained through the union. "Respect," she replied in a flash. "The boss can't come out in the plant any more and yell at us, or fire us if we answer him. The union takes care of all that now."

The CIO has brought more hope for progress to Negroes than any other social institution in the South—and that, sadly, includes the church. It is a tragic fact that so far as I know all important efforts to organize unions in the South have met the opposition of churches—not all churches, but enough to be significant.

The Southern states walled off from the benefits of American life a third of their people. In recent years the wall has begun to crumble. While many forces have worked toward this end, the union movement has been at the forefront, drawing the energies of once prejudiced people into a joint endeavor that overcomes every barrier.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Vol. XV October 13, 1952 No. 41

Issues In The Election—

Sure Taxes Are High--And So Are Ike's Promises

NOBODY likes to pay taxes. Today taxes are high.

These two hard facts inevitably make taxes a major issue in every political campaign. This year is no exception.

The nation's tax policies are a serious matter, worthy of sober, careful reflection and discussion. They are not a subject which should be lightly tossed around in demagogic speeches, if you have the nation's best interests at heart.

Both presidential candidates have already spoken up on the subject.

Gov. Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic candidate, was blunt, honest and non-political.

Russia, he said, is the key to an American tax cut.

"With 85% of our budget allocated to defense, it is the Soviet Union which now fixes the level of our defense expenditures and thus our tax rate."

His Republican opponent, Gen. Eisenhower, used no such non-political approach to taxes.

The nation's tax policy, Eisenhower has said, should be aimed at a tax reduction of $40 billion a year.

Since the current federal budget is $85 billion, with 85% of it earmarked for defense, this observation brought shouts of astonishment even from such rock-ribbed conservatives as Sen. Taft.

Taft, no mean hand himself with a bit of demagogory, had called for a tax cut of 15 to 20%. Thus his astonishment at being out-promised by the great military figure who had urged Congress to spend freely for defense was understandable.

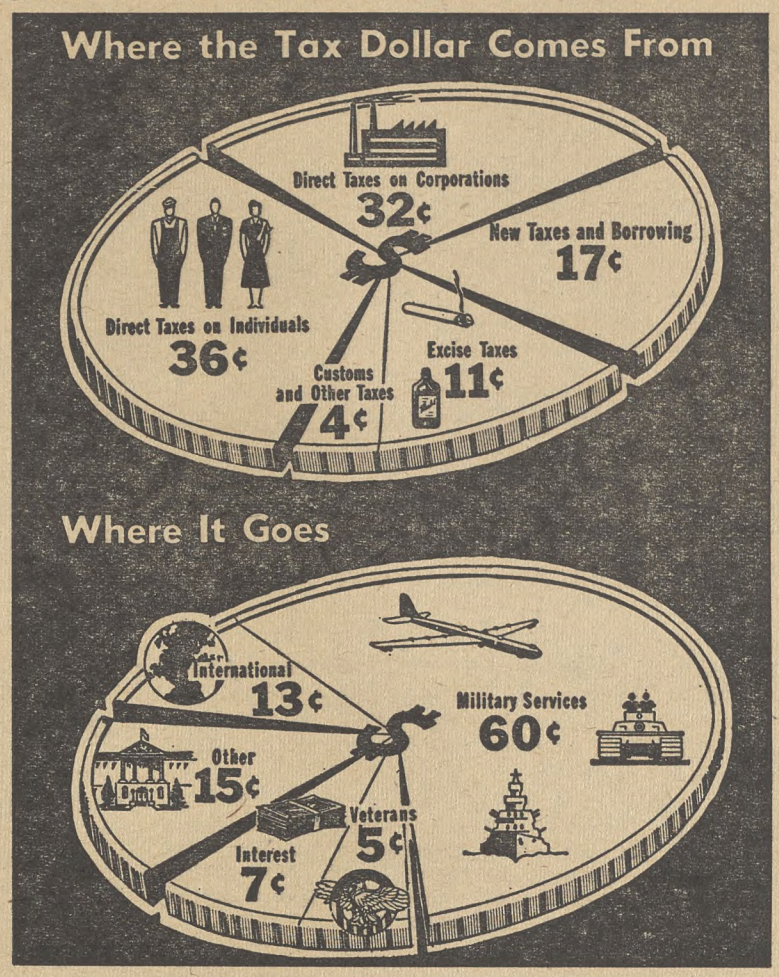
Eisenhower's glib promise to cut taxes by approximately 45% might have sounded good to some Americans. The facts, however, prove it was a purely political statement, based on the shifting sands of wishful thinking.

Certain basic facts about taxes, ignored by conservative politicians as they promise tax cuts, are:

- The principal reason for high taxes is the defense program. About 85% of taxes raised in the current fiscal year is allocated to military purposes, helping democratic allies, paying veterans' benefits and meeting the interest on World War II debt.
- Although Americans are paying more taxes than ever before, they have more money left AFTER taxes than ever before.
- The Republican-Dixiecrat coalition in Congress, to which Eisenhower is appealing for support, deliberately created loopholes in the tax laws so favored groups could escape their fair share of the tax burden.
- This same coalition — if it ever gets total control of the government as would be the case with an Eisenhower victory—intend to hit the people with the worst kind of tax law—a sales tax that benefits the wealthy at the expense of the poor.

Understanding America's current tax problem merely means checking a bit of recent history. It was World War II which sent America's tax rate soaring.

Personal income and corporation taxes went to unprecedented levels. Other taxes were levied on a large number of goods and services which people meet every day—electric light bulbs, telephone and telegraph messages, cosmetics, transportation tickets and entertainment to name only a few.



When the war ended, these taxes yielded more than the government needed to meet current expenses. Immediately, it started to pay off the great national debt and a small tax reduction occurred in 1945.

When the "awful 80th Congress" came into session in 1946, President Truman recommended no tax cuts, urging surplus income be used to pay off the national debt and keep inflationary forces under control.

But that Republican-controlled Congress paid no heed to his urging. It extended indefinitely excise taxes on goods and services—which hit the workers and farmers much harder than it did the rich.

Then it chopped down income taxes, with particular generosity to families in the higher-income brackets. Two million families with incomes of $5000 a year or more got 37% of the total tax reduction.

Nearly 50 million people, with incomes of less than $5000, received a miserable reduction of $1.05 per week.

Thus the government was forced into the red, no payments were made on the national debt, the rich got richer and the poor got a few crumbs.

The party responsible for this mismanagement of the nation's tax policies is now headed by a candidate who glibly calls for cutting taxes by $40 billion a year.

With the outbreak of hostilities in Korea and with the Communist aggressive forces poised for new attacks, the nation's operating costs went up sharply in 1950.

Tanks and jet fighters, guns and atomic energy plants cost money. The only way the government has to collect money to pay its bills is through taxes. So taxes were forced higher.

But America, as a whole, was better able to pay taxes than ever before in its history. The business statistics of 1951 compared to the so-called prosperity year of 1929, prove this.

Personal income after all direct taxes was almost tripled.

Corporate profits, after all taxes, were more than doubled and undistributed corporation profits had more than tripled.

As the 1952 campaign unfolded, the Old Guard Republicans were screaming that President Truman had collected more taxes than all other Presidents in history.

But the newspapers eagerly supporting the GOP ticket were careful to hide the other side of that picture.

In the last 20 years—the years of the Great Depression, recovery, World War II and remobilization—the people had more money left AFTER federal taxes than in all previous administrations, Republican and Democratic.

In these last 20 years, the people have retained an estimated $2,228 billion AFTER federal taxes. In all America's previous history, the people had a total of only $1,884 billion after taxes.

America was paying higher taxes—but its people had jobs and earnings that enabled them to pay taxes.

Dixiegops Hope To Swat Workers With Sales Tax

ALL THE powerful special interest groups, now campaigning for the election of the Republican ticket, advocate "an entirely new form of taxation."

What they want is a federal sales tax.

The National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and that self-proclaimed "liberal" businessman's group, the Committee for Economic Development, all want a sales tax. So does Dixiecrat Sen. George, of Georgia, whose voting record matches that of "Mr. Republican Himself"—Bob Taft.

They well know a sales tax would be unjust because it would force the poor to pay the SAME RATE as the wealthy.

They also know it would fall most heavily on workers and farmers, who must spend most of their income on the basic necessities, while only a tiny portion of the income of those at the top of the economic ladder goes for necessities.

When the high-income family pays a 5% sales tax, its standard of luxury is cut.

When a low-income family pays out 5% of its money in taxes on the bare necessities of life, its standard of living is cut.

It means fewer shoes for the youngsters, poorer cuts of meat, less milk on the table, poorer housing.

A sales tax socks the poor. It is a tax on the needy to protect the well to do.

Gen. Eisenhower owes it to America to explain if he proposes to cut income taxes $40 billion a year by imposing a sales tax on the workers of the nation.

Arms Take 85c Of Your Tax Dollar

REACTIONARY politicians, campaigning for lower income taxes, often shout that the "welfare state" is responsible for high government spending.

The facts prove this to be an outright lie.

Here's how your tax dollar is spent:

Military services (arming for defense against Russia): 60c.

Foreign aid (to build our allies against the Soviet menace): 13c.

Interest on the national debt (a result of World War 2): 7c.

Veterans benefits (a result of all wars): 5c.

All other government expenses: 15c.

Tax Loopholes Miles Wide Give Top Brackets Breaks

THERE ARE weaknesses and injustices in America's tax laws. If they were eliminated, taxes COULD be reduced fairly and equitably, with low-income families receiving most of the benefits.

Here are some of the loopholes carefully left wide open for the wealthy to crawl through:

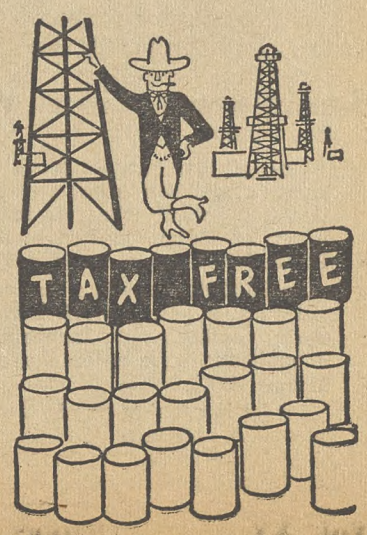
1. Income-splitting privileges, which are of great benefit to those earning $10,000 a year or more but which are worthless to the great group earning between $3000 and $4000.

2. Capital gains tax, which means profits made through the sale of assets held for more than six months are taxed at a maximum of only 26%. Wealthy people, who would have to pay higher taxes on "income," manipulate their operations so much of their earnings come from purchase and sale of assets. Ordinary workers and farmers benefit little, if at all, from this gimmick. (Interestingly, Gen. Eisenhower made use of this device to avoid paying high taxes on the income from his best-selling book about World War 2.)

3. Fictitious family partnerships, under which infants become "partners" in a business and incomes are cut sharply for tax purposes. This device is strictly a special privilege for businessmen.

4. Estate and gift tax loopholes, allowing lower taxes on gifts than on inheritance and trustee agreements by which payment of inheritance taxes can be postponed.

5. Excessive "depletion allowances" for gas, oil and mining companies, who have thrown their treasuries behind the GOP campaign.



'We Can Win If We Work Hard Enoug

Workers High In Registration

By AL ZACK

"WE CAN WIN—if we work hard enough."

That's what CIO folks in Ohio are saying about the 1952 presidential election.

They've bounced back from 1950 and the Taft victory. Today you find no faint hearts—no crying towels.

At the same time, no one is conceding Ohio to the Republicans.

The crucial Buckeye State has been in the toss-up category for years. It went for Truman in 1948 by a slim margin, much to the chagrin of newspaper prophets who predicted a Dewey landslide.

Today, there's much in Ohio reminiscent of 1948. Most of the big dailies are top-heavy Republican.

If the Republican candidate sneezes, it's a Page One yarn. When Adlai Stevenson makes a major address, you are lucky to find it mentioned.

Ohioans have flocked to the registration booths to set records unequalled in the state's history.

It is a registration which surprises old-line politicians of both parties, who repeatedly ask each other, "Whose registration is it?"

No one will know that answer until Nov. 4, but there are some clear road signs.

The new registration is overwhelmingly workers and their families, with a high percentage from minority groups. In the silk-stocking areas, registration was at the saturation point before the 1952 drive began. There was almost no increase there—it was all in the workers wards.

And a large workers' vote in Ohio, has always meant victory for liberal candidates.

It's toward achieving that record vote that CIO has set its sights for 1952.

Jake Clayman, Ohio CIO-PAC secretary-treasurer, says the PAC campaign could be labeled the "three get 'ems."

First, is get 'em registered. Then, get 'em the facts. Third is get 'em to the polls.

That first job has been well done. The second, "Operation End Confusion," is underway now. And plans for the third step are in the works.

"The Republican propaganda mill is working overtime," Clayman noted. "We've got a job to get the straight facts to the people—in their homes, so the women will know who is responsible for the high cost of living, for example.

"Many voters are understandably confused today. It is up to us to end the confusion by meeting propaganda with facts, lies with truths. That's what we are going to do."

Around the state, CIO did a good job on registration. Here's a survey:

A WOMAN'S PLACE is ringing doorbells, Ohio CIO gals tell PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. To date, they've contributed to record registration.

GET 'EM THE FACTS, Ohio CIO workers, as "Operation End Confu

CLEVELAND: The previous all-time high registration was 700,000 in 1950, but Ohio's peculiar registration laws stripped that figure down to 609,000 as of the April primary.

On Aug. 15, a survey showed 95% of the potential vote in Shaker Heights, home of the city's high-income families, was registered. In contrast, only 57% of the potential vote in Ward 7, a typical workers' ward, was registered.

PAC in that area marshalled its forces for "R-Day," when registration booths were opened in 1713 spots in the city's 2045 precincts. More than 600 CIO folks, many of them members' wives, spent that day ringing doorbells in assigned areas, urging people to register, telling them the nearest spot and the correct hours.

The drive was a success, Al Dietrich, PAC director, says. On that one day, 135,335 new voters registered and 18,027 transferred their registration, thus preserving their voter status. When the books closed 788,547 voters were registered, an all-time high representing 88% of the city's potential vote.

Dietrich and Jim Quinn, secretary of the Cleveland CIO Council, talked often with those waiting in line to register.

"They want to vote to protect what they have," Quinn says. "They told us they liked prosperity, wanted to keep it. Lots of them remembered the depression the Republicans led us into."

CINCINNATI: In the home town of Sen. Taft, usually dominated by his political machine, Steve Chevalier, CIO secretary, reports another record registration. Political experts say the potential vote is 430,000. When the deadline arrived, 409,000 or 95% were registered.

Most were workers, their wives and families. Clayman recalls a day he walked into the Cincinnati Board of Elections to watch a crowd registering. Fifty persons were lined up. Eighteen were Negro. By actual count, 46 of the 50 were typical workers or their wives.

That pattern was repeated daily, Chevalier reports, and he recalled chats with a number of veterans, registering for the first time.

"I had my belly full of the army the last time," scores of them said. "If we get a general in the White House I'll be back in uniform again."

COLUMBUS: New records were also hung up here, with 278,471 registered by the deadline, a jump of 30,000 over the 1950 record.

Much of it, Harry Mayfield, CIO Council president, reports, was composed of new workers who had come to Columbus to work in the city's booming defense plants.

"Lots of them flocked down while the city council was kicking rent control around," Mayfield said. "They were afraid rent control would be dropped—and it most was. They didn't want that prote tion taken away."

George DeNucci, CIO regional direct in Columbus, has been taking a secret p of CIO members at local union meetin The ballots were distributed, marked a put in sealed boxes before the meeting.

Stevenson leads by 4 to 1, he repor

AKRON: The nation's rubber capi also jumped its registration from 185,0 to 225,000, with most of the new regist tion recorded at booths set up at pla gates.

CIO sound trucks, urging voters to re ister, saw hard usage during that peri CIO Council Secy. Leo Dugan sa "They'll get even more use from now o he predicted.

Akron got a quick and distasteful vi of what GOP victory would mean wh the Republican-dominated city counc tried to kill rent controls. Overnig profit-hungry landlords began filing re increase notices, ranging from 50 to 120 Only a CIO-sparkplugged campaign have the housing-starved city declared critical area stopped the landlords.

Heightening interest in Akron is a ha fought race between ex-Cong. Walter H ber, whose score was 100% right on CI Voting Record. He is opposing the incu bent, William Ayres, a free-spending, Ta type Republican who won in 1950 wh Lorain County voting machines w rigged against Huber.

TOLEDO is another city where rent c trol and a tough congressional race boosting interest in the Stevenson pre dential campaign.

Rent control, veterans housing and p lic housing all went down the drain one day when a GOP-dominated city co cil bowed low before the real estate lob

Tom Burke, fighting ex-congressman former Toledo CIO Council executive S retary, is leading the fight for the tena Burke's own tough race for Congr against a Republican and an Independe was helped considerably by the A Workers all-out registration drive, wh set new records.

From now on, the Toledo drive will two-fold: to get the facts across and get votes out on election day. Every of the city's 450 precincts will be c vassed by Auto Workers, and the vo will hear the facts on radio, TV and rallies.

IN THE STEEL towns of Canton, M sillon and Alliance, Jim Mason, PAC rector, reports a heavy registration an grim determination to win. Recently CIO local union officers gathered f pep rally in Canton, opened by Steel I. W. Abel, with the observation that, should well remember from whence came."

He then played recordings of Fran Roosevelt's famous speeches and the e trified audience applauded wildly.

In that area, a determined band of women are digging in for the big p

'They Ain't Going To Do That To Me'

Ex-GIs and their wives registered by the scores in the Cleveland area.

At election board offices, they say frankly they are concerned about keeping their jobs and the small new homes they've managed to start buying.

"We've got every cent we have in the world tied up in our house we're buying," one ex-serviceman said. "We can't take a chance on losing it."

Another veteran, once a machine gunner, recalled:

"They foreclosed on my dad's house when I was a kid. They ain't going to do that to me."

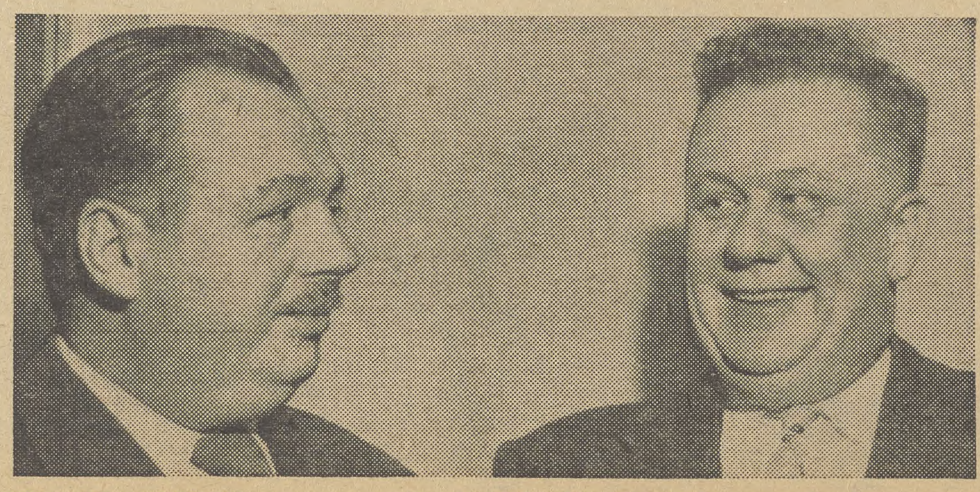
CIOer Tom Burke Fights In Toledo To Return To House

CIO's OWN Tom Burke, former congressman from Ohio's 9th Dist. and former Toledo CIO Council Executive secretary, is waging a strong battle to regain the seat he lost in 1950.

One of the hardest working and best known freshman representatives in the 81st Congress, Burke was the victim of a smear campaign, pushed by the powerful Toledo Blade two years ago.

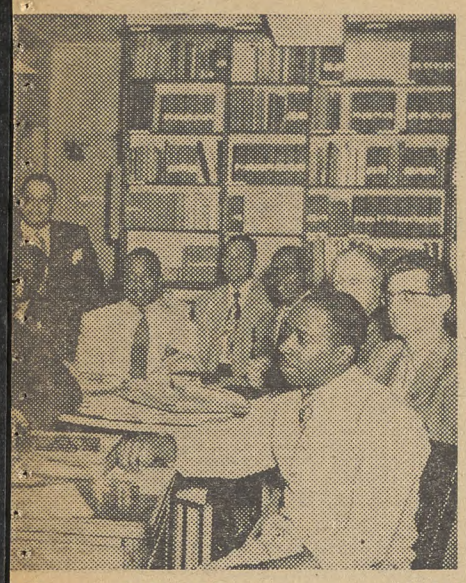
As in 1950, there is a three-man race in Toledo this year. The incumbent is once again running as an Independent and the Republicans have entered a strong candidate.

Burke is running on his record as a congressman and with the National Production Authority during 1951. He's stacking his record against those of his opponents and this year fears no smear campaign.



UP-HILL FIGHTS are no novelty to Mike DiSalle (left), ex-price boss, running for U. S. Senate, or House Candidate Tom Burke of the CIO.

'—We Are In Ohio



-Treas. Jake Clayman urges PAC opens in Bob Taft's state.

Taft Again Crosses A Picket Line

While Gov. Stevenson was speaking in he Columbus Memorial Hall, the Ohio OP women's committee was holding a ajor rally in the city's Neil House hotel.

Principal speaker was Sen. Taft, unrowned boss of the GOP campaign. Other op Republicans joined him on the platorm.

To get to the meeting, all the Republians marched across an AFL picket line, nto the strike-bound hotel. The picket igns proclaimed the nearly year-long trike was for wages better than 40c an our.

They aren't forgetting 1950 nor are they ust sitting around wringing their hands," ason observed. "They are ringing doorells, getting people acquainted with the ssues, and they'll help get them to the olls on Nov. 4."

YOUNGSTOWN: In one of the nation's major steel cities. CIO is hailing a "phenomenal registration," where the score went from 132,000 to 150,000.

Workers there, remembering the long and bloody "Little Steel" strike and the closed mills of the depression days, snort when they hear political speeches about 'time for a change."

"A change to what?" they want to know and they are seeking facts, figures and solid specifics and not generalities.

Jim Griffin, Steel district director, pointed to a newspaper story claiming Stevenson is "talking over the heads" of the people and that voters don't like or get his jokes.

"That reporter ought to talk to the workers," Griffin said. "They don't like being 'talked down to.' They don't like generalities. They like a fighting candidate and a good fighter enjoys a good laugh too."

"Stevenson," Griffin went on, "is impressing our members with his ability, knowledge and stature. His opponent is losing prestige."

DAYTON: The airplane city, always a strong liberal center in presidential elections, is also witnessing determined CIO action. Following a successful registration campaign, the city's IUE members, largest CIO group in town, are pushing a PAC Buck drive.

"We can never match the other side in money," Art Alexander, council secretary says. "But we can contribute enough to do the job to give our volunteers the weapons of truth they need."

"We can win—if we work hard enough." That's what they are saying in Ohio.

And they are working hard.

Bricker Faces A Real Fight

NEXT IN importance to the Stevenson race for President, Ohio residents spot the U. S. Senatorial contest.

That race pits incumbent John W. Bricker, called by Washington newsmen "the worst senator," against Michael DiSalle, former mayor of Toledo and former price administrator.

Bricker, who looks like a senator but acts like a real estate lobbyist, is a tough customer. He's the GOP No. 1 vote-getter.

But he's up against a real campaigner in DiSalle.

Mike made a name for himself as price administrator. The roly-poly Toledoan won wide newspaper support for his hard-fought battle to keep prices under control, despite loopholes chopped into the law by Bricker and his axemen.

DiSalle is making sure Ohio housewives know just how the big money boys protected their war profits through legislative devices drawn up by political messenger boys like Bricker.

Hitting hard at Bricker's record as a lobbyist disguised as a Senator, DiSalle is asking:

"If he is a genuine friend of free enterprise, why did he vote in opposition to increased funds for the enforcement of anti-trust laws, against efforts to stop giant corporations from by-passing anti-monopoly laws and for the Reed-Bulwinkle bill eliminating the railroads from anti-trust laws?"

Bricker hasn't answered.

But the answer to Bricker's concern for the railroads at the expense of the people may lie in Columnist Tom Stokes' revelation.

Bricker's law firm, Bricker, Marburger, Evatt and Barton, "received fees of over $100,000 from the Pensylvania Railroad in the three years, 1948, 1949, 1950," Stokes reports.

The firm received $25,000, $40,000 and $38,854 in those three years, according to the railroad's official reports.

DiSalle has been making wide use of the new radio and TV "talkathon." He's had several to date, plans more, and is pleased with the results.

Mike goes on the air for hours, answering every question asked him, fully and completely. Some have been unfriendly, designed to cause political embarrassment. GOP stooges asked about his religion (Catholic) and nationality background (Italian), hoping to raise the religious issue used successfully by Taft forces in 1950.

Bricker horned in on the first talkathon, tried to hog the mike and bellow Mike down. After checking with GOP publicists, Bricker ducked Mike's offer to try it again.

The DiSalle wit and wisdom was too much for "the worst U. S. Senator."

In Akron It's Different Now

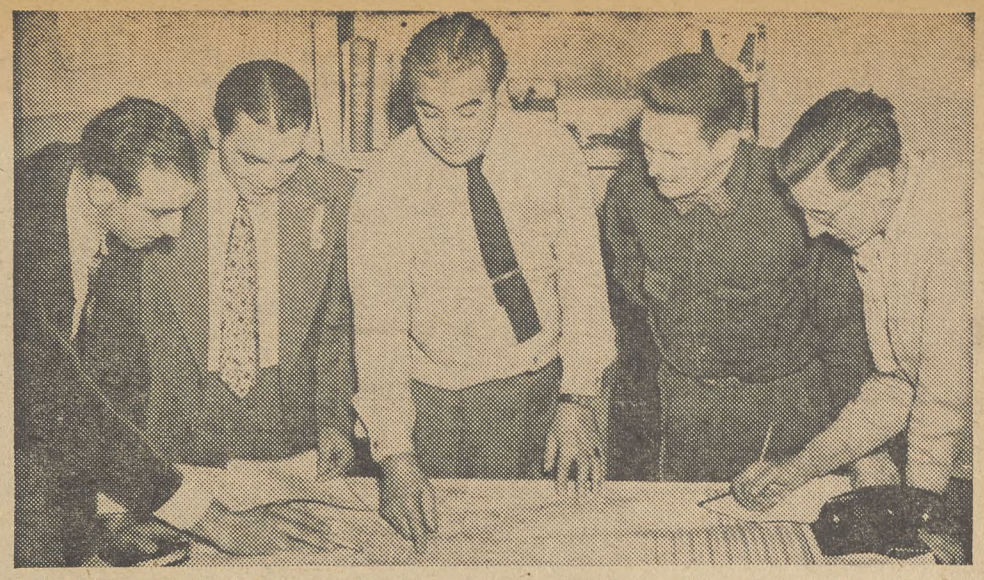
THINGS ARE different this campaign in Akron, the nation's rubber industry center and stronghold of the CIO Rubber Workers.

Here's the report of a woman shop steward of the URW-CIO:

"There's a big group in my shop I've been begging to register for the last six years. They just wouldn't listen. They weren't interested in politics.

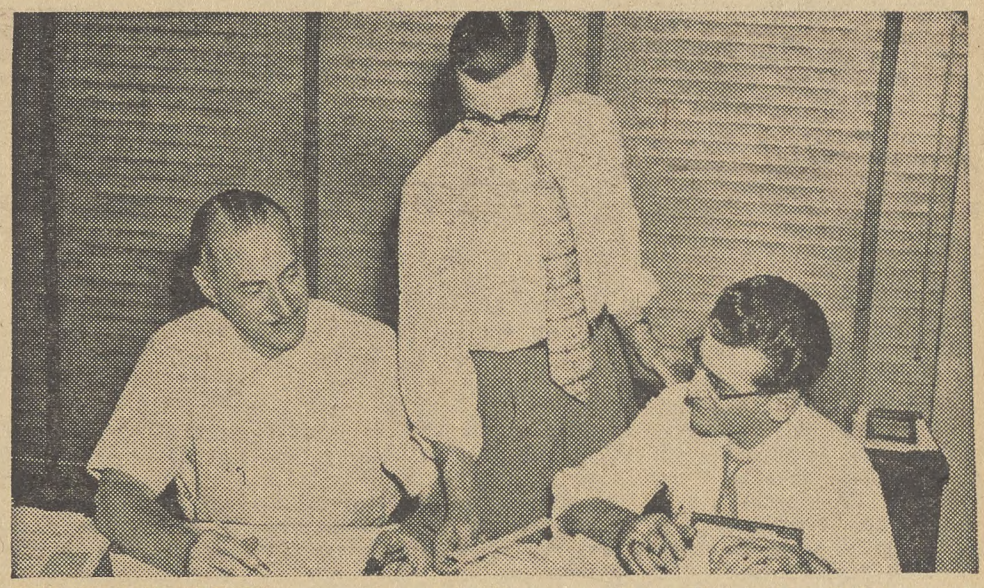
"This year they came to me and told me they had registered. 'Why?' I asked.

" 'We are afraid not to vote this time,' they told me. 'Afraid we'll lose what we have.' "



AKRON CIO OPENS precinct worker campaign. Sec.-Treas. Leo Dugan (center) assigns areas to crews who will "get out the vote" Nov. 4.

DAYTON MOVES QUICKLY from registrations to PAC buck drive. Exec. Sec. Art Alexander (center, seated) points out need for campaign funds.



COLUMBUS CIO likes record registration, says Pres. Harry Mayfield (standing) but sees big job now in getting information to voters.

Ohio's One-Party Press Gives GOP The Puffs, Slights Adlai

Here's how the one-party press operates in Ohio:

Example One—The Cleveland News of Sept. 22 carried the following "news" headline across the top of Page 1: "Let's Pack Public Hall Tomorrow to Welcome Ike." That's news?

Example Two: Bob Warman, editor of the Columbus CIO News, took a measuring stick to 24 issues (Aug. 12 to Sept. 4) of the Columbus Dispatch and Columbus Citizen, measuring every inch of news type pertaining to Stevenson and Eisenhower.

Result: Dispatch, Eisenhower 441½ inches, Stevenson 260½ inches; Citizen, Eisenhower 485 inches; Stevenson 365 inches. Not depicted were slanted headlines, buried Stevenson stories, weighted cartoons, editorials and special columns, or letters to the editor.

Don't be fooled by newspaper reports of big Eisenhower crowds.

In Columbus, where reports said 35,000 heard the general speak from the State House steps, an old-time Republican and life-long Columbus resident, protests: "I've been at every major meeting in Columbus for 60 years and I'll eat every person over 3500." Engineers say the space couldn't possibly hold half of the reported 35,000.

Throughout Ohio, newsmen covering Eisenhower speeches report: Big crowds and loud applause when he arrives; dwindling crowds and light applause while he talks; only scattered applause when he finishes.

P.S.—Many areas closed schools so youngsters could see the war hero. The school children swelled the crowds, cheered loudly, but can't vote.

PAC Is Organized, Working In Bay State

By MILTON PLUMB

POLITICS in Massachusetts has been called "as curious and intricate" as the lines of the gerrymander—named for a Bay State governor of more than a century ago.

Although the Republican "draft Eisenhower" movement was born there under the leadership of Sen. Lodge (R.), there are no signs that the General is going to score a political upset. Massachusetts has gone Democratic in every Presidential election since 1928, and it appears likely to do so again this year.

On the other hand, races in the state are always close, and unionists know that a big job still has to be done to insure a victory for CIO-PAC endorsed candidates. A statewide United Labor Committee, in which CIO participates with the AFL and the Massachusetts chapter of Americans for Democratic Action, is actively at work.

THE ULC's chairman is Harvard Prof. Arthur Schlessinger, Sr., historian and father of one of Gov. Stevenson's key advisers in his race for the Presidency. Another Harvard professor, Archibald MacLeish, former Librarian of Congress and close Roosevelt adviser, heads the Independent Committee for Stevenson and Sparkman.

Backing of the liberal cause from Harvard University also reaches down to the practical working levels. More than 100 Harvard students are canvassing each night under CIO-PAC direction. Their goal is to break Boston's all-time registration high of 410,000 rolled up in 1948.

All indications are that they will do so.

The pre-primary registration record in Boston—and, incidentally, in nearly all other Massachusetts cities—was broken this year. CIO-PAC efforts, which included telephone and house-to-house canvassing, active registration efforts of CIO shop stewards, and the mailing of over 260,000 postcards, are given most of the credit for it.

In Springfield, the third largest city in the state, the pre-primary registration itself smashed all-time records, again due to CIO-PAC activity. The drive here was directed by Herman Greenberg, president of the Western Massachusetts CIO Council, aided by Jack Daley, of the CIO Electrical Workers.

UNDERSTANDING—Rep. Kennedy (center), CIO-PAC choice for the Senate, gets to the bottom of issues with CIO Shoeworkers Local 24 at Brown Shoe Co. in Worcester.

The Western Massachusetts IUC is one of three councils affiliated with the Massachusetts State IUC, headed by William Belanger, with headquarters in Boston. The others are the Greater Boston IUC, headed by John Horan, and the Worcester IUC, whose president, Michael Delle Femine, is presently working full-time with the Worcester United Labor Committee, a joint CIO-AFL body.

There is also another CIO Council at Lawrence, not affiliated with the State IUC, but conducting its own political action independently. Its effectiveness is shown by the agreement of the mayor of Lawrence to send registrars into plants to register voters.

A large number of Joint Boards of the CIO Textile Workers throughout the state also have PAC representatives at work.

Ike's Glamor Goes Glimmering

"Eisenhower sentiment in Massachusetts, originally perhaps stronger than anywhere else in the nation, has been falling steadily," J. William Belanger, president of the Massachusetts State IUC, believes.

Belanger said that in recent weeks the GOP Presidential nominee's "glamor has been glimmering down" among the workers, "as they see him defending Republican reaction."

The central coordinating body of Massachusetts CIO-PAC activities is the State IUC, which this year, for the first time, has had full-time PAC men assigned to it by CIO internationals. There are 12 such representatives working in different regions.

"All of our activities to date have been going toward building up a record registration," Joseph Cass, PAC director for the Massachusetts State IUC, explained. "The past history of the state shows that the larger the vote, the larger the Democratic majority."

As far as party organizations go, there is no strong political machine in the state. As a result, the "strong-man candidate" philosophy of politics has generally been accepted by professional politicians, who simply expect their party's slate to be carried to office on the strength of those heading the ticket. This means that local political organizations tend to do little work and are loosely organized, each candidate having his own group of supporters.

The CIO, through its many local PAC committees, this year appears to be the only organized group that is doing an effective job for all candidates it endorses straight down the line.

The Massachusetts State CIO, speaking for the 300,000 members of CIO unions in the state, held its endorsement rally Oct. 5. It backed just three statewide candidates, in addition to the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket, leaving the question of congressional endorsements up to local PAC organizations.

Those given wholehearted PAC backing are Gov. Paul A. Dever (D), running for a third term on an outstanding liberal record against the reactionary Rep. Herter (R); Rep. Kennedy (D) who opposes Lodge for the Senate, and former Rep. Furcolo (D), seeking re-election as state treasurer.

With the exception of Kennedy, the Democratic candidates are off to a late start. Dever's campaign has just begun to roll, whereas his opponent has been actively opposing him for at least three months.

IN HIS first speech, however, Dever made up for lost time. He called Herter "the No. 1 labor baiter and labor hater of Massachusetts" and "one of the architects of the Taft-Hartley law." Herter's voting record bears out Dever's charges.

Unquestionably, this year's outstanding political comet is John F. Kennedy, 35-year-old son of former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy and the Representative of Massachusetts' 11th Dist. in the last three Congresses. If the elections were held today, Kennedy would probably be elected to the Senate.

This does not mean that Kennedy's election is assured on Nov. 4, for Gen. Eisenhower—worried by the sudden turn in his chief supporter's political fortunes—has announced that he will wind up his campaign in Massachusetts. This step, unprecedented by Presidential candidates, may still be enough to enable Lodge to nose Kennedy out.

Experts predict, however, that regardless of who wins, the margin may be not more than 5000 to 25,000 votes.

2 CIO Members Running For Congress

TWO MEMBERS of the CIO in Massachusetts are running for the post of U. S. Representative on the Democratic ticket.

They are David J. Crowley, of CIO Shipbuilders Local 5, and Edward F. Doolan, director of the CIO Textile Workers Joint Board at Fall River. Both face long-entrenched Republican reactionaries.

Crowley, who is presently a member of the city council of Quincy, opposes Rep. Wigglesworth (R), who has consistently voted against most of labor's legislative aims. He is conceded a "good chance" to win.

Doolan, who opposes Rep. Martin, long-time boss of House Republicans, piled up a three to one majority over his nearest rival in the primary. He is backed by a United Labor Committee, composed of representatives of more than 100 CIO and AFL locals in the 14th Massachusetts district.

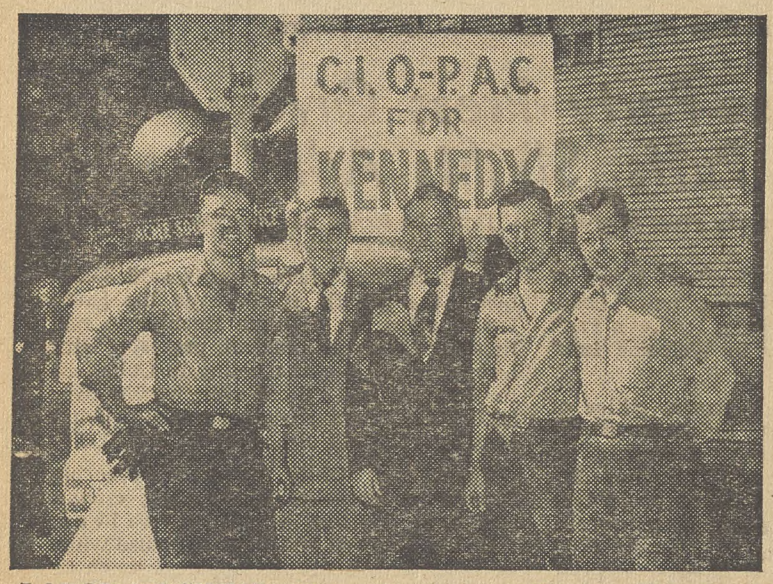
Both Truman and Dever carried Martin's district in 1948, and Doolan is confident of victory this fall. He is making political capital of the fact that Martin voted for the Fulbright Amendment supporting the difference between southern and northern pay rates, which now is causing unemployment in Massachusetts' textile mills.

Running for Kennedy's House seat is Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., the first Democratic speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives in the state's history. He has a good labor record and seems certain of election.

Two other Democratic representatives with 100% "right" voting records in the last Congress, Rep. Lane and Majority Leader McCormack also won renomination in the primary, which is tantamount to election in their districts.

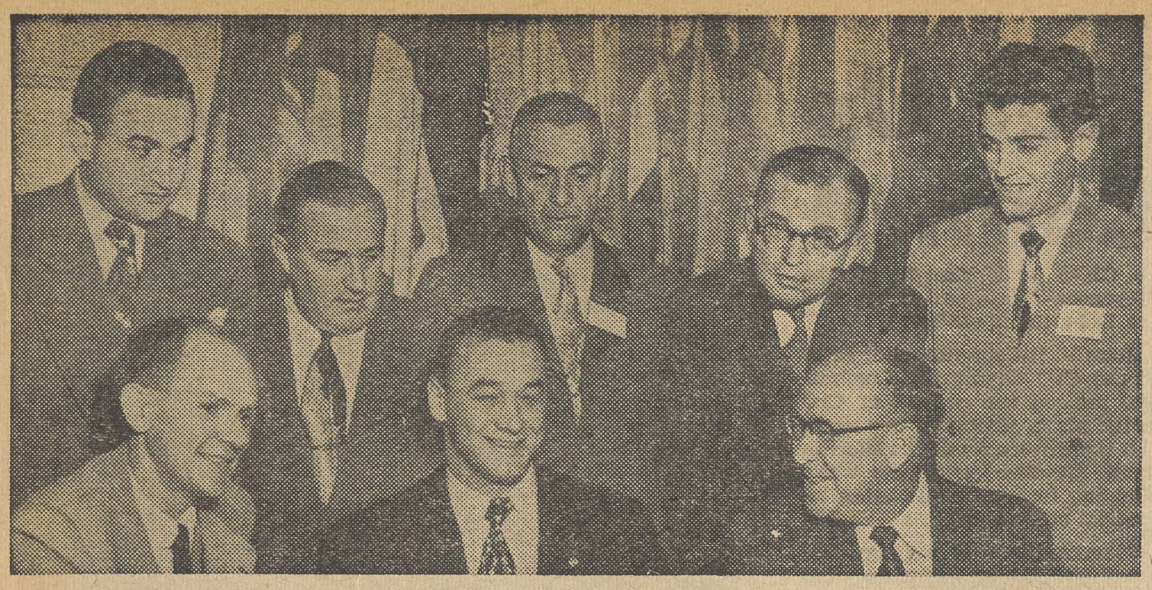
One of the toughest fights in the Congressional races will take place in the 2d district, where Edward Boland, registrar of deeds in Springfield, is running on the Democratic ticket for the seat formerly held by the liberal Rep. Furcolo.

Another close battle is expected in the contest for Herter's House seat where the Democratic nominee, Frederick Heiler, Jr., a state representative and city counselor at large from Boston, opposes Laurence Curtis, a veteran Republican.



LABOR BACKING—Kennedy street rally for CIO Steelworkers Local 3274 is planned by Tom Sheehan, Mass. State CIO IUC Pres. J. William Belanger, Steel PAC Dir. Dan Murray, Warren Houle and Fred Voisinet at gates of Compton-Knowles Loom Works in Worcester.

LOOMING political fortunes of Rep. Kennedy in his race to unseat Sen. Lodge (R.) in November are being strongly woven through his visits like this one with members of CIO Textile Workers at the Hayward woolen mills.



VETERANS of three wars face their problems at a conference held by CIO Auto Workers at Washington. Left to right, front row, Meyer Bernstein, CIO staff; Gene Digman, Korean veteran and holder of bronze star for valor; Harold Near, assistant director of UAW Veterans Dept.; back row, second from right, Anthony J. Stromar, UAW Secy.-Treas. Mazey's assistant.

AMA Flayed On Health Care

THE DEMAND of organized labor and liberal groups for national health insurance ran into stiff resistance from conservative groups at the first hearings in Washington conducted by the Pres. Truman's Health Commission.

The American Medical Association, which has long spearheaded the campaign against adequate medical care, attempted at the outset of the hearings to discredit the commission, which it has boycotted.

A statement by Dr. Frank G. Dickason, AMA economist, was circulated which said that the 250-page "Fact Book" issued by the commission told "only half of the story."

Dr. Paul A. Magnuson, commission chairman, promptly called attention to the AMA release, said "there will be no ideology promoted" by the commission in preparing its recommendations for Pres. Truman. He pointed out that so far the commission has been collecting information in hearings around the nation and "hasn't even discussed recommendations."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, who is a member of the commission, was acting chairman during the hearings.

IT WAS a one-way street for the opponents of adequate medical care. A number of persons testified that voluntary health plans such as are advocated by the AMA, and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, do not fulfill the nation's health needs.

Nelson H. Cruikshank, Mutual Security Agency labor adviser, who is on leave as director of the AFL Social Securities Dept., said that the efforts of the labor movement for national health insurance have been fought tooth and nail by the AMA.

He said the AMA attacks on the plan "have shifted from the ground of immediate issues to an unholy alliance with other reactionary forces which are attempting to scuttle established institutions as well as block the evolution of new social and economic programs for the people's welfare.

"I need only mention the fields of disability insurance (against wage loss), workmen's compensation and old age security—to list some major areas in which the AMA has aided and abetted the forces of reaction."

Harry Becker, formerly of the UAW staff, who is now associate director of the Commission on Financing of Hospital Care, said voluntary plans should be integrated with present government-supported medical services to avoid "present gaps and exclusions, as well as overlapping and duplication."

UAW Vets' Conference Hits Ike, Backs Stevenson

THE CIO Auto Workers National Veterans Conference at Washington last week spelled out an indictment of Gen. Eisenhower, Republican candidate for President, and then endorsed Gov. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee.

Three hundred delegates representing approximately 80% of the UAW membership passed the resolution endorsing Stevenson after UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther warned that the Republicans' record shows that they would lead us to depression and war. Thirty percent of the UAW members are veterans.

The resolution attacked Eisenhower for his defense of segregation in the armed forces before a congressional committee in 1948, and for supporting Sen. McCarthy (Wis.) and Jenner (Ind.) despite their attacks on Gen. George C. Marshall.

Eisenhower also was attacked for his "admitted ignorance of domestic affairs," and for "accepting the idea of hopeless reactionaries like Sen. Taft." The conference warned the "country of the terrible dangers involved in the emergence and development of this kind of military politician."

Reuther said the Republicans are not dealing with facts but with "soap opera," like "tricky, little Dicky Boy (Nixon) and his dog Checkers," a remark that drew laughter from the delegates.

He said that the Republicans themselves are responsible for the 50c dollar that they are trying to blame on the Democrats.

The convention urged the National CIO "to set up a permanent functioning veterans department to expand this important work in all CIO unions and give it a national orientation and direction."

The CIO has a Veteran Affairs Committee which is headed by Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood. Fred Peiper is director; Carlin Allen secretary, and other members are Harold Near, assistant director of the UAW Veterans Dept., who presided at the conference in the absence of UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, who was ill; Frank N. Hoffman, Steelworkers Washington representative, and Martin Hughes, Communications Workers.

UFW Backs Adlai For 'New Gains'

THE EXECUTIVE committee of the United Furniture Workers last week concurred in the CIO endorsement of the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket.

Recommending both Democratic candidates to UFW members, and urging their support, the committee termed the Democratic platform "the most liberal, up-to-date and forward-looking ever presented by one of the major parties."

The committee, which includes UFW Pres. Morris Pizer and other top officers, said:—

"In the past 20 years we have won the right to build strong unions, many of us have acquired the first-class citizenship previously denied us by racist bigots, and we all have welcomed the protection provided by minimum wage laws, unemployment insurance, old-age pensions and other social legislation. We not only want to keep what we have won so far, but want to go forward to make new gains.

"And so, we must reject the appeals of those people who try to block progress and turn the clock back by crying that these gains are 'threats to liberty' or 'socialism'. In 1952, in our opinion, that means that all of us should vote for Stephenson and Sparkman, and Senatorial and Congressional candidates who support their program."

Rents Doubled In New Orleans

Landlords all over the country claim that rents don't go up much when controls are removed.

Here's what happened in New Orleans after the city council voted 4 to 3 against extending rent curbs: according to Lucille Savoie, CIO Textile Workers Joint Board Manager, rents on about 40 properties—to Miss Savoie's knowledge — doubled, and in some cases trebled. Newspapers printed stories of shocking rent boosts.

One good result: the campaign for Gov. Stevenson, Democratic presidential candidate, got a shot in the arm. The CIO and the AFL are the only groups working for Stevenson in New Orleans.

M'Carran Act Curbs Blasted By 2 Senators

TWO LIBERAL Democratic senators last week blasted the McCarran immigration law as "iniquitous" and "utterly repugnant to every concept we call American."

In separate testimony before the President's Special Commission on Immigration and Naturalization, Sens. Moody (D. Mich.) and Lehman (D. N.Y.) assailed the law, which was passed over Pres. Truman's veto.

Moody said the measure "placed in the hands of the Kremlin a weapon of propaganda which will seriously damage our world position."

"Because the Congress passed a law full of hatreds, fears and prejudices that have no proper place in American legislation or life, well over half the present quotas go unused," Moody said. "At the same time, fugitives from Communist terror, aged parents, grandparents and other loved ones of some of our finest American citizens wait in vain for the chance to come to freedom and reunion."

"This law constitutes a slur and an insult to the people of ethnic origin and contains dangerous implications which cannot be allowed to stand," Moody said.

LEHMAN urged immigration preferences be "based on individual worth and need rather than on national pedigree."

"Let those who defend the national-origin quota system be forced to read aloud the names of the winners of the Congressional Medal of Honor or to recite the daily casualty lists from Korea—and then let them dare to say that those of one national origin are less fit to be Americans than those of another national origin," said Lehman.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, charged racially discriminatory immigration policies of the U. S. were a factor in bringing on World War II.

Retention of these policies in the McCarran act, he said, has aroused "anger" and "shock." He predicted the McCarran act will prove equally harmful to the U. S. overseas.

'Socialistic'—That's What D. C. Lawyer Calls Playgrounds For School Kids

PUBLIC SCHOOLS in Washington got swatted last week by a big business lawyer, who demonstrated once again what civic life is like in the nation's voteless capital without home rule.

Robert R. Faulkner, newest member of the D. C. Board of Education, called public education "socialistic." His reasons: Some capital schools are providing physical education classes, lunches for students, medical clinics and play rooms.

The manner in which Faulkner, attorney for the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, became a school board member was recalled after his outburst.

Members of the D. C. school board are supposed to be named by a three-man committee of U. S. Judges. Faulkner was named by Judge Richard B. Keech, without any consultation with parent or education groups. The two other judges on the committee were out of the city when the appointment was made.

Pres. F. Joseph Donohue of the D. C. Board of Commissioners, said that school board members preferably should be elected by the citizens of the District or should be appointed by the commissioners.

The majority of members of the school board said they did not agree with Faulkner.

District Judge Luther W. Youngdahl said that when the judges appoint school board members they perform "an executive function, which is contrary to the separation of powers philosophy under the Constitution."

Faulkner's blast at public education came as Labor Press Associated reported another big business drive to plant reactionary propaganda in U. S. schools. This one, similar to programs already hatched by the National Association of Manufacturers and the Committee for Constitutional Government, was revealed in a telegram sent to a number of corporation heads by Fred G. Clark, general chairman of the American Economic Foundation.

The AEF called its plot a plan "to carry practical program of economic understanding into America's schools."

"Sound business leadership," the telegram said, "demands this job be done as bulwark against creeping socialism . . . Some companies are contributing to our current budget. But Foundation will require $28,000 over present budget to get school program under way. Can we count on your company for a tax deductible contribution?"

Give A Buck To PAC

In Byrnes' Bailiwick—

Growing CIO To Set Up South Carolina Council

By PAUL HARDING

CIO HAS moved to organize its newest state council in the backyard of South Carolina's Gov. James F. Byrnes, who has thrown his anti-union, anti-Negro support to Gen. Eisenhower.

More than 150 delegates to a recent South Carolina CIO Conference adopted a resolution requesting the state CIO director to call a constitutional convention during 1953.

Dir. Lloyd F. Vaughan, concurring in the decision, said, "Our organization has grown so much during the past several years that it is almost imperative that the various units form a central operating body."

Principal speaker at the conference was CIO Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who lashed out at Byrnes for "the hypocrisy" of his decision to support Eisenhower.

The conference unanimously passed a resolution concurring in CIO's endorsement of the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket and the Democratic platform.

John V. Riffe, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, praised the growth of CIO in the state, saying "a few years ago there were no CIO unions in South Carolina, and now we're planning formation of a state industrial union council.

"That's the way we are progressing . . . here is our progress for all to see. Never before has there been a CIO conference in South Carolina like this one."

Other speakers included Lorne Nelles, assistant national director, of the CIO Organizing Committee; William Smallwood, Southern director, Communications Workers; Joe Joy, vice-president, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; William Pollock, general secretary-treasurer, Textile Workers; W. J. Trombley, Atlantic Coast director, Oil Workers, and Oral L. Garrison, CIO Organizing Committee secretary-treasurer.

LASHING OUT at South Carolina's Gov. James Byrnes, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne was main speaker as S. C. CIO unions voted to set up state council.

Dixie Backers Of Ike Called 'GOP In Sheep's Clothing'

"EISENHOWER Democrats are nothing but Republicans in sheep's clothing," Gov. Kerr Scott told the North Carolina CIO-PAC convention last week in Raleigh.

In a free-swinging attack, Scott reminded his CIO audience of their hard times during the last Republican administration.

Obviously aiming at South Carolina's Gov. James Byrnes, who is supporting Eisenhower, Gov. Scott noted that "South Carolinians are trying to lead another rebellion and bring us another general just like the last one who put us in the hole for 85 years."

Highlight of the two-day convention was unanimous endorsement of the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket, along with the entire state Democratic slate.

The 85 delegates, representing 50,000 CIO members in North Carolina, elected Emmet Akridge of the Steelworkers as president after State CIO Dir. Franz E. Daniel resigned. Daniel said the pressure of the CIO organizing campaign, which has as its goal 50 representation elections during 1953, made it impossible for him to stand for reelection.

The convention urged the state General Assembly to repeal Senate Bill 229, a little Taft-Hartley Act, and to enact an anti-injunction law. It also called for amending the workmen's compensation law to provide for medical and hospital expenses for workers injured on the job, as well as enactment of a 75-cent minimum wage law.

The delegates voted support of the CIO Textile Workers in its fight against what it termed "UTW-AFL privateering" and condemned the unprincipled raids of the AFL Textile Workers on the CIO Textile Workers.

Other State CIO-PAC officers elected were: Vice-chairmen, S. D. Griggs, Furniture Workers, and Robert A. Parker, Textile Workers; executive director, J. R. Graham and recording secretary, Eugene Nelson, Textile Workers.

Taft-Hartley Record Told By Outlook

WHAT'S WRONG with the Taft-Hartley Act—and its "vital importance" as a national election issue—is uncovered in the latest issue of the CIO Economic Outlook.

"The first five years of Taft-Hartley have fulfilled the prediction of American labor leaders that the Act is a blow at labor," said the Outlook, which is issued by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

"This fact becomes of vital importance in this election year."

The CIO publication based its conclusions on the damaging effects of the Act on the findings of the Senate Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. The Outlook said:

"The exhaustive studies made by the Senate Subcommittee prove two facts conclusively:

"(1) That despite this so-called unwillingness of the Southern textile workers to organize, Southern textile management has resorted to every known device, some of them with new twists, to fight the efforts of their workers to form their own unions and to engage in free collective bargaining.

"(2) That Taft-Hartley, through the anti-labor atmosphere it has created and the legal weapons it has placed into the hands of the employers, has thwarted efforts to organize the textile South which more and more is becoming the textile center of the United States."

Gas, Coke Backs Adlai; Raps GOP As 'Royalists'

THE EXECUTIVE Board of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers last week endorsed the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket with "great satisfaction."

Pres. Elwood Swisher reported the board's conviction that victory for reactionaries in November "would deal a staggering blow to American progress as exemplified by such great advances as Social Security, bank deposit insurance, development of public power, federal minimum wages, prosperity and security for the farmer and many others, with special emphasis on the recognition of free collective bargaining in which this union, like other unions, is especially interested."

Warning that the Republicans' program would mean "reverting to the royalist notion of the divine right of kings," the board said:

"Under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt, this nation once more became a democracy within the real meaning of the word, and the Ship of State was directed into the main channel where the needs and wishes of the masses of the people became more important than the whims and caprices of the favored few."

Urging all-out support of Stevenson and Sparkman, the resolution added: "It is our considered opinion that the Republican party and its candidates, almost without exception, represent those interests which still believe in the principle of the divine right of kings; the inherent rights which go to the affluent and the privileged few, and the opinion that the masses of the people do not have sufficient intelligence to select their leaders or determine the nation's policy."

Louisiana Strikers Battle Evictions, Injunctions

COURT evictions, designed to drive union leaders out of their homes and thus break a strike, are the latest weapons being used in Winnfield, La.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports this weapon, plus injunctions, arrests and wholesale employer attacks on the union, have failed to budge members of LIU 1742, on strike against the Tremont Lumber Co. since June 7.

Two months ago, an injunction was granted limited picketing to four pickets at each plant entrance, but with the strikers standing solid, this move failed.

Then the company brought charges of assault and battery and attempted murder against one member. The Grand Jury returned an indictment charging only assault and battery and the case is set for trial on Oct. 17.

At this point, the company caused eviction notices to be served on six members, including the local president, vice-president, secretary and three committee members.

"The company was simply trying to cut the heart out of the union by this action," Starnes says.

After delays and postponements, the case came to trial recently and the union members lost their cases last week. Appeals were filed and the court granted the strikers the right to remain in their homes pending outcome of the appeal.

Meanwhile, Starnes says the strike continues in a hostile town of 6000, with the courts and the law on the side of the employers. But the strikers haven't lost heart.

TWU Asks 25c Raise In New York

Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers last week called for a 25c hourly increase for 53,000 members of the union in New York City.

The wage raise proposal headed the list of demands made on nine private bus lines and the Board of Transportation.

TWU also asked for a reduction to work week on private lines from 44 and 48 hours to 40 with no loss in take-home pay, and improved pension, health, hospitalization and holiday benefits.

Lesser Named

Secy. of Labor Tobin has appointed Leonard Lesser, legal consultant to the CIO Auto Workers' social security department, to the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Employment Security. Lesser is also CIO representative on the Wage Stabilization Board committee on pensions, health and welfare programs.

TWUA Hits Wool Duties

THE CIO Textile Workers have urged the Tariff Commission to reject the petition of sheep raisers for import duties or quotas on wool imports.

Dir. John Chupka of TWUA's Woolen and Worsted Division made the plea in a letter citing the plight of consumers, needs of the woolen and worsted industry, and U. S. relations with the rest of the world.

"Already," he said, "the 'Buy American' amendment to the Defense Production Act has protected wool growers to the extent of their full annual crop.

"The present proposal," he added, "would impose a burden on the civilian industry to the extent that any part of the wool crop is not absorbed in future military consumption. This small margin . . . would be used as a lever for raising the cost of the product to higher levels and endangering its market. Such action would be disastrous."

UAW Gains Strike Pact At Harvester

THE CIO Auto Workers last week won wage increases up to 17c hourly in a settlement ending the 10-week strike at the Melrose Park, Ill., plant of International Harvester.

Almost 5000 workers are affected.

The new pact calls for an average increase of 10c an hour on new or changed piecework jobs. In addition, the workers will receive a general 7c an hour increase under escalator clauses. Two workers were reinstated to jobs they lost before the strike began.

The morale of the strikers remained high during the long strike, particluarly after they received 20,000 francs and words of encouragement from the locals of two French unions, the Force Ouvriere and the predominantly Catholic French Federation of Christian Workers, at the Roubaix plant of International Harvester.

As part of the settlement, UAW agreed to withdraw a $1 million breach of contract suit against the firm.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER attended the Wisconsin State CIO Council convention in Oshkosh. In attendance also was the able Senator from Minnesota, Hubert Humphrey, who made a rousing intelligent address to the delegates. He placed the presidential campaign issues squarely before the gathering and pointed out the danger and repercussions if the people were misled and elected a reactionary Congress on Nov. 4.

In addressing the convention, I pointed out the CIO position in endorsing the Democratic platform as against the Republican platform. I also pointed out the need for complete unity in this campaign to be most effective in rejecting the reactionary forces that are attempting to set Labor back.

The delegates elected new officers in a spirited even contest. Brother Charles Schultz was elected president and Brother Ross Baum, Secretary-Treasurer. After the election I called upon all those in attendance to now devote their time and effort to doing all that we can, along with other liberal forces throughout the country, to bring about the victory of Adlai Stevenson and John Sparkman, with a Congress that will give them the necessary support to carry out an effective program.

★

WISCONSIN IS the state of the "Smearer" McCarthy and it will take all our efforts to prevent his bringing more of his kind of abuses into our national government. It seems that when the big fight against communism in Wisconsin was taking place McCarthy had a weak voice, while we trade union people were battling all the way in wiping them out.

It seems strange that McCarthy fails to attack John Dulles (the expert) and Gen. Eisenhower, both members of the executive committee of the Carnegie Peace Foundation, of which Alger Hiss was the administrator. Hiss received a vote of confidence and was retained at his $20,000 a year salary by the foundation. Mr. Dulles appeared and testified as a character witness for Hiss. Of course, with McCarthy and Nixon, they both have been strangely absent whenever there has been a real fight against the Communists or real programs to defeat communism.

All our members will have to remain on their guard against the attempts to divide labor in this political fight, just as we had to fight off the attempts to prevent us from organizing by bribes, threats, and plant espionage. We would all do well to inquire where these self-styled committees set up to divide labor, are getting their funds and support and why?

My assistant, Brother R. J. Thomas, attended the Georgia State IUC Convention and reports that it was an enthusiastic gathering and one well aware of the present day issues. They voiced their support in joining with CIO and the workers throughout the country this coming November.

Sen. Taft, the new "Six Star" General, in speaking to a bunch of those who supported him for the Republican presidential nomination, made the following significant statement and was cheered by his supporters: "I am glad to assure those who believe in my principles that if you elect Eisenhower you will have government based on the principles in which you believe." Is Eisenhower a captive of Taft—the statement speaks for itself.

★

NATL. DIR. John Riffe, CIO Organizing Committee, reports a big representation election victory for the CIO Clothing Workers at the Hortex Manufacturing Co., El Paso, Tex. The vote: eligible 618, ACWA-CIO 421, no union 17, challenged 7, void 1.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports the following representation election victories: Pennsylvania Glass and Sand Co., Hancock, Md., eligible 217, CIO Glass Workers 128, against 86, void 1; Rheems Mfg. Co., Baltimore, Md. (Lithography Dept.), eligible 9, CIO Lithographers 9.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports these representation election victories for the CIO Oil Workers in the following Gulf Oil offices: Group A, Philadelphia, Pa., Production and Maintenance, OWIU 94, no union 34; Group B, Philadelphia, Pa., Clerical, OWIU 12, no union 11; Group C, Glenside, Pa., Production and Maintenance, OWIU 15, no union 3; Group D, Glenside, Pa., Clerical, OWIU 4, no union 0; Group E, Upper Darby, Pa., Production and Maintenance, OWIU 10, no union 5.

Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley reports that in a representation election held at the Westinghouse Electric Corp., A-G-T Div., in Kansas City, Mo., the office workers favored the CIO Auto Workers by a vote of 123 to 63 no union. There were 186 eligible to vote. The campaign was conducted by Area Dir. H. E. Carroll, UAW-CIO Region No. 5.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that the CIO Optical and Instrument Workers won a representation election at the Fish-Schurman Corp., New Rochelle, N. Y., by a vote of 15 to 10 no union. There were 27 eligible.

Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports two CIO representation election victories: Pietro C. Martine & Co., Tampa, Fla. (Flour & Feed), CIO Brewery Workers 23, 2 against. Credit for this win goes to Brewery Rep. Bob Bennett. At Hart Concrete Products Co., Tampa, Fla., the work was CIO Stoneworkers 50, 7 against, 2 void. Stone Workers Rep. Lewis Rumley was in charge.

CIO Issues Jobless Aid Guidebook

GUIDEBOOKS on workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance "written in such a manner as to be useful to the man on the job who has concrete problems in these fields" are off the press, it was announced last week by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president.

The books analyze legislation in both fields but also set forth the CIO views on improving existing laws. They are the first of a series which the CIO Dept. of Industrial Union Councils, plans to issue. Haywood is Director of organization and councils.

Haywood urged wide use of the books by industrial union councils, local industrial unions, international unions and organizing committees.

Secy.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council prepared the Workmen's Compensation booklet. Harry Kranz, legislative director of the New Jersey CIO Council, wrote the Unemployment Insurance guide. The guidebook series are being prepared under the general direction and editorship of Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of industrial union councils and CIO assistant general counsel, in consultation with Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, and Haywood.

STATEMENT REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF AUGUST 24, 1912, AS AMENDED BY THE ACTS OF MARCH 3, 1933, AND JULY 2, 1946 (Title 39, United States Code, Section 233) SHOWING THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, AND CIRCULATION OF

THE CIO NEWS, published weekly at Washington, D. C., for 1952.

1. The names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are: Publisher, Congress of Industrial Organizations, 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington, D. C.; Editor Henry C. Fleisher, 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington, D. C.; Managing editor, None; Business manager, None.

2. The owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a partnership or other unincorporated firm, its name and address, as well as that of each individual member, must be given.) Congress of Industrial Organizations, 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington, D. C. Philip Murray, Pres.; James B. Carey, Secy.-Treas.; Allan S. Haywood, Executive Vice-President; Vice-Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum.

3. The known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. Paragraphs 2 and 3 include, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting; also the statements in the two paragraphs show the affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner.

5. The average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the 12 months preceding the date shown above was: (This information is required from daily, weekly, semiweekly, and triweekly newspapers only.) 127,609.

HENRY C. FLEISHER
(Signature of editor)

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 18th day of September, 1952.

[SEAL] Frances J. Simonson
(My commission expires Feb. 14, 1956.)

YOUR OPINION won't count, unless you register and vote.

That political truism was underscored last week by both Presidential candidates, Gov. Stevenson and Gen. Eisenhower, in messages to the American Heritage Foundation. The Foundation, of which CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a national vice-chairman, is conducting a nonpartisan "register and vote" campaign.

Stevenson hailed the move, saying: "Thoughtful Americans of both parties, I am sure, want ours to be truly a government of all people, not just a government of those who take the trouble to vote."

In similar words, Gen. Eisenhower urged: "Let no one forget that in every instance in which modern totalitarian rulers have seized power they have done so with minority rather than majority support."

Meanwhile registration records were hung up in many places. In New York City, a record 549,774 registered on the first day. This figure shattered by 113,653 the previous first-day record set in 1944. The New York City CIO had joined with other groups in conducting an all-out drive.

Incomplete official figures from Pennsylvania showed the previous 5-million registration mark, set in 1940, had been broken.

Republican registration showed a gain of 6% and the Democrats a gain of 19%. In Philadelphia, Republican registration was down 70,000 from the 1948 record, while Democratic registration was up 80,000. In Pittsburgh, the Democrats gained 80,000, the Republicans 50,000.

Here are the final dates for voters to sign up in areas where registration deadlines are still to be reached:

Oct.
14	Kansas	registration closes in Kansas City, Wichita and Topeka
14	Michigan	registration closes
14	Minnesota	registration closes
14	Tennessee	registration closes
18	Connecticut	statewide registration
18	Wyoming	registration closes
20	Colorado	registration closes
22	Wisconsin	registration closes
24	Kansas	registration closes
25	N. C.	registration closes
25	Oklahoma	registration closes
28	N. D.	registration closes
28	S. D.	registration closes
Nov.
1	Idaho	registration closes
1	Iowa	registration closes in all but Des Moines

Tune In On CIO-TV

HOW ARE the people thinking? And what are the real issues in the Nov. 4 election?

CIO's TV program, "The People's Political Poll," has the answer. Here's the latest program listing:

Station	City and State	Time
WSB-TV	Atlanta, Ga.	10:30 P.M., Thursday
WAAM	Baltimore, Md.	7:15 P.M., Tuesday
WAFM-TV	Birmingham, Ala.	10:15 P.M., Friday
WTTV	Bloomington, Ind.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WNAC-TV	Boston, Mass.	9:30 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 18
		6:45 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 25
WENR-TV	Chicago, Ill.	8:30 P.M., Thursday
WCPO-TV	Cincinnati, O.	1:00 P.M., Sunday
WXEL	Cleveland, O.	9:30 P.M., Monday
WTVN	Columbus, O.	6:30 P.M., Sunday
WFAA	Dallas, Tex.	1:30 P.M., Sunday
WOC-TV	Davenport, Iowa	10:45 P.M., Tuesday
WHIO-TV	Dayton, O.	4:15 P.M., Saturday
WFEL-TV	Denver, Colo.	10:15 P.M., Tuesday
		10:15 P.M., Monday, Nov. 3
WICU	Erie, Pa.	7:00 P.M., Monday
KPRC-TV	Houston, Tex.	5:30 P.M., Friday
WJAC-TV	Johnstown, Pa.	6:30 P.M., Friday
WDAF-TV	Kansas City, Mo.	5:30 P.M., Tuesday
WGAL-TV	Lancaster, Pa.	1:30 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 18
		4:00 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 25
KECA-TV	Los Angeles, Cal.	9:00 P.M., Monday
WHAS-TV	Louisville, Ky.	7:00 P.M., Tuesday
WTJV	Miami, Fla.	6:15 P.M., Friday, Oct. 31
WNHC-TV	New Haven, Conn.	12:00 P.M., Sunday
WABD	New York, N. Y.	8:15 P.M., Thursday
KMTV	Omaha, Neb.	10:30 P.M., Friday
WFIL-TV	Philadelphia, Pa.	6:45 P.M., Friday
WDTV	Pittsburgh, Pa.	8:00 P.M., Tuesday
WTVR	Richmond, Va.	6:45 P.M., Saturday, Nov. 1
WHAM-TV	Rochester, N. Y.	6:00 P.M., Wednesday
KSL-TV	Salt Lake City, Ut.	10:00 P.M., Thursday
KFMB-TV	San Diego, Cal.	2:45 P.M., Saturday
KGO-TV	San Francisco, Cal.	6:30 P.M., Monday
KING-TV	Seattle, Wash.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WSYR-TV	Syracuse, N. Y.	2:45 P.M., Sunday
WKTV	Utica, N. Y.	6:45 P.M., Tuesday
WTTG	Washington, D. C.	9:30 P.M., Friday

IUE Raps GE 'Alliance' With Commies

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

MULTI-BILLION dollar General Electric Co. was the target of speeches and resolutions last week, as CIO's Electrical Workers—IUE-CIO—held its third annual convention.

Meeting at Pittsburgh, the union and its president, James B. Carey, lashed out at the biggest corporation in the electrical industry on a triple charge:

1. That GE and its industrial relations vice president, Lemuel Boulware, were ducking out of their responsibilities in failing to bargain fairly with IUE on contract wage demands.

2. That GE, in playing ball with the Communist-led United Electrical Workers, is a "security risk," and that the government should immediately probe the actions of the company—which holds two billion dollars worth of sensitive government defense contracts—in collaborating with a Communist-line organization.

3. That GE, through its actions and its propaganda against the IUE, is inviting the rest of the nation's big manufacturing companies to get behind it in a major anti-labor drive.

To back up its charges, officers of the union and the more than 700 delegates adopted a resolution condemning GE in bitter terms; Pres. Carey and members of the GE Negotiating Committee vowed they would never put their signatures to a contract with GE containing the company's present proposals; and Carey submitted his resignation as a member of three major government advisory committees in protest against the failure of government agencies to act on the matter of GE's tie-up with the Communist-led UE.

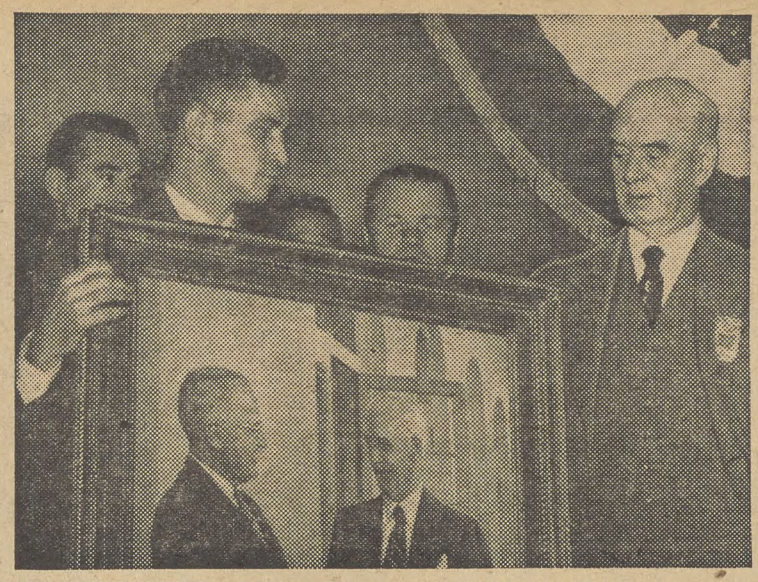
While the disputes with General Electric held major attention during the five-day session on the 17th floor of Pittsburgh's biggest hotel, the union also dealt with important matters of internal administration and of general policy.

After hours of hot debate, the delegates by a close vote turned down an Administration proposal to increase per capita payments to the international union to meet higher operating costs—IUE local dues now range from $2 to $3.50 a month; the proposal would have increased per capita from 75c to $1. The vote was: 1068 yes; 1121 against.

THE OFFICERS' report showed a better than 10% increase in the union's representation. IUE represents 387,000 workers, Pres. Carey and Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett reported. It holds bargaining rights for workers in 294 plants—an increase of 56 in one year. And it has won 77 NLRB elections during the 12-month period.

"Another field of extraordinary accomplishment," the report said, "was in pension and insurance plans. Both in the number of new plans and the number of workers covered, and in the quantity and quality of benefits, the IUE-CIO took larger strides forward in 1952 than during the previous two years."

The report said that two major companies — Westinghouse and Sylvania—had provoked disputes during the year "which were clearly attempts to ascertain whether the union could be broken or crippled before it became powerful. In each instance the employer attempt was beaten back."



OIL PAINTING of Pres. Truman and Philip Murray at recent White House meeting was presented by IUE Pres. James B. Carey (left) to the CIO president.

Westinghouse recently signed with the union—and in a precedent-breaking move, its president, Gwilym Price, accepted an invitation to address the delegates on the final day of the convention.

Just before the convention, the union went on strike against Sylvania, after the company—which employs 8000 workers in six plants — refused pay increases and other benefits comparable to those by Westinghouse. The union rapped Sylvania's program of "running away" to small plants in isolated areas of the country. The union has asked that all future Sylvania plants be covered by the master agreement.

THE RESOLUTION on General Electric charged the company with determination to "smash free unionism" in its plants.

The company's aim, IUE said, "is to show workers it is pointless to belong to a union because GE, in its own words, offers the same to union and non-union alike, it offers it voluntarily, and it makes just one offer—the first, only and last offer."

GE got a number of "weak" craft unions to accept its package, then signed a similar deal with UE, and now berates the IUE for failing to accept standards far below those agreed by Westinghouse.

At issue are such points as minimum hourly wage increases; the number of paid holidays in the coming year; and a reopening of the pension agreement for adjustments in line with changes in the cost of living and the recent $5 a month improvement in federal old age benefit payments.

The broader aspects of GE's attitude toward the union were spelled out by Pres. Carey in his keynote address — a speech in which he attacked the company as "confusionist" and charged that it "represents one of the greatest threats we of America face . . ."

"GE is in alliance with the Communists who head the UE, in spite of the fact that GE holds $2 billion of defense contracts, and in spite of the fact that the Communist UE leaders are puppets of the nation which is the chief threat to our security," the IUE president said.

Carey recalled that months ago the CIO union had rejected an "alliance" with UE on grounds that "we would never join hands with people who were the puppets to a Communist dictatorship which seeks to undermine our freedom and democracy. But while we rejected that UE offer, GE had no such scruples. GE made an alliance with its Communist leaders."

The IUE president noted that Gen. Eisenhower had described as "traitors" those who "help the Communists.'"

"I ASK YOU, Eisenhower, what name would you give to this kind of GE-CP conspiracy? And what do you think about the fact that among the chief money raisers and supporters in your anti-Communist crusade are two who are prominent in the ranks of GE officialdom—Sidney Weinberg, a leading member of GE's Board of Directors, and, Charles E. Wilson, ex-president but still important in its councils.

"What will you say, Gen. Eisenhower, about such a huge corporation with vital defense secrets helping Communists on such a vast scale? Will you speak up on that, too?"

The convention voiced a strong resolution of support for Stevenson and Sparkman, after a number of speakers — among them CIO Pres. Murray (see story on Page 3) and Sec. of Labor Tobin had drawn sharp contrast between present prosperity under Democrats and depression under Republicans.

Haywood Says Commies Thrive Under GOP

ALLAN S. HAYWARD, CIO executive vice president, told the IUE-CIO convention that Republicans talk much about communism, but communism made greater headway in the U. S. when Hoover was President than at any other time.

He said communism thrives on special privilege and the denial of opportunity to the people that occurs when the Republicans are in power, and disappears when the people have wider opportunities and a decent standard of living as under the Fair Deal.

Carey Quits 3 U. S. Boards In GE Protest

IUE PRES. James B. Carey resigned last week from three government committees in protest against the awarding of defense contracts to General Electric Co., while permitting that firm to execute most of its defense works in plants where the Communist-dominated UE is the bargaining agent.

Carey resigned from the Public Advisory Board of the Mutual Security Administration, the Atomic Energy Expansion Advisory Panel, and the Committee on Government Contract Compliance.

Carey, in a series of telegrams to the three agencies, said that he considers GE a "questionable security risk" and that in throwing work to GE in this form, "our government is promoting totalitarian practices so obnoxious to all freedom-loving peoples."

Tobin Granted IUE Membership

Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin became an honorary member of the IUE-CIO last week, by a unanimous and enthusiastic vote of the convention delegates.

Hailed by Pres. Carey as the greatest Secretary of Labor in the nation's history, Tobin is the second honorary member of the union. The other is President Truman. Neither has to pay dues.

Acheson Praises IUE For Fight Against Commies

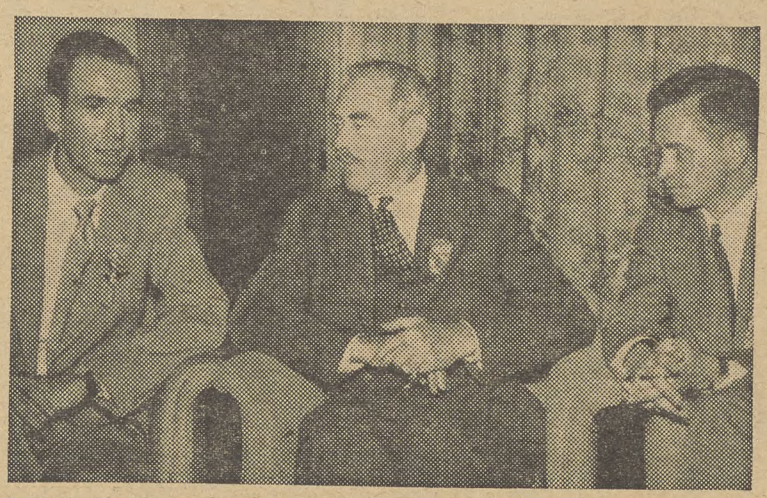
DEAN ACHESON last week praised the CIO Electrical Workers for their effective, courageous and determined fight against Communism "masquerading as a labor union."

In a fighting speech to the IUE-CIO convention in Pittsburgh, the Secretary of State said, "there is a right way and a wrong way to fight Communism. You have been demonstrating to the American people how to go about it the right way, the effective way."

Calling the IUE's battle "part of the great world struggle between freedom and tyranny," Acheson added, "every American has a stake in your fight."

The Secretary of State pointed out that "indiscriminate denunciations and character assassination are not the way to defend democracy from communism. To defend democracy by anti-democratic means—by the big lie, by the smear, by indiscriminate accusations—will destroy democracy."

"You have been fighting the Communists with all your might," he said, "and at the same time, you have been striving vigorously and successfully to improve the conditions of the workers, and in this way taking from the Communists the arguments and claims which form their chief appeal to the unsuspecting."



IUE'S "RIGHT WAY" to fight Communists was praised by Sec. of State Dean Acheson, meeting with IUE Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett (left) and Pres. James B. Carey.

"As Jim Carey has said," Acheson noted, "it isn't enough to be anti-Communist; you have to lick them with a positive program of your own."

"This, in a nutshell, is the basic idea of our foreign policy," he added.

"It is no accident," Acheson continued, "that the man who has done most to stiffen the backbone of the free world against Communism, has also cared more about, and done more about, human needs at home and abroad than anyone else."

As the crowd roared with applause, Acheson added, "That man is the President of the U. S., Harry S. Truman."

Turning to Korea and the peace talks there, Acheson said, "We shall not compromise with the basic principle that no prisoner shall be forced against his will to return to the Communists." This declaration also won ringing applause.

NAM Drafting Super T-H Act!

"EXPERTS" of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and other big business groups "right now are busy conferring on new anti-labor laws," CIO Pres. Philip Murray revealed last week end.

If the Republicans gain control of Congress and Gen. Eisenhower is elected, Murray warned, "their blitzkrieg against labor will start—make no mistake about it."

Murray sharply assailed the Republican congressional record on the Taft-Hartley Act as "clear and ugly."

"When they ask us to 'look ahead,'" he said, "I can see, on the basis of the record, just what they have in store for us . . . a fierce and terrible onslaught on the basic human rights of American workers."

The CIO president, also head of the United Steelworkers, revealed that big industry groups now are drafting a super-T-H Act in an address prepared for delivery to the USA-CIO Dist. 19 convention in Pittsburgh on Oct. 18.

Hear Philip Murray in a vital message to the nation! CIO's president speaks on Tuesday, Oct. 21 at 10:15 p.m. EST on all CBS Radio stations and at 10:30 p.m. EST on basic CBS TV network. (See story, Page 2).

Murray predicted the Stevenson-Sparkman Fair Deal ticket will get "in overwhelming number the votes of men and women who value the progress of the past, who want a constantly improving America—an America in which every segment of our population will share the benefits of our productive genius and our democratic traditions."

"Anti-labor experts" of the NAM, U. S. Chamber of Commerce and Natl. Industrial Conference Board, Murray charged, are drawing up the new union-destroying bill which, he predicted, would be couched in the scareword terms of "labor monopoly."

"With the General in the White House, with Taft in control of Congress," the CIO president warned, "the anti-labor bills would move through . . . the Congress with military precision and the speed of jet planes.

"The captive General in the White House, who has shown so little understanding of fundamental civilian problems, would sign those bills to hurt labor—perhaps with a sigh, perhaps with a smile."

Murray assailed Gen. Eisenhower for joining with Taft and congressional Dixiegops in advocating a T-H injunction to break the strike of CIO Steelworkers early last summer. He also condemned the injunction vote of Sen. Nixon, "the subsidized Senator from California," who is Ike's running mate. (Text, Page 3.)

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV | WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 20, 1952 | 82 | No. 42

Remember?

These grim photos of long lines of jobless workers and apple sellers in New York are bleached in the bones of American working men and women.

But they must have been "happy days" for some Republicans, judged by these recent comments. Consider:

- "Many persons left their jobs for the more profitable one of selling apples."—Ex-Pres. Hoover in his newly-published "Memoirs of The Great Depression."
- "Productivity soars when there is a long line of job-seekers at the gate . . . The only way to get a day's work out a man is to threaten his children with starvation."—Barron's Weekly in 1949.
- "Corrective recessions are necessary and ought not to be feared."—N. Y. Banker Winthrop Aldrich, one of Gen. Eisenhower's earliest backers, in 1949.

See 'The Good Old Days,' A 4-Page Picture Story In Center Section

Election Roundup—

Stevenson Gets Big Crowds As The 4th Nears

By AL ZACK

AS THE 1952 ELECTION campaign roared toward the finish line last week, there was no doubt about two points:

- The bright polish had worn off the Eisenhower crusade, exposing the Old Guard Republican reaction it once faintly concealed.

- Adlai Stevenson's determined campaign to "talk sense to the American people" was really clicking.

Stevenson, swinging lightning blows which stung the GOP elephant, was drawing roaring crowds. The candidate, once almost unknown outside his home state of Illinois, had captured the imagination of America.

Voters liked his wit; appreciated his humor; listened to his carefully thought-out, well-phrased statements on every important issue—and got his point.

It was clear Stevenson, who had astounded so-called political experts by treating voters as though they were adults, had been right in that assumption.

Some of the experts candidly admitted the fact. Others, attempting to rationalize their own mistake, were conceding it, though they used journalistic double-talk to hide these admissions.

The Republican high command attempted to ignore the Fair Deal trend.

It Ain't Hay

The country is going to hell in a handbasket because of "false prosperity," according to Gen. Eisenhower and other GOP orators. Last week the Commerce Dept. reported oil industry dividends climbed 16% in the first nine months of this year over the same period of 1951. Other increases: Mining 13%, utilities 8%, railroads 11%. Total nine-month dividend figure: $5.7 billion, up 4%.

But the abrupt change in Eisenhower tactics, implicit in promises made by his advisers that he was finally going to state his views on major issues (something he hadn't done and hadn't intended to do) underscored the fact.

The week's most cynical political statement from the General's camp was that it had been necessary for him to compromise his principles to get Taft-McCarthy-Jenner support but he planned to double-cross them when he got in the White House and revert to Dewey Republicanism.

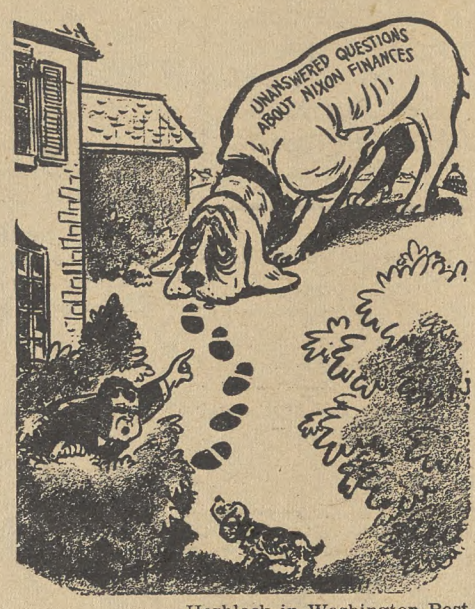
ON THE REPUBLICAN side, it was a week of bitterness, smear, abandoned principles and political demagoguery.

New York's Tom Dewey was smarting over the beating he took when Sen. Taft, the man he defeated in Chicago, captured Dewey's own five-star captive. The New York governor, twice defeated for the presidency, attempted to pin the Ku Klux Klan label on Democrat Vice-Presidential candidate, John Sparkman. His attempts failed, primarily because the Dixiecrat-Klan element in the South was whooping it up for Ike.

Richard Nixon, the GOP's "soap opera specialist," used a half-hour of $60,000 TV time in an attempt to smear Stevenson, Truman and all Democrats. It was a substitute broadcast for one originally purchased for the General and later cancelled when GOP bosses decided Nixon's brand of soap salesmanship was a better substitute for its Lux Theater.

And reporters covering the Eisenhower train reported they found nothing of news value in the General's recital of every worn-out slogan in the GOP political catechism, used in every election since 1932.

Of the "crusade," one columnist wrote,



—Herblock in Washington Post
"Sic 'Im, Checkers"

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch
"The Hokum Dept. Is Booming These Days"

"there isn't a single saint left on the train."

WHILE STEVENSON was drawing headlines and huge crowds, as he carried his fighting campaign into the South, then on to the West Coast, another old campaigner was also swinging.

Harry Truman, the man who gave the GOP its most unexpected thrashing in 1948, was fighting just as hard for Stevenson as he had ever fought for himself. After only a few days rest, the President was back aboard his campaign special, "pouring it on" in the manner which had won him fame.

There was no doubt Truman was sore. He had rewarded Eisenhower with honors few men had ever received; had relied heavily upon the General's military judgment; had shouldered the blame for the General's mistakes. Now Eisenhower was charging the Administration with "blunders" for heeding the advice of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

In Hartford, Truman took note of published reports, attributed to Eisenhower aides, that "the Republican candidate's compromises are all behind him."

"The plain fact is," Truman said caustically, "the candidate doesn't have much left to compromise."

STEVENSON, CHOPPING away at the weakest link in his opponent's armor, underlined the General's ignorance of civil government. "Does anyone think he would really stand a chance against his team of isolationists and cut-throat reactionaries?" the Democratic candidate icily inquired of an enthusiastic, record-breaking San Franciscan audience.

As he struck hard and often at the Republican Old Guard, Stevenson also continued to spell out his position on major issues, even when that position was called "politically unpopular."

For example, Stevenson went into Southern states most agitated over the so-called tidelands oil quarrel (correctly, only off-shore oil is at stake) to reiterate his backing of the position taken by the Supreme Court and supported by Truman.

In New Orleans, Stevenson said he refused to "go behind" the Court which has repeatedly held that oil beneath the submerged lands is vested in all the people, not just in the states on which it borders.

Stevenson's attitude was in sharp contrast to that of Eisenhower, who has repeatedly said in the North what he refused to mention in the South. The General, who once admitted he didn't even know the Supreme Court had ruled on this oil question, adopted the position held by wealthy Texans.

It was the "state's right" position, demanded by powerful oil lobbyists. Eisenhower tried to drum up votes in normally Democratic Texas, with political double-talk which the oil lobbyists liked.

At least one early Eisenhower backer was sickened. Sen. Morse, liberal Oregon Republican, called Ike's stand "inexcusable" and said the General had been "taken in by the selfish interest of Americans who seek to steal oil belonging to all the people."

Stevenson's "Talk-sense" campaign, also pointed up new Eisenhower double-talk on Korea. "There is no trick" that can bring a quick end to the conflict there, Stevenson said.

Answering the General's "let Asiatics fight Asiatics" crack, Stevenson noted:

"Surely, as our most distinguished soldier, the general must know we have been training South Koreans as rapidly as we could for a long time now." He added, in cutting tones:

"I will not play politics with war and peace."

STEVENSON also struck out at "character assassins and slanderers" in a Salt Lake City speech, which drew far bigger crowds than had seen Eisenhower. He hit "peddlers of hate and fear in Congress," who follow "the cult of thought-control and of the big lie."

Biggest "smear headlines" went to Nixon, who chopped away at Stevenson for having sworn to a deposition concerning the character of Alger Hiss, before Hiss was convicted.

Stevenson, responding to a hint of a court subpoena, had said under oath as to what others had thought or said of Hiss before the Whitaker Chambers' testimony was made public. Stevenson had answered Hiss had a "good reputation" in those days, a fact which even Nixon did not deny.

The Nixon smear was promptly pounced upon by a group of New York's most prominent lawyers, many of them Republicans, who said Stevenson did only what any law-abiding citizen must do—tell the truth under oath. Nixon, a lawyer, had ignored this.

Nixon also ignored the record showing that Hiss obtained his high-paying job as president of the Carnegie Foundation for Peace on the recommendation of John Foster Dulles, a top Eisenhower adviser.

EISENHOWER revealed a partial report of his finances. Unlike Stevenson, Eisenhower did not supply photostatic copies of his tax returns.

The report showed Eisenhower had made $888,303 in the last 10 years and paid far less tax on his earnings than the law seemingly required. The General had taken advantage of a little-known capital gains loophole, since plugged up, to reduce his taxes. Nixon refused to answer any questions about his finances.

Another Republican, who had been "sponsored" by wealthy groups, was revealed. It was ex-Sen. Brooks of Illinois, who reluctantly admitted that he had the benefit of a Nixon-type fund of unspecified size when he was in the Senate.

Hear Murray, Reuther On TV, Radio

Two of CIO's top officials will make major television and radio broadcasts shortly on behalf of Gov. Stevenson.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will make a combined radio-TV broadcast over the nation-wide network of the Columbia Broadcasting System on Oct. 21.

Walter Reuther, CIO vice-president and president of the Auto Workers, will make a series of radio and TV broadcasts.

Murray's radio broadcast will be carried over the 202-station CBS network at 10:15 p.m. EST, on Oct. 21.

His TV broadcast will be on the basic CBS-TV network at 10:30 p.m. EST on the 21st. In some instances, the CIO Publicity Dept. reported, TV stations were unable to clear time at that hour and will carry the program at another hour.

Details of the Reuther broadcasts on 84 CBS radio and 17 CBS TV stations, which will originate in Detroit, are contained in the CIO-TV log on Page 15.

Following is the list of television stations carrying the Murray broadcast. Unless otherwise indicated, the telecast will be on Oct. 21.

CITY:	CHANNEL:	LOCAL TIME:
Atlanta	WAGA-TV	11:00 p.m.
Boston	WNAC	10:30 p.m.
Chicago	WGN-TV	9:30 p.m.
Cincinnati	WKRC-TV	10:30 p.m.
Detroit	WJBK	10:30 p.m.
Los Angeles	KNXT	7:00 p.m.
New York City	WCBS	10:30 p.m.
Salt Lake City	KSL-TV	8:30 p.m.
San Francisco	KPIX	8:00 p.m.
Syracuse	WHEN	10:30 p.m.
Tulsa	KOTV	7:45 p.m. (Oct. 23)
Pittsburgh	WDTV	10:30 p.m.
San Antonio	KEYL	8:00 p.m.
Bloomington	WTTV	11 p.m. (Oct. 22)
Dallas	KRLD-TV	10:30 p.m. (Oct. 22)
Dayton	WHIO	8:00 p.m.
Louisville	WHAS	9:30 p.m.
Cleveland	WEWS	10:30 p.m.
Columbus	WBNS	10:30 p.m.
Johnstown	WSAC	6:00 p.m. (Oct. 22)
Buffalo	WBEN	7:00 p.m. (Oct. 22)
Baltimore	WAAM	9:30 p.m. (Oct. 22)
Birmingham	WBRC	10:15 p.m.
Omaha	KMTV	9:30 p.m.
Philadelphia	WCAU-TV	6:15 p.m.
Charlotte	WBTV	7:00 p.m.
Denver	KBTV	9:00 p.m.
Grand Rapids	WKZO	6:15 p.m. (Oct. 23)
Erie	WICU	7:15 p.m. (Oct. 22)
Miami	WTVJ	6:15 p.m. (Oct. 22)
Washington	WNBW-TV	7:00 p.m.

Murray Reveals—

NAM Plans New War On Labor If Ike Wins

Here is the text in large part of CIO Pres. Philip Murray's address as prepared for the Steelworkers' Dist. 19 convention in Pittsburgh Oct. 18 and for broadcast over Station KDKA:

IT IS NO SURPRISE that many of the same forces which have been aligned against this union and its members during the years of our growth, are now aligned against the working people of America in the political campaign of 1952.

In this political campaign, we face many of the same issues, the same problems, and the same need for unity that we faced in our quest for justifiable economic advances just a few short months ago.

It is completely natural, therefore, that when the Republican campaign strategists urge us to "look ahead, neighbor," we should—for a moment, at least—"look back, neighbor" to our experiences of the very recent past.

For instance: The Taft-Hartley Act is an issue in this presidential and congressional election campaign. The Taft-Hartley Act was also a very great issue in the steel dispute of 1952.

Back in 1946, when the CIO held its annual convention, a great military hero came to address us. Then, six years ago, Gen. Eisenhower had nice things to say about labor in America. They won the cheers of trade union members.

But, today, as the candidate of the Republican Party for the highest office in our land, does Gen. Eisenhower still believe the fine sentiments he expressed in 1946? The answer, sadly, is "No."

WHERE DID Gen. Eisenhower stand when this Steelworkers union of ours was fighting with all its strength to win a decent wage rate for its members, to win decent conditions in the great and profitable steel mills where are members work?

When we were locked in battle with the great corporations during 1952, Gen. Eisenhower took his position squarely—with the rich corporations.

On June 12, when we were out on strike for fair and equitable wages and security, what did this self-proclaimed friend of labor have to say?

The Washington Post reported what he had to say: "Gen. Eisenhower told a New Jersey delegation that he would have used the Taft-Hartley Law in the steel dispute to put off the strike for another 80 days."

At Gettysburg, where the noble Abraham Lincoln made the most stirring address in American history, General Eisenhower could only say that the Taft-Hartley Law "give us a better climate than before. . . "

Is this Army General the man to whom American workers can feel safe in entrusting the destiny of this nation? Is this the man to whom they might look for a square deal in the White House? Is this a man who can honestly advertise himself as a "friend of labor?"

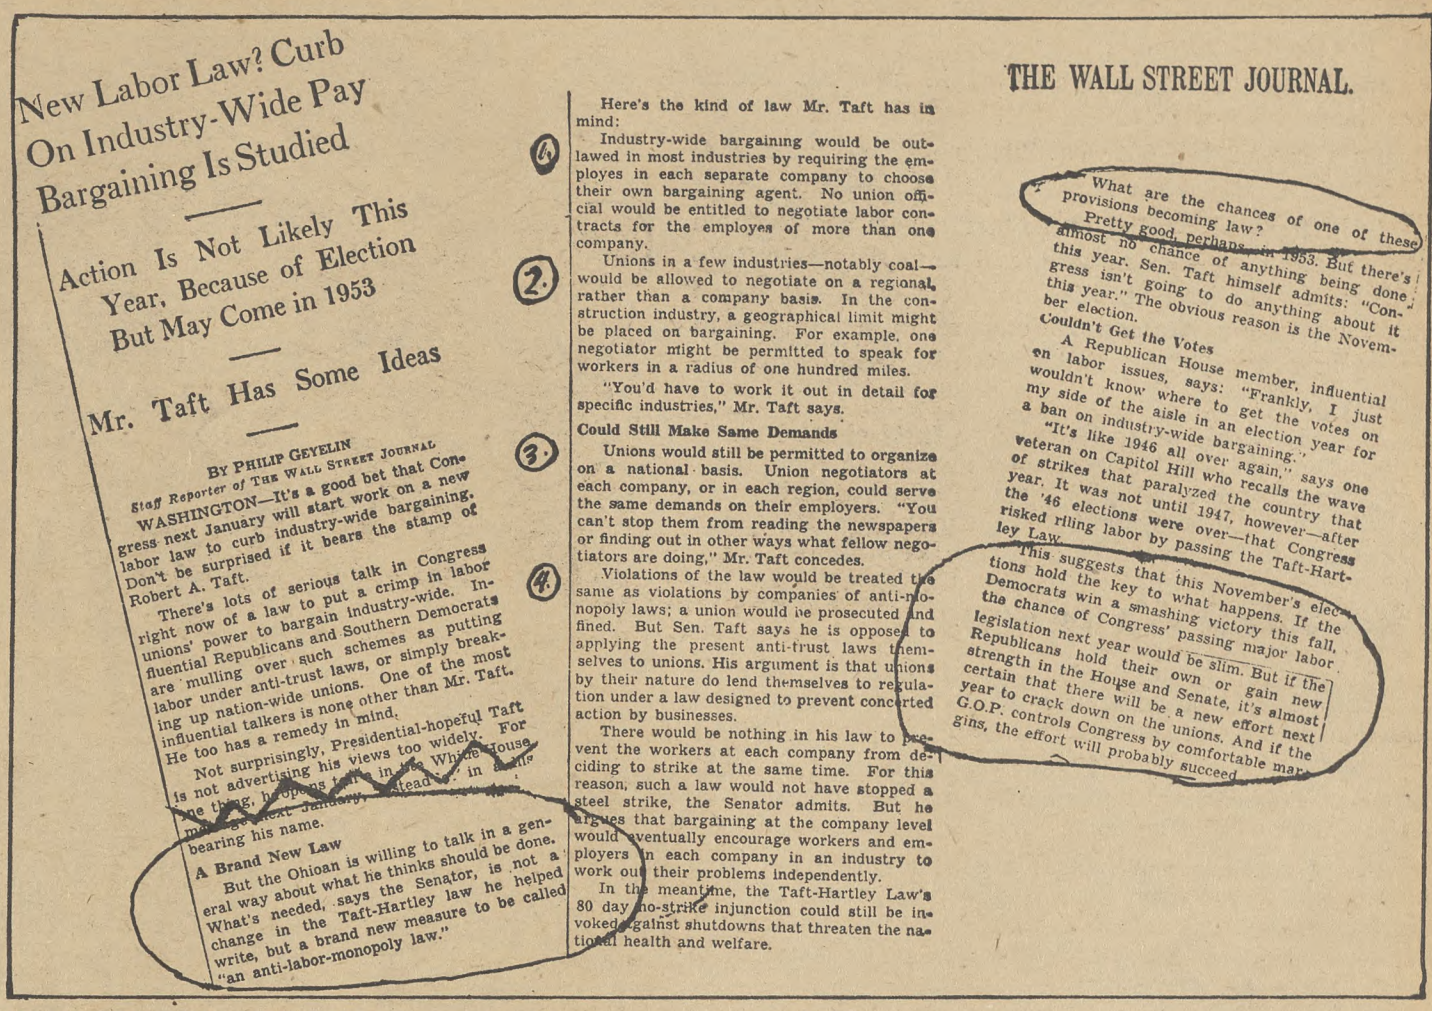
On the record, we in the Steelworkers Union say "No."

When he got the Republican nomination, Gen. Eisenhower claimed he was a "no deal man." But this "no deal man," who sided with our adversaries, has made

Open Country

"We need better housing," Philip Murray said. "The Republican platform is silent on the need for government housing projects. There is nothing strange about that.

"In Washington, I defy you to mark the line where the Republican wing of Congress stops and the real estate lobby begins. There is no such borderline. It is open country. Republican members of Congress vote 'yes' when the real estate lobby says 'yes' and they vote 'no' when the real estate lobby says 'no'."



New Labor Law? Curb On Industry-Wide Pay Bargaining Is Studied

Action Is Not Likely This Year, Because of Election But May Come in 1953

Mr. Taft Has Some Ideas

By Philip Geyelin
Staff Reporter of The Wall Street Journal

WASHINGTON—It's a good bet that Congress next January will start work on a new labor law to curb industry-wide bargaining. Don't be surprised if it bears the stamp of Robert A. Taft.

There's lots of serious talk in Congress right now of a law to put a crimp in labor unions' power to bargain industry-wide. Influential Republicans and Southern Democrats are mulling over such schemes as putting labor under anti-trust laws, or simply breaking up nation-wide unions. One of the most influential talkers is none other than Mr. Taft. He too has a remedy in mind.

Not surprisingly, Presidential-hopeful Taft is not advertising his views too widely. For one thing, he opens [illegible] in the White House mail [illegible] next January, instead [illegible] bearing his name.

A Brand New Law

But the Ohioan is willing to talk in a general way about what he thinks should be done. What's needed, says the Senator, is not a change in the Taft-Hartley law he helped write, but a brand new measure to be called "an anti-labor-monopoly law."

Here's the kind of law Mr. Taft has in mind:

Industry-wide bargaining would be outlawed in most industries by requiring the employes in each separate company to choose their own bargaining agent. No union official would be entitled to negotiate labor contracts for the employes of more than one company.

Unions in a few industries—notably coal—would be allowed to negotiate on a regional, rather than a company basis. In the construction industry, a geographical limit might be placed on bargaining. For example, one negotiator might be permitted to speak for workers in a radius of one hundred miles.

"You'd have to work it out in detail for specific industries," Mr. Taft says.

Could Still Make Same Demands

Unions would still be permitted to organize on a national basis. Union negotiators at each company, or in each region, could serve the same demands on their employers. "You can't stop them from reading the newspapers or finding out in other ways what fellow negotiators are doing," Mr. Taft concedes.

Violations of the law would be treated the same as violations by companies of anti-monopoly laws; a union would be prosecuted and fined. But Sen. Taft says he is opposed to applying the present anti-trust laws themselves to unions. His argument is that unions by their nature do lend themselves to regulation under a law designed to prevent concerted action by businesses.

There would be nothing in his law to prevent the workers at each company from deciding to strike at the same time. For this reason, such a law would not have stopped a steel strike, the Senator admits. But he argues that bargaining at the company level would eventually encourage workers and employers in each company in an industry to work out their problems independently.

In the meantime, the Taft-Hartley Law's 80 day no-strike injunction could still be invoked against shutdowns that threaten the national health and welfare.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

What are the chances of one of these provisions becoming law?

Pretty good, perhaps, in 1953. But there's almost no chance of anything being done this year. Sen. Taft himself admits: "Congress isn't going to do anything about it this year." The obvious reason is the November election.

Couldn't Get the Votes

A Republican House member, influential on labor issues, says: "Frankly, I just wouldn't know where to get the votes on my side of the aisle in an election year for a ban on industry-wide bargaining.

"It's like 1946 all over again," says one veteran on Capitol Hill who recalls the wave of strikes that paralyzed the country that year. It was not until 1947, however—after the '46 elections were over—that Congress risked riling labor by passing the Taft-Hartley Law.

This suggests that this November's elections hold the key to what happens. If the Democrats win a smashing victory this fall, the chance of Congress' passing major labor legislation next year would be slim. But if the Republicans hold their own or gain new strength in the House and Senate, it's almost certain that there will be a new effort next year to crack down on the unions. And if the G.O.P. controls Congress by comfortable margins, the effort will probably succeed.

TAFT SPILLED THE BEANS on Republican plans to whack labor in Wall Street Journal story last May.

his deal with Sen. Taft. The deal provides that Eisenhower gets Taft's support. In return, the General supports Taft's ideas.

OLD GUARD Republicans like Taft believe that every vestige of the New Deal and the Fair Deal must be destroyed. So, apparently, does Eisenhower. So do other leading Republicans who hope that through Eisenhower, they can gain complete control of the government of the United States for their reactionary purposes.

On June 10, of this year, the Senate of the U. S. voted to "request" the President to use the Taft-Hartley injunction against this Steelworkers Union.

How did all of the leading Republicans, who now promise us a better life under Eisenhower, vote on this "request"—it was actually a "demand"—that Pres. Truman forget rights and wrongs and use the Taft-Hartley Act to enjoin us, to smash our strike? Here is where they stood:

Mr. Nixon, the subsidized Senator from California, voted for an injunction against our union and for Taft-Hartley strikebreaking. Needless to say, those Southern California millionaires were pleased with Nixon's vote.

Sen. Taft voted for an injunction, of course, and for strikebreaking. Sen. Martin of Pennsylvania, who always votes against the workers of Pennsylvania, voted as usual—for an injunction and for strikebreaking. Sen. Dirksen of Illinois, the darling of the Chicago Tribune, voted for the injunction. Sen. Jenner of Indiana and Sen. McCarthy of Wisconsin, whom the General wants re-elected, voted to smash our strike and our hope for a little better break from life.

The record is clear and ugly. These Republicans cannot hide that record. When they ask us to "look ahead," I can see, on the basis of the record, just what they have in store for us . . . a fierce and terrible onslaught on the basic human rights of American workers.

LET US LOOK AHEAD some more to the kind of raw deal that working men and women can expect from a Republican administration.

Sen. Taft is "looking ahead." A few months ago, in the Wall Street Journal, Taft looked ahead to this—to more vicious, dangerous amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act—not to help labor, but to hurt it.

If the Taft-Eisenhower forces have their way, we can expect a sustained and bitter attack on unions and on the free collective bargaining process.

So, the big business organizations are "looking ahead" with glee to the prospects of a Republican Administration. It is no secret and no surprise that tremendous contributions from big business

More Of The Same

Prices are too high but the GOP will do nothing to lower them, Philip Murray said, because "the economic groups that dominate the Republican Party, that run its machinery, want higher, higher consumer prices. In Congress, the Republicans have stood solidly against each and every effort to keep prices down."

are pouring into the treasury of the GOP.

THE NATIONAL Ass'n of Manufacturers is "looking ahead;" the Chamber of Commerce is "looking ahead;" the National Industrial Conference Board is "looking ahead," to a Republican Administration.

Their battle strategists are, I am reliably told, already making plans to attack unions and the welfare of workers. Right now, in the offices of the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce and the National Industrial Conference Board, the anti-labor experts are busy conferring on new anti-labor laws. They cannot deny it.

And if the General is elected, if the Republicans gain the Congress, their blitzkrieg against labor will start—make no mistake about it.

WITH THE GENERAL in the White House, with Taft in control of Congress, the anti-labor bills would move through that anti-labor Senate Committee—and the Congress—with military precision and the speed of jet planes.

The captive General in the White House, who has shown so little understanding of fundamental civilian problems, would sign those bills to hurt labor —perhaps with a sigh, perhaps with a smile.

In any case, our unions would be weakened, and your aspirations for better living standards, for greater human dignity, would feel a mortal blow.

If the Republicans win, each and every effort in Congress to improve America will be labeled "creeping socialism" by these conservatives; and the cry of "creeping socialism" will be used to beat down every plan for better homes, for better health, for better security, for better education.

"Creeping Socialism" is a scare phrase. It is a shoddy device to smear the millions of us who believe in the free enterprise system but who also know, in our hearts and minds, that there must be room in America for the principles of the New Deal of Franklin Delano Roosevelt and the Fair Deal of Harry S. Truman.

In the 81st Congress and the 82nd Congress the Republicans voted against labor and the Fair Deal, just as they did when they controlled the "awful 80th" Congress. Does it surprise you, then, that the Republican platform hails the "awful 80th" as its model?

THE DEMOCRATIC platform, on the other hand, is a forward-looking document in our best progressive tradition. It is a platform that calls squarely for the continuation of humanitarian, New Deal, Fair Deal government in America.

Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman have voiced their faith and their belief in the Democratic platform. They are pledged to carry it out. They have shown themselves to be men of experience, of capability and of truly democratic instincts.

I feel sure they will get, in overwhelming number, the votes of men and women who value the progress of the past, who want a constantly improving America—an America in which every segment of our population will share the benefits of our productive genius and our democratic traditions.

I appeal to you on Election Day to vote in your patriotic interest—for Stevenson and Sparkman and those Democratic candidates for Senate and Congress who are pledged to uphold the principles of the Democratic Platform.

And Then There Was One . .

Adlai E. Stevenson has published his income tax records over the past 10 years.

John Sparkman has published his income tax records over the past 10 years.

Gen. Eisenhower has published income tax records over the past 10 years.

So three of the four candidates for major national office have let the public in on their financial history.

Only Richard Nixon—sometimes known as "the rich man's poor man"—has refused, and refused in a huff, to do likewise. The hodge-podge assortment of figures which Nixon gave the public doesn't compare, in any way, with the far more complete statistics given by the other candidates.

Frankly, we'd like to know more facts about Nixon's curious financial life. Not because we want to "smear him" —as Nixon describes all questions and criticism of his conduct—but because we're just plumb curious about the man who aspires to the second highest position in the land.

The 83rd Congress

It's easy, in the excitement about who'll be living in the White House next January 20, to gloss over the fact that Congress is pretty important, too.

The record of the 82nd Congress—dominated as it was by the Republicans and the Dixiecrats—left much to be desired and much to be done.

A big outpouring of votes; a determination to throw out the Old Guard from their positions of power; and the election of liberal Senators and Congressmen can end the stalemate that has affected all forward-looking social legislation for the past few years.

So, when you cast your ballot, don't forget to vote for the liberal, labor-endorsed candidates for Congress—and for state and city offices. You'll be benefitting yourself.

The IUE-CIO Record

No union has ever had a tougher row to hoe than the CIO's Electrical Workers (IUE-CIO) under the leadership of James B. Carey. Formed in 1949 to provide a home and a refuge for thousands of electrical workers who were fed up with the Communist-line propaganda of the expelled United Electrical Workers, the IUE-CIO had to work itself up the trade union ladder.

Despite fierce opposition from the companies in the industry, despite bitter attacks from the dwindling UE, the IUE-CIO has grown and developed strength and protection for its members.

The third convention of IUE last week showed clearly the extent of the union's gains. It represents 387,000 workers in the industry—a 10% increase in one year. And during the past 12 months it has won 77 Labor Board elections.

The records thus show that IUE-CIO is increasingly meeting the needs of electrical workers for a democratic and a militant trade union.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

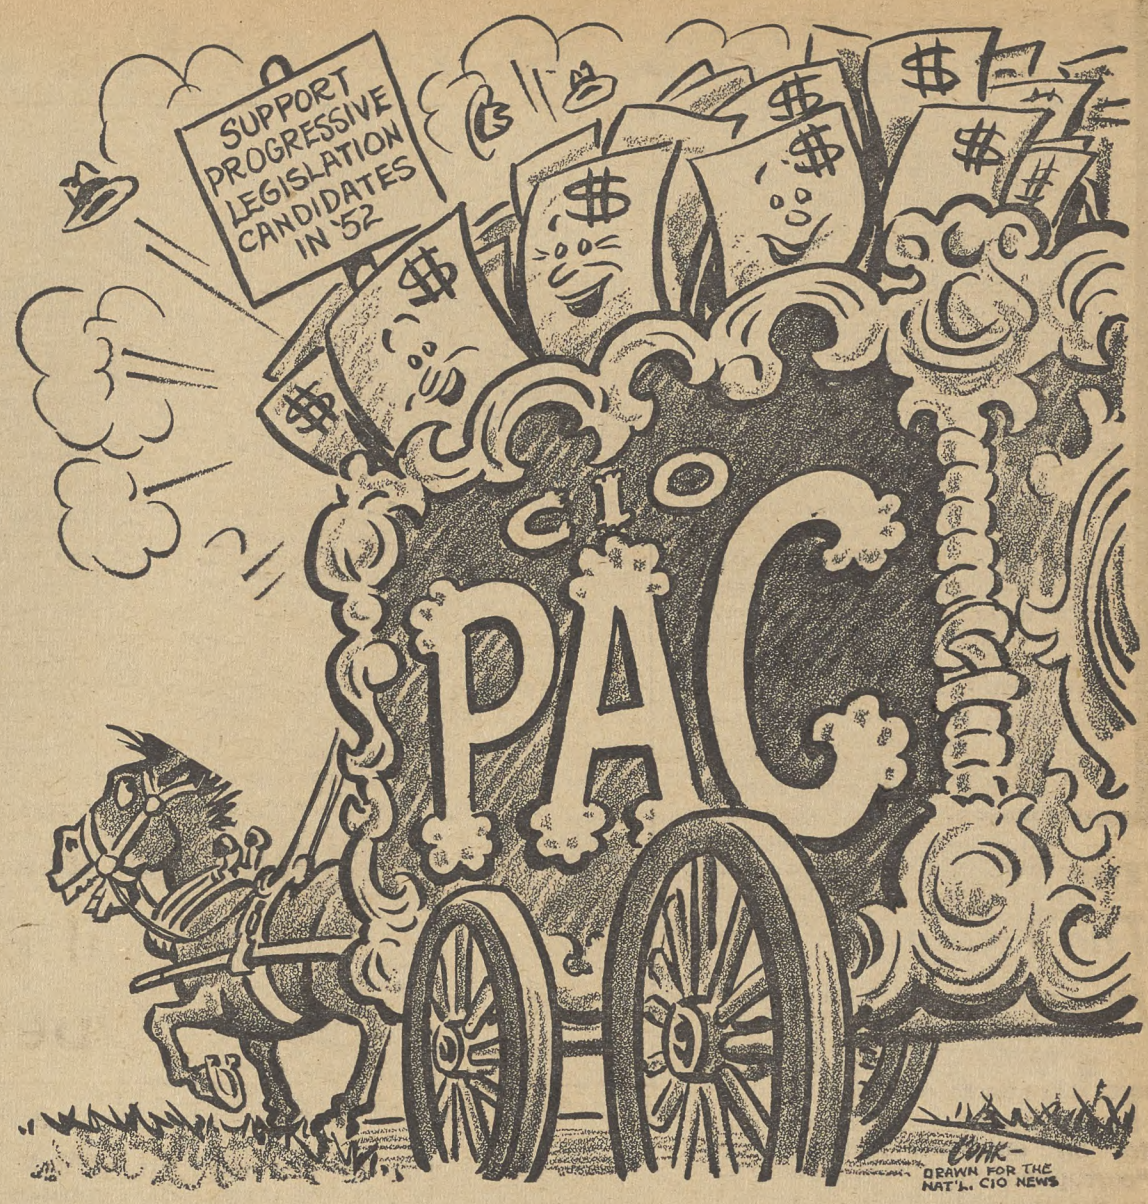
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Vol. XV October 20, 1952 No. 42

Get On The Bandwagon



In Other Words—

The Perils Of Creeping Plutocracy

The high cost of running for Congress, and the big business interests willing to put up the dough, are discussed by Lee Shippey, columnist for the Los Angeles Times, in this article digested from The New Republic magazine:

By LEE SHIPPEY

I WAS ONE who followed with fascination the revelation by the major candidates on how their political funds were raised and spent. It was on this issue that my own brief career in politics rattled to an end.

Like another Californian, I was approached by a group of citizens who wanted me to run for office. "As a newspaper columnist with 2 million readers," they argued, "you've got few enemies and many friends. You're always talking about better representation in government. Why don't you practice what you preach?"

There was no obvious answer to that one, so I agreed to consider the race. I went to see a friend of mine, a professional, who had managed several successful campaigns.

"I'm thinking of running for Congress!" I told him.

"Wonderful!" he cried. "You're as good as in!"

"Wait!" I protested. "What will it cost?"

"Cost?" he repeated with surprise. "Why, you must be above all that! You must be able to report that you only spent a $1000 or so.

"Just leave it all to us. We get a good finance chairman, and a committee with plenty of good names, and you won't know anything about what we raise or spend."

That worried me. "No," I said. "I want to know where every dollar comes from and where it goes. What's it going to take?"

"Very little, very little," my friend said comfortably. "You're widely known and well liked. Thirty thousand dollars will see us through."

"Thirty thousand, to get a $12,000 job," I exclaimed. "That's crazy!"

"No," said my friend firmly. "It's politics."

"Don't worry," he added. "A manager who knows his job can get so many items taken care of that they'll never show, and the committee can honestly report that it spent only a few thousand dollars."

"What do you mean, 'taken care of'?" I asked.

"Well," he went on, "there are lots of sources which never wish to appear in politics, but are glad to contribute to the campaign of any broad-minded candidate they think might win. One of them might pick up the tab for a printing bill of a thousand bucks, or send out a couple hundred thousand pieces of literature, saving you the price of stamps. Another might lend you a hundred billboard spaces for a month, saving you $5000 or so. But those sources would just charge those things off to their own advertising accounts, so neither you nor they would be embarrassed by having them appear as campaign contributions."

"What are these sources?" I wanted to know.

"OH, THEY'RE too numerous to mention," he said. "But I might give you a few categories. For example, the race tracks are always scared of crackpot legislation, and take a friendly interest in candidates with sporting blood. Some distillers are writing all their stockholders that they hope the next Congress will see the injustice of taxing them $10 a gallon on whiskey. Naturally, they would be glad to help promising candidates who share their concern for justice.

"The brewers—well, remember that Artie Samish got the California brewers to assess themselves 5c a barrel on beer and so raised nearly $1 million for lobbying purposes. The oil interests are tremendously interested in the tidelands-oil dispute. And there are hundreds of other interests, large or small, who want the right sort of men elected."

Soon I found myself concluding: There is much talk of the nebulous and exaggerated thing called creeping socialism, but is not creeping plutocracy a much more tangible and menacing enemy of true democracy?

The high cost of elections is not only robbing us of true democracy. It is the cause of a great deal of corruption and graft. The most patriotic thing any of us can do is induce every state and national legislator to pledge himself to work for laws limiting election expenditures and requiring the fullest publicity. I wish that everyone who sees a political billboard would stop to wonder what it cost, who paid for it and why.

In Hoover's Era—

GOP Fired U. S. Aide For Telling Jobless Facts

THE COLD, hard facts of history continue to give the lie to Gen. Eisenhower's claim that a Republican administration would be uncorruptible.

It was the history of the last Republican Administration, when Herbert Hoover was President and America was hungry and desperate.

Back in those days, when a do-nothing, know-nothing party was frantically trying to prove to America there was no such thing as a depression, the Hoover Administration dared not let the people know the truth.

One man—who refused to be a party to such censorship and who told the truth—felt the immediate fury of the Hoover administration.

He was Ethelbert Stewart, Commissioner of Labor Statistics and widely recognized as the foremost analyst of labor conditions in the U. S. in those days.

For 45 years, Stewart served the government and was considered one of the nation's most valuable and honest public servants.

But it was this very honesty which caused Hoover to have him fired—"with a tin can tied to the end of my coat tail," as Stewart put it.

Hoover and his Secretary of Labor, W. N. Doak, were busy peddling false claims that unemployment was dwindling and that employment was on the increase.

Newsmen couldn't believe these statements and didn't believe Doak's statement that they came from the Bureau of Labor Statistics experts.

They contacted Stewart, who told them the facts. Unemployment was gaining, not diminishing, he reported.

Doak gave him a public tongue lashing in front of newsmen. Stewart answered him back.

"We haven't changed our figures to suit any Administration for 45 years, and I'm damned if I'll do it now," Stewart told Hoover's lieutenant. For that, he was summarily fired.

Newspapers of that day were irate. The Baltimore Sun labeled the Hoover "perversion of figures on unemployment" to suit the Administration's "political purposes" as "one of the most striking intellectual scandals of a period replete with such scandals."

Noting that Stewart's firing had "the great disadvantage of separating from the federal service one whose familiarity with unemployment figures and integrity in dealing with them is badly needed at this time," the Baltimore Sun added:

"It is, none the less, a distinct tribute" to Stewart that his firing came because he refused to be a party to "hokum" and was openly "contemptuous of the practice."

Four years later, when Stewart died at the age of 79, the Washington Star recalled the incident in an editorial which began:

"It's an old bromide that there are lies, damn lies and statistics. Ethelbert Stewart, who has just died, was a statistician who refused to make his figures lie even for a President."

Stewart, the Star said, was "the sort of public servant the government is fortunate to have on its payroll. The country needs more like him."

But, it is public servants of Stewart's stature, who have been roundly condemned by Gen. Eisenhower in the current political campaign.

And the record of the last GOP Administration offers little hope for honest, uncorruptible public servants, if another Republican should occupy the White House.

The Woman's Angle—

The Facts On 'Corruption' Point Straight To Business

By ESTHER MURRAY

THE MAGAZINE Fortune, $1.25-a-copy publication for big business, put the "corruption" issue squarely on the line when it admitted in February, 1952:

"There is excellent evidence that the demand for venality in government, and for improper conduct short of venality, exceeds the supply. Shocking numbers of American businessmen are quite prepared to bribe their way through Washington."

Is this because "American businessmen" are forced to be "prepared to bribe their way through Washington?"

Not at all. Government business, generally speaking, is honestly handled business.

The Hoover Commission complained violently, a few years ago, that government business is so "honestly" handled that in order to spend $10 in an order for letterheads an agency is compelled to spend $100 or more in making out vouchers in triplicate.

This is "inefficient," argued the Hoover Commission. The answer is that the public's money is involved and that the public has the right to know that its money is honorably safeguarded.

WOMEN, who have the responsibility of managing their household budgets, naturally are concerned about the "housekeeping" arrangement of the federal government.

Let's get the facts straight. As Fortune admitted, the "demand for venality" among businessmen hungry for government contracts "exceeds the supply."

Let's put it another way, in the terms of Gov. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee for President: "Behind every crooked tax collector is a crooked taxpayer."

We don't have venal public officials unless some "honorable" businessman tries to capitalize on the official's human weakness—for the businessman's private profit and benefit.

The Republican plunderers and crooks of 32 years ago did not stop with "deep freezes" and "sweet thing" mink coats. They stole Naval oil reserves, they tried to steal grazing land in the Western reserves, they gave tax rebates to big corporations.

Women can get the point. They know the distinction between fact and fancy.

Women know the difference between campaign oratory about "corruption" and the real article. They are realists—and they can listen to Gov. Stevenson's statements about the truth, and they know how to vote, and how their husbands should vote — for Stevenson.

Rep. Brehm's Appeal Fails On Kickback

THE SUPREME COURT last week upheld the conviction of Rep. Brehm (R., Ohio) for illegally accepting campaign contributions from a woman clerk in his office.

In a brief order, the court rejected the Republican congressman's appeal. Brehm was fined $5000 and drew a suspended jail sentence of 5 to 15 months.

The 60-year-old former dentist, who had represented Ohio's 11th district for the past 10 years, continued to serve in Congress despite his conviction on April 30, 1951.

He is not a candidate for re-election, since the Republican-dominated Ohio Legislature redistricted the state, dividing Brehm's district into adjoining congressional districts.

A federal jury had convicted the GOP lawmaker of five violations of the Corrupt Practices Act, which makes it illegal for a congressman to accept campaign funds from federal workers.

One of his former clerks, Mrs. Emma Craven, testified that she kicked back about half of her salary to Brehm.

Behind The Headlines—

Firm That Blitzes Unions Is Behind 'Soap Opera' Radio Blitz For Ike

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

IN THESE last weeks of the presidential campaign the country will be saturated, via radio and television, with "spot" messages by Gen. Eisenhower.

The time for these "spots" according to report, will be released by national advertisers—by nature, inclination and pocketbook wedded to the GOP cause.

And to make it all cozy, the idea for these messages, by the leader of a "great moral crusade," came from Fred Rudge, of Fisher, Rudge & Neblett, a management consultant firm known well and unfavorably, by the unions.

In their brochure to clients, they listed as among "Persons Who Know Us," Robert Denham, then general counsel of the National Labor Board, and Lemuel Boulware, vice president of General Electric.

Among their clients then they listed Bristol-Myers, Champion Spark Plug, General Electric, Lever Brothers, Hilton Hotels, Thomas J. Lipton, Sylvania Electric, Thompson Restaurants, and U. S. Tobacco.

They named a score of unions "with whom we believe we stand in good repute." And they claimed that "persons to whom reference might be made in this connection" include Walter Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers; H. A. Bradley, president of the AFL Chemical Workers; and Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers.

Definition

"Roorbach: A defamatory falsehood published for political effect." — Webster's dictionary. So watch out for them in the windup of the campaign.

Which was odd, for at that ing the Dan River Mills in Danville, Va., while Fisher & Rudge were advising the Dan River management.

The brochure brought a joint statement from Reuther and Rieve branding the brochure "an outrageous piece of effrontery, with no foundation in fact. The firm of Fisher and Rudge has no reputation whatever with the Auto Workers and a most noxious one with the Textile Workers."

The statement added that at best such "consultants" interfere, and "when, like Fisher & Rudge, their purpose is destruction of trade unionism, they insure ill-will and industrial strife."

THE statement said: "It was Fisher & Rudge who advised the American Enka Corp. in Morristown, Tenn., and produced one of the most violent strikes in recent years. It was Fisher & Rudge who advised the American Thread Co., at whose Tallapoosa, Ga., plant the pro-union workers were terrorized and a union organizer kidnapped. It was Fisher & Rudge who advised Dan River Mills in Danville, Va., and conducted a union-busting campaign of unparalleled viciousness."

The job Fisher & Rudge did for Enka at Morristown, has been called the perfection of the "fine art of psychological strike-breaking. Their streamlined technique of scab recruiting and creating fear among union members provoked violence which rang through the Tennessee hills."

That's the firm whose prospectus says they work toward labor peace, and adds that "even in tense situations in which strikes threaten or actually occur, unions have found our advice and procedures such as to lead to greater mutual understanding and constructive labor peace."

That's Fisher & Rudge, the firm that sold the idea of saturating the country with spot announcements to Gen. Eisenhower, leader of a "great moral crusade."

Potofsky Asks Sales Drive To Save Jobs For Workers

THE MEN'S clothing industry must do a better selling job, if unemployment is to be avoided in the industry.

That was the proposal offered last week by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, speaking at the 20th anniversary convention of the Clothing Manufacturers Assn. in New York.

Pointing out that the average American male buys "only one-half a suit or overcoat a year," Potofsky emphasized that he was not suggesting "we sell to the American people something that they do not need."

"The plain fact," he said, "is that the American male today is not adequately dressed . . . The American father is the most neglected member of the family. He gets clothes last, if at all."

If the average male could be induced to buy "a whole suit or overcoat a year, there would be no unemployment in our industry, your plants would be working at full productive capacity and you would show increased profits," Potofsky said.

HE CALLED upon the industry to use all modern advertising techniques to sell its product and noted the ACWA had just voted to spend a million dollars a year to promote the union label and push the sale of men's clothing. But, he continued, it is primarily the responsibility of the industry to sell its own clothing.

It was more than a job of pushing individual brands of clothing, he said. "The job calls for the combined efforts of the industry as a whole," he said, and added, "Other industries are more forward-looking in this respect."

N. Y. Cheers As HST Vows Strong G

Gains Periled By GOP, Warning

ONLY a Fair Deal victory can guarantee continued progress toward full civil rights for all Americans.

That was Pres. Truman's theme as he carried his fighting campaign for Gov. Stevenson into New York's packed Negro community in Harlem.

To the roars of a crowd of 100,000 who heard his address in Dorrence Brook Square, the President pledged himself to carry on the fight for federal fair employment practice legislation with enforcement powers—"come hell or high water."

Truman, for the second year, received the annual Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Brotherhood Award for contributions to human rights. Dr. C. Asapansa-Johnson, president of the Interdenominational Ministers Association, presented the award, expressing the gratitude of his race for the President's "fight in the cause of justice and fair play for all Americans."

In a free-swinging speech, Truman charged the Republican presidential nominee was merely a "front man" for Republican "forces of reaction" which would "turn back the clock" in civil rights.

He labeled the civil rights plank in the GOP platform "the lousiest plank you ever read" and the crowd roared its approval of the President's charge.

Truman also charged Gen. Eisenhower with having been both "morally and militarily wrong" in defending "a certain amount of segregation in the army." Eisenhower had supported segregation in testimony before a congressional committee while still in uniform.

If the Republicans win, the President said, progress in civil rights achieved during Democratic administrations will be "in grave danger." These same Republican policies, he continued, would lead this country back into depression.

The President's speech in Harlem followed a long, triumphant motor trip through New York's crowded streets, with police estimating 1,750,000 persons cheering Truman.

In the Harlem rally, Truman was loudly and frequently cheered. The crowd broke in on his speech with applause 36 times. His gibes at the Republicans provoked frequent laughter.

He began by pledging a continued fight for "the end of racial injustice and unfair discrimination." He then listed in detail the accomplishments of his administration and those steps which were halted by a coalition of Republicans and Dixiecrats.

"The Democratic party had taken the greatest forward steps (in civil rights) since the abolition of slavery," Truman said. "The Democratic platform this year contains the strongest civil rights plank ever adopted by any political party in this country."

He attacked the Republican party as controlled by "greedy interests" who are "not interested in civil rights."

Turning his attention to the GOP nominee, Truman taunted Eisenhower for refusing to "pledge effective action for assuring equal rights for all our citizens" and for "touring the South to woo the Dixiecrats into the Republican fold."

"What do you suppose the Republican candidate and a Dixiecrat governor talk about when they sit down for lunch?" the President asked, in an obvious reference to the General's lunch with Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina.

"Do you think they talk about civil rights?" asked the President.

"No!" roared the crowd.

"Maybe they talk about taking them away," Truman added, and the crowd laughed heartily.

Pledging the Democratic party to continue its fight for civil rights, Truman said:

"Adlai Stevenson has shown by everything he has done and said that he believes deeply in the equality of human beings. He will bring new courage and new energy to the fight for civil rights.

"He has the courage to say the same things about civil rights in New York and in Richmond, Va. He has been a great civil rights governor and he will make a great civil rights President.

"You people know that if there is one thing I have fought for as President of the United States, it has been the protection of the God-given rights of every citizen of this great country. I solemnly pledged myself to this task at this meeting four years ago. Today I have listed some of the things we have accomplished in that great fight.

"And Adlai Stevenson has shown by his record that he will continue the fight (for civil rights) with renewed vigor."

PRES. TRUMAN smiles broadly as he accepts award at Harlem meeting for "consistent fighting for civil rights." In speech, Truman pledged continuing fight for civil rights, lauded Stevenson's record on this subject.

GOV. STEVENSON takes fight for f roared approval of Stevenson's refus cally hot." He repeated support of D

Ike Challenged On Deal With Byrnes

The NAACP last week demanded that Gen. Eisenhowef state whether he had a "secret understanding" with Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina regarding civil rights.

Recalling Byrnes' anti-Negro attitude and his present support of the General, Clarence Mitchell of the NAACP's Washington bureau said Negro voters "have a right to ask Gen. Eisenhower whether the support that Byrnes has promised the Republican presidential nominee was given in exchange for any secret understanding about how civil rights matters will be handled it the General is elected."

Newsweek magazine revealed Byrnes had ghost-written Eisenhower's South Carolina speech. Byrnes recently threatened to abolish public schools in South Carolina "before allowing Negroes and whites to attend the same schools."

IMPROVED living standards and working conditions will help improve interracial relations, Sen. Sparkman, Democratic vice presidential candidate, told 100 Democratic leaders. At right is Rep. Dawson of Chicago.

'Prejudice' Hit In Alien Law

THE McCARRAN immigration law "simply breathes prejudice against the foreign born—alien and naturalized citizen alike," Pres. Truman charged in Erie, Pa.

Lashing at the law, passed over his veto, the President noted it "bears the name of a Democratic senator." "I'm sorry that it does," he said, "but he is not my kind of Democrat."

The President identified the national origin quota system, retained in the bill, as a GOP invention and he recalled the complete Republican support for adopting the McCarran act over his veto.

"The Democratic party is not going to give up on this issue," he pledged, recalling the party's platform insists on outlawing the "unfair and unjust features" of the law.

"But the Republican platform doesn't even have the word immigration in it," he noted scornfully. "The fact is the Republicans are fully satisfied with the unfair immigration law we now have. It could not have been enacted without their almost solid support in Congress."

Senate Filibuster M 'To Secure These R

THE CIO believes that all Americans are first-class citizens . . .

- Whether they live in the North, South, East or West.
- Whether their fathers came over on the Mayflower, a slave ship or in steerage.
- Whether they work in a factory or on a farm.
- Whether they worship in a Catholic or Protestant church, a Jewish synagogue or a Moslem mosque.

CIO believes that first-class citizens make a first-class country and we can afford no less.

This election year, the issue of civil rights is an all-American issue. The rights to which all citizens are entitled are not optional rights nor partisan rights but rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution.

There is a place for state legislation and state action to guarantee the rights of citizens.

There is a place, also, for national legislation and national action—the place where state laws would be inadequate, or where states refuse to act, and where all the powers of federal statutes are needed.

Following the example of the federal government, a number of states have attacked discrimination in the field of employment, public rights and housing.

Eleven states now have fair employment practice laws. Some 20 cities outside the 11 states have local FEPC ordinances.

Eighteen states have laws prohibiting discrimination in the use of public facilities—hotels, restaurants, theaters. Five states have strengthened these laws in recent years and other states have repealed laws requiring discrimination.

Nine states, all of them in the industrial North and North Central areas, have laws forbidding discrimination on account of race, creed or color in public housing developments.

The civil rights struggle of the past five years was launched with the publication of a memorable document, "To Secure These Rights," by President Truman's special Citizens' Committee on Civil Rights.

This committee of 15 citizens was headed by Charles E. Wilson, then president of General Electric Co., and included CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, clergymen, educators and other prominent citizens.

It determined that four "basic rights" are essential in a democracy and that action was needed to protect them:

- The right of safety and security of the person.
- The right to citizenship and its privileges.

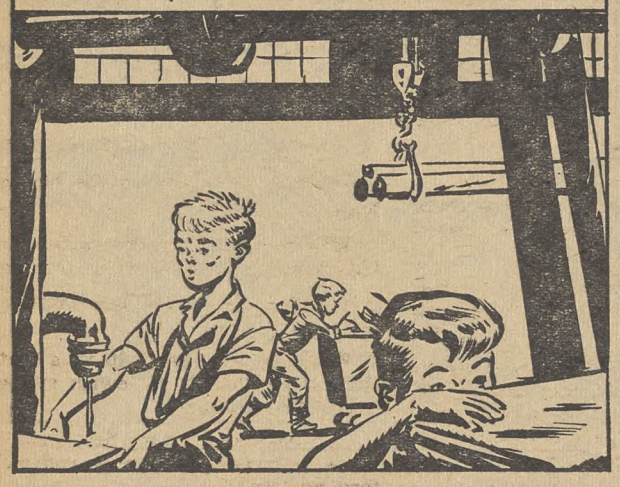
THE GOOD OLD DAYS

BACK IN 1927, WHEN EVERYONE WAS MAKING MILLIONS IN THE STOCK MARKET...

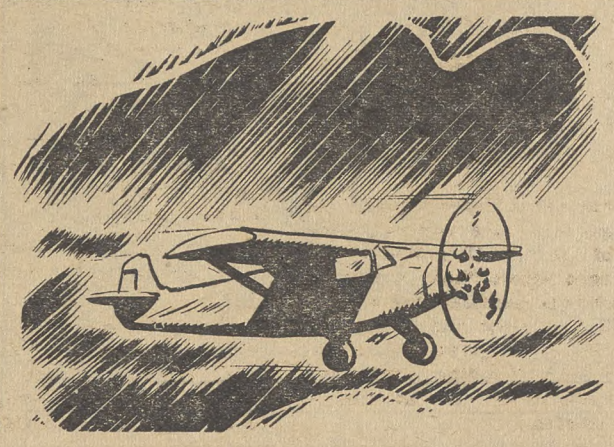
WHEN THE CHARLESTON WAS THE RAGE, AND THE LADIES DRESSED AS IF THEY HAD NO MORE CURVES THAN A SACK OF FLOUR...

WHEN THE UNDERWORLD WAS FIGHTING OVER WHO WOULD SUPPLY THE LIQUOR THAT NO ONE WAS SUPPOSED TO BE DRINKING BECAUSE WE HAD PROHIBITION...

WHEN BUSINESS WAS SO GOOD THAT EVEN CHILDREN (LUCKY KIDS!) HAD JOBS...

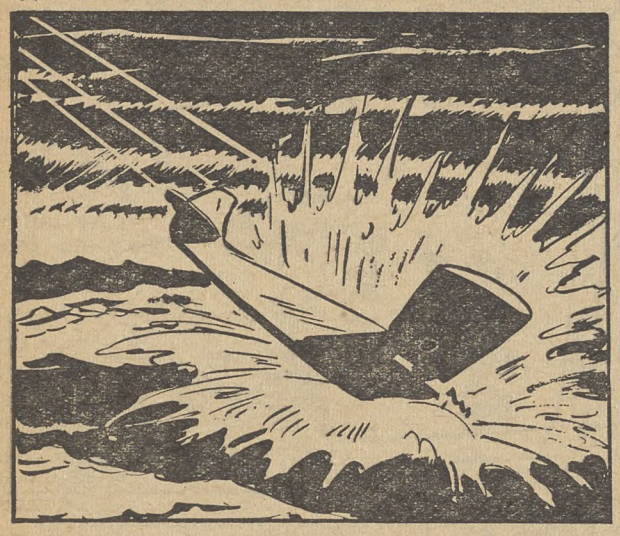


ON A CERTAIN FOGGY DAWN A HEAVILY LOADED MONOPLANE TOOK OFF FROM AN AIRPORT ON LONG ISLAND...



...ON AN UNPRECEDENTED FLIGHT...

...AND THEN DISAPPEARED WITHOUT TRACE...



FIFTEEN YEARS LATER, ANOTHER ROGERS WAS FLYING THE ATLANTIC...

AND ONE DAY IN 1952...

WELL...EVERYTHING COSTS SO MUCH MONEY THESE DAYS, FOR INSTANCE. THINGS YOU'VE GOT TO HAVE, TOO, LIKE FOOD AND CLOTHES...AND TAXES! --WAIT'LL YOU SEE HOW MUCH EVERYBODY HAS TO PAY!

WE PAID TAXES TOO, SON, 25 YEARS AGO...

MAYBE NOT AS MUCH, BUT THE GOVERNMENT DIDN'T NEED AS MUCH MONEY THEN. FROM WHAT YOU'VE TOLD ME ABOUT THE WORLD SITUATION, WE NEED A LOT NOW TO BUILD OUR DEFENSES. THERE'S ONLY TWO WAYS A GOVERNMENT CAN RAISE MONEY...

IT CAN BORROW IT OR RAISE IT BY TAXES. BORROWING IS THE WORST WAY BECAUSE IT INCREASES THE PUBLIC DEBT. FAIR TAXES ARE THE BEST WAY.

MAYBE THAT'S WHAT I MEAN... THEY'RE NOT VERY FAIR NOW.

WELL, IF THOSE FOLKS WHO CAN BEST AFFORD IT AREN'T PAYING THEIR FAIR SHARE, I'LL AGREE WITH YOU. WHAT ELSE IS WRONG?

THERE'S THE RUSSIANS, FOR ONE THING. EVERYBODY'S AFRAID OF WHAT THEY'RE GOING TO DO NEXT!

THAT DOES SOUND SERIOUS... BUT I CAN'T BELIEVE AMERICANS ARE REALLY SCARED..... LOST THEIR NERVE. WE'VE FACED WORSE DANGERS AND LICKED 'EM. NO SIR--I'LL HAVE TO SEE THAT TO BELIEVE IT!

WELL, AMERICANS HAVE LOST SOMETHING. ALMOST EVERY DAY, IT SEEMS, THEY UNCOVER ANOTHER SMALL-TIME CHISELER OR INFLUENCE-PEDDLER DOWN IN WASHINGTON... CHEATING ON TAXES OR GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS!

CORRUPTION, EH?...SON, LET ME TELL YOU ABOUT SOME REALLY BIG-TIME CHISELING...

BACK IN THE TWENTIES--WHEN HARDING WAS PRESIDENT--WE HAD THE BIGGEST CORRUPTION SCANDALS IN OUR HISTORY...CABINET OFFICERS TAKING BRIBES, FOR EXAMPLE. IT TOOK YEARS TO CATCH THE GUILTY ONES...

THE CHISELERS WILL ALWAYS BE WITH US, LOOKING FOR A FAST BUCK. WHEN YOU READ ABOUT THEM BEING CAUGHT, YOU KNOW YOUR GOVERNMENT IS ALERT TO THEM. THE TIME TO WORRY IS WHEN THEY SEEM TO BE GETTING AWAY WITH IT...

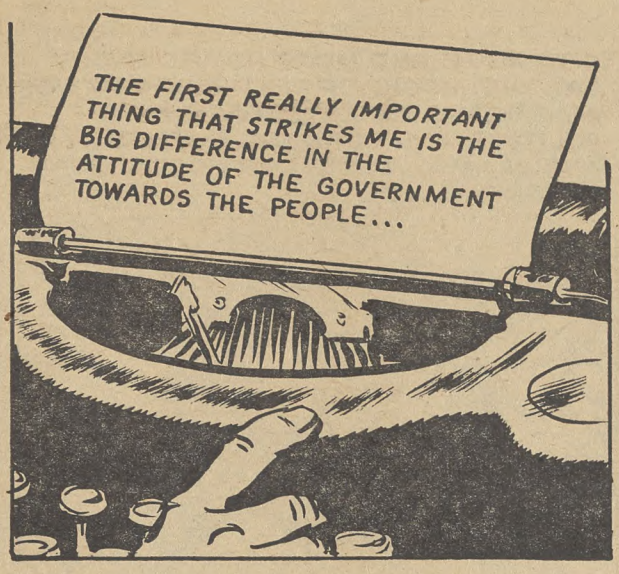
WELL, THAT'S ONE THING THAT HASN'T CHANGED, ANYWAY! SHE'S STILL THE MOST WELCOME SIGHT IN THE WORLD!

WE'LL BE LANDING SOON, DAD. WHAT DO YOU PLAN TO DO?

I'M GOING TO TAKE A LONG LOOK AT THIS COUNTRY OF OURS...JUST FEAST MY EYES FOR AWHILE. THEN I'LL LET YOU KNOW HOW THINGS COMPARE TO WHAT YOU CALLED THE "GOOD OLD DAYS"!

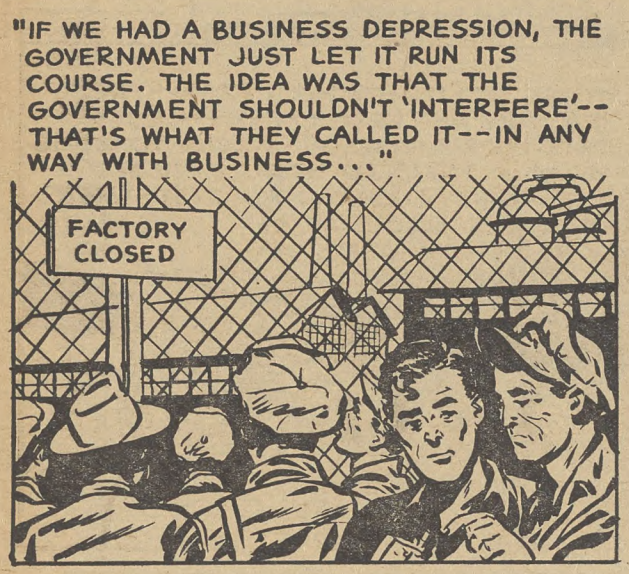
FOR THREE MONTHS, ROGERS, SENIOR, WALKED, DROVE AND RODE AROUND THE COUNTRY... ASKING QUESTIONS AND LISTENING...CATCHING UP ON 25 YEARS OF AMERICAN HISTORY...

AND THEN HE PUT DOWN FOR HIS SON THE WAYS IN WHICH THE UNITED STATES TODAY WAS DIFFERENT FROM THE COUNTRY HE LAST SAW 25 YEARS AGO...



THE FIRST REALLY IMPORTANT THING THAT STRIKES ME IS THE BIG DIFFERENCE IN THE ATTITUDE OF THE GOVERNMENT TOWARDS THE PEOPLE...

"...BACK IN MY DAY, WHEN PEOPLE WERE HUNGRY OR UNEMPLOYED, THE GOVERNMENT FELT NO RESPONSIBILITY TOWARDS THEM. IT WAS LEFT TO CHARITY..."

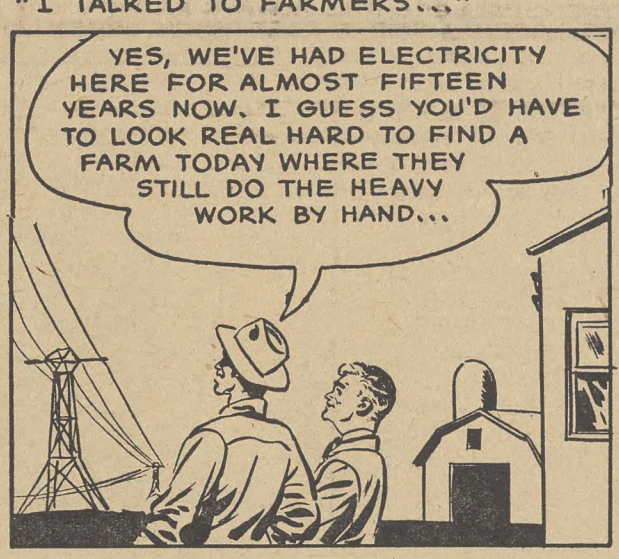


"IF WE HAD A BUSINESS DEPRESSION, THE GOVERNMENT JUST LET IT RUN ITS COURSE. THE IDEA WAS THAT THE GOVERNMENT SHOULDN'T 'INTERFERE'--THAT'S WHAT THEY CALLED IT--IN ANY WAY WITH BUSINESS..."
FACTORY CLOSED

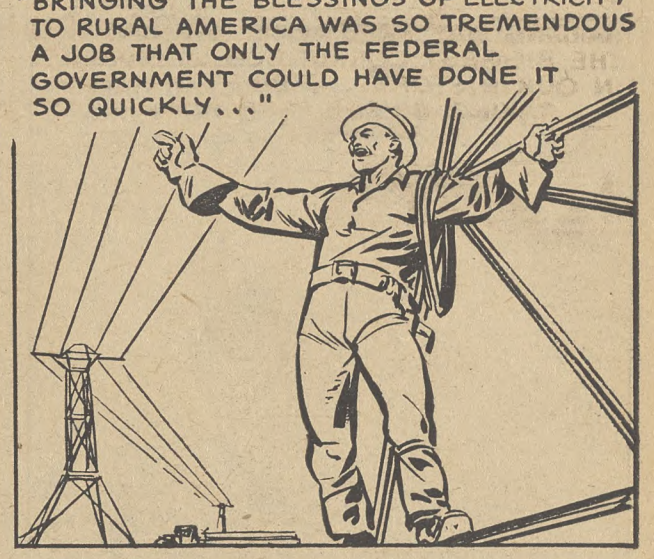
"WHAT A CHANGE TODAY! YOU HAVE DIRECT GOVERNMENT RELIEF IN TIMES OF EMERGENCY AND UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION FOR WORKING PEOPLE..."

"THE GOVERNMENT EVEN HELPS PEOPLE FIND JOBS WHEN THEY NEED THEM..."
UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE OFFICE

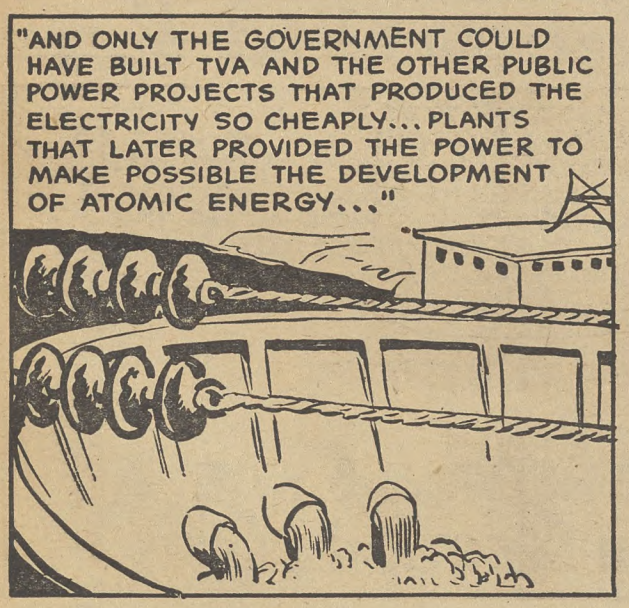
"IN MY DAY, WE NEVER EVEN HEARD OF SOCIAL SECURITY FOR THE OLD FOLKS... OR MINIMUM WAGES AND MAXIMUM HOURS OF WORK... AND MANY OTHER ADVANTAGES YOU TAKE FOR GRANTED TODAY..."



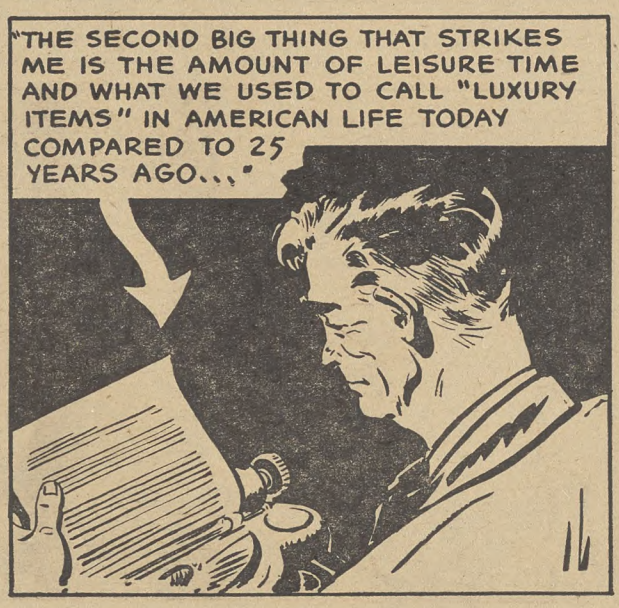
"I TALKED TO FARMERS..."
YES, WE'VE HAD ELECTRICITY HERE FOR ALMOST FIFTEEN YEARS NOW. I GUESS YOU'D HAVE TO LOOK REAL HARD TO FIND A FARM TODAY WHERE THEY STILL DO THE HEAVY WORK BY HAND...



"BRINGING THE BLESSINGS OF ELECTRICITY TO RURAL AMERICA WAS SO TREMENDOUS A JOB THAT ONLY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT COULD HAVE DONE IT SO QUICKLY..."



"AND ONLY THE GOVERNMENT COULD HAVE BUILT TVA AND THE OTHER PUBLIC POWER PROJECTS THAT PRODUCED THE ELECTRICITY SO CHEAPLY... PLANTS THAT LATER PROVIDED THE POWER TO MAKE POSSIBLE THE DEVELOPMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY..."

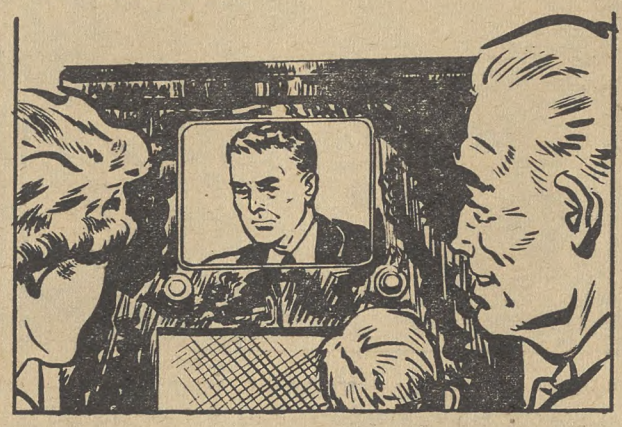


"THE SECOND BIG THING THAT STRIKES ME IS THE AMOUNT OF LEISURE TIME AND WHAT WE USED TO CALL "LUXURY ITEMS" IN AMERICAN LIFE TODAY COMPARED TO 25 YEARS AGO..."

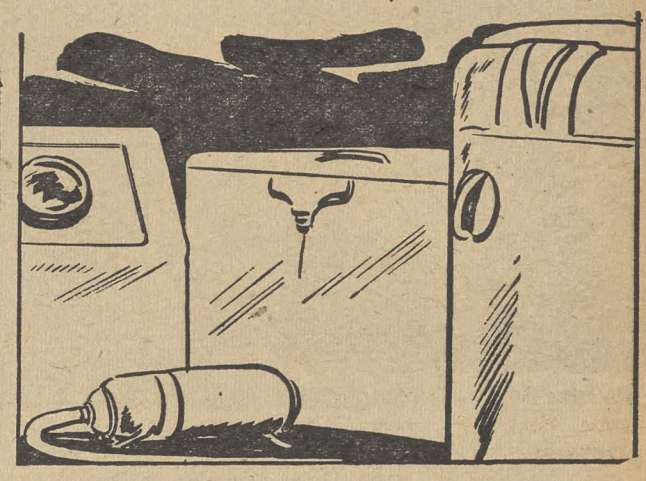
"TODAY THERE'S HARDLY A FAMILY THAT DOESN'T OWN OR HAVE ACCESS TO A CAR... TO TRAVEL, OR JUST TO GO PLACES FOR FUN AND RELAXATION..."

"TODAY THERE'S HARDLY A HOME THAT DOESN'T HAVE AT LEAST ONE RADIO WHICH OFFERS A WIDE RANGE OF FINE ENTERTAINMENT CONTINUOUSLY... FREE FOR THE FLIP OF A SWITCH..."

"INTO MORE AND MORE HOMES EVERY DAY, THE MAGIC OF TELEVISION BRINGS AMERICANS FACE-TO-FACE WITH POLITICS AND CURRENT EVENTS... AND DRAMA, MUSIC AND EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS..."



"THESE AND OTHER ITEMS LIKE WASHING MACHINES AND HOME FREEZERS--HAVE RAISED LIVING STANDARDS AND LIGHTENED HOUSEHOLD BURDENS FOR MILLIONS..."



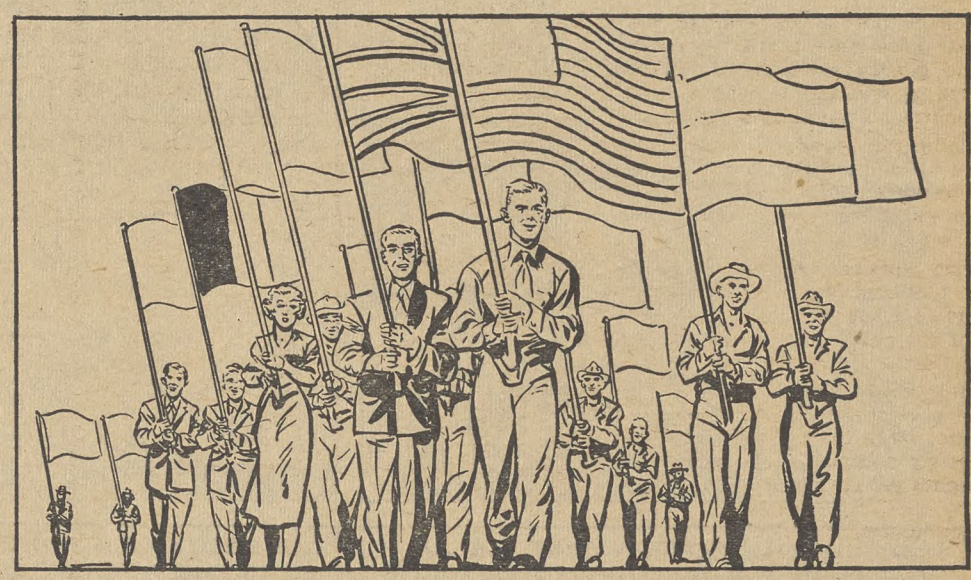
"TWO THINGS HAVE MADE POSSIBLE THIS MIRACLE OF MASS PRODUCTION WHICH BRINGS THE GOOD THINGS OF LIFE WITHIN REACH OF ALL. FIRST IS THE VIGOR OF AMERICAN INDUSTRY..."

"AND SECOND IS THE GREAT GROWTH, IN THE PAST 20 YEARS, OF FREE TRADE UNIONS---A GROWTH WISELY ENCOURAGED BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO INSURE THE WELFARE OF WORKING PEOPLE THROUGH FAIR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING..."

"THESE TWO MIGHTY PARTNERS--- FREE INDUSTRY AND FREE LABOR --- OUT-PRODUCED THE WHOLE WORLD TO BRING VICTORY IN WORLD WAR II, AND STAND TODAY AS A BULWARK AGAINST FUTURE AGGRESSION..."

"IN ADDITION TO THESE MATERIAL GAINS, THE U.S. TODAY COMMANDS THE MORAL LEADERSHIP OF THE WHOLE FREE WORLD..."

"BECAUSE OF THE UNITED NATIONS, FOR THE FIRST TIME IN HISTORY, INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES ARE BEING SETTLED. WITH OUR CONTINUED SUPPORT, THE U.N. IS THE BEST HOPE OF KEEPING THE PEACE..."



NO, SON, NO AMERICAN WANTS TO TURN BACK THE CLOCK TO THE SO-CALLED "GOOD OLD DAYS." WE DON'T EVEN WANT TO STAND STILL. WE'VE GOT TO GO FORWARD...

AND THE BEST WAY TO DO THAT IS TO CONTINUE WHAT AMERICANS HAVE DONE FOR THE PAST 20 YEARS--ELECT AS OUR LEADERS THOSE MEN WHO WILL CONTINUE THE POLICIES WHICH HAVE ALREADY BROUGHT US SO FAR ALONG THE WAY TO PEACE, PROSPERITY AND SECURITY!

"REGISTER AND VOTE ON ELECTION DAY"

Published by the C.I.O. Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

vil Rights Battle

vil rights into South. Miami crowd duck issue, because it was "politi-ratic platform.

st Be Cracked hts' For All

The right to freedom of conscience and pression.

The right to freedom of opportunity.

The states can do much to protect the hts and the human dignities of citizens abolishing local discrimination in hotels, taurants, theaters and transportation.

The states can take the lead in abolish- the fraud of "separate but equal" ool systems based on the segregation the Negro.

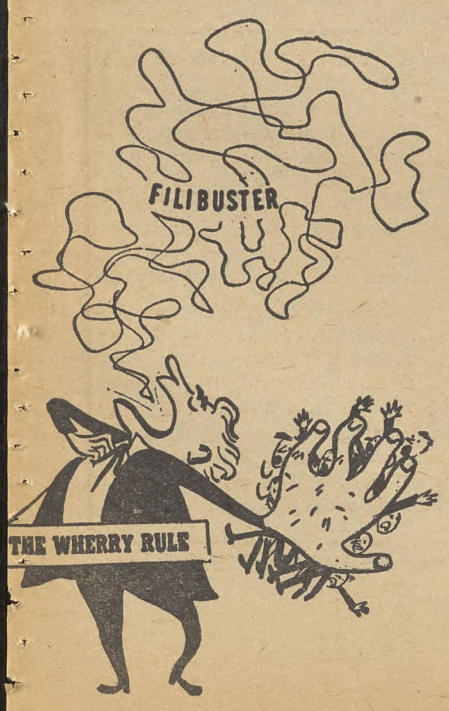
But in the field of employment discrim-tion, where interstate commerce is in-ved and there the conscience of the ole nation is touched, federal action is ential.

The nation cannot be expected to wait the next three generations before the olute and guaranteed right of the mi-ity groups to vote and to participate in other political activities is secured.

The fundamental necessity in approach- the field of civil rights today is to kill Senate filibuster—to destroy the power the minority of Senators to thwart the of the majority by a talkathon.

The Wherry Rule can be changed, as the mocratic platform promises, if a deter-ed effort is made to change it at the inning of the next Congress that meets January, 1953.

Reasonable debate" is desirable for the ate. But a rule allowing a minority to strate the majority, to "talk" bills to th, to let sly politicians pretend to sup-t civil rights yet still tolerate filibusters t destroy civil rights—this is neither irable nor honorable.



Adlai Doesn't Dodge In South

GOV. STEVENSON continued to shatter political ground rules last week as he went into the Deep South to repeat his pledge for full civil rights legislation.

To the cheers of a New Orleans crowd at an unsegregated meeting, Stevenson said:

"As you know, I stand on the Democratic party platform with respect to minority rights. I have only one observation to make on this subject; one that must sadden you as it saddens me. It is that, after 2,000 years of Christianity, we need discuss it at all."

In Nashville, Tenn., he repeated his campaign theme—"we must talk sense to the American people."

"In the South," he said, "this means talking frankly and to the point on the issue of minority rights."

Lashing out at his opponent, who has campaigned in the South without mentioning civil rights in plain words, Stevenson said:

"When you gaze upon the five stars of Eisenhower, you must listen to the voice of Robert A. Taft."

Stevenson's repeated reference to the Democratic party's civil rights plank, sharpened the contrast between it and the GOP plank on that subject.

The Democratic platform promises federal action, under the Constitution, to achieve full civil rights. After pledging continued support of non-segregation in the armed forces and greater activity by the Dept. of Justice, the platform says:

"At the same time we favor federal legislation effectively to secure these rights for everyone:

"1. The right to equal opportunity toward employment.

"2. The right to security of persons.

"3. The right to full and equal participation in the nation's political life, free from arbitrary restraints. We also favor legislation to perfect existing federal civil rights statutes and to strengthen the administrative machinery for the protection of civil rights."

On the other hand, the Republican platform specifically proclaims the doctrine of States' Rights.

Experts in the field of civil rights unanimously agree no civil rights measures will pass the Congress, until the filibuster is outlawed.

The Democratic platform is specific on this point. It says: "In order that the will of the American people may be expressed upon all legislative proposals we urge that action be taken at the beginning of the 83rd Congress to improve congressional procedures so that majority rule prevails."

The Republican platform says nothing about outlawing the filibuster.

Thus, say the experts, their other promises on civil rights mean absolutely nothing.

Jersey CIO Gets Auto Bias Curb

Prodded by the New Jersey CIO Civil Rights Committee, State authorities have agreed to crack down on firms selling auto insurance at higher rates to Negro drivers than to whites.

Some firms have been charging Negroes 20 to 40% more for insurance, according to Arthur Chapin, committee director. The State Banking and Insurance Commissioner has agreed to order auto insurance companies to strike out questions on "color" from insurance application and accident report forms, Chapin reported.

Stevenson Says—

'We Can Make America The Land We Want For All Of Us'

A forecast of an America as "the land we want it to be for each of us" was made by Governor Stevenson in his recent St. Louis address giving a comprehensive summary of his campaign proposals. Here is the text in large part:

I WOULD SPEAK to you tonight about our opportunities. I would speak to you of America's new frontier.

Before exploring this frontier, however, before suggesting what lies ahead in the next 25 years, let us for a moment glance backward 25 years. America in 1927 was living in a fool's paradise. It ended rudely. America came to a stop in 1930.

The whole mighty engine flew apart. Numerous thoughtful men actually questioned whether the system of American capitalism could survive.

Well, it is one of history's odd ironies that today the Republicans are accusing us Democrats of being enemies of free capitalistic enterprise—when the plain truth is that it was the Democratic Party that saved the American capitalistic system under the leadership of Franklin Roosevelt.

Today, America is more prosperous than any other nation in history. Of course, the Old Guard orators are going around the country these days broadcasting gloomy warnings that our prosperity is a fake, that it is based on war, that a depression will come with peace. This is nonsense.

The truth is that our tremendous defense effort is holding us back, gobbling up the goods our people need at home; and when we have at last won through to peace, we shall be able to work at a hundred and one tasks that need doing.

Today not everyone in this country is sharing fairly in our national prosperity. School teachers, pensioners, old people living on savings, widows living on the proceeds of life insurance—these people often cannot make ends meet today because prices have outrun their incomes.

We must stop the price rise—and we know how to do it if only the Old Guard of the Republican Party in Congress will give us a chance.

Others among us are in a still more serious plight. How can we talk about prosperity to the sick who cannot afford proper medical care, to the mentally ill for whom there is no room in our overcrowded institutions?

How can we talk about prosperity to the hundreds of thousands who can find no decent place to live at prices they can afford? And how can we talk prosperity to a sharecropper living on worn-out land, or to city dwellers packed six to a room in an unlit tenement with a garbage-strewn alley for their children's playground?

To these people, national prosperity is a mockery—to the 11 million families in this Nation with incomes of less than $2000 a year.

Do these facts shock you? They shock me. What can we do to improve this situation? There will always be the foolish and improvident. But we are concerned here with much more than that. And what is the proper role of Government?

It seems to me that the answer is this: Government has three duties.

First, Government is an umpire, denying special privilege, insuring equal rights, restraining monopoly and greed and bigotry, making sure that the game is played according to the rules. On this point, the Republicans agree—so long as they write the rules.

Second, Government has the duty of creating an economic climate in which creative men can take risks and reap rewards, so that our economic life will have a continuous flow of fresh ideas and fresh leadership; and, of course, it means the building of solid defenses against the greatest threat to that flow—depression.

—Seaman for LPA
"Into The Wild Blue Yonder"

Third, Government has the duty of helping the people develop their country. By this I mean that there are many undertakings of advantage to the people at large which only the Government can finance.

We can make America the land for all of us which we want it to be for each of us.

Let me remind you of these Democratic policies:

1. To repeal and replace the Taft-Hartley law with a new law which promotes the private settlement of disputes, and to work in other ways for an orderly and fair balancing of the interests between labor and management.

2. Price supports for agriculture at 90 per cent of parity: continuing search for practicable methods of supporting the prices of perishables; continuation and improvement of such other programs as rural electrification and soil conservation.

3. To widen the coverage and exercise the benefits available under our social security system and to honor our obligations to the veteran.

4. To continue our efforts through private, local, State, and Federal action to eradicate discrimination based on race, religion, or national origin.

5. To move ahead on our well-established housing programs.

6. To meet our most pressing educational needs.

7. To combat relentlessly the inflation which strikes so heavily at family budgets.

8. To review our tax policy with an eye to the effect of taxes on incentives to produce and invest, on the ability to consume the full output of the economy, and on the need for a balanced budget.

9. To encourage small business and enforced our anti-monopoly laws.

10. To continue the progressive development and sound conservation of the Nation's land and water resources.

That is our program. We take our stand upon the fundamental principle that the role of Government is, to sum up, just this: to remove the roadblocks put in the way of the people by nature and by greedy men; to release the energies of the people, so that free men may work the miracles of the future as they have worked the miracles of the past.

Jersey CIO Works To Turn Out Big Vote

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

GETTING union members out to register and then to vote in national elections is one of the hardest jobs the labor movement has to tackle.

For, along with the rest of eligible Americans, unionists up to now have failed to vote in anything like the high percentages they do in other democracies.

In past elections, a union did pretty well if even half its members took the trouble to make themselves eligible to vote by registering. Many had a much lower percentage — and not all those who registered voted.

In the coming election, however, there is good reason to expect a record vote will be forthcoming, thanks to the intensive efforts of unions and other groups to get American citizens out to the polls.

All over the country, the CIO's state, county and local Political Action Committees are busy with plans for the Nov. 4 election—holding meetings and rallies, rounding up speakers, mailing out literature, publicizing candidates' records, in a joint drive to induce more union members to take their right to vote seriously.

ONE OF the East's most intensive campaigns is being conducted by the New Jersey PAC among the more than 200,000 CIO members of some 400 locals affiliated to various international unions in this small but heavily industrialized state.

New Jersey PAC is working hard in support of Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman, the Democratic candidates for President and Vice-President, and has unanimously endorsed Archibald Alexander, liberal Democrat, for U. S. Senator. Alexander, former undersecretary of the Army, is opposing Sen. Smith (R.).

A CIO-endorsed bipartisan ticket of seven Democratic and two Republican candidates from nine of the state's 14 Congressional districts includes incumbent Democratic Reps. Howell (4th Dist.), Rodino (10th), Addonizio (11th), Zieminski (13th), Hart (14th), Republican incumbents Case (6th) and Canfield (8th); and two first-time Democratic candidates. Alfred R. Pierce (1st) and Martin Fox (12th).

To mobilize its political forces more effectively in behalf of candidates pledged to support legislative measures in the interests of labor and American citizens as a whole, the New Jersey PAC has worked out a new system to tackle at the roots the problem of bringing out a big union vote.

(Newark News Photo)

"VERY GOOD, ADLAI," shouted James Coates (right foreground with cigar) of CIO Auto Workers Local 669 as Gov. Stevenson made a point at Neptune, N. J., Democratic rally. Stevenson laughed and said "I'd like to take you back to Illinois with me." CIO unionists were out in force at rally, which gave a push to state campaign.

ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER
Has strong CIO backing in New Jersey senatorial contest.

The experiment has created much interest among political observers and its results will be studied closely. Carl Holderman, hard-working president of the New Jersey CIO Council and State PAC director, is enthusiastic about the new system and is sure that its effectiveness will be clearly demonstrated when the votes are counted in November.

He is convinced that some of the credit for the all-time high record of registration can be given to the intensive work done by the State PAC under its new system, particularly in industrial areas where there is a heavy concentration of CIO membership. Holderman also praised the activity of other state-wide organizations which joined the State CIO in pressing the nonpartisan registration drive.

A SURVEY showed a record registration in the state of some 2,700,000. That was nearly 320,000 over the previous all-time high of 2,380,295 persons registered for the 1948 presidential election, Holderman said. A lot of this increase came in districts where many CIO members live. In Essex county alone (Newark) more than 33,700 new registrations were recorded. Bergen county was up 83,300.

In explaining the Jersey PAC's system for mobilizing to the utmost labor's political effectiveness, Holderman said that elections aren't won in the long run by political rallies and speakers alone. They help, of course, particularly in building up the morale of your own people, he said, for it's largely those who are already sold on the candidate or political party holding the rally who come to these affairs.

But what it really takes to get people out, first to register and later to vote, Holderman believes, "is a well-coordinated over-all plan," plus a lot of steady, hard work, speeded up by such machines and gadgets as have been devised to lighten the work of big mailings.

And that's what the New Jersey PAC has developed. Its new system is based on the belief that individuals respond more readily to a personalized appeal, and that they should be contacted frequently to keep them constantly aware of important issues on the political scene and how these affect their personal welfare. Jersey CIO leaders believe their system puts PAC work on a practical, instead of a haphazard, basis.

Remember?

Back in 1932, the last year of Republican rule, 13 million Americans were totally without work. Today, with 62 million Americans working, we have practically full employment.

To show how the system works, Joel Jacobson, executive secretary of the Essex-West Hudson CIO and PAC director of the Newark area, recently took a group of visitors on tour of State CIO headquarters at 722 High St., Newark, where PAC activities were in high gear.

Key machine in the plan is the sorter, a long narrow black contraption with a series of small trays fastened underneath it. A sorter looks something like those strange musical instruments vaudeville actors sometimes play on. If you remember that narrow card punched with small holes that came with your last income tax blank, you'll get a rough notion of how the sorter works.

An individual card for each CIO member is punched with a series of holes which give in code vital information about him useful in political activity. (The holes are punched in the cards by the Remington-Rand Co. from which the machine is rented.) In addition to his name and address, the punched card indicates the city, ward and precinct in which the CIO member lives; the local and international union he belongs to and tells whether or not he is registered.

ANY number of breakdowns either by international or local union or by community, ward and district can be made in a few minutes on the sorting machine.

Main advantages of the use of the sorter in PAC work are the coordination and flexibility it makes possible in a campaign, Jacobson explained. He illustrated this by taking as one example, the case of a big local found to have a high percentage of nonregistered citizens.

By a simple adjustment of the sorting machine, the cards of members of this particular local can be selected from the names of all CIO members in the state, at the rate of 600 a minute, and a special personalized appeal to register can then be sent to them.

Or suppose, Jacobson said, that CIO-PAC is concentrating heavily upon a particular ward and district in a community and wishes to inform all CIO members of an issue which is of vital importance. Again it is a simple matter for the sorting machine to provide the PAC director with the names and addresses of every CIO member in that particular area.

New Jersey PAC hopes ultimately to get the names of all the more than 200,000 CIO members affiliated to some 400 locals in the state recorded on punch cards and is rapidly reaching that goal. It is a tremendous job to get in touch with this number of people, but through the punch card sorter and auxiliary machines, the task is lightened considerably.

THE system will really get its big test as Nov. 4 approaches. A few days before the election, Jacobson said, the entire registered CIO membership will be sorted into wards and districts. Names and addresses will then be transferred to individual index cards, and sets of these cards assembled by wards and districts will be distributed to district PAC workers.

With the name of every registered CIO member in the district at hand, the final job will be to get the CIO worker as well as other eligible voters in his family out to the polls. The record increase in registration in New Jersey this year indicates a record vote on Election Day, and CIO leaders in the state believe that a big vote will mean victory for the candidates backed by labor and other liberal groups.

Harry Kranz, the New Jersey Council's legislative director, stated that more than 80% of the 3,354,598 adults in the state will be eligible to vote in the Nov. 4 election. That compares with only 71.5% eligible to vote in the April primaries and 70.5% eligible to vote last November.

Urging an all-out effort by every civic organization to bring out a record vote in the coming election, Kranz said, "our target should be that every one of the 2,700,000 registered citizens in New Jersey casts a ballot come Nov. 4."

NEW COUNCIL CHIEFS.—Charles Schultz (right), of the Steelworkers and Ross Baum of the Auto Workers talk over state political action drive after their election as president and secretary, respectively, of the Wisconsin CIO Council at recent convention in Oskosh. Both had served as local union presidents.

OIL WORKERS in Hammond, Ind., helped in registration drive that set new record in highly-industrialized Lake County, near Chicago. With OWIU Local 210 Sec. A. D. Herring (first from right), the oil workers joined in recent "register and vote" parade.

PAC Workers On Job In Mountain States

CIO HAS only a few thousand members in the Rocky Mountain states—but in that sparsely-populated area a few thousand men can be of considerable influence.

And in the wide open spaces of the Rocky Mountain West, CIO members are doing their part this year in the campaign to send good men to Washington.

Though few in number, these members realize that their states each send two senators to Washington—just as many as are sent by the heavily-populated Eastern states. They realize that the election of good men from the Mountain States mean good votes for all the nation.

When you think of politics in the Mountain States, bear in mind that most of these states usually have a close balance between Democrats and Republicans and races are always nip-in-tuck. With that in mind, take a look at this year's politics in the Rocky Mountain area:

UTAH—In Utah, CIO members are working hard for the election of Rep. Granger (D.), who has an almost perfect voting record, to the seat now held by Sen. Watkins (R.), who according to The CIO News Voting Record has voted 100% wrong. The fight is a tough one.

CIO members also are striving to reelect Mrs. Reva Beck Bosone (D.), who is being subjected to a typical Utah Republican smear attack.

In the Utah governor's race, labor supports Mayor Slade of Salt Lake City against the incumbent Gov. Bracken Lee. Slade appears to have the edge.

WYOMING — Sen. O'Mahoney (D.), who has for many years been a good friend of working people, is opposed for reelection this year by Gov. Frank A. Barrett (R.). Barrett has never been particularly friendly to labor, so all unions are working for O'Mahoney. This is a tough race.

There's a good chance of replacing unfriendly Rep. Harrison (R.) this year with Dave Rose (D.), present mayor of Casper. Casper is an oil town, and the CIO Oil Workers members there can tell of many occasions in which Rose has proven true friendship. (Wyoming only has one congressman.)

MONTANA — CIO members are supporting Rep. Mansfield (D.) in his race to unseat Sen. Ecton (R.), who has a bad record from labor's viewpoint. Mansfield is a go-getter who has dared fight the Anaconda Copper machine which has for so long dominated Montana. There's a good chance that Supreme Court Justice Metcalf, with labor support, will get Mansfield's congressional post.

COLORADO — CIO members in Colorado are placing primary emphasis this year on the presidential race, since congressional races are not very hot, with one exception.

In the third district, the big Steelworker membership and other CIO groups are supporting John Marsalis (D.), former friendly congressman, in his effort to regain his post from Rep. Chenoweth (R.), who has voted 100% wrong according to CIO standards. The race is close. Two incumbent congressmen, Rodgers (D.), with a fairly good record, and Aspinall (D.) with an excellent record, appear to be safe bets for reelection. Both are getting CIO support.

NEW MEXICO — Labor supports Sen. Chavez (D.) for reelection. He is opposed by Gen. Pat Hurley (R.), and it looks close. CWA is the only CIO union in New Mexico with significant membership.

IDAHO — Interest in Idaho centers on the race of Gracie Post (D.) for Congress, opposing incumbent Rep. Wood (R.), whose voting record is all wrong.

Getting the voters registered and getting the vote out on election day are the major goals of CIO people in the Mountain States. They are working with very little money — since their small locals and city and state councils have very limited resources. They are working against mighty big money stacked up on the reactionary side.

CIOers Working Hard—

Texans Love Politics And Fight's Hot And Heavy

By RAY DAVIDSON
Special Correspondent

CIO MEMBERS in Texas have been working patiently for a good many years on this problem of politics—and they calculate it'll take a good many more years of hard work before Texas can be safely counted in the liberal column.

But progress is being made.

Progress is being made, for example, in the tough fight to recover the Democratic party from its Dixiecrat captors. A little progress is being made toward electing better men to office.

One sample of this progress may be found in the fact that a CIO member has won the Democratic nomination for Congress and is considered almost certainly in.

JACK B. Brooks, CIO Newspaper Guild member from Beaumont, Tex., won the Democratic nomination for Congress in Martin Dies' old district. He is the only Democratic congressional nominee facing Republican opposition this year, but it is considered unlikely that Brooks can lose.

Brooks' district includes Texas' fabulous Jefferson County, a rich oil refining area, and a string of "piney woods" farming counties. In Jefferson County, refining of oil is the major business and nearly every refinery employe carries a CIO Oil Workers card. It was the Oil Workers who put Brooks in. Brooks previously served two terms in the Texas Legislature.

THIS congressman replaces J. M. Combs, who had a moderately good voting record and is voluntarily retiring. Combs was elected a few years back when these same Oil Workers persuaded Martin Dies that it would be best that he retire.

The OWIU also takes credit for another congressional victory in the Democratic primaries. Rep. Thompson, a man with a passable record from labor's standpoint, was opposed in the primaries by Sheriff Buckshot Lane of Wharton County. Lane received his financial backing from the fabulously wealthy and fantastically reactionary H. R. Cullen of Houston. Thompson barely squeezed through the first primary and went into the runoff primary with only a prayer of victory.

The Oil Workers went to Thompson's rescue, delivered an 18-1 vote in his favor in heavily populated precincts in Texas City, plus some votes in other areas. Thompson can thank CIO for the fact that he is going back to Washington. Maybe he will remember this in future votes.

CIO members helped save Rep. Patman's seat in Congress. An avowed Dixiecrat had tried to beat this veteran legislator.

Elsewhere, there was little change in the nature of the Texas congressional delegation. As a whole, the delegation remains rather bad, from labor's standpoint.

CIO members in Texas are much more concerned with another phase of the fight for good government—the fight to liberate the Democratic party from its Dixiecrat captors. It is tough to accomplish this job. It means getting people to attend precinct party conventions, get elected to county conventions and then to state conventions.

How interested are the CIO members in precinct party conventions? Well, they're interested by the thousands. They turn out in scores at each precinct convention. Of course the Dixiecrats do likewise, with the result that in Texas there are probably more people attending party conventions than anywhere else in the nation. Ten thousand people participated in precinct conventions in Dallas county recently, for example.

THUS far, the Dixiecrats retain control of the Democratic party in Texas. But this game of attending precinct conventions and fighting the Dixiecrats gets to be a sport as well as a crusade. More and more CIO members turn out each year. It's a safe bet that not many more years will pass until the Dixiecrats are driven out of the party.

In the presidential election coming up, CIO members in Texas are nervous. They breathed a bit easier when the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket got on the ballot. Then when a phony "Texas Democratic" party tried to put Eisenhower on the ticket under that name, liberals got a court injunction against it.

Meanwhile, CIO members are quietly mobilizing the votes they have to be sure that CIO-endorsed Stevenson gets at least the votes of CIO members and their families.

Tremendous progress has been made in recent years in political action by CIO members in Texas. Harmonious PAC committees work in every area where there is substantial membership. Intensive work has been done in studying the issues, getting poll taxes paid, and encouraging participation in party conventions.

Politics are always hot in Texas. Texans love politics like Brooklynites love baseball. Liberal and reactionary forces both put a lot of effort into the battle. Whoever wins in Texas, you can know for doggone sure they worked for the win.

Tweedledum, Tweedledee Get Togther

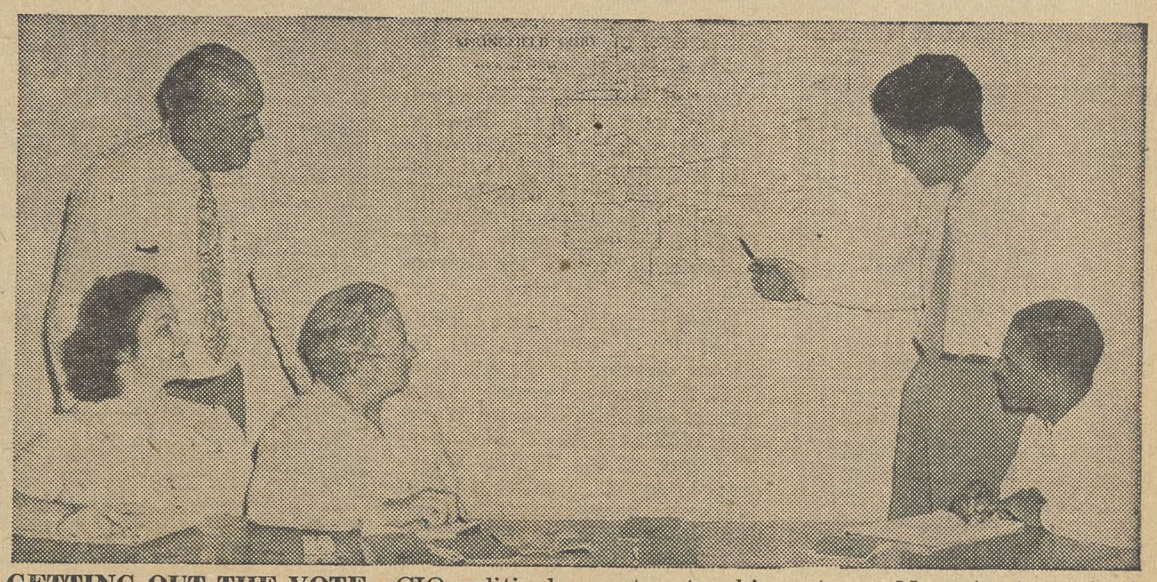
PECULIAR twists in Texas political life are not a novelty, but the New Newspaper Service, has just exposed the newest and worst twist.

The agency, which serves dailies published by the AFL Typographical Union, reports big business groups backing Eisenhower have formed a political holding company through which they control both parties from one law office.

Separated by only 15 feet are the state chairmen of the Republican and Democratic parties, both backing Eisenhower. The chairmen are law partners in the firm of Lane & Savage in Dallas.

The senior partner is the Republican boss, the junior partner the Democratic boss. Both represent oil, manufacturing and banking interests, all plugging for Eisenhower.

Both lawyers are campaigning for the general though they ostensibly represent opposing political parties.



GETTING OUT THE VOTE—CIO political action workers in Springfield, O., like in many U. S. cities, are breaking down registration lists for calls by blockworkers to get out a big vote on Nov. 4. At right is Ray Ross, CIO Auto Workers Region 2A director, outlining tasks to a group of UAW PAC workers.

IUE Ups Per Capita To Aid Organizing

THE WINDUP of the CIO Electrical Workers fourth convention saw Pres. James B. Carey and Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett re-elected by acclamation and approval, in modified form, of an increased per capita to the international union.

Carey is also CIO secretary-treasurer. Hartnett is a member of Local 113 at the Philadelphia Exide Battery plant. They were returned to their second two-year terms.

The hotly-debated per capita issue, which dominated sessions of the Pittsburgh convention, was settled by a 2 to 1 roll call vote which increased international per capita by 15c, from 75c to 90c monthly. A proposal for an increase to $1 had been turned down by a close vote earlier in the convention.

Increased cost of operation and long-range organization and bargaining drives were cited as reasons for the increase. A spokesman for the opposition said he and his colleagues would back the plan as adopted.

The last day of the convention brought one of the longest floor demonstrations, as IUE delegates voted 100% endorsement of the Stevenson-Sparkman Fair Deal ticket.

In comment, Carey warned that American Communists, working through the self-styled Progressive Party, were seeking to defeat Stevenson by trying to throw a few closely-contested states to the GOP.

In 1948, he recalled, the Progressive vote was just enough to give the GOP the electoral votes of such states as New York, Michigan and Maryland.

"We cannot afford," Carey warned, "for one second to take it for granted that the Progressive Party and its Communist masters cannot once again throw such states into the Republican camp."

Citing Henry Wallace's admission of CP-control of the third party, Carey declared that "anyone who votes for the Progressive Party is voting with his eyes wide open knowing that his ballot is being cast for a Communist organization and a Communist purpose."

COMMON PROBLEMS of American and German unionists were discussed by CIO officials in Washington with two representatives of DGB, German trade union federation. In session (front row, from left), Heinrich Deist, a union member on Bochum steel company management board; Michael Ross, CIO Intl. Affairs Dept. director; Erich Potthoff, DGB research director; (back row), Meyer Bernstein, USA-CIO staff; John Brophy, and Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO Education and Research Dept.

Dixiecrats Condemned—

'Race-Baiting' Flayed By Georgia CIO Meet

"RACE-BAITING is anti-Christian, anti-American, and contrary to the best traditions of our state," delegates to the Georgia CIO Council's 13th annual convention declared.

Their ire had been aroused by scurrilous racial literature, being circulated in Georgia under the signature of Gov. Herman Talmadge, a Dixiecrat who has refused to work for the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket and who introduced Gen. Eisenhower in Atlanta.

The delegates, demanding a "clean deal" in Georgia politics, called this type of literature "the last desperate scheme of politicians anxious to keep the public ignorant of their real backers by laying down a smoke screen of confusion. It is the last resort of politicians without convictions and with no real issues."

David J. McDonald, CIO Steelworkers secretary-treasurer, lashed at Gen. Eisenhower, Republican presidential nominee, at a banquet attended by over 500 delegates and friends. "The General," McDonald said, "is unacquainted with the facts of domestic politics. Either by design or ignorance, he has sold out to Taft and the Old Guard."

The delegates endorsed unreservedly the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket, and urged Talmadge and his cohorts to get off the fence. "The Republican party," said the resolution, "offers little to the southern worker at this time. It is the party of dissident Democrats and outright Dixiecrats . . . It is the party of big business and special privilege."

The delegates also opposed a Talmadge-conceived plan for altering the state's constitution to put control of all election in the hands of the governor.

Council Pres. W. H. Crawford, Steelworkers regional director, said the proposal "would write the iniquitous county unit system into the state constitution." Defeating it in the election, he said, was second only in importance to victory for Stevenson.

Other convention speakers were: R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization; G. R. Hathaway, secretary-treasurer of the Packinghouse Workers; William Pollock, secretary-treasurer of the Textile Workers; Leonard Woodcock, Auto Workers regional director; and Dir. John V. Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee in the South.

Crawford was reelected council president and David S. Burgess was reappointed executive secretary.

W. H. CRAWFORD (left), reelected president of Georgia CIO Council, greets Secy.-Treas. William Pollock, Textile Workers.

CIO Joins In Free World Celebration Of UN Day, Festival Of Brotherhood

By MILTON PLUMB

NEXT FRIDAY, Oct. 24, the people of the free world will unite in a festival of brotherhood.

The occasion celebrated in at least 20 countries will be United Nations Day, the seventh anniversary of the entry into force of the UN Charter. It is the first truly world-wide celebration held by people of all nations, races and creeds.

In this country, under the sponsorship of the National Citizens Committee for UN Day, this year's observance calls for participation by community groups, school groups, labor groups, including CIO, and farm groups in a nationwide program of "Parties-with-a-purpose." Highlighting each party will be the sending of special UN Day gift packages and greetings to people in other countries.

Last year more than 4400 communities participated in some form of activity marking this day and reaffirming the purposes of peace and international goodwill for which the UN was founded. The goal this year is to send 100,000 practical gifts and over a million greeting cards overseas.

In this way, the people of the United States are giving their answer to attacks upon the UN in recent months by such reactionaries in Congress as Sen. Bricker (R. O.) and other isolationists, as well as by irresponsible and misguided "patriotic" groups.

Although some Legionnaires have been in the forefront of recent attacks on the UN and its agencies, the American Legion itself is one of the more than 100 organizations which are sponsors of the National Citizens Committee for UN Day. Oddly enough, so are the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, both of which have opposed adequate appropriations to carry out UN goals.

The participation of these groups is an indication of the strength and vitality of the UN ideal—the belief that there is an underlying moral unity of mankind that can bind nations together in a common effort for peace, freedom and universal human welfare. This concept has been the basis of all CIO activities in the field of international affairs.

Labor's solid support of the UN Day program is indicated by the fact that, besides the CIO, the committee's sponsoring groups include the AFL, the International Association of Machinists, American Federation of Teachers and the Railway Labor Executives Association, spokesman for the Railroad Brotherhoods. CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the committee's executive board.

"Every CIO State, City and County Industrial Union Council should urge participation in this community activity," CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood wrote to each council head.

His Platform Is Peace

Aircraft Pay Goals Set By UAW Meet

A COMPLETE economic collective bargaining program for aircraft workers was adopted by 200 delegates to the UAW-CIO fourth annual National Aircraft Conference in Chicago recently.

The delegates represented 200,000 aircraft workers from all over the United States and Canada.

The program is aimed primarily at the wage differential suffered by aircraft workers in comparison to auto workers doing aircraft work and the insecurity of employment resulting from the "boom-or-bust" nature of the industry.

John W. Livingston, UAW vice-president and director of the Aircraft Dept., said the conference received a full report of the award of the presidential arbitration panel in the recent North American case. The panel established record wage levels for West Coast airframe workers and endorsed the UAW argument that a wage inequity exists.

The program calls for wage equity and a severance pay program, based upon benefits of $150 for each one year's service at the time of separation from employment. The plan calls for full company payment with added provisions in cases of death or disability.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE PRESIDENTIAL campaign is roaring on and growing in intensity. The General comes out for the oil interests in stating that he would take the tidelands from the Nation, where they belong, and turn them back to the special interests in the states, whose only concern is their own selfish desire to exploit these reserves for personal profit.

Poor boy Richard Nixon continues to rave about his fight against communism. Why is it that up to this time he fails to mention the association of his fellow Republican expert, John F. Dulles, with Alger Hiss? We challenge Mr. Nixon to explain and bring to light this association. It will also be interesting when poor little Richard makes available to the public the report on his income.

Organized Labor will measure those seeking top office in our country by their voting record. Mr. Nixon has a 100% record against Labor. Don't be fooled by his soap opera speeches, his voting record speaks loudly enough for him.

★

ORGANIZED LABOR is very much aware that Communism made its greatest headway during the Hoover Administration directed by the special interests. Communism in the U. S. gained its strength under the shortsighted policies that led to mass unemployment and starvation, things upon which the ugly body of Communism thrives. Since the New Deal and the Fair Deal, the Communist strength has diminished tremendously. The CIO has stood in the forefront in the battle against Communism. Where were the Nixons and McCarthys when the real battle was on?

Let us keep our eyes on the economic issues and decide what is in the best interest of the people, your family, fellow workers and friends. The Republican party does not stand for the betterment of the American people; their concern are the special interests.

In the interest of yourself, your family and your union, make sure you vote—let your voice be heard. Activize your fellow-worker, your neighbor, your community. This is your fight and come Nov. 4 we must win equal opportunity for all the people regardless of race, color, or creed; development and protection of our resources in the national interest, not special interest; and the foresight to establish international policies that will reflect our democracy to all the world that will bring about a sound, lasting peace.

THE WRITER had the pleasure of attending and addressing the convention of the CIO Electrical Workers in Pittsburgh. The IUE is doing a real job in the electrical industry, fighting such tough management as General Electric, and removing the hard core of Communist-controlled groups in the industry. The delegates were a fine group and enthusiastically supported the CIO program in political action and general policies.

I also attended and spoke at the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers convention in Cleveland. I presented some of the issues facing each and every one of us on election day. The delegates were aware of the inept and corrupt government we had during the twenties through 1932. I reminded them to keep the economic issues squarely in view, to judge the parties on their economic stand. The delegates voted full support of the CIO and its program.

This Union has fully recovered from its trials of several years ago, Pres. Grogan and his associate officers are to be congratulated on a job well done. The union has been advocating a shipbuilding program that will be in the interest and welfare of the nation in peace and war, one that help us meet any crisis.

★

SEC.-TREAS. John Lawson, of the CIO Stone Workers, reports that in a representation election at Attapulgus Clay Co., Bainbridge, Ga., the workers favored the USAPWA-CIO by a vote of 149 to 51 against, 12 challenged. Intl. Rep. Edward Anders was in full charge of this campaign.

Pres. Morris Pizer, CIO Furniture Workers, reports the following representation election victories: New Haven Casket Co., New Haven, Conn., UFWA-CIO 14, no union 13; Burton Dixie, Brooklyn, N. Y., UFWA-CIO 127, no union 47; Atlantic Furniture Products, Baltimore, Md., UFWA-CIO 32, no union 22; Washington Cabinet Corp., Milton, Pa., UFWA-CIO 68, C&J-AFL 4; Henderson Quality Shops, Henderson, Ky., UFWA-CIO 34, no union 10; Hexton Furniture, Grand Rapids, Mich., UFWA-CIO 39, no union 11; O'Cedar-American Marietta Co., Chicago, Ill., UFWA-CIO 79, no union 74.

Cavalier Corp., Chattanooga, Tenn., UFWA-CIO 263, Ind. Un. 166, no union 41; Oklahoma Furniture, Guthrie, Okla., UFWA-CIO 261, no union 72; Glen of California, Los Angeles, Calif., UFWA-CIO 19, no union 9, AFL 8; Royal Metal Furniture, Los Angeles, UFWA-CIO 28, no union 6.

The UFWA-CIO achieved recognition in the following plants without elections: Hodor Furniture, Newark, N. J., 52 workers; Phoenix Closet, Newark, 95 workers; American Radio & TV, Little Rock, Ark., 125 workers; California Couch Co., 19 workers, and Merit Furniture, 26 workers, both in Los Angeles.

Dist. Dir. Al Whitehouse, CIO Steelworkers Dist. 25, reports a representation victory at New Idea Div., Avco Corp., Coldwater O., by this vote: eligible 1315, USA-CIO 838, AFL 275, Independent 8. USA Rep. Ray Sanders and CIO Rep. Frank Lasick handled the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Joe Walsh reports a 64 to 0 representation election victory for the USA-CIO at the Sterling Engineering Co. plant, Wilkes-Barre, Pa. USA Reps. Thomas J. Cann and Patrick Shovlin directed the drive.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a representation election at the Standard Engineering Co. plant, Fort Dodge, Ia., by a vote of 26 to 24 no union. UAW Rep. Bob Roberts conducted the campaign.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that the AFL's Pulp and Sulphite Workers ran into a snag when they tried to raid the Cleveland Container Plant, Memphis, Tenn., where the CIO Paperworkers have a contract. When the NLRB election votes were counted, UPA-CIO had 242 and the raiding AFL union only 20, a shellacking of 12 to 1.

Reg. Dir. Ed McCrone reports that workers of the Ross and Roberts Co., Bridgeport, Conn., favored the CIO Electrical Workers by a vote of 26 to 23 no union. IUE Field Rep. Tom Williams handled the campaign.

Pres. Al Viller, West Virginia CIO Council, reports that the CIO Glassworkers won a representation election at the Penn Sand Glass Corp., Berkely Springs, W. Va., by the following vote: eligible 217, CIO Glassworkers 129, no union 86, challenged none. Glassworkers Rep. Enoch Rush directed the drive.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports a tremendous representation election victory for the CIO Shoeworkers at the International Shoe Co., Batesville, Ark. The vote: eligible 471, USWA-CIO 285, no union 154, challenged 1, void 1; USWA Reps. John Spikes and John Wiggs and Dir. Tucker handled the campaign.

Shoe Unions Deadlocked On Big Pact

PACESETTING negotiations of the CIO Shoe Workers with the big International Shoe Co. were deadlocked last week, 10 days before expiration of contracts covering 20,000 workers.

The company, largest under contract with the USWA-CIO, has offered nothing in a series of bargaining sessions in St. Louis, reported Russell Taylor, union president.

The shoe workers are asking a 20c hourly wage increase, a $1 hourly minimum wage, three weeks vacations after 15 years and other contract improvements.

International Shoe also is deadlocked in talks with the AFL Boot & Shoe Workers, and negotiators for both the CIO and AFL unions held a joint session. They pledged full support to whatever action is necessary to get satisfactory contract settlements. Negotiations were continuing.

The CIO union's contract expires on Oct. 25, while the AFL agreement runs out five days later. The USWA-CIO represents 13,000 of the workers in 31 plants and the AFL 7,000 in 16 plants.

Bargaining with International Shoe sets the pace for the CIO union's contracts with other big shoe manufacturers. The International Shoe contract covers 31 plants in Missouri, Illinois, Alabama and New Hampshire.

A 37-member USWA-CIO committee, representing all locals, was conducting the negotiations, with Pres. Taylor and several other international union officials participating.

Gas, Coke Signs At Cement Firm

Determination and militancy paid off for Local 314, CIO Chemical Workers, which last week reported reaching agreement with the Huron Portland Cement Co. of Detroit.

The new contract calls for a 5-cent-an-hour raise, continuation of the cost-of-living escalator clause for another year, six paid holidays and paid vacations ranging from one week for one year's work to three weeks after 15 years.

Tune In On CIO-TV

PEOPLE'S POLITICAL POLL

Station	City and State	Time
WSB-TV	Atlanta, Ga.	10:30 P.M., Thursday
WAAM	Baltimore, Md.	7:15 P.M., Tuesday
WAFM-TV	Birmingham, Ala.	10:15 P.M., Friday
WTTV	Bloomington, Ind.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WNAC-TV	Boston, Mass.	6:45 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 25
WENR-TV	Chicago, Ill.	8:30 P.M., Thursday
WCPO-TV	Cincinnati, O.	1:00 P.M., Sunday
WXEL	Cleveland, O.	9:30 P.M., Monday
WTVN	Columbus, O.	6:30 P.M., Sunday
WFAA	Dallas, Tex.	1:30 P.M., Sunday
WOC-TV	Davenport, Iowa	10:45 P.M., Tuesday
WHIO-TV	Dayton, O.	4:15 P.M., Saturday
WFEL-TV	Denver, Colo.	10:15 P.M., Tuesday
		10:15 P.M., Monday, Nov. 3
WICU	Erie, Pa.	7:00 P.M., Monday
KPRC-TV	Houston, Tex.	5:30 P.M., Friday
WJAC-TV	Johnstown, Pa.	6:30 P.M., Friday
WDAF-TV	Kansas City, Mo.	5:30 P.M., Tuesday
WGAL-TV	Lancaster, Pa.	4:00 P.M., Saturday, Oct. 25
KECA-TV	Los Angeles, Cal.	9:00 P.M., Monday
WHAS-TV	Louisville, Ky.	7:00 P.M., Tuesday
WTJV	Miami, Fla.	6:15 P.M., Friday, Oct. 31
WNHC-TV	New Haven, Conn.	12:00 P.M., Sunday
WABD	New York, N. Y.	8:15 P.M., Thursday
KMTV	Omaha, Neb.	10:30 P.M., Friday
WFIL-TV	Philadelphia, Pa.	6:45 P.M., Friday
WDTV	Pittsburgh, Pa.	8:00 P.M., Tuesday
WTVR	Richmond, Va.	6:45 P.M., Saturday, Nov. 1
WHAM-TV	Rochester, N. Y.	6:00 P.M., Wednesday
KSL-TV	Salt Lake City, Ut.	10:00 P.M., Thursday
KFMB-TV	San Diego, Cal.	2:45 P.M., Saturday
KGO-TV	San Francisco, Cal.	6:30 P.M., Monday
KING-TV	Seattle, Wash.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WSYR-TV	Syracuse, N. Y.	2:45 P.M., Sunday
WKTV	Utica, N. Y.	6:45 P.M., Tuesday
WTTG	Washington, D. C.	9:30 P.M., Friday

ISSUES OF THE DAY

City	Station	Day	Hour
Ames	WOI-TV	Tuesday	10:30 p.m.
Birmingham	WBRC-TV	Mon. and Thur.	10:15 p.m.
Boston	WBZ-TV	Saturday	check papers
Chicago	WBKB-TV	Tuesday	10:45 p.m.
Cincinnati	WCPO-TV	Sunday	1:15 p.m.
Columbus	WTVN-TV	Wednesday	6:30 p.m.
Davenport	WOC-TV	Tuesday	10:00 p.m.
Dayton	WHIO-TV	Tuesday	6:15 p.m.
Erie	WICU	Friday	7:00 p.m.
Huntington	WSAZ-TV	Sunday	1:30 p.m.
Minneapolis	WCCO-TV	Sunday	1:00 p.m.
Omaha	WOW-TV	Friday	6:15 p.m.
	KMTV	Saturdays	4:45 p.m.
Philadelphia	WFIL-TV	Thursday	6:45 p.m.

UAW-CIO PROGRAMS

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther will make two radio and two television broadcasts before Election Day. The TV broadcasts are slated for the basic CBS-TV network, on the two Sundays prior to Election Day, Oct. 26 and Nov. 2. Both broadcasts will be at 5:30 p. m. EST. The radio broadcasts over CBS-Radio are scheduled for 8:30 p. m. EST on Thursdays, Oct. 23 and Oct. 30.

10c Hike At Atomic Plant

CIO CHEMICAL Workers at the world's largest atomic plant in Oak Ridge, Tenn., won a 10c-an-hour, across-the-board wage increase last week, two hours before the 3200 workers were to take a strike vote.

GCCW Pres. Elwood Swisher said the wage increase, the union won three wage-reopening clauses in the three-year contract, improvements in job bidding, a dues checkoff and other gains.

Swisher and Dist. 9 Dir. Elwood D. Hain joined with Local Pres. Jerry A. George in the negotiations. The dispute has been pending since June. The union members voted later to ratify the contract with the United Carbide Corp., which operates the plant.

ICFTU Protests To Uruguay

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions had vigorously protested the violation of trade union rights by the Uruguayan government.

A sharp note of protest from Gen. Secy. J. H. Oldenbroek of the ICFTU was handed to the Uruguayan minister in Brussels.

More than 500 Uruguayan trade unions are now jailed, the ICFTU declares, while many more have been "forced underground" by restrictive governmental measures. The right of assembly has been suspended as well, the ICFTU charged, in a series of steps taken to counter a general movement for support of Montevideo tramwaymen, on strike for implementation of wage increases agreed to in 1951.

Story Of Ship, The Union That Came Back

By FRED ROSS

THIS IS the story of a union that wouldn't be counted out.

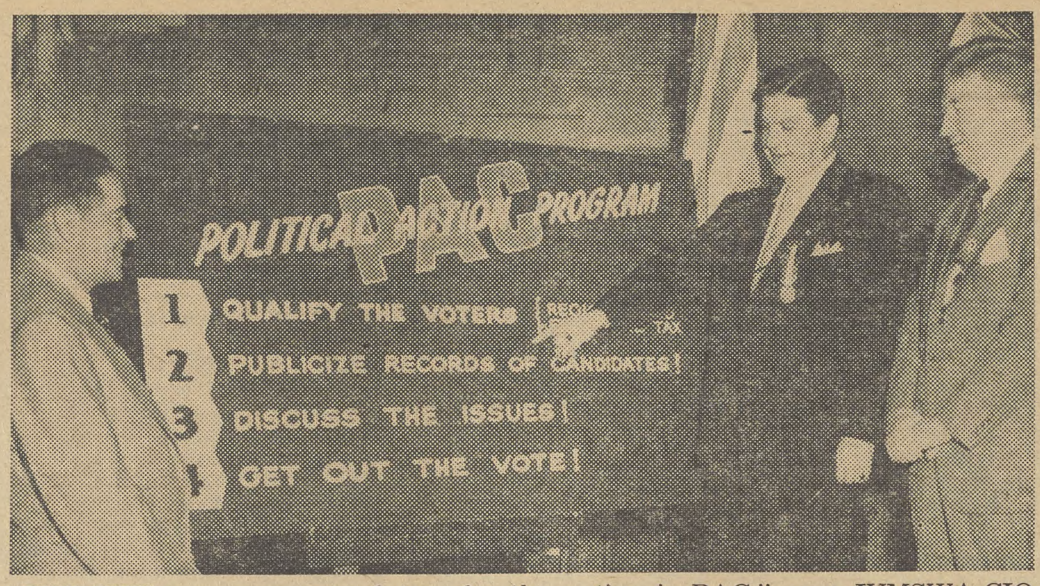
"We were down, but not out at our 1951 Boston convention," said a delegate to the 16th convention of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers at Cleveland last week.

But since that 1951 convention when John J. Grogan, former vice president, was elected president, the membership has increased from 50,000 to 78,000, and the union's deficit has been reduced from $91,000 in July 1951 to $36,000.

Grogan and the other officers chosen at Boston — Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood and Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis—work as a team, and were expected to be re-elected at the closing session of the Cleveland convention.

Nobody made any bones about IUMSWA-CIO being down—and almost out—almost two years ago.

"That Boston convention saw the fortunes of this union at their lowest point," the committee on the officers' report told the Cleveland convention.



"THE KEY to a prosperous future for the nation is PAC," says IUMSWA-CIO Pres. John J. Grogan as he points to a poster at the union's 16th convention. Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood (left) and Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis smile agreement. Note the four points on the poster, which was displayed on the Cleveland convention hall platform where all delegates could see it.

NORTH AND SOUTH agree election of Gov. Stevenson will benefit the nation as delegates Benjamin Maiatico, Camden, and Ray Radovich, New Orleans, shake hands.

The end of World War II had seen the collapse of the shipbuilding industry. There had been a costly showdown strike at the East Coast yards of Bethlehem Steel in 1947.

Since the Boston meeting, IUMSWA has raised the wage pattern for standard skilled mechanics in East Coast yards from $1.60 to $2 an hour, and other rates correspondingly. In new ship construction about half of the workers are skilled mechanics, and in ship repairing more than half are skilled mechanics.

Not only that, but IUMSWA also boosted the number of paid holidays to six or more in a number of contracts, won 11 plant-wide representation elections and five unit representation elections and rang up a perfect score of 13 victories in 13 union shop elections.

"We told our incoming officers and the general executive board that it was their job to save the union," said the committee on the officers' report. "The officers and the board members accepted that staggering challenge. We can be proud of the way they have discharged this responsibility."

Grogan, however, told the convention that the successful comeback was due to the militancy of the members on strike six months at Todd-Johnson Dry Dock, New Orleans, and the Alabama Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Corp., Mobile, Ala., in 1951—plus the financial support given them by other locals.

The strike won an increase in standard mechanics rates from $1.60 to $1.87 an hour, and corresponding pay hikes all along the line.

The Gulf Coast walkout, Grogan said, saw the strikers "sacrifice their homes, washing machines and cars" and broke the treasuries of Local 18 (Mobile) and 29 (New Orleans).

"We won," he continued, "because the other locals dug down in their pockets to keep the wheels turning. We salute these strikers and the women back of them; they were responsible for the victory in the recent negotiations."

The victory was the $2 hourly rate for standard mechanics and other increases won from five firms including Bethlehem, Todd and Maryland Dry Dock on the East Coast.

IUMSWA girded itself to gain Wage Stabilization Board approval for these increases.

The union also charted its course for even greater accomplishments for the next two years. Its program calls for:

- Greater political activity.
- Elimination of more wage inequities under direction of the executive board.
- Extending the union shop already won in 84 contracts.
- Organizing the unorganized shops.

And to assure the success of IUMSWA's program, the delegates voted 150 to 43 to up the monthly per capita from $1 to $1.25 and to set the minimum local dues at $3 monthly with further dues increase subject to the approval of the international executive board.

Prospects for the continued prosperity of the shipbuilding industry and IUMSWA are bright. Although a large number of ships will be built in Navy yards where the union holds no contracts, Undersec. of the Navy Francis P. Whitehair brought cheers from the delegates when he said:

"The Navy's shipbuilding program for the current year includes three destroyers, two ocean escorts, 30 mine sweepers and 350 landing crafts. These awards to private yards point the way to a healthy shipbuilding industry."

The convention also adopted resolutions containing a 10-point program for making jobs on U. S. Merchant Marine ships more attractive, asking for the curtailment of the Military Sea Transportation Service, urging Congress to stop transfer of American flag ships to foreign registry, condemning the Navy Dept. for expanding its facilities, and calling for strengthening the U. S. shipbuilding industry.

Shoe Workers Support Adlai

The eight-man executive committee of the CIO Shoe Workers, representing 75,000 members, last week voted unanimously to endorse the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket. The committee's action, taken at a meeting in St. Louis, was based on the record of the candidates and the parties.

'Workers In Louisiana Back Adlai'

DESPITE Louisiana Gov. Kennon's declaration for Gen. Eisenhower, workers in the Pelican State will vote for Gov. Stevenson.

Not only will the IUMSWA members cast their ballots for the Illinois governor but also the members of other CIO unions and AFL unions, according to Ray Radovich, delegate to the shipyard union's convention from New Orleans.

And Radovich is in a position to know the Louisiana politicai scene, for this year he defeated six other Democratic candidates to become the first labor representative to serve in the Louisiana House.

Radovich campaigned at night because his daylight hours were taken up helping to conduct the six-month strike at the Todd-Johnson Dry Dock which ended victoriously for IUMSWA.

He said most tenant farmers of the northern, non-industrialized area of Louisiana also are for Stevenson and tidelands oil is an issue only for Gov. Kennon, the oil companies that supported him—and Gen. Eisenhower.

Radovich is only one of many IUMSWA members who have followed the pattern of intense political activity set by their president, John L. Grogan, who is a Hoboken, N. J., councilman, and who served 12 years in the New Jersey Legislature.

Haywood Slashes Ike As Shipbuilders Support Adlai

THE CIO Shipbuilding Workers last week endorsed Gov. Stevenson for President and gave Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, a rousing reception when he attacked the records of Gen. Eisenhower and Sen. Nixon.

He said Eisenhower has reversed his stand on social security since he said in 1948 that Americans "can go to prison" if they want security.

Haywood asked whether Eisenhower's new stand can be "trusted." "As a matter of fact," he continued, "Gen. Eisenhower had plenty of social security when as active president of Columbia Univ. he received lifetime Army pay of $19,540 a year, plus other benefits such as free hospitalization and medical care."

He asked where Sens. Nixon and McCarthy were when the CIO was fighting the Communists. "We licked more Communists that Nixon ever will lick and we're the bulwark against communism," he added.

Former Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle, who is the Democratic candidate opposing Sen. Bricker (R. O.), said the Taft-Hartley Act "has not solved the problems" of labor-management relationship.

The delegates unanimously endorsed Stevenson with a standing vote, reaffirmed support of PAC and called for "voluntary PAC contributions of at least $1 a year from each IUMSWA member."

CIO Issues Call For 14th Convention

THE OFFICIAL CALL for CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention, signed by Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, was issued last week.

The convention will be held Nov. 17-21 at the Hotel Statler, Los Angeles.

Pointing out that the CIO is "dedicated to the furtherance of greater economic opportunity, human rights and political participation for all our citizens," the call adds:

"The programs of the Congress of Industrial Organizations are designed to benefit each individual in our society regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin. The workers of our nation know full well that national security depends entirely upon the security of the individual citizen. Security means freedom from fear or oppression, of want and of fear itself.

"The American people realize that they have been summoned by destiny to give leadership to all the oppressed peoples of the earth. They have demonstrated their willingness to share their prosperity with their fellow workers of other lands so that they too can better their conditions and life in the freedom that is the birthright of every human being. The American people have confidence in themselves and in our democratic philosophy.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations will continue to play its full part in striving for these mighty objectives."

The CIO Executive Board will meet in preconvention session on Nov. 12 at the Statler. Other preliminary meetings will be held that week.

Names of convention speakers will be announced later.

pass the good word

"See you at the polls!"

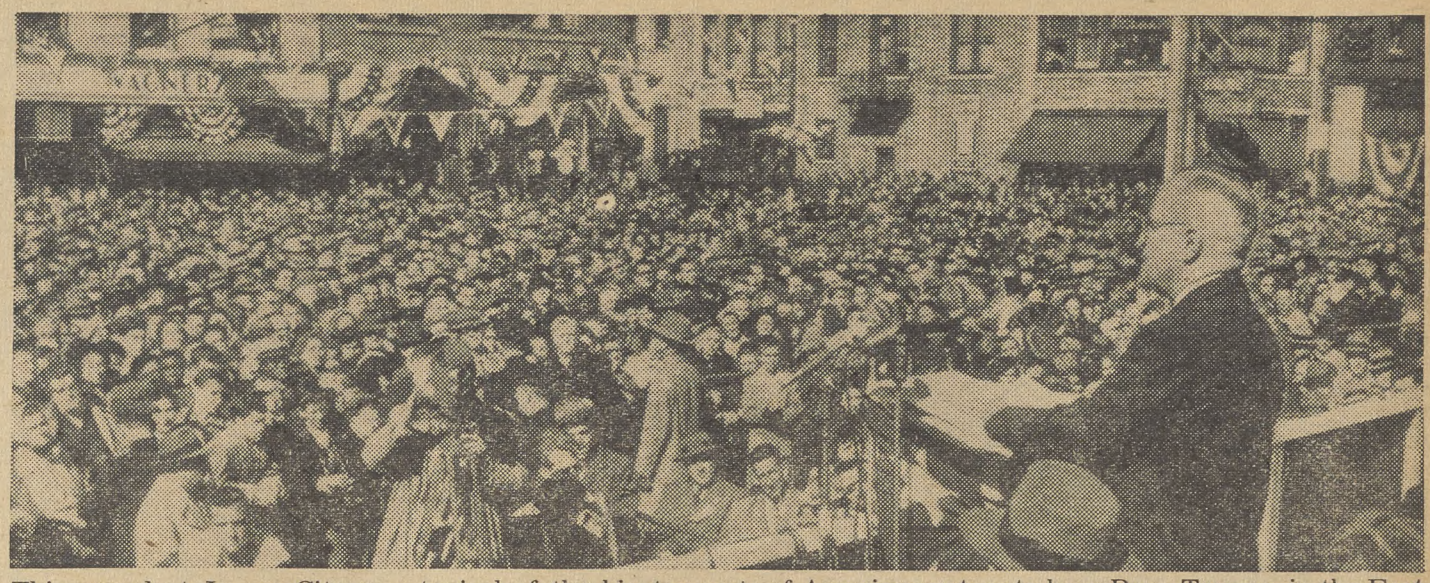
The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 27, 1952 No. 43

Harry Pours It On And The Crowds Love It

In exclusive labor press coverage of the campaign windup, The CIO News last week sent Assistant Editor Al Zack on the Truman and Stevenson trains. This dispatch covers Truman's tour across New Jersey and Pennsylvania; next week Zack will report on Stevenson's swing from Ohio to Boston.

By AL ZACK



This crowd at Jersey City was typical of the big turnouts of American voters to hear Pres. Truman in the East.

ENROUTE WITH TRUMAN—Harry Truman, the man they couldn't beat in 1948, was back last week at his favorite game—proving the Republicans dead wrong.

The GOP had convinced itself—and editorial writers—that the name of Truman was political poison.

But they had misjudged the people once again. And last week, the people were proving how far wrong they were.

They were doing it with crowds which literally brought gasps of amazement from sophisticated White House reporters. In city after city, as the President whistle stopped through industrial New Jersey and Pennsylvania, he was drawing crowds that topped anything ever seen in political campaigns.

In one city—Newark—Truman drew four times as many spectators as Gen. Eisenhower had in the entire state.

They were loud and happy crowds, eager to cheer the fighting President whose guts they admired and the party which had fought for their welfare.

Their cheers were loudest for Adlai Stevenson, the man Truman was backing, and for Margaret Truman, whose charm won their hearts. Said her proud beaming "Daddy," "She's one of my greatest assets." But it was Harry Truman who brought out the crowds in the steel and coal towns and the fabricating centers, crowds liberally sprinkled with CIO signs.

Friendly Crowds

And they were crowds that obviously warmed his heart—noisy, demonstrative and armed with placards, many of them crudely handlettered. "God Bless Harry," they read, and "Don't Let Them Take It Away."

In Camden, an elderly Negro carried a sign reading, "I Was Evicted in 1932—Today I Own A Good Car." In Elizabeth, it was "Did You Forget the Hoover Administration?" and "CIO Likes Harry—And Adlai Too."

"We Want Jobs—Not Apple Stands," said a sign in Jersey City, and everywhere Harry went, he found placards recalling Republican depressions, breadlines, soup kitchens and Hoovervilles.

From early morning to late at night, the President was hard at work, "fighting because I know America needs a President who believes in the great democratic principles we have always fought for." And, he assured his listeners in confident tones, "We are going to elect that kind of man as President on Nov. 4—Adlai Stevenson."

The crowds always roared approval. And newsmen, who had covered the 1948 campaign agreed, "He never fought as hard for his own election."

When it came time to talk about the Republican candidate for President, Truman was blunt and devastating. The General, he recalled, had never voted before 1948 "at the tender age of 58 years." He has a "lot to learn about civil government, which is a constructive rather than a destructive art."

But even that lack of knowledge was no excuse for the General's "compromises," the President said. "He talks like Bricker in Ohio, like McCarthy in Wisconsin, and like Dewey in New York. By this time, the candidate has met himself coming back so many times that you can compare him with himself on almost every subject," said Harry—and he did.

In contrast, he cited Stevenson's "talk sense" program—one policy on every issue no matter where he spoke, not "48 policies in 48 states on each issue."

"Stevenson," the President assured his listeners, "will give you some of the finest leadership that has ever come from any President of the U. S., the finest new leader since Franklin Roosevelt.

"He will give you a change in government, but it will be a change that will build on all the constructive measures we have taken in the last 20 years."

Truman climaxed his day of whistle-stopping in Pennsylvania and a whirlwind tour through Pittsburgh at an enthusiastic rally with an overflow crowd in the Steel City's mosque. There he offered this explanation for the huge crowds which greeted him on his tour for Stevenson:

1. The GOP and its one-party press have flopped in their efforts to portray him as "a sort of horrible monster with horse and a tail."

2. The people know he has been "standing up for their interests of the common man, and for the security and safety of this country, no matter what it costs."

3. Most important, he said, the crowd proved "our people have common sense and that you can't sell a Presidential candidate the way you sell toothpaste"—a jibe at the smooth-talking ad agencies behind the GOP.

Truman said he felt it his duty to set the record straight—he went at it with vigor and evident pleasure, and told them of Stevenson, whom he praised at length.

Second, he didn't want to see voters "tricked into giving up" what they had won under 20 years of the New Deal and Fair Deal.

Third, "and it weighs most heavily on my mind" was the battle for world peace. That issue, he said, was too important for partisan politics, but the GOP had made it a political issue, and he scathingly attacked the Republicans and the General.

When he recited New Deal-Fair Deal gains, Truman noted:

"Labor has been guaranteed the right to organize. The working man no longer lives in fear of the private detectives and strike breakers that once were hired to keep him in his place."

Reading, Pa., was a typical Truman whistle stop.

Under the searchlights near the station, thousands of faces peered toward the flood-lit platform. The band played "We're Just Wild About Harry" and then a more dignified, slightly off-key "Hail To The Chief."

"Twelve to 15,000 here," the police chief told reporters. He couldn't remember another such crowd.

Reads GOP Record

Candidates for Congress, state offices and the Legislature were introduced, took a quick round of applause and sat down smiling, knowing the President was going to urge their election.

Then it was Truman's turn. The big, black note book opened and he began reading the record of the Republican Party; taunting the General who had compromised his principles, and lauding Stevenson, who didn't.

The crowd loved it. "He's a great guy," a youthful Democrat, whose wheelchair was shoved right up to the ropes in front of the stand, wistfully told the older man who had guided it.

"Give 'em Hell, Harry," a deep voice boomed, and Harry and the crowd laughed heartily.

Off to the right, a group of youngsters (the bubble-gum and "pablum set," newsmen call them) chanted, "We Want Ike."

"You won't get him," the President said as the crowd roared. Then he tabulated the Generals in the Republican Party—Gens. Eisenhower and MacArthur, General Motors and General Electric.

Civilian control over the military was a good thing, he said. "It was necessary for me to remove one five-star General who got too big for his britches."

"The only General in the Democratic Party is general welfare," he added, "but I'm satisfied the privates and the corporals will beat the Generals in November."

Throughout last week's trip, Truman kept pounding away at one theme: Think and then vote for what's best for you and the country.

If you do that, he confidently told his listeners, "You will elect Adlai Stevenson President of the United States and we will continue to have four more years of prosperity and free government."

Not Just Cheers

Tremendous, enthusiastic crowds cheered Pres. Truman as he rode through Pittsburgh.

Philip Murray, CIO and Steelworkers' president, was at his side on the tour of the steel capital.

"I want not only that you cheer me," Truman said, "but show you like me by voting the Democratic ticket on Nov. 4."

Reminder

The "evil old Taft-Hartley Act" was condemned time and again by Pres. Truman in his trip across Pennsylvania. At Wilkes-Barre, he told a crowd of 25,000 that T-H "holds the laboring man down by injunction, which I wouldn't use, as the steel workers know."

In This Issue

	Page
Whistle-stopping with HST	2
Philip Murray's broadcast	3
Election Roundup	4
New York PAC picture story	5
Anarchists on the Right	6
Michigan PAC picture story	8-9
Stevenson on Korea	9
Gary PAC picture story	10
Sparkman vs. Nixon	11
California PAC picture story	12
Pacific Northwest campaign	13
ACWA fights strike-breakers	14
Allan Haywood's column	15
Picture Page	16

Stevenson's 10-Point Program...

"We can make America the land for all of us which we want it to be for each of us," Gov. Stevenson said in a recent campaign address in which he gave the Fair Deal program in 10 points and his dream of a nation "born to greatness." Stevenson said in part:

LET ME REMIND you of these Democratic policies:

1. To repeal and replace the Taft-Hartley law with a new law which promotes the private settlement of disputes, and to work in other ways for an orderly and fair balancing of the interests between labor and management.

2. Price supports for agriculture at 90% of parity: continuing search for practicable methods of supporting the prices of perishables; continuation and improvement of such other programs as rural electrification and soil conservation.

3. To widen the coverage and exercise the benefits available under our social security system and to honor our obligations to the veteran.

4. To continue our efforts through private, local, State and Federal action to eradicate discrimination based on race, religion or national origin.

5. To move ahead on our well-established housing programs.

6. To meet our most pressing educational needs.

7. To combat relentlessly the inflation which strikes so heavily at family budgets.

8. To review our tax policy with an eye to the effect of taxes on incentives to produce and invest, on the ability to consume the full output of the economy, and on the need for a balanced budget.

9. To encourage small business and enforce our antimonoply laws.

10. To continue the progressive development and sound conservation of the Nation's land and water resources.

I want to add one word about the matter of a balanced budget. It will be easy to balance the budget in a strong advancing economy. It will be hopeless to try to balance it in a depression.

'Creeping Capitalism'—

Murray Calls Ike Prisoner Of Hooverism, Supports Adlai For 'Greater Tomorrows'

CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY last week urged voters to elect Gov. Adlai Stevenson as President to achieve "a 'galloping capitalism' of abundance, buttressed by wise and time-tested government policies to help and protect the people."

If the Republicans win control of Congress and the White House, he predicted, America faces the danger of a period of "creeping capitalism."

Murray's speech, broadcast over the 202-station CBS radio network and a 31-station TV network, was his first major statement of the campaign.

"What we in labor want," he said, "what every citizen wants, is a free enterprise system that truly serves the needs of the people. The General and the men who tell him about civilian life talk about 'creeping socialism.' But their policies, their program, their platform would lead us directly back to 'creeping capitalism,' with low incomes and mass unemployment."

CIO Impartial

The text of Murray's speech, in great part, follows:

WE, AS AN organization, are tied to neither party. The endorsements of CIO unions are not the exclusive property of either major party. Union members have endorsed and voted for great Republicans like Norris and Morse, as well as for great Democrats like Roosevelt and Wagner.

The recommendations of the CIO on political candidates are made only after all the facts are in. This year, our recommendations were drafted after we had studied the platforms of both the Republican and Democratic parties—after we had examined the record and the experience and the viewpoint of the candidates.

So, it was only after careful study of these facts and these issues, in the light of what is best for America as a whole, that we urge you to vote for Adlai Stevenson for President, and for John Sparkman for Vice-President.

On the basis of reports coming to me from every section of the nation, I am confident that an overwhelming majority of our citizens will agree, by casting their votes for Stevenson and Sparkman, and for a program that will benefit every citizen.

"We must look forward to great tomorrows."—Adlai Stevenson

Out Of Tune

"The General," commented Gov. Stevenson, "sings 'God Bless America.' But his barber shop quartet of McCarthy, Nixon, Jenner and Taft insists on singing 'Just A Song at Twilight,' especially that line about 'once in the dear, dead days beyond recall'."

Most of you who are 30 years of age or over can remember the great depression. Factories closed; men slept in the streets; farmers were driven from their land; families were broken up; homeless boys and girls wandered through America in search of work and food.

The Republican Party had no program for America then, because it had no understanding of our country and its problems. It has no understanding of them even now.

HERBERT HOOVER, the elder statesman of the Republican Party, has not changed his ideas in 20 years, nor has the party which once he led.

Do you know what Herbert Hoover thinks, in this year 1952, about the 1932 depression? On Page 195 of his Memoirs, published recently, Herbert Hoover gave us the benefit of 20 years of reflection on the disastrous collapse of our national economy. He wrote, of the situation in 1932: "Many persons left their jobs for the more profitable one of selling apples."

What a lack of understanding of America, what an absence of feeling for his less-privileged fellow men!

Can we afford to ignore, in 1952, that the party of Herbert Hoover is also the party of Robert Taft.

And the General who tours the country as the Republican presidential candidate proclaims that he agrees completely on all domestic affairs with Sen. Taft. Hooverism, Taftism, Generalism—they are all the same; and there is no decent choice among them for the people of America.

GOP Blind To Change

The 1952 GOP platform simply refuses to recognize the changes which 20 years of constructive government have brought to America.

Few people in our land can deny they are better off today than in 1932—or even 1945 or 1948.

Of course, we have still far to go. Millions of our fellow citizens must receive a better share of this nation's prosperity. For them, there is no future in a Republican Administration which believes, with Hoover, that "It's more profitable to sell apples on the street corner." For them, as for all of us, the hope for a better future must lie in the enlightened policies of an Administration, headed by a statesman like Adlai Stevenson, who has in clear focus the vision of a steadily rising standard of living for all Americans.

WHAT WE in labor want, what every citizen wants, is a free enterprise system that truly serves the needs of the people. The General and the men who tell him about civilian life talk about "creeping socialism."

But their policies, their program, their platform, would lead us directly back to "creeping capitalism," with low incomes and mass unemployment.

What we need, what the Democratic platform and candidates will help us achieve, is a "galloping capitalism," of abundance, buttressed by wise and time-tested government policies to help and protect the people.

In 1947 and 1948, the Republicans controlled the Congress. You know the record of the 80th Congress.

It cut down social security. It weakened our national program for decent housing. It gave great tax benefits to the wealthy, who did not need them, and little if any tax relief to the lower income groups. It passed the Taft-Hartley Act, in order to weaken labor's ability to bargain collectively for wages and security. It weakened our anti-trust laws.

Four years have passed since the 80th Congress was repudiated in 1948. But the Republicans in Congress—and sometimes their ultra-conservative Dixiecrat partners—have kept right on attacking social security. They've kept right on ranging themselves with the special interests against the people. The record is there.

The Republicans in Congress have fought decent price controls to help the consumer. They've fought sound economic measures to help the farmers. They've fought with a frenzy of interest to protect the loopholes through which the wealthy and the big corporations evade their tax responsibility. And they have opposed each and every bill to supplant the Taft-Hartley Act with a labor-management law that will promote industrial peace and good will.

That's the record on which the General is running. No wonder the Republican Party doesn't want to talk issues.

Since July, Gov. Stevenson has discussed these day-by-day issues openly and honestly.

He makes sense, and wins respect, because he talks about the America of 1952 and the challenge of the years ahead.

Adlai Stevenson is a man of faith and integrity. He is not a captive of any group nor party clique. As Governor of Illinois, he has shown outstanding executive ability. As a candidate for President, Adlai Stevenson has pledged his honor to translate from word to deed the liberal, forward-looking platform of the Democratic Party.

That platform will insure for Americans a continuation of the economic advances and the social welfare legislation which have made our nation, during the past 20 years, a model for the entire world.

On the basis of the record; on the basis of the platform; on the basis of the candidate, I urge you, the voters of America, to cast your ballot on Nov. 4 for Stevenson and Sparkman, and all those candidates for Senate and House who look with Stevenson and Sparkman toward greater tomorrows.

...For America Of Our Dreams

THAT IS OUR program. We take our stand upon the fundamental principle that the role of Government is, to sum up, just this: to remove the roadblocks put in the way of the people by nature and by greedy men; to release the energies of the people, so that free men may work the miracles of the future as they have worked the miracles of the past.

No man could travel across our country, as I have done, without being deeply stirred. No man then—his heart touched and his mind stirred—could but reflect upon his country's destiny, his love for it the greater as perils encompass it. As we walk through a troubled time, let us remember that the United States was born to greatness.

Let us remember that when men had few rights anywhere, the Declaration of Independence proclaimed the earth-shaking doctrine of the Rights of Man everywhere.

As its words went winging around the world, those whose eyes were cast down and those whose backs were bent, cupped their ears to listen. They raised their eyes and by ever so little straightened their backs bit by bit. And as, two centuries ago, we were the hope of the world's oppressed, we remain their hope today.

Let us remember that our bigness springs from our fields, forests, mines and factories; but our greatness springs from the charters of our freedoms, and from countless men and women who believed, and believing, wrought.

If some catastrophe destroyed the things that we have built, we could rebuild them. But, if through some catastrophe we lost faith in the principles by which we came to birth and by which we live, we could never return to greatness.

A new day is dawning. I do not say all problems are solved. Far from it. But we have dared to try to solve them. We have courage to dare the new, the compassion to help the wretched, and the vision to see what men can really be in the society of our dreams.

Time Off To Vote

The Wage Stabilization Board ruled last week that workers can get time off to vote on Nov. 4, without loss of pay, if their employers agree.

New Dignity In Place Of Fear

This tribute to the accomplishments of America's free trade unions has been voiced by Gov. Stevenson:

"To remember the loneliness, the fear and insecurity of men who once had to walk alone in huge factories, beside huge machines—to realize that labor unions have meant new dignity and pride to millions of our countrymen, human companionship on the job, and music in the home—to be able to see what larger pay checks mean, not to a man as an employe, but as a husband and as a father—to know these things is to understand what American Labor means . . ."

Adlai, Ike Battle For States With Big Vote

WITH A WHOOP and a holler, the nation last week reeled around the final turn in the bitter campaign sweepstakes—with Election Day on Nov. 4 dead ahead.

Victory predictions were a dime a dozen on both sides, but CIO-PAC workers all over the nation were taking nothing for granted, were organizing to help get out the biggest vote posible.

Of the 96 million Americans potentially eligible to vote, it was estimated, some 74 million actually are qualified and registered. But the actual vote, it was predicted, will be around 55 million.

As the whistle-stop trains of Gov. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee, and Pres. Truman crossed the key Midwest and East Coast states, they were attracting large crowds of industrial workers. And CIO political action blockworkers had the immense task of translating that enthusiasm into votes cast in the ballot box and rung up on voting machines on Election Day.

For the Fair Deal candidate and for the GOP's Gen. Eisenhower, the weeks in the West and the South were past. Now the final campaigning was focused on the big population, big electoral vote states east of the Mississippi and north of the Mason-Dixon line.

The stakes were big: The Presidency, control of Congress with 35 Senate seats and all House districts contested, plus state legislative, gubernatorial and local offices and issues.

The basic question was bigger: Whether to "go forward to great tomorrows" with Stevenson, building on the New Deal-Fair Deal record, or to turn the nation over to the big business Taft gang with Eisenhower as their front man.

STEVENSON SET himself a tough campaign schedule in the decisive final 10 days, embarking on a 4000-mile 12-state tour with 91 speeches scheduled.

In the face of "the great smear" of the GOP and wild promises on Korea, Stevenson kept "talking sense"—and tough facts—to the people. He said under "the humane revolution" of the past two decades:

"We have already come so far that we can never return to the time when in the presence of mountains of wheat there was little bread; when warehouses burst with cotton, but there were few sheets, towels, shirts and dresses; when we had architects, carpenters and the materials to build houses, decent houses, but millions lived in hovels; when the splendid American dream seemed at a shabby end, and the splendid promises of American life were ashes in the mouths of the people.

"A miracle has been wrought in America. We have had a humane revolution. The many have been benefited. The few have not been hurt. The many have more bread. The few do not have less cake.

"We have come far in the 20 years past, and we shall go farther."

In contrast, Stevenson charged Eisenhower with a campaign of expediency, with "no policy, no program and no real faith in the future of America." And he warned that "the Old Guard around him know exactly what they want and what they propose to do if they take over in Washington."

"SOCIAL JUSTICE" for all people—at home and abroad—is what Stevenson called "the better idea" that will block communism. And he said the Republican "opposition to the programs of social justice in America is opposition to the building of our strongest defenses against communism."

Another whistle-stopper, Pres. Truman, campaigning across New Jersey and Pennsylvania, said a Republican victory would "drive labor back to slavery." He was drawing big crowds—250,000 at Newark, 15,000 at Scranton, 17,000 in Wilkes-Barre—as his train moved through the industrial cities. (For a CIO News exclusive report from the Truman train, see Page 2.)

Truman had the kid gloves off on Eisenhower. He said the GOP candidate approves a "reign of terror by slander" as a campaign technique. He charged him with taking "extreme liberties with the truth" in claiming GOP support for social security—when their roll calls in Congress are to the contrary. He was bitter over GOP promises to let "Asiatics fight Asiatics" in Korea, charging it gave "aid and comfort" to the Communists.

Eisenhower, the President said scornfully, is the candidate "who put the promise in compromise. He talks like Bricker in Ohio, like McCarthy in Wisconsin and like Dewey in New York."

EISENHOWER, in New York and other East Coast states, was talking like Dewey.

Repeatedly he tried to bury the record of his Morningside Heights conference with Taft—and his surrender to Taft's policies. Eisenhower (in Newark) even voiced the praise for Gen. Marshall which he had deleted from his Milwaukee address while Joe McCarthy was on the platform. And at the time that the General was reasserting his independence, Sen. Taft was saying: "Gen. Eisenhower and I agree with each other on so many issues."

The Eisenhower candidacy was repudiated by one of his original supporters—Wayne Morse, Oregon's maverick Republican. Morse announced his support for Stevenson, charging Eisenhower with "unconscionable compromises with the reactionaries in the Republican Party" and said he "is not telling the truth" by denying it.

"The Eisenhower I supported for the nomination," said Morse, "is not the Eisenhower who is dangling and dancing from campaign platforms at the end of the political puppet strings being jerked by some of the most evil and reactionary forces in American politics."

Morse's stand was hailed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) as a fair trade for Dixiecrat Govs. Byrnes, Shivers and Kennon and Sen. Byrd. The three Southern governors are backing Eisenhower, with Byrnes saying a GOP victory would be "our emancipation day"—which punctured Ike's Northern oratory about civil rights. And Byrd walked out on the Democratic campaign.

The rhyme and reason of Dixiecrat backing for Eisenhower was revealed in a report from Dallas by Columnist Joseph Alson, who said "in Texas the Eisenhower movement derives its real force and motive power from the oligarchy of oil men and bankers, industrialists, large ranchers and big real estate operators who rule this state's amazingly expanding economy."

ALMOST UNNOTICED a month ago, in the furor over the $18,000 Nixon "trust fund," was an endorsement which Gen. Eisenhower last week had cause to regret.

When the General spoke at Wheeling, W. Va., he stepped in where Tom Dewey feared to tread back in '48. In that year, Dewey refused to back Sen. Revercomb, who had written anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish clauses into a displaced persons bill. Revercomb was defeated. This year he is running again, and he got a pat on the back from Eisenhower—as have such other members of the Republican "team" as Sens. Jenner, McCarthy and Cain.

Last week Pres. Truman charged Eisenhower with "moral blindness" for endorsing such senators who had helped enact the new McCarran immigration law over a White House veto. In a message to a Jewish welfare group, Truman cited discriminatory provisions of the McCarran law and said:

"When we look behind the mask of the great majority of Republicans in Congress, this is what we see:

"The National Origins Quota System, based on 'Nordic' superiority.

"Discriminatory provisions in the displaced persons bill, directed against Catholics and Jews.

"Second class citizenship, imposed by the McCarran immigration bill.

"What do these add up to? They add up to the philosophy of racial superiority developed by the Nazis, which we thought we had destroyed when we defeated Nazi Germany and liberated Europe . . .

"The Republican candidate for the President cannot escape responsibility for his endorsements. He has had an attack of moral blindness, for today, he is willing to accept the very practices that identify the so-called 'master race' although he took a leading part in liberating Europe from their domination."

That touched off days of angry denials from Eisenhower, Dewey, Bernard Baruch, Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver of Cleveland, and others. Truman was charged by Dewey with "dirty lying" in injecting race and religion into the campaign and throwing "rotten eggs, dead cats and tomatoes."

Among the most indignant was Sen. Nixon, the General's running mate, who had voted for the McCarran act. Nixon screamed slander and "gutter politics" and went right on calling Gov. Stevenson such things as "soft toward the Communist conspiracy at home" and a "dupe" of Alger Hiss.

The actual situation was different from what the GOP daily press made it out to be.

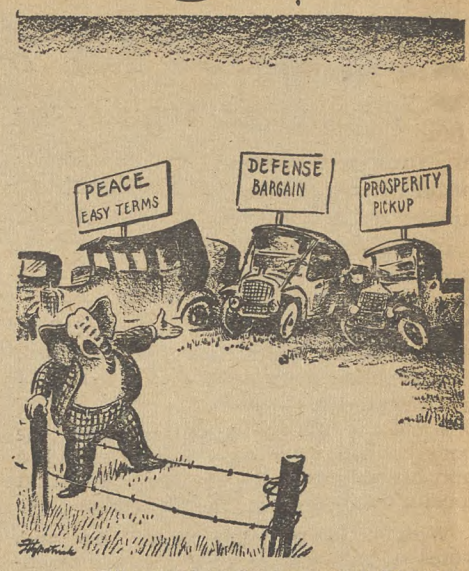
Eisenhower himself has condemned the McCarran immigration act in language similar to Truman's. The President didn't question Eisenhower's own personal views. What he challenged was the General's backing of "well-known supporters of discriminatory legislation."

"The practices of those senators—the practices of the big lie and character assassination—are identified with the so-called 'master race' theory and no amount of distortion can change that fact," Truman said in a second statement.

"I know that the Republican candidate for President is neither anti-Jewish nor anti-Catholic, but why does he give his endorsement to such men? That is what I condemned last Friday and that is what I condemn today."

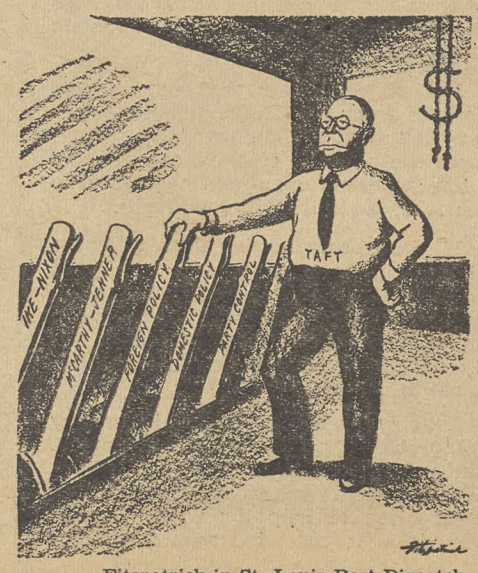
—Herblock in Washington Post

"Those Darn Train Whistles Again!"



—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Cornfield Auto Salesman



—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Who's Who

Wrong Address

The Chicago "Citizens for Eisenhower-Nixon" Committee last week mailed Gov. Stevenson a booklet called "Here's What Ike Means To You" and a form letter asking him to contribute from $2 to $25 to the GOP campaign.

Tune In

Important radio and television addresses have been scheduled by Fair Deal candidates in the final week of the campaign. Here are their national broadcasts:

GOV. STEVENSON: 10:30 p. m. EST Oct. 28 on nationwide CBS Radio and Dumont TV; 8:30 p. m. EST Nov. 1 on nationwide CBS Radio and Dumont TV; 8:30 p. m. EST Nov. 3 and combined nationwide radio-TV networks.

SEN. SPARKMAN: Daily talks on ABC Radio, 9:30 p. m. EST and MST and 8:30 p. m. CST and PST, on Oct. 27, 28, 29 and 30.

(CIO TV log is on Page 13.)

Honest Injun

An outfit in Washington calling itself the Committee for Young Men in Government announced it's backing Sen. Nixon for "the high moral and intellectual qualities" which it said he has demonstrated.

It Ain't Hay

Here's another report on how tough it is for big business: General Foods Corp. reported a 28% jump in net profits after taxes for the six months through September, compared with the same period of '51. Net income for duPont in the '52 third quarter was almost doubled. And Douglas Aircraft reported a 60% profit boost, voted two extra dividends.

PAC Workers Roll Up Sleeves In N. Y.

By BERNARD RASKIN

CIO MEMBERS in New York State are keeping their sleeves rolled up after an unprecedented drive to build up registration in their areas.

Between now and Nov. 4, PAC workers will be out in force in support of the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket, John Cashmore and other endorsed candidates.

In addition to the presidential and senatorial races, New York will elect a full delegation of 43 congressmen, a full State Senate and Assembly and various minor local officials.

With 45 presidential electoral votes at stake in the State, no effort will be spared to bring out the vote for Fair Deal candidates. The State CIO-PAC is co-ordinating the campaign which will include use of television, radio, mass-meetings, street rallies, sound trucks and, of course, door-to-door canvassing.

Recent history gives reason for enthusiasm and confidence—but not over confidence. Franklin D. Roosevelt carried the state in 1940 and 1944. It fell to the Republicans in 1948 when 500,000 votes were cast for Henry Wallace on the Progressive slate. Dewey's plurality over Truman in that contest was 61,000. This year, the Progressives are not expected to count for as much.

JOHN CASHMORE

In the contest for U. S. Senator, the CIO has endorsed Cashmore, the Democratic nominee, against the incumbent, Irving M. Ives (R.). Cashmore has been Borough President of Brooklyn since 1940 and was New York City Council President before that.

He has a consistently liberal and pro-labor record.

The State CIO endorsement on Cashmore declared his election will "aid the attainment of a majority in the Senate ready, willing and able to work for the policies enunciated in the Democratic platform to which we fully subscribe."

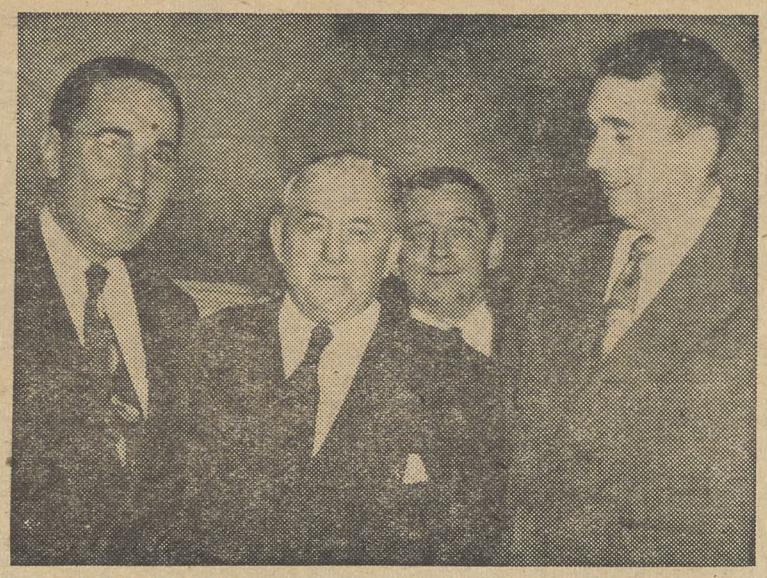
The resolution noted the Republican candidate's support of Taft-Hartley and his opposition to vital parts of the Fair Deal program.

In the case of congressmen, New York will have an uphill fight to maintain even the present proportion of good and bad representatives because of reapportionment after 1950 census.

THE STATE'S congressional delegation is cut from 45 to 43. The reapportionment, drafted by the Republican-dominated Legislature, was designed to give the Republicans an excellent chance to add four or five seats to the 22 they hold in the present Congress that means that the Democrats might drop from their present 23 congressmen to 16 or 17.

Much the same policy directed the reapportionment throughout the rest of the state. The industrial area of Rochester has been cut in half, and each half has been wedded to large, rural areas.

The re-drawing of the lines so as to strengthen reactionary candidates in most areas is going to make the job a lot tougher for forward-minded groups in the state. But, up to now, it has been compensated in large measure by the added energy and effort which they are putting into the campaign.



A TOUGH FIGHT—George A. Brenner, Democrat candidate in 27th CD, got pledge of strong CIO backing at Westchester rally from Allan S. Haywood (center), CIO executive vice president, and Charles T. Kerrigan (right), UAW regional director. Brenner opposes Rep. Gwinn (R.).

UPSTATE—PAC chairman from central New York area meet in Syracuse to plan get-out-the-vote drive. On platform are CIO Reg. Dir. John Marillo, Dist. Dir. Frank Fiorelli of the CIO Electrical Workers, and Sec-Treas. James Miller of the Buffalo CIO Council.

'$100 Million Worth Of Lies'

Louis Hollander, New York State CIO Council president, last week charged the Republicans are trying to "buy the election with $100 million worth of lies, slanders and treacherous appeals to the emotions."

He spoke to 400 upstate CIO-PAC workers and local union officials at a campaign rally in Syracuse.

Hollander condemned GOP campaigners for trying to "raise false hopes in mothers with the cry, 'bring back our boys from Korea,' in concert with the Communists and their stooges who are using the same line."

Jobless Aid Bill Is Big Issue

THERE'S a direct bread-and-butter issue for workers in the New York State election, and that's the fight to end crippling of the unemployment insurance program.

With a full State Legislature to be elected on Nov. 4, New York CIO reports the key state issue is the destructive Hughes-Brees unemployment insurance amendments enacted by the Dewey-GOP dominated Legislature last year.

The CIO charges that the Hughes-Brees amendments represent a fundamental re-writing of the unemployment insurance program under specifications laid down by the largest corporate interests. They mean a temporary tax saving to these industrial and financial giants and a kick in the teeth to the rest of the State.

The amendments drastically weaken New York's unemployment insurance program both as protection for the individual worker and as a bulwark against future depression.

Ives' 'Liberalism' Fades In Hurry When Roll's Called

A FAST change of pace may be a good thing on the ball field—but it is far from a good thing on the floor of the United States Senate.

That's one of the reasons that the New York State CIO is supporting Democrat John Cashmore for U. S. Senator against incumbent Republican Irving M. Ives. An outstanding characteristic of Ives' six years in the Senate has been his ability to speak and vote on both sides of vital issues.

The best example of Ives ability to vary his shots so as to appear all things to all people is his record on Taft-Hartley. To this day many liberal-minded citizens appear willing to forgive and forget his double-barreled vote for Taft-Hartley, insisting that Ives performed a valuable function as the "voice of moderation" among Republicans during consideration of the bill.

The fact is that Ives' voice changed several times in that period and, in the final analysis, was sounding "aye" to all of the Taft proposals. Even more significant was his influence on wavering Republicans in swinging the votes necessary to over-ride Pres. Truman's veto.

A national magazine in a late 1947 issue declared that conservative Republicans were singing: "Ives is our boy—camouflaged a bit perhaps—but our boy."

The same article attributes to a liberal Republican senator, the comment that "Ives is the kind of liberal who is with us just BEFORE the final roll call."

Here are a few other examples of how Ives lived up with Taft:

PRICE CONTROLS: As a member of Senate Banking and Currency Committee Ives helped to preserve and expand the Capehart and Herlong "built-in inflation" amendments in the 1952 act. More than that, he introduced an amendment to end all controls at the end of this year; after being defeated on that he voted with the majority to end them in March, 1953.

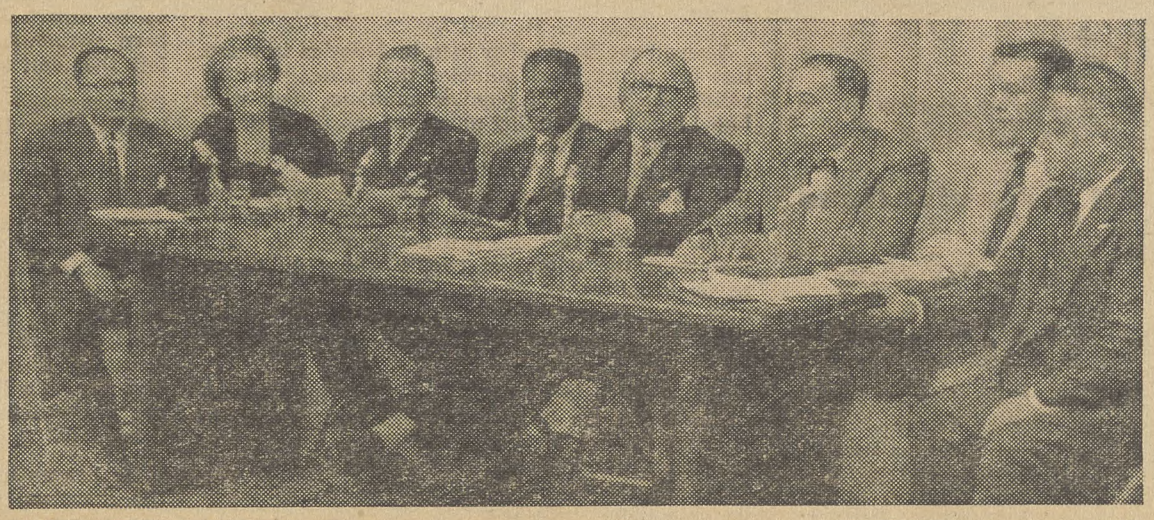
SOCIAL SECURITY: In 1950, he voted against extending social security protection to the totally disabled. He also voted for the Knowland amendment which makes it possible for states to refuse unemployment insurance benefits to workers who refuse to accept a job at wages under union scales.

MINIMUM WAGES: In 1947, Ives helped to defeat an effort to establish a 60c-per-hour minimum in place of the 40c then in effect, by throwing his support to a Taft motion to pigeon-hole the proposal. In 1949 he voted for raising the minimum to 75c but at the same time voted to exclude hundreds of thousands of workers previously protected under the act.

Murray Plans N.Y. Telecast

A special television address to New York State voters will be made this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, under arrangements of the State CIO Council.

The seven-station telecast will be on WCBS-TV in New York from 7:10 to 7:25 p.m. on Wednesday, Oct. 29. It also will be aired the same evening on Buffalo, Rochester, Schenectady, Syracuse, Utica and Binghamton TV stations. Check your local paper for the exact time.



"YOU—THE VOTER"—That was topic of this New York City CIO Council registration and vote telecast during recent registration campaign. Council and CIO local officers joined in WJZ-TV program, with Pres. Michael Quill of the IUC and of CIO Transport Workers at the microphone and IUC Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz at right.

A Summing Up

Now that the long campaign is almost over, and the ultimate decision soon will be in the voters' hands, it's time for a summing up.

It's but two months since CIO analyzed the candidates, their records, the platforms and the issues — and each subsequent campaign week has given additional backing to CIO's recommendation for Adlai Stevenson.

CIO said back in August that the "entrenched old guard, the ancient enemies of the people" own the GOP body, boots and britches, that they plan a "crusade to turn Fair Deal prosperity into Republican bankruptcy." Gen. Eisenhower's trail—all the way from Morningside Heights to McCarthyland—bears that out.

CIO said back in August that the Democratic program is part of "the Roosevelt-Truman tradition of banishing fear and looking to the future with confidence and boldness." And Adlai Stevenson, the CIO said, would provide "resourceful, imaginative, humanitarian leadership." That is just what he has done in "talking sense" to the people on the hard facts of our times.

Ike Gets Tripped Up

But for the Republicans, the campaign windup apparently is to be composed of equal parts of "the great smear" and "promising anything to anybody to get elected." Here's what happened last week:

The General was doing a lot of wailing about high prices and inflation—but he wasn't saying anything about the Republican record in Congress to send prices higher, including the three House GOP votes last June to kill all price controls.

The General was saying vaguely in the North that he was for the principles of civil rights—and Gov. Jimmie Byrnes of South Carolina was gloating that a GOP victory would be "our emancipation day" for the Dixiecrats.

The General was newly discovering his independence—and then Bob Taft went and gave the show away by saying Eisenhower's views "are fundamentally the same as mine."

Hooverism, Deweyism, Taftism and Generalities, they're all cut from the same cloth, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray said last week. They offer only a "creeping capitalism" of depression, unemployment and fear. What we need is a "galloping capitalism" of abundance, social justice at home and abroad, a sturdy defense of democracy, a humane policy in the world, and faith in the people anywhere.

The Blitz That's Planned

The "fat cats" who have put up the millions for the Eisenhower-Nixon blitz against the American people have made no secret of the fact they expect to be paid off soon and handsomely by the GOP in a blitz against free trade unions.

The story of Water Valley, Miss. (see page 14), is a foretaste of what the GOP has in store. And it's right out of Taft-Hartley: The town builds a plant for a runaway shop; the plant is organized, by the CIO Clothing Workers; the company refuses to bargain, forcing a strike; the city attorney, who also is the company attorney, gets anti-picketing injunctions; and then the National Guard is called in.

It's a plain and simple denial of civil rights, and the Federal government, as CIO demanded, should step in and stop it now.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV October 27, 1952 No. 43

Wanna Play Paper Dolls?

In Other Words—

Anarchists On The Right

By their "agin everything" campaign, the Republicans have become "the anarchists of the Right," says Editor Max Ascoli of The Reporter. The magazine recently switched from Gen. Eisenhower to Gov. Stevenson. His article follows in part:

By MAX ASCOLI

IN THIS CAMPAIGN, what meets the eye hides a momentous fact. What meets the eye is a tough presidential contest rolling along on schedule. The momentous fact is the great "anti" movement now on the rampage. It has completely engulfed the Republican party and its leaders; it is as blind and as carried along by its own weight as a force of nature.

This "anti" thing has been building up for quite a while. Several times, since our postwar conflict with communism began, the country has been swept by waves of restlessness, That was the case, for instance when MacArthur returned. But MacArthur's hard, unmalleable ego did not lend itself to the friendly public relations manipulators.

There have been other men in America in these last few years much nimbler than MacArthur in riding the waves of popular emotions, men who know how to set rolling more and more emotional waves. Their technique is simplicity itself: It consists in making symbols fraught with infinite uncheckable implications out of the proven instances of betrayal or corruption among government officials. If there are not enough of these instances, the names of people whose guilt has never been proved—or in some cases, unthinkable—can be made into symbols of universal, unlimited wrongdoing. This can be done even to George Marshall.

The anarchists of the Right, the past masters of the technique, had mouthpieces but not leadership up to the time when the campaign for the presidential nomination started in the Republican party. It turned out a bitter, ruthless struggle, for all the "anti" factions—anti-Adminstration, anti-foreign involvement—had found a man, Sen. Taft, who willingly accepted their backing.

The things that have happened since Eisenhower's victory in Chicago are still somewhat incredible. Who could ever have conceived that Eisenhower would go along, actually believing that it was still his party and that he was its leader?

It is hard indeed to find precedents for something as tragic as what is taking place today before our own eyes, as Eisenhower campaigns: the unwinding of a leadership in which the nation had put so much trust. The General has already proven that far from being able to control the factions in his party, he can only echo, one after another, their conflicting rancors.

The great "anti" movement is aimed particularly at anything that has to do with reason or the mind. The General himself, it is said, has come to realize that the more "visceral" he makes his appeal to the voters, the better he gets across. The more "visceral" the Republican campaign becomes, the lower its level sinks.

THE SITUATION IS UGLY and the remedy must be found without delay. One of the first conclusions to be drawn is that our two-party system has been shaken badly, for there is only one party left that can administer the country and lead it.

Among the many unforeseeable things that have happened during this campaign, the emergence of Stevenson as the man fit to lead the nation is certainly one of the most astonishing, While the opposite camp is swept away by its demogogy, Stevenson shows an extraordinary courage simply by insisting on talking sense. In all his speeches his learning and experience are couched in terms of human wisdom. This infuriates his opponents who have come to consider plain, sensible language highbrow intellectualism. Actually, Stevenson shows his mettle and his capacity as a leader by standing his own ground, absolutely determined not to be swept away by demagogy.

He has an unshakable belief in the decency of the American people, in their capacity to recognize what is right and what is wrong. He proves his statesmanship now by campaigning as a statesman, and he asks for the confidence of the American people by showing his confidence in them.

The Gains Of 20 Years—

Any Way You Figure, We're Way Ahead

TWENTY YEARS of New Deal and Fair Deal leadership have brought concrete economic progress for America.

That is a hard fact which no reactionary political oratory can suppress. It is clearly defined in the statisticians' charts and in the pocketbooks of Mr. and Mrs. Average American.

Here are the figures for the average man, woman and child in the United States, all translated into the same kind of 1951 dollars. In other words, these figures are based on the 1951 purchasing power of the dollar, AFTER TAXES.

In 1929, at the height of the false boom that preceded the Hoover depression, the average per capita income was $1030.35. Today it is up to $1457.35, or an increase of 40.8%.

Where the average American had $100 of real spending money in 1929, today he had $140, or $40 more.

The nation as a whole went ahead far more—77.8% more than in 1929 in real money after taxes. It was the growing population which cut the average down to 40.8%.

Still talking in terms of the purchasing power of 1951 dollars, the average working man was receiving $37.98 for a 44-hour week in 1929.

In 1951, he got an average of $64.93 for a 40-hour week.

After deducting all federal income taxes and his share of consumer taxes in 1951, his average pay, for spending purposes, was $59.70 a week.

Thus he was a clear 57% better off than in 1929, and that's assuming he didn't pay any taxes of any kind in 1929.

And that spells real economic progress. Add to that these points:

- In 1929 we were sitting on the edge of the greatest depression in history. Those who had been able to save were doomed to lose the savings in bank failures. Today, our country's well being is built on a solid foundation. Our savings are insured by the government so that we can't be wiped out by bank failures.
- We have more savings now than before the war and are saving more each year. In 1951 we had annual savings of $17.2 billion, according to the Commerce Dept., compared to $6.8 billion in 1940—that's a jump of 151%. In 1929, savings amounted to $5.6 billion or a 206% increase. (All these figures are in 1951 dollars.)
- We have built up the greatest industrial plant in the world, able to produce more things for more people. American free enterprise had been saved, despite the continued opposition of those politicians who claim themselves to be the friends of free enterprise.

From out of taxes, we have gotten all these things:

- More and better schools for our children and far better opportunities than we had.
- Old age pensions and a life of decency for elderly citizens.
- Unemployment compensation when a plant closes down and improved workmen's compensation for injured workers.
- Fair prices for our farmers.
- Great development of natural resources, with the people benefitting, instead of special interest groups.
- Government housing programs so that families will have shelter, which have encouraged the greatest boom of private home building and home ownership in history.
- One of the strongest armed forces in the world to be used to defend us from aggression.

Those all add up to real, concrete progress.

Each of us is 40% better off than in 1929—without figuring all the social services our taxes are buying.

If we figure all these things that we buy with our taxes, we are at least twice as well off now, as we were when the Republican Old Guard last ran America.

It is this well-being that is at stake in this election.

The Great Aginners—

The NAM's Big Open House Helped Convince The Missus

By JIMMY HIGGINS
(From Wisconsin CIO News)

THE MISSUS and I decided to accept the generous invitation of the National Association of Manufacturers. They had invited us to their open house at Marquette Univ. the other day.

So we went. They sure put on a fine show. First off we were welcomed by a well-dressed delegation of Milwaukee businessmen and some eager Marquette administration students. Then they showed us a series of illustrated talks on the American free enterprise system. They told us these talks had been given in factories all over the country. It sure was purty—awful, that is.

Next they showed us some movies the manufacturers association had made. They warned us about "creeping socialism." I went to sleep a couple of times but the Missus kept nudging me.

When the lights came on again they took us downstairs to see all their literature. Boy! If you live on a farm you don't need a Sears catalogue any more — there's more pages in this NAM stuff than any catalogue will ever have.

THEY HAD different leaflets and pamphlets for women's clubs, school teachers, employers, ministers and so on.

I looked through some of this literature. It was all about "creeping socialism." They said that if the government wants to give financial aid to schools —why, that's creeping socialism. Another booklet I picked up started out pretty good—about how prices are and how bad inflation is. But then, along about the middle, they said that price controls is "creeping socialism." So I put that one back on the table.

One little leaflet was real pretty — all different colors. That's what my face must have looked like when I read it, because it said that minimum wage and social security was bad old "creeping socialism."

The Missus wouldn't understand what I was getting so sore about until she picked up one that said health insurance was "creeping socialism." She'd just paid last month's doctor bills for the kids. I guess she was pretty sore. "Just let me have some of that health insurance," she said. "I'll give them 'creeping socialism' all right!"

About then we were invited to sit down and "talk it over" with Milwaukee businessmen over some hot coffee and doughnuts. But I was pretty sore, and so was the Missus. So we just said, "No, thank you," and left.

Wisht they were for something—instead of against all the time.

Joint Labor Group Supports Fair Dealers In Maryland

A MARYLAND Labor Unity Political Rally has been organized by CIO, AFL and railroad unions and now is actively campaigning for the Stevenson-Sparkman-Fair Deal ticket.

A warning that a Taft-Eisenhower GOP victory would precipitate a depression and bring a full-scale attack on labor was voiced at a recent joint labor rally in Cumberland, Md., by Charles C. Webber, Virginia CIO Council president and CIO Textile Workers PAC director in the Upper South.

Webber praised Gov. Stevenson as a President who would be fair to labor, farmers and business.

Other rally speakers included Sec.-Treas. Charles Della of the Maryland State CIO Council; Harry Castle, Maryland CIO vice president; and Roy T. Craze, TWUA Local 1874 of Cumberland.

One of the major Maryland congressional campaigns is in the 6th Dist., extending from Washington through Hagerstown (where the CIO Auto Workers have a big aircraft local) and Cumberland (a textile center) to the mining counties in the western part of the state.

Mrs. Stella Werner, the Democratic candidate, has CIO-PAC support. In a statement last week, she condemned the Taft-Hartley Act as "discriminatory" and "inflammatory."

"We need a fresh start," she said, "on sober consideration of legislation which will establish clearly that the public interest is primary, and that it can best be served by fair treatment of both labor and management."

'Cafeteria Education'

'Blue Chip' Firms Bombarding Workers With Pro-GOP Leaflets

THE POISON with the froth on top is still being whipped up in oversize containers at hundreds of U. S. plants and business firms and poured out to thousands of workers.

Industry's system of "cafeteria education" — which General Motors gives the high sounding title of "Information Rack Service"—is doing right well by its promoters as the presidential election approaches.

To the general public, the GOP-Eisenhower "crusade" has given some eye-opening examples of the political technique of high-powered advertising and publicity outfits who, in Pres. Truman's words, employ much the same scare propaganda devices as do Communist and Nazi dictatorships.

But to workers in 1500 U. S. firms, the attempt to employ in politics the hucksters' methods for selling Rinso soap or quack patent medicines are an old, old story.

"CAFETERIA EDUCATION" has been operating for years, gaining ground steadily. It's the technique of bombarding workers with the NAM-GOP party line in slightly disguised or naked form. "Cafeteria education" is what "the trade" calls the wall racks by factory gates or time clocks—racks filled with pamphlets on everything from "What Makes People Successful?" to "Free Men vs. The Union Closed Shop."

More than 30 million copies of "cafeteria education" pamphlets are being passed out each year, it has been estimated, with General Motors alone distributing a million pieces a month.

The latest report on GM's operations comes from Bernard J. Schuck, editor of the Lampmaker, local paper of CIO Auto Workers Local 663, Anderson, Ind.

GM STILL FEATURES the "come-ons"—for it has said "any over doing of the economics material would be a quick way to kill off interest." Among the latest "come-ons" are a craft pattern folder No. 617 and a mechanical handbook on "Electricity and Wheels" which has gone through 13 printings.

Then come the "clinchers." One is a reprint with four-color photos of a Collier's article by David E. Lilienthal titled "Big Business for a Big Country." The general theme: end any and all restraint on monopolies.

Another GM number is a colored comic book titled "Alice in Blunderland" about—yep, you guessed it. But all the high crimes and misdemeanors it finds in government "bureaucracy" could be duplicated without half-trying in the parallel "bureaucracy" of GM, itself, or any other big business firm.

Are they pouring it on too heavy? There are signs that "cafeteria education" is proving a pale, thin diet. In the steel towns of Ohio, Timken Roller Bearing Co.—one of the toughest firms with which the CIO Steelworkers bargain — has been ladling out GOP campaign propaganda. Each new batch, it is reported, produces a new bloc of PAC workers.

Storekeepers Reminded Of Depression

THE "POCKETBOOK nerve" of small town merchants and businessmen has been touched by Stevenson campaigners in Bloomfield, N. J.

With General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors employing thousands of Bloomfield's 50,000 residents, the Fair Deal leaflet reminded local businessmen:

"Bloomfield is an industrial town. Thousands of her citizens, your customers, are employed in the industrial plants located in our town. When they slack off you are in diffculty."

Then the leaflet spelled out depression conditions under the Hoover GOP administration — many million unemployed evictions, bank failures, soup kitchens, bankruptcies. They were contrasted with recovery and progress under the New Deal, and Fair Deal, with a warning to storekeepers to "don't jeopardize your investment.

Michigan CIO Sparks Tough Fight Ag

Auto Tycoons Face Challenge

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CIO in Michigan is out to break a few traditions this election year.

One of them is that the State is safely in the bag for the Republican presidential nominee. Another is that no Democrat can be elected Governor for his third successive term. Still another is that pine stumps count the same as people.

The fight—and it's a tough one—for election victories that will lead to benefits for all the people of Michigan, instead of merely the wealthy few who run the State's industries, is spearheaded by the State CIO Council and the international office of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit.

It is a fight that finds every local CIO council and practically every CIO local union on the same side.

The enemy is the reactionary industrial machine, sparked by the auto industry, that owns the State Republican Party lock, stock and barrel, and has grown fat on victories for three quarters of a century.

Michigan always was Republican until 1932. That year its voters, like those in so many traditionally Republican states, registered their bitter resentment at Hoover Republicanism by swinging to Franklin D. Roosevelt. FDR captured the State again in 1936 and in 1944. In 1940 he lost to Wendell Willkie by 7000 votes, but the state elected the late Prentiss Brown, a Democrat, to the Senate.

Prospects Good

In 1948 Michigan was one of the states that Henry Wallace and his Progressive Party pushed into the Republican column. Pres. Truman lost to Gov. Dewey by 35,000 votes—but he would have won by a slim margin had he polled the 46,000 votes cast for Wallace.

This year, a lot of Michigan Democrats claim, the voters are going to line up on their side of the electoral fence again.

"We believe Gov. Stevenson is going to carry Michigan," UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared flatly on a recent television program.

Not all CIO leaders are as confident as Reuther—but none have abandoned hope in spite of the Republicans' extravagant claims.

"We have a good chance to carry Michigan for Stevenson—a very good chance," says August Scholle, president of the State CIO Council and also CIO regional director.

An interesting sidelight is provided by a statistician who lives in Canada and who has no emotional interest in the result. He dopes U. S. elections for the fun of it—he forecast Truman's 1948 victory—and has come up with some enlightening possibilities this year:

Since 1932, whenever the Democrats have polled 60% of the Wayne county votes, Michigan went Democratic for president or governor, he found. Then he took the percentage of Democratic votes cast in Detroit in each primary election and compared them with the votes in the final elections, which were always higher.

He struck an average percentage increase, added it to the Democratic vote in the recent Detroit primary and came up with a prediction that the final figure will be 62%. If this forecast is borne out and past elections are any guide to the present, Michigan should go in 1952 for Stevenson and Gov. G. Mennen Williams, Democrat running for a tradition-breaking third term at Lansing.

In Detroit and nearby areas, with their great Democratic strength, Stevenson, Sen. Sparkman for vice president, Williams and Sen. Moody are expected to roll up impressive totals.

Heavy Vote Seen

The registration figures augur a heavy vote. They reached a record-breaking estimated three million in the State as the result of an intensive campaign by many civic, business and other groups, including the CIO and the Auto Workers.

In Detroit and Wayne county 1.2 million are registered. Similar increases have been chalked up in other cities, especially in industrial communities where CIO membership is substantial.

Stevenson's stock soared sharply after his visit to Michigan early in October. He had a capacity audience at a rally in Detroit's Cadillac Square and enthusiastic receptions at a series of whistle stop speeches that topped those given Gen. Eisenhower, the Republican nominee, a couple of weeks before.

He met hundreds of people, including many party workers at the lower levels, and succeeded in sparking them as nothing else had. The improvement in his prospects was so noticeable that it was recorded by the political reporters of many daily newspapers supporting Eisenhower.

The average Michigan voter appears to think that the popular "Soapy" Williams is already in for his third term as Governor. However, the politically wise realize that while he has been running ahead, he is up against one of the best Republican vote-getters in the State, Sec. of State Fred M. Alger, Jr.

Fighter For People

In his two terms as Governor, Williams has been handicapped by the fact that the rest of the State administration and the Legislature have been controlled by the Republicans.

He pushed through a "Build Michigan" program that included new hospitals, public buildings, roads, schools and other things important to a growing population.

Old age assistance, unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation payments have been boosted, and aid to dependent children increased. Racketeers have been combatted, a civil defense program organized, unemployment licked, and new industries brought into the State.

All this was accomplished with the support of people of many political beliefs, but over the opposition of the diehard Republicans. Now the GOP is charging Williams with running the State into debt.

One of the reasons the deficit has mounted is that the tory industrialists who control the GOP have succeeded in blocking his efforts to push a corporation tax through the Legislature.

The Legislature instead sought to pass additional taxes—mostly of the sales variety—that would put even more of the burden of paying the State's expenses on the backs of the people. Williams succeeded in blocking such levies, hence the charge

As to the pine stumps and the people. No matter how the votes goes for national and State candidates, the Democrats just CAN'T carry the Legislature. It's stacked against them, and the Republicans want it kept that way.

It works just as it does in many industrial states where urban populations have increased sharply: the cities are short-changed on representation.

In Michigan, a state senator or representative from the northern counties where "there are more pine stumps than people," represents far fewer voters than a legislator from Wayne and nearby counties. A senator from one old logging district represents 61,000 people at present while one from a Detroit district represents 545,000. A representative from one section acts for 26,000, while one from another area speaks for 92,000 persons.

Two propositions are before the people. One, called Proposition 2, has the support of the CIO, Williams, Moody, the rest of organized labor, everybody interested in good government, liberals and civic groups. It is being pushed by such organizations through the jointly-sponsored Michigan Committee for Representative Government.

Proposition 2 would restore the balance the Legislature lacks by giving the cities adequate representation. It requires the secretary of state to do all future redistricting; as an individual, he can be taken into court if he fails to carry out the constitution, whereas the Legislature cannot.

The vested interests have come up with an alternative known as Proposition 3.

2 CIOers Running For Legislature

Two vice presidents of the Michigan CIO Council are Democratic candidates for the State Legislature, a body that has an unbroken record of Republican control.

Vice Pres. Richard Kendziorski, who also is president of the Alpena Joint Labor Council, is running for the State Senate from the 29th Dist.

Vice Pres. Don Stevens, the council's education director, is seeking election to the lower house from the 1st Dist. of Kent county, in the Grand Rapids area.

STEEL: A thunderous welcome was given Gov. Stevenson (speaking) when he appeared at Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Hall of CIO Steelworkers Local 1299, Detroit, on his second visit to Michigan. Gov. Williams of Michigan and Sen. Moody (D.) are at his right.

AUTO: Another son when he sp whipped up a s

REPUBLICANS in Michigan apparently have no financial worries. At meeting of UAW local stewards and committeemen in Detroit, Roy Reuther (left), union's PAC director, and UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey show blown-up photo of auto industry dinner to raise funds for GOP. It shows (left to right) Pres. C. E. Wilson and Executive Vice Pres. Harlowe Curtice of General Motors, and Vice. Pres. B. E. Hutchinson of Chrysler.

POLITICAL ACTION and explana union's television program, Meet t Guy Nunn, (left), union's TV and deus Machrowicz, Democrat seeki trict, in Detroit. Machrowicz, who an outstanding record as a freshm

inst GOP Fat Cats

usiastic audience, this one of the CIO Auto Workers, greeted Gov. Steven-t the gate of the Gar Wood, Inc., plant in Detroit. His trip through State of enthusiasm which unbiased observers described as extremely impressive.

Auto Industry Shells Out Plenty In Fight Against Sen. Moody

BIG BUSINESS in Michigan is gang-ng up on Sen. Moody, liberal Demo-rat who is fighting one of the counry's biggest GOP war chests.

FROM ONE END of Michigan to the other, CIO members and other liberals are saying the same thing:

"Blair Moody is a cinch to beat Rep. Potter for the U. S. Senate, but he's having a tough time licking all the dough the auto industry is raising to fight him."

Moody is the Democratic former Washington correspondent of the Detroit News who was appointed Senator from Michigan when the late Sen. Arthur H. Vandenburg died. He quickly established himself in the front ranks of congressional liberals.

Rep. Charles Potter is his Republican opponent. A former social worker and a legless veteran of World War II, he lives in Cheboygan and has represented the 11th congressional district in the last two Congresses and part of the 80th.

How much money Moody has to overcome is anybody's guess, but it's plenty. Not all of it comes from the auto industry; there is plenty of money in all Michigan industry.

The size of the anti-Moody bankroll is reflected in the thousands of billboards throughout the state plugging for Potter, the number of radio and television programs boosting him, the posters and banners extolling a man who has voted right only nine times on the 64 issues listed in the CIO News Voting Record since 1948.

Effective Campaign

But nobody is counting Moody out. He has been waging an extremely effective campaign, concentrating on the issues and refusing to indulge in personalities.

He has made hundreds of speeches, stressing the things he and the Democratic administration have stood for and emphasizing his record in the Senate. The CIO News Voting Record shows that he voted right on every one of the 15 issues that came up since his appointment.

Not all of his outstanding work is reflected in votes. When Michigan's auto industry faced serious curtailment because of lack of materials which had been channelled into defense production, Moody went to bat and won the release of enough critical metals to tide it over.

The CIO Auto Workers, the state's largest union, and the rest of organized labor are solidly behind Moody on the strength of his voting record and the additional work he did as a Senator.

Potter was little known outside his own district until the GOP nomination was handed him. The Republicans tried to build him up by finagling a hearing of the House Un-American Activities Committee, of which he is a member, in Detroit.

ssence, it would freeze inequalities in the egislature, deprive urban residents of heir right to adequate representation and ontinue to vote pine stumps instead of eople. It has the support of such groups
s the Michigan Manufacturers Associaion, the Real Estate Association and the ailroad Association.

f issues have occupied much of auto
AW-CIO, during recent weeks. Here broadcaster, interviews Rep. Thadection from the 1st Michigan disust completed his first term, made ngressman.

Stevenson Says—

'Let's Talk Sense: America Can't Afford To Be Weak'

Gov. Stevenson has deliberately and carefully outlined his views on the Korean war and foreign policy in recent campaign speeches, while refusing "to play politics with war and peace." Following are excerpts from two of these speeches:

IN JUNE OF 1950 the hopes of the world were lifted by the United Nations' decision to meet force with force in Korea, to fight to halt the ruthless, cynical Communist aggression.

President Truman's prompt decision to meet the test and his courageous leadership were saluted by all Americans, whatever their party and whatever their station in life, and by free men everywhere.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur said from his post in Japan that the President's action had lighted into a flame a lamp of hope throughout Asia that was burning dimly toward extinction.

It marked, he said, for the Far East the focal and turning point in this area of struggling for freedom.

We knew in 1950 that the Communist attack on Korea was not an isolated event. We knew that it was part and parcel of a vast drive for world domination that began long before that Sunday morning when the North Koreans crossed the 38th Parallel.

There is no other problem on which we Americans need to think so clearly as the problem created by this Soviet drive for world domination.

A MISSTEP, an unwise action, a failure of reason or of will could touch off world tragedy. But it is equally true that this is a situation where cool heads and straight thinking and unwavering determination are the guides, the only guides, which can lead us safely to world peace.

It is up to us, in America, to supply this guidance, accepting the responsibility of leadership, which, whether we like it or not, has sought us out and from which we cannot avert our faces.

We did not choose this struggle in Korea and in the world. We don't want it, but we can't avoid it. And our future depends on its outcome.

I see three stern, menacing realities. One is the harsh, ugly fact that the Communist monsters of Russia seek the mastery of the world. That fact will not end with a settlement in Korea.

The second stern reality is the fact that Korea is still a battlefield and that our boys, our sons, are dying there. No confidence in our growing strength at home can give us any real satisfaction until that day when they come home.

The third stern reality is that the building of our military might at home and the strengthening of the whole free world is placing terrific demands upon our resources. It is costing us an awful lot of money to build these defenses so that we can be sure that the malevolent lords of communism will not plunge us into a war in which the atom would destroy us all.

We dare not stop because of the price tag when what we are buying is the preservation of civilization. But we must take every precaution against weakening ourselves in the process of building our strength. We must practice the most extreme of housewifely economics in our spending. We must, too, be sure that those nations which are our friends and allies realize that there are limits to our strength. And that if we overstrain or overtax ourselves they will, with us, suffer the consequences.

TOUGH TALK about Communism will not deter the Soviet Union from new adventures. The thing which will save the world from war is American strength, and real strength need not be loud or belligerent. Nor is it just a matter of our national strength alone. It is equally the strength of the free world — the strength of the nations which stand between us and the Soviet Union.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch
With America's Future At Stake

Strength is the road to peace. Weakness is the road to war. This is the simple truth of peace and war in our times.

The Democratic Party has been consistently the party of strength — and thus the party of peace.

Let's talk sense to the American people. Peace is far more important than who wins this election.

AND LET'S TALK SENSE about what we have gained by our determination, our expenditures, and our valor in Korea.

We have not merely said, we have proven that communism can go no further unless it is willing to risk world war.

We have proven to all the peoples of the Far East that communism is not the wave of the future, that it can be stopped.

We have helped to save the peoples of Indo-China from Communist conquest.

We have smashed the threat to Japan through Korea and so have strengthened this friend and ally.

We have mightily strengthened our defenses and all our defensive positions around the world.

We have blocked the road to Communist domination of the Far East and frustrated the creation of a position of power which would have threatened the whole world.

I would say one thing more about the great debate over our foreign policy.

My opponents say the threat to our liberty comes from within.

I say that the threat comes from without—and I offer the fate of the enslaved peoples of the world as my evidence.

My opponents say America cannot afford to be strong.

I say that America cannot afford to be weak.

I promise no easy solutions, no relief from burdens and anxieties, for to do this would be not only dishonest; it would be to attack the foundations of our greatness.

I can offer something infinitely better: an opportunity to work and sacrifice that freedom may flourish.

I call upon America to reject the new isolationism and to surpass her own glorious achievements. Then we may, with God's help, deserve to call ourselves the sons of our fathers.

Steel, Oil Locals Plugging In Gary Area

By GERVASE N. LOVE

WHEN THE wind blows from the right direction—or from the wrong, if you feel that way about it—the people of Lake County, Ind., can't forget that they live in one of the country's most tightly-knit industrial sections.

The fumes from the oil refineries and the smoke from steel mills stain its cities and its flat countryside — or, perhaps, drift north over Lake Michigan or west into next-door Chicago.

Industry is booming in this northwest corner of Indiana, and with it, jobs. Some 30,000 of those jobs are filled by CIO members, most of whom belong to the Steelworkers or Oil Workers.

During the past few years they have played a potent role in politics. This campaign is no exception, and they are working hard as ever to give CIO-recommended candidates—there are no formal endorsements—thumping majorities on Nov. 4.

The political action campaign is under the direction of the Lake County CIO Council. The council president, John Truchan, who also is the Steelworkers' sub-district director, is PAC chairman. The fight is being waged from three focal points—council headquarters in East Chicago, the Oil Workers' Hall in Hammond, and Philip Murray Hall, the Steelworkers sub-district office in Gary, largest community in the county with about 135,000 residents.

Lake County makes up the 1st Indiana congressional district. Since 1942 it has been represented in Congress by Rep. Ray J. Madden.

Madden has one of the best voting records in the House. In sessions from the beginning of 1947 through 1952, comprising the 80th, 81st and 82d Congresses, The CIO News Voting Record shows he has not cast a single wrong vote.

MORE THAN THAT: He was present and voted right on each of the important issues listed in the Voting Records except for one absence back in 1947. To the workers in Lake County, this means he has the courage of his convictions and isn't afraid to put himself on the record, a trait lacking in some of his House colleagues.

"We just have to re-elect Ray Madden," said Truchan, "and I'm pretty sure we can do it. We can't afford to lose a man with a record in Congress like his.

"We hope to give good majorities, too, to Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman for President and Vice President, and we're getting out every vote we can for Gov. Henry F. Schricker so he can take the place of an isolationist, reactionary Republican like William Jenner in the Senate."

Jenner has one of the worst records in the upper chamber. Although he has opposed most of the things Gen. Eisenhower stood for in the early stages of his campaign, the Republican presidential candidate publicly bestowed his blessing. The Indiana Senator was the sponsor of the notorious Jenner Amendment to the Social Security Act.

Schricker is one of the few Democrats ever elected to a major office in traditionally Republican Indiana. He enjoys immense personal popularity and has the united support of labor and liberal groups.

The CIO in Lake County has given out thousands of pieces of literature in and around the plants. Special buttons plugging the Stevenson and Sparkman candidacies were distributed by the thousands.

The autos of hundreds of workers display stickers and bumper cards passed out by the CIO-PAC.

THE CIO-PAC had to step up its work sharply when Madden was stricken by appendicitis early in October. He was forced to undergo an operation in a Gary hospital when his campaign was at its hottest.

Madden recovered quickly and after the first couple of days was able to direct operations from the hospital.

But he was still unable to carry on with his previous vigor when CIO Pres. Philip Murray, speaking at a Steelworkers' district convention in Gary, gave a detailed analysis of the election issues and told of the high regard in which the CIO holds Madden.

Murray also urged the candidacies of Stevenson, Sparkman, Schricker and the other Democratic nominees recommended by the CIO.

Lake County has 370,000 residents. About 200,000, a record high, have registered to vote in the more than 300 precincts. In 1948, when about 180,000 men and women were registered, only about half that number voted.

"We're going to do better than that this time," Truchen predicted. "There is a lot of interest in this campaign. We're getting out the best vote we possibly can—and those votes are going to be marked for our CIO-endorsed candidates."

APPENDICITIS failed to halt campaigning of Rep. Ray J. Madden, liberal Indiana Democrat seeking reelection from Lake County area. Here he is in Gary hospital, making plans to be carried out on return to the hustings. Meantime, CIO-PAC stepped up its activity to make sure he can continue his good work in Congress.

WIDE VARIETY of election literature, stickers and buttons is displayed by Lake County (Ind.) CIO-PAC officers in Philip Murray Hall, headquarters of Steelworkers in Gary. Left to right are Vice Chairman John L. Howard, Financial Sec. John F. Milasich, Recording Sec. Ted Vaughn, Pres. John Truchan and Trustee Frank C. Gordon.

PAC Blocks Workers Rarin' To Go In South Chicago District

THE 3RD ILLINOIS congressional district, in the southwest section of Chicago, offers a classic example of what happens when the workers really do a job in an election.

In 1944 and 1948, when the CIO Political Action Committee was able to do a thorough-going job of registering the voters and getting them to the polls, Democrats were elected to Congress.

Much of the work was under the general direction of Dist. Dir. Joseph Germano, of the CIO Steelworkers.

In 1942, 1946 and 1950, when a lot of the workers unfortunately let their interest lag, the district picked Rep. Fred E. Busbey (R.), a broker and financial counsellor by professional and a rampant reactionary by inclination and practice.

IN THE LAST four years he has served in Congress—the 80th and 82d Congresses—Busbey has cast a grand total of two "right" votes, according to The CIO News Voting Record. One came in 1947 and one the following year; both were on the same issue, the Anti-Polltax Bill.

"When we have the emotional impact of a presidential campaign to get our members interested," ruefully said Anthony Graczyk, CIO-PAC chairman in the district and sub-regional director of the CIO Steelworkers, "we get a good man in Congress. "In the off years we get Busbey."

Busbey's Democrat opponent is Neil J. Linehan, personable young electrical contractor with a record of long membership in the AFL Electrical Workers Union and a wide acquaintance among veterans. He has the official CIO endorsement.

It was Linehan who defeated Busbey in 1948, when Pres. Truman was re-elected. In refreshing contrast to Busbey's, his voting record for the 81st Congress does not show a single "wrong" vote in The CIO News Voting Record.

The district is almost a cross-section of America. It includes three full wards and parts of three others. Five thousand CIO members are among its 325,000 or so residents.

In its factories and mills members of many CIO unions, but principally the Steelworkers and Auto Workers, earn their livings.

The job of breaking down the membership lists of CIO unions for all of Illinois was done by the Illinois State CIO Council and the State PAC, which also checked the individual names against the rolls of registered voters.

The Steelworkers' sub-district PAC, composed of two elected officers and two additional delegates from each local, separated the "sheep," or those who were registered, from those who were not.

To all of the latter went postcards, reminding them they had not qualified themselves for voting and telling them where and when they could do so.

This was followed up in the plants. Shop stewards and committeemen received lists of the unregistered from their local presidents and prodded the recalcitrant until practically all of them—and their families—got themselves on the rolls.

WHILE THIS was going on, a political action office was opened down on S. Racine ave., in the heart of the congressional district. In charge are Graczyk, Assistant Chairman Matthew Mrozinski and Mrs. Zoe Mikva.

With approximately 200,000 registered voters scattered in 421 precincts, the job of getting out enough votes to insure proper representation in Congress for all the people is obviously not an easy one.

Graczyk and Mrozinski get a lot of comfort from the registration, an all-time high. But they are realists enough not to give credit for all of it to CIO-PAC efforts, for other civic groups and both major political parties also campaigned vigorously to get the voters on the rolls.

"But we can't lose sight of the fact," Graczyk pointed out, "that every time we've had a high registration in the past, the district went Democratic."

The CIO-PAC and the Democrats in the district work together closely. They consult frequently, distribute each other's literature and advise each other of progress made.

"They sometimes forget," Graczyk sighed, "that we're not part and parcel of the Democratic Party.

"Things are a lot different than they used to be in our district, though. When we first started our political action work, a lot of Democratic precinct leaders would tell us, 'You don't have to bother coming into my precinct—I've got it sewed up.'

"We went in anyway, and we did a job. Now these same fellows call us on the telephone and asks us when we're going to lend them a hand. Sometimes they even ask to have the same people we sent in last time go in again."

BY THE TIME Nov. 4 rolls around, every CIO member living in the district will have been visited by a CIO-PAC worker. He will be given campaign literature, the issues will be explained to him, he will receive a sample ballot and a list of CIO-endorsed candidates, and he will be told the location of his polling place and the hours the polls will be open.

The block workers, for the most part, are also to be poll watchers on Nov. 4.

The CIO-PAC expects to cover at least 80% of the 421 precincts with poll watchers. In actual fact, it probably will be a lot closer to 100%, with only a few precincts where no CIO members live remaining uncovered.

Regardless of the outcome of the election, the CIO-PAC will not fold up. The office will be closed a few days after Nov. 4. But the PAC will continue to meet once a month with its eyes on next year and on 1954, when another congressional election comes.

UWUA Supports Stevenson

The CIO Utility Workers' executive board last week announced its support of Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman, Democratic candidates for President and Vice President. The board said:

"The Democratic performance over the past 20 years earns beyond the shadow of a doubt the vote of each and every person who depends on his skill and his brains for the necessities of life.

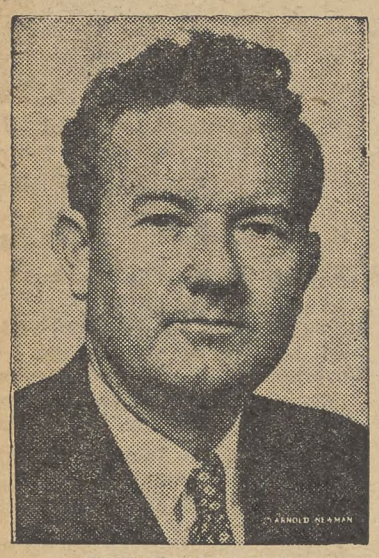
"It is true that the Republican performance over the last 20 years and especially since the regimes of Harding, Coolidge and Hoover demonstrates conclusively that it is the party of special privilege and of the wealthy people of the country."

Bread And Butter Facts—

Sparkman vs. Nixon—Study In Contrast

By MILTON PLUMB

THE DECISION of top GOP strategists to substitute Sen. Nixon (R. Calif.) for Gen. Eisenhower on several scheduled television broadcasts just before the election means much more than just another "build-up" for the Republicans' "wonder boy" of the Senate.



SEN. SPARKMAN

SEN. NIXON

It is another indication of the steady replacement, in the governing councils of the Republican Party, of earlier intentions to campaign on Eisenhower's supposedly "progressive" principles—which Ike himself helped shelve as he embraced Old Guard reaction.

The clinching proof of reactionary control, however, is the selection of Nixon to pinch-hit for the GOP Presidential nominee in the crucial pre-election talks. Nixon's political philosophy is clearly documented in his votes during his six years in Congress.

Sen. Sparkman (Ala.), the Democratic nominee for Vice President, also has a specific voting record on crucial issues. It runs back 10 years longer, but throughout it contrasts sharply with Nixon's by being on the side of the people and against the special interests.

A COMPARISON of the recorded votes of the two men indicates clearly the fundamental difference between the two parties which nominated them for the second highest office in the land. Their records offer voters the rare chance to make up their minds on performance, not promises.

Nixon, now designated top spokesman for Republican ideals, has been consistently anti-labor. In addition he has opposed the interests of the majority of the people on minimum wages, social security, low income housing, rent control, price control, taxes, anti-trust laws, and such farm measures as soil conservation, rural electrification and loans to tenant farmers.

Sparkman's record on these "bread and butter" issues is almost the exact opposite. He has been consistently on the side of the average citizen and opposed to monoply interests. He has been a friend of labor and the champion of small business and consumers. The son of a tenant farmer, he has worked for a sound agricultural program, leading the fights for rural electrification and farm housing.

The crucial years ahead will decide whether workers' incomes will go up or down, whether food and clothing prices and rents will be held in line, whether taxes now paid by big business will be shifted to the people. What Nixon and Sparkman propose on each of these questions is shown by their records.

One of them will be the next Vice President — possibly even the future head of the nation. As President of the Senate, the one elected will exercise enormous influence on the decision Congress must give on these questions affecting each voter's welfare.

The voting records of these men reveal clearly which one would work for the special interests and which one would work for YOU.

Nixon	Issues	Sparkman
Helped draft Taft-Hartley; voted to override veto and against repeal. Voted to use T-H injunction against steel strikers.	TAFT-HARTLEY ACT: This "sweat labor" law which favors management over labor and brings back the previously outlawed use of injunctions to break strikes was passed by the Republican-controlled 80th Congress over President Truman's veto. Congress called for its use against CIO Steelworkers in the recent steel strike.	Voted against anti-union amendments in Senate and against overriding veto. Voted for repeal in 1949 and against use in steel dispute.
Voted for Portal-to-Portal Act, for denying WSB power to settle emergency disputes, and to relieve employers from penalties for violating minimum wage laws. Also voted in 1951 to deprive one million workers of minimum wage protection.	WAGE ISSUES: The Portal-to-Portal Act relieved employers from liabilities and penalties when they were caught violating the Fair Labor Standards and Walsh-Healy Acts; following steel strike, Congress stripped the WSB of power to handle non-wage disputes and made realistic wage stabilization impossible; in 1949 an effort was made to weaken minimum wage laws by lifting penalties against violators.	Voted against Portal-to-Portal Act, for continuing WSB dispute powers and against lifting penalties on employers for minimum wage violations.
Voted for cut in OPA funds that killed price controls in 1947, and in 82nd Congress voted to prohibit slaughter quotas, for pre-Korean price markups and decontrol of agricultural items. Supported local rent decontrol provisions and voted to end rent control in 1949 and against extensions since.	PRICE AND RENT CONTROL: In the 80th Congress, war time price controls were killed prematurely and inflation followed; after Korea, Congress wrote a weak law reestablishing price controls but in 1951 and 1952 enacted crippling amendments. Moves were made in Congress to weaken and kill rent controls. The weakening amendments to the price and rent control provisions have cost consumers many billions of dollars in higher prices and have worked severe hardships on persons with fixed incomes.	Voted to continue OPA in 1947 and opposed ban on slaughter quotas, pre-Korean markups and exemption of agricultural items. Has opposed all weakening rent decontrol provisions and voted for all legislation continuing rent controls.
Voted in 1947 for bigger slices in tax for upper income brackets and against an excess profits tax in 1948. Last year voted to save corporations $500 million in excess profits taxes.	TAXES: No better test of a Congressman's sympathies is available than his votes on tax legislation. Throughout the last decade, reactionaries have sought to shift more and more of the cost of government to low and middle income taxpayers by special tax loopholes for corporations and individuals with high incomes. Every cut in taxes for the latter means an added tax burden for families with small incomes.	Voted against 1947 cuts in upper brackets but has voted consistently for larger tax exemption for each person and voted for the 1948 excess profits measure. Opposed tax gift to corporations last year and all special concessions for wealthy.
Voted to kill public housing in 1949, and in 1951 and 1952 to cut program to 5000 units; voted against new hospitals, cancer research and aid to medical education; voted against use of tidelands revenues for education and opposed increase in school lunch program appropriations.	HOUSING, HEALTH AND EDUCATION: The real estate and medical lobbies have vigorously opposed public housing and all federal efforts to insure adequate medical care. The oil lobby likewise vigorously opposed a measure in the last Congress to earmark federal income from tidelands oil leases for the nation's schools. Funds for the school lunch program are greatly under the need and many children are suffering from inadequate diets as a result.	Leads Senate in sponsorship of public housing and farm housing measures and voted against all efforts to cut the housing program; voted for new hospitals, more funds for cancer research and for aid to medical education; voted for use of tidelands revenues for education and for increase in school lunch appropriations.

PAC Spurred In Wisconsin

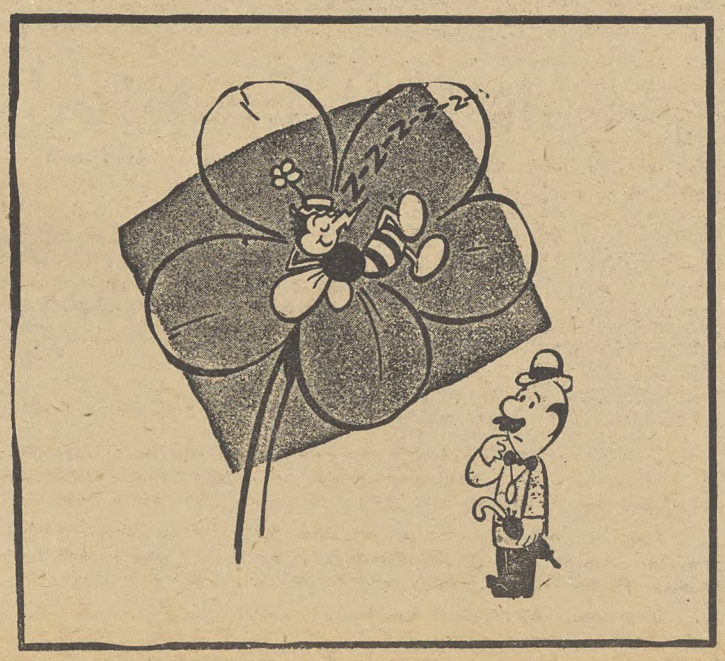
WISCONSIN registration hit an all-time high as the books were closed last week and the Wisconsin CIO-PAC moved immediately into final phases of an all-out election campaign.

The newly-elected officers of the State CIO Council, Pres. Charles Schultz and Secy.-Treas. Ross Baum, opened a "saturation" state-wide speaking tour, designed to whip local union PAC machinery into full effort for election day.

The State PAC steering committee named five regional coordinators covering all key districts. It also announced the following endorsements: U. S. Senator, Tom Fairchild (D); Governor, William Proxmire (D); Lieut.-Governor, Sverre Roang (D); and Attorney-General, Eliot Walstead (D).

The state organization concurred in the following Congressional endorsements made by CIO county councils:

Arne Agrew (D. 1st), Horace Wilke (D. 2d), Gardner Withrow (R. 3d), Clement Zablocki (D. 4th), Andrews Biemiller (D. 5th); Ralph Norem (D. 6th) and Robert Schultz (D. 8th).



FACT AND FANCY—It's a popular notion that the bee is busy. The fact is that the bee is a gold brick, lazy and hates to work.

THE TRUTH is that price controls do keep prices down. After Korea without controls, prizes zoomed up 8%. With controls, increase was held to just 3%.

Stakes Are Big, Fight Close In California

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN
Special Correspondent

CIO MEMBERS and leaders in California have eased up on "business as usual" to "tool up" for an all-out political action drive.

A key state in past elections, California this time apparently will play as decisive a role as it did in 1916, when it tipped the scales and sent Woodrow Wilson back to the White House.

Only this time, California is not a small state finding itself by political accident holding a trump card; in 1952, the Golden State holds a pivotal 32 electoral votes.

Political observers are saying that now its "as California goes, so goes the nation," and they may be right.

That's why up and down California, CIO-PAC is stretching an action program designed to reach millions of homes and hundreds of plants. It's an action program aimed at the twin-pronged purpose of bringing the issues before the voters, and getting out a huge vote.

To do that, the PAC program is weaving together activity that stems from National CIO-PAC and headquarters of CIO internationals, wraps in the Western Region CIO-PAC, the CIO-California Industrial Union Council, city and county councils, and reaches right on through to local unions and shop units.

It's a gigantic blue-print; and the blue-print is being lifted from paper and translated into precinct workers, campaign coordinators, literature distributors, envelope stuffers, typists, door-bell ringers, etc.

CIOers in California are on the move to elect Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman, and candidates for Congress and the State Legislature, as well as push some propositions important to labor, particularly No. 13 to repeal cross-filing.

PAC activity is centered in the heavily-populated Los Angeles county and the San Francisco Bay Area, with San Diego and Orange counties also getting needed attention.

Some idea of the magnitude of the job is revealed in the report by John A. Despol, State CIO Council secretary-treasurer, that his headquarters, alone, is getting out well over 1,250,000 pieces of literature up and down the state.

DISTRICT and area headquarters of the various internationals in California have assigned staff personnel, ranging up to 10 or 12, to work full-time in political action work. On top of that, various locals are placing a large number of their members into the field for campaign work.

CIO also has taken to the television screens to tell its story to the public. Joining in with the national CIO-TV program, the State CIO Council has arranged several telecasts for "The Peoples Political Poll" in Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego.

With those tempting 32 electoral votes, both Democrats and Republicans are anxiously aware of this state's importance in 1952. Gov. Stevenson and Gen. Eisenhower both placed two trips through California into their campaign itineraries. Pres. Truman has visited San Francisco, and whistle-stopped through part of the state.

Sen. Kefauver, who showed himself a great vote getter in California, will be here to campaign for Stevenson. Another vote-getter, Gov. Warren, is now campaigning for Eisenhower, though some whisper it is being done with reluctance.

This state defies analysis along strict party designations; actually, party labels mean little.

Cross-filing, a system which allows candidates to file for any political ticket and results generally in the reelection of incumbents in the primary elections, has served to almost obliterate party designations.

The system was introduced in 1913 at the time when the late Hiram Johnson, then a liberal governor, was out to break the party machines dominated by the Southern Pacific Railroad. By one of those twists of politics, today's liberals in California are out to kill cross-filing, which they charge is "one of the greatest barriers to party responsibility yet devised."

As the result of cross-filing, 14 incumbent Congressmen were reelected in the June primaries. The Republicans and Democrats split eight to six, with the edge going to the former. Of the 16 remaining contests, four can be tabbed "pretty certain" for Republicans, two for the Democrats.

The other 10 contests are marginal, and it appears likely they will be decided by the direction taken by the presidential race. About five of those 10, the more bold observers will predict, are "leaning" toward the Republicans, three toward the Democrats, with the remaining two a complete toss-up at this writing.

It adds up to one thing: the Democrats are in a tough battle and must really pour on the heat in the presidential race to pull through in fairly good shape as far as the congressional races are concerned.

What, then, is the presidential race situation in California?

Democrats have won each time since 1932—but Republicans admittedly have been climbing. And in 1948, the story of California paralleled that of the nation. Truman won, but only by the thin edge of 17,865 votes. Latest registration figures show Democrats still leading in the state, but, again, Republicans are coming up.

OTHER FOREBODING factors for Democrats: They are handicapped by lack of strong party organization, and carry the burdens of internal factionalism. They have no candidate for Senator—Republican William Knowland won that in the primaries, and there are no contests in 14 of the 30 congressional districts.

There are mounting indications—particularly the big turnout for Stevenson on his last visit—that the vote will be tremendous, a factor that usually aids the Democrats.

Democrats, despite inner dissension, give evidence of genuine enthusiasm and working unity for the top of the ticket. There is this year considerable more activity, more interest and a broaded involvement of people throughout the state.

And—a factor of key importance—in 1952, organized labor in California is far better organized for political action, considerably more vigorous in its campaigning, and united in its strong support for Stevenson and Sparkman.

Lastly, there is no denying that a Democratic drift—which may rapidly become a real trend—is evident in the state.

CIO AND AFL clothing workers in Los Angeles whooped it up for Adlai Stevenson.

Big Stakes In Golden State

The sunkist statistics from "California boosters" are more than just hullaballoo in this presidential battle.

Because of its population growth the past 10 years, California is among the top states in electoral votes. It has 32, tied with Pennsylvania. Only New York with 45 is higher.

And California's congressional delegation is stepped up by seven new members, to a total 30—many of them from gerrymandered districts.

Home State Dubious On Dick As Soap Opera Furor Fades

Twice the Republicans have picked a Californian for their vice presidential candidate.

In 1948, they named Gov. Warren—and then Truman narrowly carried California.

This year the Vice President post went to "the subsidized Senator from California," Richard Nixon, and the unanswered questions about his $18,000 "trust fund" from big Los Angeles interests is weakening the GOP ticket.

While Nixon's political backers are putting up a brave front that "it's all over, so let's not talk about it anymore," ordinary citizens are asking "where did he get $40,000 to buy that house, anyway"?

The Nixon ad agency soap opera style went over at first; now Californians are thinking and skeptical.

Apart from the national furor, the Nixon affair strained the relations of Old Guard Republicans and the smoother-talking Warren followers in the GOP.

Managers of the Nixon fund revealed their distrust of the "social minded" Warren... Anti-Nixon Republicans leaked the slush fund story. And Warren backers privately are furious at Nixon for knifing the Governor's own presidential dreams. Now the Governor is talking for the General—but his heart isn't in it.

Nixon's Realty Pals Get Swatted

THE DOUBLE-barreled plan of the Los Angeles real estate boys to kill public housing there, and cash in on a $13 million city investment has been slapped down by the United States Supreme Court.

The high court has refused to hear an appeal from the ruling of the California Supreme Court that Los Angeles must proceed with a 10,000-unit public housing project.

Not that Sen. Nixon didn't do his best to help the boys out. For, by coincidence, the Los Angeles real estate boys were among the contributors to Nixon's $18,000 "private expense fund." And as the treasurer of the fund explained when it was exposed, "Dick did what we wanted him to do."

When the landlords' lobby failed in the California Supreme Court it turned to "Our Boy Dick." Nixon and Sen. Knowland, also GOP from California, introduced in the Senate an amendment to the Defense Production Act which in effect have cancelled federal participation in the Los Angeles public housing project.

The Nixon-Knowland amendment had nothing to do with the Defense Production Act, so Vice Pres. Barkley ruled it out of order. Nixon-Knowland appealed. They lost, 44 to 32. All 32 votes were GOP.

And the $13 million investment the realty boys might have cashed in on? The Housing Authority, appointed by City Council, mapped the housing project. The Council authorized the Authority to go ahead. The federal government advanced $12,679,952 for land acquisition, site clearing and other expenses. So, if the landlords' lobby had won in the United States Supreme Court, they could have cashed in on the $13 million worth already done.

After the Authority had invested the $13 million in preliminary work, the landlords lobby put on the heat, and got a new City Council to reverse the work authorization. The Authority went to court, and won in the State Supreme Court.

That's when Nixon came to the aid of his party—the realty boys. When Nixon's Senate move failed, the realty boys went to the United States Supreme Court. There they lost. (LPA)

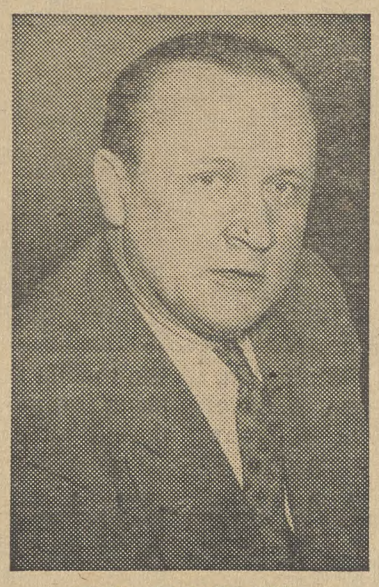
"You got the wrong idea, Duffy, when I said our Union representative just needs a second to settle grievances with the management!"

"There's a man out here who says your falsehoods are giving organized labor a black eye, and he wants to return the uncompliment!"

'One-Party State'—

Californians Fight Cross-Filing Gimmick

GOV. WARREN



SEN. KNOWLAND

They've won in primaries thanks to cross-filing hocus-pocus.

CALIFORNIANS are trying to get rid of their "one-party state" and get back into the Union.

Once again they're gunning for the state's peculiar and almost exclusive cross-filing system.

That's the system which allows politicians for state or congressional office to file as candidates on any and all parties, apart from their own, in primary elections: Hidebound Republicans as Democrats . . . Commie-line third partyites as Republicans . . . and Fair Deal liberals on the GOP line.

The end result in the Golden State is much like the decisive one-party primaries of Maine or Mississippi.

California political races—in 80% of all contests for the State Legislature, frequently for Congress, often for top-ranking state offices, and occasionally for Senator or Governor—are decided to all intents and purposes in the June primary.

THAT'S WHEN the vote is lighter, and a few thousand dollars of campaign funds from big Sacremento lobbyists will put a no-good lawmaker back in office. So he gets both the Democratic and GOP nominations—and when the November general election rolls around, there's nothing the individual voter can do about it.

The nation as a whole gets a glimpse of the California system only occasionally, as with the cross-filing victory of Sen. Knowland (R.) last spring. He won both nominations; hence he is as good as in. Gov. Warren did the same thing back in 1946 against Robert W. Kenny, Democrat and then state attorney general.

A few other states—Maine, Vermont and Texas—authorize cross-filing in limited form. Others—New York, Maryland and Massachusetts—have tried it and turned it down, the Bay State just last year.

Now a Committee to Abolish Cross-Filing is campaigning to do the same job in California.

It is sponsoring Prop. 13, an initiative titled after CIO unionists lent a hand on petitions. And it has the support of the state CIO and AFL, of a number of Democratic leaders (who have seen their registration lead nullified by the cross-filing hocus-pocus), and by several conservative Republicans. Their common purpose is to restore "political responsibility" under a two-party system in the state.

State CIO support of the repealer measure was voted with a warning that "the evil practice of cross-filing in California has resulted in the blurring of party lines and party responsibility and has in effect abolished the diverse parties system in our state politics."

Biggest opponents of the cross-filing repealer are the Sacramento lobbyists, because approval of Prop. 13 would wipe out "victories-in-the-primary" and lessen their control over state lawmakers.

The biggest Sacramento lobbyist is Artie Samish, whose $1 million brewers' lobbying fund is just a beginning. Every so often he's exposed as "the secret boss of California" and gets investigated, with no consequential results.

Last year the California Legislature, with the lobbyists' approval, put on the ballot a diversionary measure to confuse the voters: it would add party designations to candidates' names, but it would keep cross-filing on the books.

That's just a "partial measure," the State CIO Council said, and it urges "the full measure of the popular initiative" by adoption of Prop. 13 to repeal cross-filing.

Cain, Darling Of Lobbies, Under Fire In Northwest

By GEORGE HOLCOMB
Special Correspondent

THERE'S just one Senate seat up for contest in the Pacific Northwest states—but on its outcome may depend the chance for decent housing legislation and real rent control for all of the nation.

That contest is in Washington State, where liberal Rep. Henry M. Jackson (D.) appears to have a chance to defeat Sen. Cain (R.), the arch reactionary incumbent and darling of the real estate lobbyists (among others).

Cain is one of the Senate's meat-ax "Class of '46" who have been so warmly embraced by Gen. Eisenhower. By his record in the housing field, Cain is a good example of CIO Pres. Philip Murray's recent comment that "there's no dividing line" between the real estate lobby in the nation's capital and the GOP lineup in Congress.

CIO-PAC forces in Washington State are putting heavy emphasis to the campaign of Jackson. The 40-year-old Congressman has an excellent voting record and has shown real leadership in the battle to conserve and develop natural resources—which is all important in the Pacific Northwest.

NEITHER OREGON nor Idaho has senatorial contests, but there are a number of important House of Representatives contests.

In the race for Oregon's four seats in the House, one Republican, from the 2nd Dist., has retired. The Democrats have a fair chance of replacing him with a CIO-backed liberal, John Jones. His opponent, Sam Coon, is an all-out anti-laborite.

From the 3rd Dist., Homer Angell, GOP incumbent with a fair record, is opposed by Alf Corbett, who the CIO-PAC believes would have a better record. He may win. Two incumbent conservatives, GOP Reps. Norblad and Ellsworth, apparently will win in the 1st and 4th Districts.

In Washington, the CIO is backing Stimpson Bullitt (D.), to fill the seat formerly held by Rep. Hugh Mitchell (D.), now a candidate for governor. Bullitt is running against Thomas Pelly, former Seattle Chamber of Commerce president and buddy of the National Association of Manufacturers. So Pelly has plenty of money for his campaign.

Harry Hensen, chairman of the state Democratic central committee, has CIO-PAC support to fill the seat vacated by Henry Jackson. He is opposing Jack Westland, who openly admits he has plenty of financial backing from big business interests.

Gordon Quarnstrom, liberal ex-newspaperman with CIO backing, again opposes R. V. Mack, GOP incumbent with a bad voting record, in the 3rd District. He came within 6000 votes of beating Mack in 1950.

For the new at-large seat in Washington, a young CIO Newspaper Guildsman, Don Magnuson, is carrying on a nigh-moneyless campaign against Republican Albert Canwell. The latter headed the "Dies Committee" of the Washington State Senate a couple years ago and is well known. But Magnuson has a popular name, based on the appeal of Sen. W. G. Magnuson (D.). If labor turns out, young Magnuson has a good chance.

In Idaho, Mrs. Gracie Pfost, liberal Democrat who came within 772 votes of defeating anti-laborite John Wood in 1950, is rated a good chance to oust him this year.

THE SUCCESS of CIO political action depends on two things in the Northwest, as elsewhere: the strength of Stevenson and the activities of PAC.

Union leadership seems to be thoroughly aroused over the possibilities that the Republicans might win nationally.

Officers of the CIO Woodworkers, with headquarters in Portland, Ore., have sent out several personal messages to locals urging registration, voting and political action campaigns. State and regional CIO leaders are "beating the hustings."

State CIO-PAC political recommendations are being widely circulated to members. In Spokane, Wash., AFL and CIO unions have united on endorsements. Mimeographed material is being circulated to local unions urging members to back endorsed candidates.

Speaking personally as a PAC district chairman myself, I know there's much more that needs doing. Individualism is a strong tradition in the Northwest when it comes to politics, and union members have to be "sold" on candidates just like on anything else. If CIO-PAC is going to ring up definite accomplishments, it will need "organizers" just as CIO unions need organizers to win NLRB elections.

Townsend Hits Ike On Segregation

WILLARD TOWNSEND, president of the CIO Transport Service Employees, last week condemned Gen. Eisenhower for opposing fair practices legislation and supporting segregation in the armed services.

The UTSE president repudiated as "false statements" by GOP "stooges" the claim that he was backing the General.

"This is just another attempt to confuse the voters," Townsend said. "CIO's endorsement of Gov. Stevenson for President is likewise my personal endorsement."

Townsend said, "I don't see how any intelligent Negro could support the candidacy of Gen. Eisenhower, who is declared flatly against a Federal FEPC law." He also condemned Eisenhower's past testimony in favor of segregation in the military services.

AMA Front Urges Doctors To Turn On Heat For GOP

A NATION-WIDE campaign to have doctors pressure patients into voting Republican was begun last week by a GOP front organization.

Known as the National Professional Committee for Eisenhower and Nixon, the pressure group is a cover-up for the American Medical Association, which is not supposed to be political.

The committee urged doctors to write personal notes to all patients on their mailing lists. If you are too busy to write personal letters, the committee said to the doctors, send printed cards.

Signing the letter sent to the doctors were three past presidents of the AMA, plus past presidents of five other professional organizations: law, dentistry, accounting, engineering, and pharmaceutical manufacturing.

Directing the campaign is the publicity firm of Whitaker and Baxter, which handled the AMA's multi-million dollar campaign against national health insurance.

Tune In On CIO-TV

PEOPLE'S POLITICAL POLL

Station	City and State	Time
WSB-TV	Atlanta, Ga.	10:30 P.M., Thursday
WAAM	Baltimore, Md.	7:15 P.M., Tuesday
WAFM-TV	Birmingham, Ala.	10:15 P.M., Friday
WTTV	Bloomington, Ind.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WENR-TV	Chicago, Ill.	8:30 P.M., Thursday
WCPO-TV	Cincinnati, O.	1:00 P.M., Sunday
WXEL	Cleveland, O.	9:30 P.M., Monday
WTVN	Columbus, O.	6:30 P.M., Sunday
WFAA	Dallas, Tex.	1:30 P.M., Sunday
WOC-TV	Davenport, Iowa	10:45 P.M., Tuesday
WHIO-TV	Dayton, O.	4:15 P.M., Saturday
WFEL-TV	Denver, Colo.	10:15 P.M., Tuesday
		10:15 P.M., Monday, Nov. 3
WICU	Erie, Pa.	7:00 P.M., Monday
KPRC-TV	Houston, Tex.	5:30 P.M., Friday
WJAC-TV	Johnstown, Pa.	6:30 P.M., Friday
WDAF-TV	Kansas City, Mo.	5:30 P.M., Tuesday
KECA-TV	Los Angeles, Cal.	9:00 P.M., Monday
WHAS-TV	Louisville, Ky.	7:00 P.M., Tuesday
WTJV	Miami, Fla.	6:15 P.M., Friday, Oct. 31
WNHC-TV	New Haven, Conn.	12:00 P.M., Sunday
WABD	New York, N. Y.	8:15 P.M., Thursday
KMTV	Omaha, Neb.	10:30 P.M., Friday
WFIL-TV	Philadelphia, Pa.	6:45 P.M., Friday
WDTV	Pittsburgh, Pa.	8:00 P.M., Tuesday
WTVR	Richmond, Va.	6:45 P.M., Saturday, Nov. 1
WHAM-TV	Rochester, N. Y.	6:00 P.M., Wednesday
KSL-TV	Salt Lake City, Ut.	10:00 P.M., Thursday
KFMB-TV	San Diego, Cal.	2:45 P.M., Saturday
KGO-TV	San Francisco, Cal.	6:30 P.M., Monday
KING-TV	Seattle, Wash.	6:15 P.M., Saturday
WSYR-TV	Syracuse, N. Y.	2:45 P.M., Sunday
WKTV	Utica, N. Y.	6:45 P.M., Tuesday
WTTG	Washington, D. C.	9:30 P.M., Friday

UAW-CIO PROGRAMS

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther will make two more radio and television broadcasts before Election Day. The TV broadcast is slated for the basic CBS-TV network on Sunday, Nov. 2 at 5:30 p. m. EST. The radio broadcast over CBS-Radio is scheduled for 8:30 p. m. EST on Thursday, Oct. 30.

THESE ARMED National Guardsmen failed to dampen the spirits of the ACWA-CIO strikers at the Water Valley, Miss., plant of Rice-Stix Co.

ACWA-CIO pickets at the Farmington, Mo., plant of Rice-Stix Co. pause to have picture taken and to get sandwiches from the mobile strike headquarters. Note their signs summing up the issues in strike for a decent initial contract.

T-H 'Works' Tossed At ACWA Strikers

THE RICE-STIX Co. has followed every twist and turn of the Taft-Hartley pattern in trying to break strikes of the CIO Clothing Workers at two of its garment plants in Mississippi and Missouri, but has run into a brick wall of union solidarity.

The firm has thrown all the tricks in the T-H book at the 550 ACWA strikers at Water Valley, Miss., and Farmington, Mo., who are seeking first contracts after winning National Labor Relations Board elections.

The situation at Water Valley has grown so bad that last week the CIO charged violations of the criminal provisions of the Civil Rights Act.

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, formally asked U. S. Atty. Gen. James P. McGranery for an investigation to determine if the company has conspired with State, county and local officials to deprive the strikers and other ACWA members and officers of their constitutional rights to strike and picket.

The union won the Water Valley election last Aug. 26. After fruitlessly attempting to negotiate an agreement, it called the walkout on Oct. 8, when the company refused to meet its negotiators in St. Louis, the firm's headquarters.

GOLDBERG wrote McGranery that picketing was peaceful, with two strikers at each of the plant's three entrances. But on Oct. 9, he continued, company representatives and persons not employed by the firm, "pushed a number of non-striking employes through the picket line despite the fact that it was plain to everyone that ingress was not being hindered or prevented by the picketing."

Two days later, he went on, the firm obtained an injunction "restraining certain employes of the company, representatives of the ACWA and all members of the ACWA in the Water Valley area from engaging in all picketing activities."

On Oct. 12 the Mississippi National Guard arrived, complete with armored vehicles, and enforced the injunction beyond its union-busting limit.

Goldberg pointed out that the militia appeared "at the request of the Mayor of Water Valley, represented by the City Attorney, who, it is significant to note, also was the attorney for the company in the injunction proceedings."

"In this connection," he added, "your attention is called to the fact that the town's grant of the factory premises to the company approximately six years ago was conditioned upon the plant remaining non-union."

On Oct. 13, National Guard officers told the union two pickets would be allowed at each entrance. The company protested, and the permission was rescinded. The following day the firm started contempt proceedings against some employes and all ACWA members and officers in the area.

GOLDBERG described the citations as "putting several hundred ACWA members and officers "in imminent and immediate danger of being convicted of contempt and receiving jail sentences and/or heavy fines."

The pattern was somewhat similar at Farmington, where the walkout began Oct. 10. Police charged through the picket line at the request of company officials, but only seven out of more than 200 employes went back the first day. Since then the plant has closed completely.

The Farmington strikers sent delegations to St. Louis to picket the firm's central distribution headquarters in St. Louis. The AFL Teamsters and Ladies Garment Workers are respecting the lines. A number of additional workers there have joined the ACWA, which is now seeking bargaining rights for them.

The company has a long record of anti-union activity. It manufacturers cotton garments in the two struck plants. The union is trying to boost wages above average earnings of 75c an hour—the Wage-Hour Act minimum—to obtain union security and to gain standards generally prevailing in the cotton garment industry.

Truman Will Get Civil Rights Award

Pres. Truman will receive an award from the American Council on Human Rights for "distinguished and immeasurable contributions to the cause of civil rights." Presentation will be at the council's convention in Cleveland on Dec. 28.

WSB Labor Men Protest Coal Ruling

CIO and other labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board last week jointly protested the board's majority decision cutting wage increases negotiated by the United Mine Workers for some 400,000 soft coal miners.

Industry and public members of the WSB, over-ruling the labor members, voted to cut the UMW contract settlement of a $1.90 daily wage increase to $1.40. Subsequently some 375,000 miners quit work in protest.

By this action, WSB labor members said, the board "created a dispute where none existed."

The CIO and AFL members declared the UMW mine settlement was fully allowable within the terms of previously-decided wage board cases and conditions peculiar to the mine industry.

They pointed out that part of the mine wage settlement was in substitution for "fringe benefits"—particularly no paid holidays, under-scale vacation pay, and under-scale differentials. Mine operators had refused such "fringe" improvements.

CIO members of the WSB who joined in the statement were Joseph W. Childs, Benjamin C. Sigal and John Brophy. AFL members were Elmer E. Walker, Harry C. Bates and Wilbur C. Birthright.

Mass Firings Force Shoe Local To Strike

IT TOOK more than a year, but the Wolverine Shoe Co., at Rockford, Mich., has finally forced 119 members of the CIO Shoe Workers out on strike.

The strike followed months of plotting, twisting and turning on the part of the company, which began when USWA-CIO Local 75's contract expired in August, 1951.

The company rejected the union's proposals for a new contract and challenged its claims of representation, although 80% of the workers were union members.

MANAGEMENT refused to consent to an NLRB election and participated only after a board order. Despite company propaganda, the union won. Once again the company refused to bargain but later promised to negotiate in good faith if the union dropped unfair labor charges and relinquished representation in the company's tannery.

The union agreed reluctantly, but management continued to stall, refusing to meet with two separate union representatives, in clear violation even of the Taft-Hartley Law.

In mid-September, the company provoked the strike by transferring an anti-union employe into a department where tempers were heated. Union members refused to work with this employe, despite pleas of union officials.

In an attempt to ease the situation, the union proposed the employe take time off, at the union's expense, until the situation could be ironed out. The employe agreed and the company okayed the suggestion, setting the following day for negotiations.

That evening, it summarily fired the union president, after 26 years of service; 10 other members of the bargaining committee (some with 36 years service) and two other employes.

Two days later, the strike started.

"We won't go back to work," the shoe union members said, "until our fellow workers are reinstated and an honorable contract is signed."

GCEOC Set To Step Up Organization

RAPID MEMBERSHIP growth of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee during the past year was reviewed and a more intensified organizing campaign was mapped at a committee meeting last week at Washington.

Greatest membership growth was in the New England states, New York, Alabama and Michigan. Reports from the latter State were particularly gratifying.

More locals were set up in the Wolverine State than in any other state. Michigan membership includes state, city and county workers and includes Detroit municipal street railway employes, street cleaners in several cities, and the deputies and other employes in several county sheriffs' offices.

New committee members were named to represent the areas of greatest GCEOC growth. Named by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to the committee were Hilda Siff, New York City; Joseph Bogan, Detroit; Frank Feloney, Boston; Ewald Sandner, New Jersey CIO regional director, and Carey Haigler, Alabama CIO regional director.

ORGANIZING gains of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee are hailed by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president. Left to right, GCEOC Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray, Haywood, Chairman Anthony J. Federoff, Bonnie Jean Linger, GCEOC headquarters office manager.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

PRES. PHILIP MURRAY spoke over the radio and television channels to the people of the nation last week, presenting the issues facing each of us during this torrid presidential campaign. He vividly depicted the poverty, despair and dejection that were part of our lives during the Republican administration of 23 or 24 years ago.

Pres. Murray contrasted the way of life then with the way of life today. The Democratic Party, under the leadership of the late, great Franklin D. Roosevelt, is responsible for the tremendous gains made since the black days of the late 20's and early 30's. The stark reality of unemployment is still with many of us, some 16 million who could not live on former Pres. Hoover's forecast of prosperity just around the corner.

It was during the Harding, Coolidge and Hoover regimes that communism made its greatest inroads into the United States. We of the labor movement know first hand the battles that took place against communism wherever it reared its ugly head. We were in the thick of the battle when the going was tough; where were the "Johnnies come lately then" Nixon and McCarthy?

★

AS PRES. MURRAY pointed out in his speech, it was the New Deal that restored the hope and confidence of the workers and business, yes, business which was pleading for some guidance out of the morass of depression. The New Deal provided the kind of help that enable all of us to recover and become the soundest, greatest producing nation in the world.

We have proof of the Democratic program; we have higher wages, and greater security than ever before, and I don't think we will trade this proof for the promises of the Republican Party. We have had their kind of proof. The people of America will continue to move forward under the leadership of the Democratic Party through the election of Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman this November.

Remember—vote in the interest of your country, your union, your family and your community. Guard carefully your social gains and security.

★

CIO STATE DIR. Ernest Pugh reports that in a decertification election at three plants of the Stillwater Worsted Mills, at Augusta Springs, Craigsville and Goshen, Va., the workers favored the CIO Textile Workers by a vote of 97 to 81 against. About 250 were eligible.

Dist. Dir. Lou Koletka, CIO Chemical Workers, reports that in a representation election at the Imperial Ice Cream Co., Huntington, W. Va., he assisted the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union in bringing the workers into the CIO by the following vote: RWDSU-CIO 22, against 7, void 1.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that in a representation election at Nash Motors of Yonkers, Yonkers, N. Y., the workers favored the CIO Auto Workers by a vote of 9 to 0 for no union among 15 eligible voters.

Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports that the CIO Brewery Workers were victorious in a representation election at the Security Feed Mills, Inc., Tampa, Fla., by a vote of 20 to 3 against. Full credit for this win goes to Brothers Waddings of the CIO Organizing Committee and Bennett of the Brewery Workers staff.

★

REG. DIR. ROBERT STARNES reports that in a representation election at the Intracoastal Terminal Warehouse Co., Harvey, La., the workers favored the CIO Retail, Wholesale Union by a vote of 28 to 12 for no union, among 43 eligible voters. The campaign was handled by RDWSU Rep. Paul Fourcade and CIO Rep. John Ritter.

Vice Pres. Martin Grayson of the Amalgamated Lithographers, CIO, reports a representation election victory at the Bruce Burgess Co., St. Louis, Mo., by a unanimous vote in the lithographic unit. The drive was under the direction of Calvin Jack, president of the St. Louis local.

Dist. Dir. William Donovan of Dist. 28, CIO Steelworkers, reports representation elections at the National Tool Co., Cleveland, O., and the office workers group at the Thew Shovel Co., Lorain, O. In the National Tool election the Steelworkers defeated the United Electrical Workers by a vote of 2 to 1 among over 400 people. In the office workers group, among 325 eligible employees the Steelworkers won by another 2 to 1 vote.

State Dir. Carl Holderman, CIO Textile Workers, reports that for the second time within a month the CIO Textile Workers beat back raiding efforts of the AFL United Textile Workers in New Jersey. TWUA-CIO's latest victory was at the Celanese Corp. plant in Newark, where it defeated the AFL 305 to 207 to retain bargaining rights.

6 Borg-Warner Pacts Settled

Strikes of the CIO Auto Workers at six Borg-Warner Corp. plants ended last week when the members approved settlements, worked out at each plant, providing wage increases from 12 to 24c an hour.

Stevenson Speeches, Biography Issued

A paper-bound "Speeches of Adlai Stevenson," including a 2500-word biography, was published last week by Random House. It contains a foreword by John Steinbeck, novelist.

25,000 In UFWA Gain 12c Pay Hike

WAGE increases averaging from 12 to 13c an hour, plus insurance and other fringe benefits, were won by 25,000 CIO Furniture Workers during the past month.

Pres. Morris Pizer last week said workers covered by the new contracts represent about half the UFWA-CIO membership. Traditionally, a large number of furniture contracts come due immediately after Labor Day.

"Particularly significant gains were made," Pizer said, "in New York City, where about 6000 furniture and bedding workers won wage increases, better pension protection and improved minimum rates; in Massachusetts, where the 1400-man Heywood-Wakefield plant obtained substantial gains; in Illinois, where wage increases and insurance gains were won both in Chicago and Rockford;

"In Michigan, where the 1000-man Ionia shop negotiated increases; in Arkansas, where the Port Smith manufacturers' association paid holidays for the first time, as well as a wage increase; in California, where the Los Angeles association had to make wage and insurance concessions; in Oregon, where about 600 workers at the Doernbecher Co. obtained increases; and in New Jersey, Indiana, Virginia, North Carolina, Louisiana and many other places."

TWUA Wins 2 In Row In Jersey Shops

FOR THE second time in a month, the CIO Textile Workers last week beat back raiding efforts of the AFL United Textile Workers in big plants in New Jersey.

TWUA-CIO's latest victory was at the Celanese Corp. plant in Newark, where it defeated the AFL outfit by a vote of 305 to 207 in a NLRB representation election.

The earlier TWUA-CIO win was at A&M Karagheusian Carpet Co. plants at Freehold and Roselle Park, where the CIO union has 1800 members.

Carl Holderman, New Jersey CIO Council president and TWUA-CIO acting state director, who led the campaign, said the two victories just about wiped out AFL sentiment among the 26,000 TWUA members in New Jersey.

5000 Strike At Detroit Edison

Five thousand CIO Utility Workers went on strike last week when the Detroit Edison Co. refused to abide by the recommendation of a state arbitration commission.

The company refused to grant a 10c hourly increase recommended by the commission and offered a 6c increase. UWUA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Fisher, who participated in the negotiations, said the company also refused to be governed by the other recommendations of the state group.

Place Your Order Now!

Big Annual Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS

The CIO News will print another big special CIO Convention Issue on Nov. 24.

This special issue of The CIO News will give the complete story—in news reports, pictures, features and important texts—of the 14th Constitutional CIO Convention, to be held in Los Angeles, Nov. 17-21.

What the convention does will be big news and important news for every CIO union and every CIO member. International and local unions, CIO Councils and political action committees will need extra copies of this enlarged convention issue.

The CIO News Convention Issue will go to press Nov. 24. So get your order in immediately, and you can be sure your members will get the full CIO Convention story.

Special Rates

• BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for large orders.

In sending lists of addresses for bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each address. To facilitate bookkeeping, please send checks with smaller quantity orders.

• INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged by sending us mailing strips not more than 2½ inches wide.

Regular Rates

Apart from the special rates for the Convention Issue, unions which wish to take this opportunity to begin subscribing regularly to The CIO News may begin their bundle order or group subscription order with the Nov. 24 issue at the regular rates, which will be provided on request.

Just Clip and Mail!

The CIO NEWS
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the special 1952 Convention Issue of The CIO NEWS.

Please ship.....in bundle lots to the enclosed address.

Please have the 1952 Convention Issue individually mailed to membership lists for which we will furnish mailing strips. The total number of names to which we desire the paper sent is.....

☐ Check Inclosed ☐ Bill Us Later

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Organization .....

Remember 1932? America Wants No More Of This

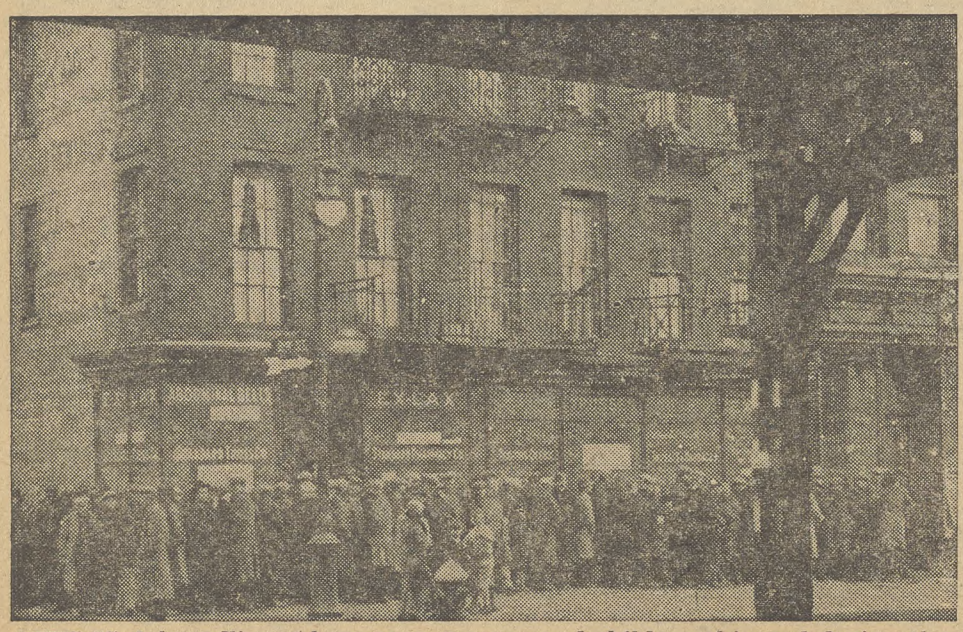
THIS IS A "Hooverville" where men lived in shacks made from junk. Is this the GOP solution to housing problems?

THIS IS AN apple seller outside a Pa. Hoover club. Hoover says this paid more than jobs. Do you want a change to this?

10-27

THIS IS A deserted, worn-out farm in the dust bowl.

THIS IS A soupline, where hungry men and women stood for hours waiting a free bowl of thin soup . . . proud workers forced to accept charity. The New Deal substituted jobs, and dignity. Is this the "change" the GOP advocates?



THIS IS A breadline, where men, women and children shivered during the coldest days, waiting a "handout", instead of a job.

THIS IS THE bonus army—hungry vets of World War I, who sought their rights but were driven home at the point of bayonets by Mac and Ike.

On The Stevenson Train . . .

. . . An Exclusive Labor Press Report, Page 3.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 3, 1952 82 No. 44

Your vote is the one that counts

VOTE!

Election Roundup—

Fair Deal Victory Is Predicted By Kroll

PAC DIR. JACK KROLL, who accurately predicted Truman's upset victory in 1948, last week forecast a Fair Deal Democratic sweep on Nov. 4.

Besides predicting victory for the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket, Kroll also foresaw Democrats carrying both Houses of Congress, with a total of 56 million votes, a new record.

Kroll based his prediction on:

- Reports from state and local PACs.
- Registration figures, particularly in industrial centers.
- Unprecedented activity in the ranks of organized labor.

"The central issue in the campaign," he said, "has been the retention of the social and economic gains of the past 20 years and the prospect of continued advances in the next four years."

The Republicans, Kroll said, had failed in their "unparalleled deluge of progaganda. The people of the country have been able to sift the truth from the falsehoods and they have responded, in great numbers, to the candidate (Stevenson) who prefers to talk sense."

"They know," he continued, "we are on the right road in the battle against Communism and the battle for greater social, economic and political freedom. The combined efforts of the advertising industry, Republican oratory, military glitter, and gutter characters will not sell the American people on a detour."

Stevenson's "clean, logical, sensible thinking" had inspired the people, Kroll said, while Eisenhower's compromises with principles had helped the Democratic cause.

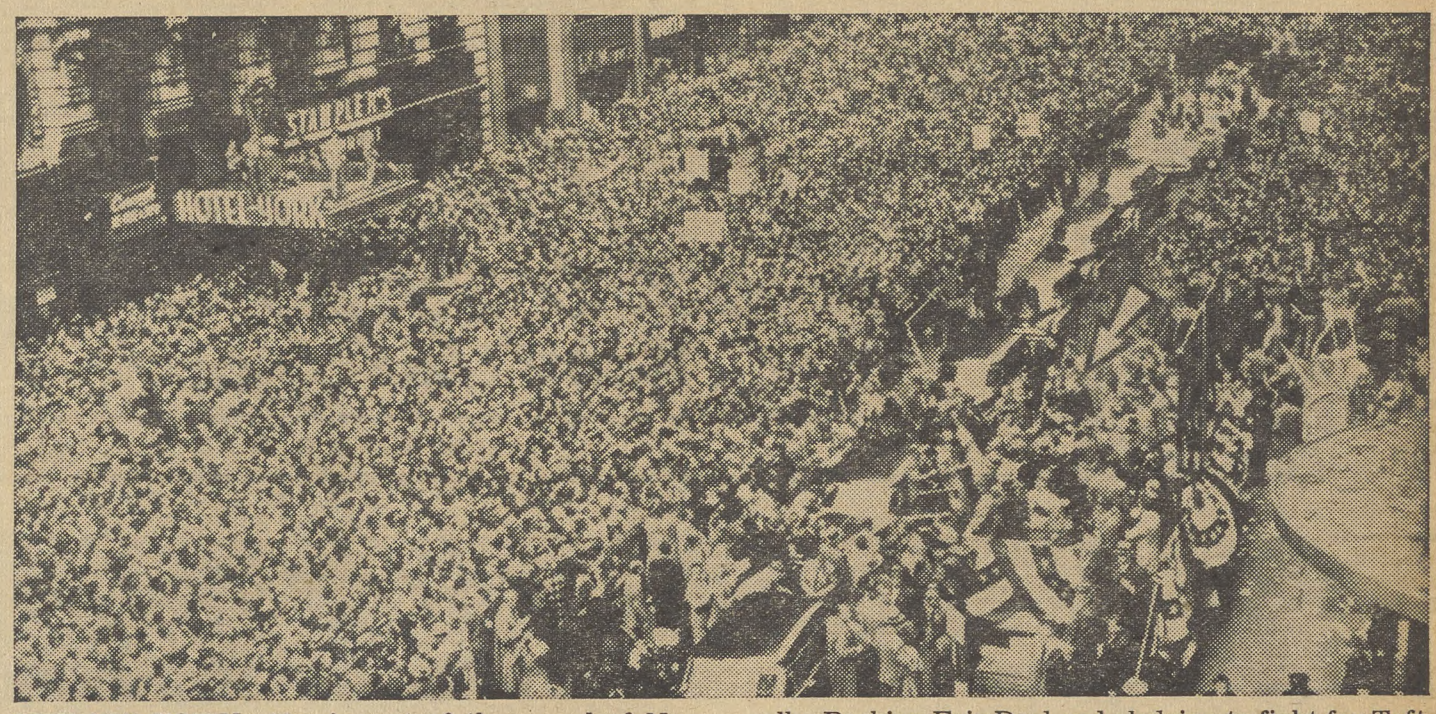
Triumphant Tour

As the campaign went into the home stretch, Stevenson made a triumphant tour of New York City, receiving a greeting paralleled only by those given Franklin Roosevelt at the height of his popularity.

More than 250,000 workers jammed New York's garment district for six solid blocks to hear Stevenson promise one of the first goals of his administration would be to replace Taft-Hartley. He said the act "could be used to smash unions" as it now stands.

In Harlem, where another 250,000 cheered at almost every sentence, Stevenson repeated his pledge on civil rights, pointing out it was exactly what he had said in Richmond, Va., and throughout the South, when he had violated political tradition by telling Southern audiences just what he told minority groups in the North.

On Tuesday night, Stevenson received a standing ovation from more than 18,000 persons who jammed into Madison Square Garden more than two hours before the governor was scheduled to speak. Police said another 10,000 tried in vain to gain admittance.



THE BIG TOWN—Here's part of the crowd of New York garment workers, estimated by police at 250,000, who jammed Seventh Ave. for six blocks to hear Gov. Adlai Stevenson (arrow) speak at noontime outdoor rally. Backing Fair Deal and pledging to fight for Taft-Hartley Act repeal, Stevenson drew big crowds last week as he toured New York area and then headed west to Chicago campaign windup.

No Fooling

The swing to Stevenson is "evidence that for the sixth time in 20 years the American people refuse to be fooled."

That was the prediction of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, speaking on a New York state radio network.

"There will never be a day in America when civilized mankind will feel 'it's time for a change' from our present decent living standards to the primitive levels to which our economy fell during the last Republican administration," said Murray.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt introduced Stevenson, saying there was "a new voice of democracy heard in the land—a voice that says the same thing in Virginia as it does in Harlem."

"We will support him with our prayers," she said, "with our work and, with God's help, he will lead us well."

Earlier in the evening, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, had told the Madison Square Garden rally that American labor remembers vividly the conditions under the last Republican administration and would fight against a return to the Hoover depression.

"For us who lived through it," Potofsky said, "the great depression of 1932 is a living memory. Bread lines, soup kitchens, Hoovervilles and hunger marches are still vivid.

"Men slept in New York's subway stations, and the homeless lived in an empty reservoir in Central Park. Sixteen million Americans were unemployed, and veterans of the 'bonus army' were teargassed in the streets of the nation's capital." (In charge of that attack on the veterans of World War I was Gen. Douglas MacArthur, assisted by Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, the present GOP candidate.)

"We must not, we will not, forget those years," said Potofsky. "We will not, we must now, forget the party and policies that brought them on."

In his speech, Stevenson openly predicted he would win on Nov. 2. He said the Republicans have "everything on their side but the people."

Gen. Eisenhower is "blissfully ignorant" of the major issues facing the nation, CIO Pres. Philip Murray told 1100 CIO officers and shop stewards at a Philadelphia PAC rally.

"He may be a good man. But if he is an ignorant man, then he's a dangerous man," Murray said.

Truman Slugs

Pres. Truman took his campaign special on another whistle-stop tour, fighting hard for victory for Stevenson. He continued to draw tremendous crowds and continued to hit hard at the record of the opposition.

In the corn belt, Truman measured the solid prosperity of the Democratic administration alongside the "against" policies of the GOP. Prosperity, he said, would not automatically continue and he cited Republican policies certain to undercut it.

The Republicans, he said, were reverting to "me-tooism" in the closing days of the campaign, but had added to it the "smear and fear" campaign tactics of McCarthy.

He was referring to Sen. McCarthy's widely advertised speech on television and radio early in the week, a speech which even Eisenhower-supporters called low and evil.

McCarthy had attempted to smear Stevenson, dragging out what he called "documentary evidence" which impartial checks showed to be clear lies and deliberate distortions.

Eisenhower remained completely silent on the McCarthy smear attack, despite demands from newspapers like the Washington Post that he repudiate the Wisconsin senator.

Typical of the McCarthy lies was the statement that the Communist Daily Worker of Oct. 19 had endorsed Stevenson. The fact was the Daily Worker of that date had endorsed the Progressive Party candidates and had damned the Democrats more vigorously than the Republicans.

Highlight of the week from the Eisenhower camp was grandstand play on Korea. The General, whose military advise had been responsible for pre-Korea strategy, was now condemning the administration for having followed that advice.

When Truman and Stevenson dared Eisenhower to state his program for ending the Korean war, the only Eisenhower answer was, "I shall go to Korea."

Sen. Taft said "I don't think Eisenhower or anyone else expected his presence in Korea would make the North Koreans fall over backwards."

Truman ridiculed Eisenhower's last-minute Korean promise as a "superman" pose that will solve nothing. "No superman is going to solve our difficulties for us," he said, "and anybody who poses and talks like a superman is a fraud."

"We are fighting in Korea so we will not have to fight in Wichita, or San Francisco or Grand Rapids," Truman said in Grand Rapids.

Stevenson denounced Eisenhower's Korea talk as a deliberate move to "play politics with peace" in a "cynical bid for votes" which "will neither solve our problems nor win the election."

He called it a complete reversal of the GOP candidate's stand of last June and Stevenson added "he is gambling that the American people will not remember what he said four months ago."

Times' Troubles

The New York Times, which endorsed Eisenhower long before it knew where he stood or who would be his opponent, was having family troubles just before Election Day.

The editorial writer, who had been pounding out "we-like-Ike" comments, finally begged off, seems his stomach didn't like Ike.

The Times checked its editorial writing force, found no one willing to write pro-Eisenhower editorials. To its credit, the Times didn't try force and for days carried no election editorial.

Biggest secret in the Times building is who wrote a lengthy editorial reiterating the paper's support of the General. It wasn't done by any editorial writer, and doesn't reflect the opinion of most Times employes, who are for Stevenson.

IT WAS A COLD DAY but not a chilly reception that Pres. Truman got recently from tremendous, enthusiastic crowds in Pittsburgh. Riding with him in the steel city were CIO Pres. Philip Murray (center) and Mayor David L. Lawrence (right).

Exclusive—

Adlai 'Talks Sense'—Makes Sense To Voters

By AL ZACK

EN ROUTE WITH STEVENSON—Adlai Stevenson entered the 1952 presidential campaign with the firm conviction that American voters are adults, who want to hear "sense—not nonsense."

Three months, hundreds of speeches and thousands of miles later, his opinion hadn't changed. What had changed was the attitude of political experts who once considered the Stevenson attitude "immature."

It was obvious the experts had underestimated the intelligence of the voters and that Stevenson had been a far better judge.

For the crowds were quite evidently fascinated and charmed with this modest, unassuming, stocky little man, who had come unexpectedly upon the political horizon in a time of great peril. And they liked his "talk sense" campaign.

He offered no "patent medicine" cure for critical problems. He rejected the time-tested political device of promising only pleasant things for the future. He brought humor back to the political scene.

Confidence In U. S.

But above all he had a deep-seated, quiet confidence in America and her ability to meet and beat tough problems. It was a confidence, too, which he transmitted to his audiences. They responded with generous applause, evident appreciation and signs like those displayed by Smith College girls in Springfield, Mass.:

"Madly for Adlai," "Gladly for Adlai," and "I like Ike but I'm voting for Stevenson."

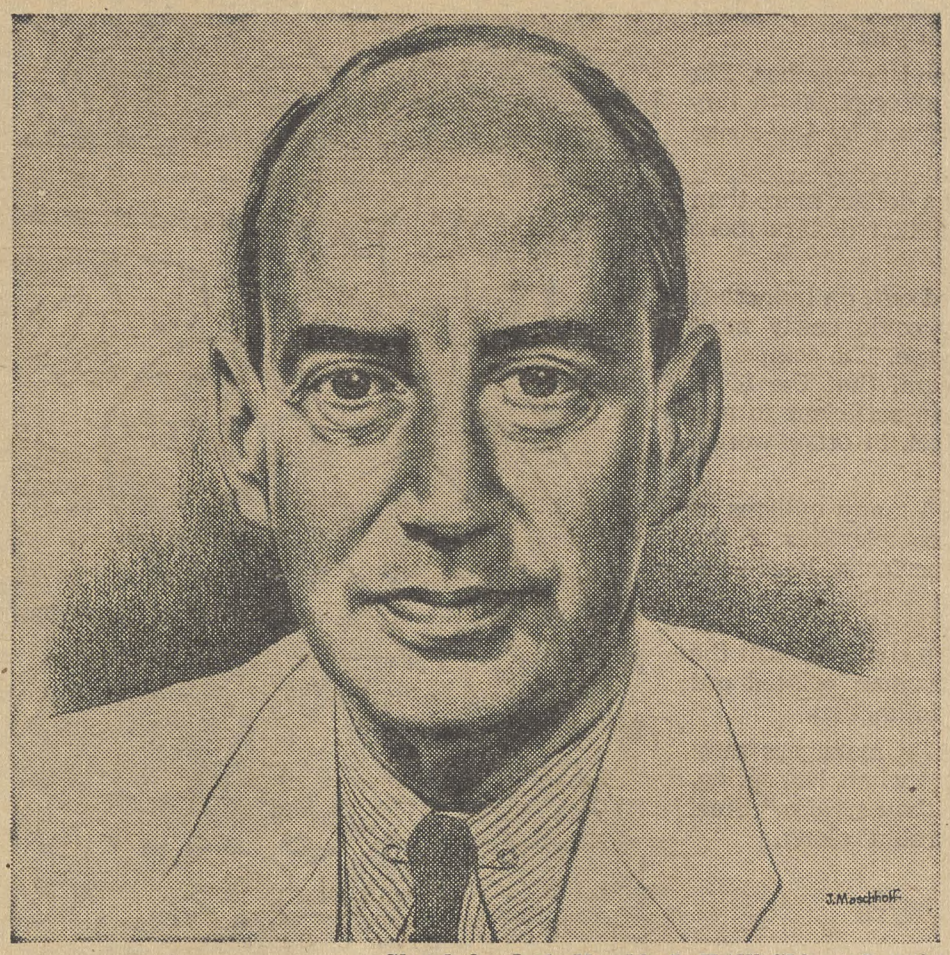
Stevenson summed up his campaign this way: "I have not talked soft talk nor made false promises nor raised false fears. Nor have I changed my views to suit my itinerary. I have said what I meant and I have meant what I said. I have tried to do my part toward making this campaign an orderly discussion between the opposing parties so that the American people can understand and judge the major issues of the day."

It was evident that Stevenson was personally horrified by the twisting, turning campaign of his opponent. Instead of the "educational and elevating national discussion" in which he had expected to be involved, Stevenson had found his opponent indulging in one of the worst mud-throwing campaigns in history.

The pressures on the Governor to change his tactics had been strong. The temptation to engage in mud-throwing of his own must have been tremendous.

Instead, Stevenson remained true to his principles. Even in whistle-stop speeches, where candidates normally "let themselves go," Stevenson talked carefully and thoughtfully of the issues, outlined his convictions, described his plans and programs.

His speeches were full of humor—good-natured humor. He had a fund of stories, all funny, which fitted perfectly into what he wanted to say.



—Sketch by Jock Moschhoff, UAW-CIO staff artist

GOV. ADLAI E. STEVENSON

Nor was he soft with his opponents. His answer to the smear campaign launched by Sen. Nixon, concerning the Stevenson deposition in the Hiss case, was a classic.

Stevenson reviewed what he had known of Hiss and detailed his testimony, under oath. He was, as the record showed, a witness, who told the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

He noted that "Thou shalt not bear false witness" was one of the Ten Commandments "in case Senator Nixon has not read them lately."

Warns Of 'Tough Talk'

Stevenson was by all odds the most modest candidate to run for the presidency in the memory of political reporters. He was obviously uncomfortable at glowing introductions like those delivered by Sen. Lehman (D-N.Y.) in whistle stops across upper New York State. "I don't suppose a little flattery hurts as long as you don't inhale," he observed in Utica, and several times commented on his own blushes, apparent to those in his audience.

But no one had to blush at what he said. In Utica, for example, he noted his opponent's campaign of "tough talk," backed up with no strength.

"They hold out false promises of quick, easy and painless solutions," he said scornfully. "This sort of fakery is not only dishonest—it is also very dangerous," for a "policy of weakness and of tough talk invites aggression."

He would make no such promises, he said. "We Democrats believe the American people want the truth. Sometimes the truth is hard and unpleasant, but we want to know it all the same."

In Rochester, N. Y., Stevenson arrived only 18 hours after his opponent had left. The crowds were about the same size, with maybe a slight edge for the General.

"Big difference I see," a police captain told reporters, "is the kids. Two-thirds of the Eisenhower crowd was kids. That's not the case here."

For Stevenson, the crowd was mostly composed of adults. They were friendly and enthusiastic, clearly enjoying the campaign, the candidate and the bright friendly sunshine.

Reporters noted the deep attention with which they listened to Stevenson. They laughed at the jokes, nodded carefully at points with which they agreed, nudged their neighbors in the crowd to make sure others had gotten the points.

And they liked Stevenson's quote of Woodrow Wilson's famous remark: "I would rather fail in a cause which will ultimately triumph, than triumph in a cause which will ultimately fail." It was the key to his campaign, and reporters were betting it would prove to be the successful key.

Throughout New York and Massachusetts, Stevenson was talking about the war in Korea. It is not, he said, "Mr. Truman's war. It is mankind's war. It is the stand of the free world against wanton aggression and cynical despotism."

He had hard, uncompromising words for his opponent's wavering, partisan speeches on Korea. "If we were to follow the General's policy," Stevenson said in clipped and measured tones, "we would risk a Munich in the Far East, with the possibility of a third World War not far behind."

Turning to the domestic scene, Stevenson crisply remarked, "The times are too grave to experiment with a Republican leadership which has proved its inability to keep us strong economically and in which Old Guard isolationists still call the tune of Republican foreign policy."

Occasionally, Stevenson talked to the crowds about his own record as Governor of Illinois, where he won a reputation as a "tight man with a dollar."

"I would like you to know," he told 5000 in the sun-drenched city square of Canandaigua, where no other presidential candidate had ever spoken, "that Illinois is third from the bottom of all the states in the number of employes in relation to the population; second from the lowest in the cost of state government in relation to the income of its citizens."

He spoke scornfully of the "great American folklore" that Republicans are "cautious and thrifty" and Democrats "wasteful and extravagant."

"Weakness," he said, "invites aggression, and there is nothing in this world so expensive as war."

He was careful to point out his belief that legislation must not benefit special groups, but rather the whole economy; that government must never "do things that free enterprise can do."

"But," he insisted, "when there is a job that needs doing and that free enterprise is unable or unwilling to do," then government must step in "as soon as we can afford it."

Apostles Of Inaction

Candidly, Stevenson would point out, "I don't pretend that the Democratic party has all of the answers to all of our infinite problems," But, he added, "the point is that our party believes in action when trouble strikes us and our opponents have shown time and again that they are apostles of inaction."

Throughout all of Stevenson's speeches, whether they were major speeches before huge crowds and carried on TV and radio, or just short talks to small groups gathered in the town square, there was one strong, clear theme: Confidence in America.

We are beset by grave problems, he said. We live in a critical generation. "This is the richest, strongest, happiest land on earth, and, therefore, it befits us not only to protect ourselves but to insure the survival of a civilization which has made all of this possible.

"It is a great responsibility, a great adventure, a great opportunity."

The crowds nodded approval. They applauded and cheered as he finished.

And as the police captain in Rochester put it:

"The biggest difference between the Eisenhower and Stevenson crowds is that they cheer the General before he talks, but they cheer Stevenson after they have heard what he says."

Adlai Stevenson had brought a new atmosphere to American politics. He was "talking sense" and the public loved it.

Ouch!

When the Stevenson special pulled into Auburn, N. Y., the Democratic candidate recalled one of his opponent's statements.

"There's where the General says you should go," Stevenson told the crowd, "if you want security." He pointed across the street, to the Auburn state prison.

Free-Wheeling GOP Spending Told

SECRET REPUBLICAN slush funds—bigger than any ever used in any previous election—made their appearance during the last week of the campaign.

Two "citizens" committees for Eisenhower and Nixon reported collecting almost a million dollars during the last seven weeks. They listed a total of $998,968, which was exclusive of the regular GOP funds.

The Republicans' total collections, with more yet to come, came to $2,976,049. This did not include special funds like the $75,000 fund for the McCarthy smear broadcast or the $75,000 fund for Eisenhower's Detroit broadcast.

The latter was raised through a crackdown on Michigan auto dealers. The dealers were reminded that Arthur Summerfield, GOP national chairman and a big shot in the auto industry, had "spent hours of his time in Washington and Lansing arguing with OPS regarding dealer discounts."

"This has made each of us many thousands of dollars," the auto dealers were reminded, as the bite was put on them for contributions.

Pres. Truman told campaign crowds "millions and millions of dollars" were flowing into Republican coffers from special interest groups. While some contributions were being made openly, others were being made in secret, as had been GOP practice in the past.

In contrast with GOP heavy spending, the Democratic National Committee said it was in the red, financially. It said it took in $889,315 and spent $943,260, and had another $300,000 in debts to pay off.

My, How They Suffer

The third-quarter financial report of the U. S. Steel Corp. fails, rather spectacularly, to bear out the wailing-wall predictions of the company's executives when the union was asking for wage increases earlier this year.

For the months of July, August and September, Big Steel's profits after taxes amounted to $30,400,000—a tidy sum, considering that its plants were closed by the strike from June 2 to July 26.

In fact, the profits were eight million dollars more than in the preceding quarter, and three million dollars more than in the third quarter of 1951.

The CIO Steelworkers union pointed out, on numerous occasions, that the big steel company could easily meet its wage proposals without a price increase. The company's own figures now indicate, as a minimum, that the $5.60 price increase it received was more than sufficient to pay for the additional wage costs. U. S. Steel, in other words, made money on the strike.

Furthermore, the company received many millions of dollars in tax credits, thanks to the complexities of the excess profits tax provisions. This is perfectly legal—yet we see no great metropolitan daily papers rushing to criticize the government for "favoring" or "coddling" the steel industry. The editorial silence is in sharp contrast with the clamor of the press when President Truman pointed out there was no basis for a Taft-Hartley injunction.

So, U. S. Steel is sitting pretty. Its managers may have known what they were talking about when, last spring, they said that "there are things worse than strikes." Steel profits—strike or no strike—just keep rollin' along.

The McCarthy Speech

Considering the advance rumors, the McCarthy radio-television performance was very much an anti-climax. The Wisconsin Senator's smears were pale and unconvincing.

Walter Lippmann, the columnist, offers a sound explanation why McCarthy—the man with the sly tongue and the vivid imagination—did so unconvincing a smear job against Adlai Stevenson.

Lippmann points out that the Big Lie needs the protection of Senatorial immunity. On the Senate floor, Joe McCarthy can depart as far as he wishes from the truth—without fear of consequence, except the faint murmurs of his own inner conscience.

Off the Senate floor, the laws of libel still operate. So, even the Senator from Wisconsin must be careful—and the Chicago Tribune-America First crowd had to be content with a very thin diet indeed. Under the circumstances, the truth was, of course, not nearly as strange as McCarthy's Senate-floor fiction.

Saving America

Richard Nixon, the subsidized Senator from California, went on the air Oct. 29 to remind the voters they had "only six more days to save America."

Republican orators have been whining that America must be saved ever since Franklin Roosevelt moved into the White House in 1933 and really saved America.

Since then—if our hasty arithmetic is correct—7,191 days have rolled into history. And each day the country needs "saving" by the Republicans.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912. and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year. $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV November 3, 1952 No. 44

It's Over

In Other Words—

More Interested In Arson

Here are excerpts from a speech given by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) at a Detroit rally at which the Jewish Labor Committee presented him with a scroll for his work in the field of immigration, civil rights and labor.

By HERBERT H. LEHMAN

I AM CONCERNED, as I know you must be concerned, over the question of freedom as well as the question of peace. I am concerned, as you must be concerned, with the preservation of our liberties while we protect our security against our savage and scheming enemies.

I do not think I need to convince you here that the hysterics of McCarthyism do not provide the prescription for either peace or freedom—for either progress at home or successful struggle against communism abroad.

McCarthyism breeds fear, suspicion and unrest. It turns neighbor against neighbor, and makes every American a suspected traitor until and unless he can prove his innocence by McCarthyite standards.

The end and objective of the McCarthyites is to drive the incumbent political party out of office by making unsupported charges of disloyalty against individuals either directly or indirectly connected with the government.

That is the cheap and easy way to political power. In that way the whole fabric of public confidence is torn down. It is really burning the barn down on the pretext of chasing rats. But I suspect that the McCarthyites are more interested in arson than in treason. For our part, my friends, we must sound the alarm and keep the flames from spreading.

The very conditions stimulated and provoked by the McCarthyites are those in which communism thrives and prospers.

J. Edgar Hoover, head of the FBI, has testified that the number of card-carrying Communists in America has declined under the New Deal and Fair Deal to the miniscule total of 31,000 in all of the United States today—one-fiftieth of 1% of our population, a smaller percentage of Communists than in any other country in the entire world today.

The high point of the Communist Party in the United States was reached in the dark days of the depression under Pres. Herbert Hoover. According to the best estimates now available in the files of the House Un-American Activities Committee, that number, in 1932, was no less than one million. Today that number is 31,000. Draw your own conclusions as to which regime in this country has done the most to deflate the Communist movement here.

You of the labor movement have shown the way. Organized labor has done more than a thousand McCarthys to expose and defeat communism in this country.

There has been much talk of bipartisanship in foreign policy. I am entirely in favor of that, as I always have been.

But there is another kind of bipartisanship which is much more prevalent and more effective—it is the bipartisanship of reaction. The bipartisan coalition of reactionaries has too often been in control. It has required every power inherent in the Presidency to neutralize that kind of bipartisanship.

ONE OF THE PROUD PRODUCTS of this reactionary coalition was the McCarran Immigration Act of 1952, the most bigoted, un-American piece of legislation ever inscribed on our statute books.

The reactionary coalition steamrollered the McCarran Immigration Act through the Congress this year, using every trick and device to beat down the opposition.

The proponents of the McCarran Act did their best to identify as pro-Communist those who opposed this measure. Sen. McCarran and his supporters broadly hinted that anybody who opposed Sen. McCarran was ipso facto a Communist.

But those who shout the loudest, as usual, are willing to do the least. We could have contributed to the liberation of some of these victims of persecution by liberalizing our immigration law.

Instead, Congress passed the McCarran Act, which will cut our already inadequate immigration down to a trickle and will serve notice to all escapees and potential escapees from behind the Iron Curtain that America has no use for them and, indeed, considers them inferior people.

That is what the reactionaries forced this country to say to the enslaved peoples in eastern Europe.

PAC Puts Final Spurt In Turning Out Big Vote

By GERVASE N. LOVE

LIFE WAS a trifle less hectic last week in the Washington headquarters of the CIO Political Action Committee—only a trifle.

The accent, in the final week of the presidential election campaign, had changed.

Ended were the days of frantic mailing out of literature, the compilation of leaflets and pamphlets, the race against time of researchers digging out facts from towering stacks of records.

The accent, last week, was on getting out the vote.

The actual work was being done in the field, but a visitor to the CIO-PAC office would never suspect it. From all parts of the country came requests for guidance in establishing such things as auto squads to take voters to the polls, last minute house calls, how to organize poll watchers so they can do the most effective work, etc.

The national headquarters, out of its long experience in political action, made one suggestion here, another there, all aimed at the climax of the long and at times arduous campaign—to get the voters to the polls so they could mark their ballots for Gov. Stevenson, Sen. Sparkman and the other candidates supported by CIO.

The whole atmosphere was one of waiting. There was no relaxing of effort or vigilance. National Dir. Jack Kroll saw to that.

The operations of the National CIO-PAC have been completely decentralized in the last six years. At one time the PAC consisted of a large central office, with about 135 employes, and a series of regional offices.

But experience showed that votes are actually won in the precincts, not in offices, and the whole operation was changed. The emphasis now is entirely on local activity.

In the current campaign, nevertheless, a comparative handful of people in the national office have done an impressive lot of work. The office's primary function has been to tie together the work in the field, to coordinate scattered efforts so as to reap the greatest benefit, and to act as a clearing house.

It furnished, on a national scale, those services which could be used throughout the country to induce the voters to register and to cast their ballots for candidates who will serve all the people instead of special interests, and who are devoted to the principles of progress rather than reaction.

IT DID NOTHING that could be done better locally, although it was ready to lend a hand. It prepared literature which could help a voter in California, Kansas or Connecticut.

It did a fantastic amount of research into the records of congressional candidates and prepared countless reports on how aspirants for reelection voted and what they said.

The dossiers recorded not only their votes, but what they said in speeches, interviews and statements.

In addition, the national office printed and distributed about 15 million pieces of literature (see illustration). These included the seven booklets in the "'52 Facts" series; a fact booklet on Stevenson; 10 leaflets, six posters, the Speaker's Book of Facts, comic books, auto stickers, seven clip sheets with mats and a wide variety of cartoons for labor papers, a calendar showing registration and voting data by states, a weekly news letter and a special letter for Negro voters.

The PAC joined the National CIO in sponsoring the television program, Issues Of The Day, a series of 13 which was shown from 15 stations. It sponsored the People's Political Poll, which was shown from 35 TV stations for six weeks.

When CIO Pres. Philip Murray asked votes for Stevenson, Sparkman and other CIO-endorsed candidates in a radio and television appearance on the Columbia Broadcasting System on Oct. 21, it was under PAC auspices.

The National PAC just didn't sit around its Washington office and wait for things to happen out in the field. It helped set up organizations in communities ranging in size from city wards to states, got them off to a good start, and assisted whenever help was sought.

It helped unions on PAC work, assisted in recruiting personnel when it was needed, and in general brought the national experience to bear in the local areas. It served as the transmission belt by which the tried and tested techniques that worked in one area were made available in others.

MUCH OF THIS work was done by field representatives. Henry Murray worked in New England, Dan Powell in the South, Darrell Smith in the Middle West and George Roberts on the Pacific Coast. In addition, Esther Murray, Philip Weightman and Mrs. Charlotte Hubbard worked among special groups.

But this did not mean that during the campaign Kroll and Assistant Dir. Tilford Dudley stuck to their desks in Washington and masterminded by long distance telephone. Kroll estimates that he travelled about 83,000 miles in the last few months. Dudley's mileage was only slightly less. Both made scores of speeches, attended hundreds of conferences.

Nov. 4, of course, does not mean that the National PAC will go to sleep until another election day rolls around. For the CIO-PAC is a year-round, permanent organization. When the ballots are counted—win or lose—it will promptly begin to evaluate the results and the techniques used to get out the vote.

The lessons it learns will be set down beside the lessons of earlier campaigns, and the whole constantly expanding field of experience will be immediately geared for use in next year's state and municipal elections and the congressional contests shaping up for 1954.

For campaigns may start and end, but the CIO-PAC goes on working.

'Ike Sold His Friends Down The River,' Kroll Declares

JACK KROLL, CIO-PAC national director, charged at the recent Kentucky CIO Council convention that Gen. Eisenhower's military career had ill equipped him to be President.

"Every man to his trade," Kroll said at Louisville. "You wouldn't want Gov. Stevenson in charge of the Army, and I don't think you want Ike Eisenhower in charge of the country."

Kroll said Eisenhower "signed articles of surrender to Sen. Taft at Morningside Heights in New York City. The men who fought with Ike to lick Taft were the men whom Ike sold down the river. It was the greatest political betrayal in American history."

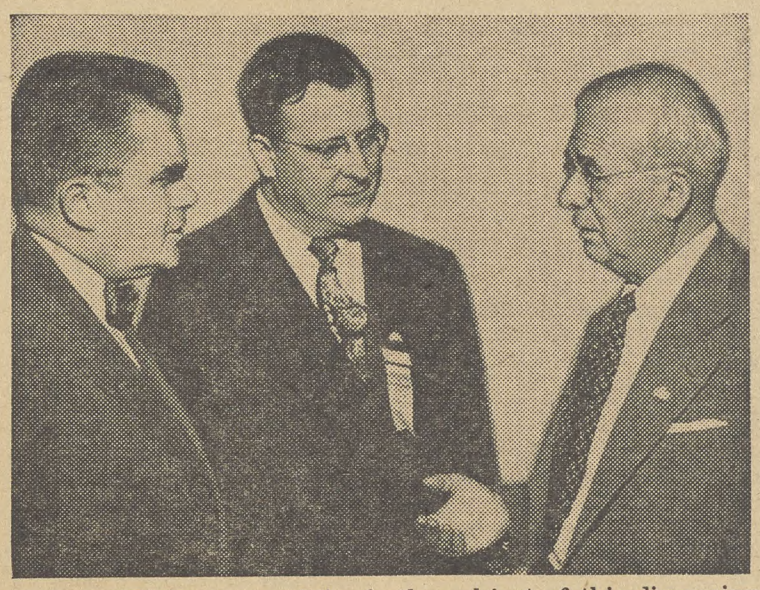
Kroll lambasted Sen. Nixon because of his expense fund.

"Suppose millionaire clubs got up funds for each and every congressman and senator," the PAC director declared. "What kind of legislation would you have then?"

"I shake in my boots when I think that if Ike is elected, Nixon is within a heart beat of the presidency."

Kroll lauded Gov. Stevenson, saying: "I never saw a presidential candidate who complimented you as much as Gov. Stevenson. He doesn't talk down to you; he thinks you know. He has talked good common horse sense to you."

The Kentucky CIO delegates re-elected Al Whitehouse, CIO Steelworkers, and Henry Seibert, CIO Clothing Workers, as council president and vice president, respectively.



IT'S A CINCH that politics is the subject of this discussion at the 13th annual convention of the Kentucky CIO Council at Louisville. Left to right, William B. Taylor, CIO regional director; Henry Seibert, council vice president, and National PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

IUE Denounces GE On Contract Terms

THE CIO ELECTRICAL Workers reluctantly decided last week to accept the same short-change contract offer that the General Electric Co. was able to foist on the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers more than a month ago.

The decision was made by the IUE-CIO General Electric Conference Board at a meeting in New York. Its announcement was accompanied by a searing attack on the company and a warning that the union will continue its fight against "this reactionary and shortsighted management until it deals with its workers and their unions on a basis of justice, good faith and real Americanism."

The settlement covers 70,000 GE employes represented in bargaining by the IUE-CIO. It includes a wage increase equal to the percentage increase in the cost of living between Sept. 15, 1951, and Nov. 15, 1952. The CIO affiliate won one improvement over the UE pact—the latter settled on the basis of the Sept. 15, 1952 Bureau of Labor Statistics index, which showed a drop of .6%.

THE AGREEMENT also provided an additional 25% pay boost with a 3.5c an hour minimum, a one-year contract with a wage reopening on Mar. 15, 1953, a provision for reopening pensions by mutual agreement any time before expiration of the present pension agreement on Sept. 1, 1955, and improvements in insurance and other contractual provisions.

The union's GE conference board said the decision to sign was reached in part because of "the national interest which GE refuses to recognize."

The board expressed confidence that IUE members in GE shops will feel "justified" bitterness at the company's refusal to grant retroactivity to Sept. 15, "the time when it secured a collusive agreement with the UE."

"We will not forget those dollars which GE filched from the pay envelopes of the IUE-CIO workers on this issue, and we intend to recover every dollar of it," it added.

"We will not forget the cheap chiseling by GE to take away from the most needy of our old folks the few dollars increase granted by Congress in Social Security.

"WE WILL NOT forget the stealing of two holidays that the GE workers paid for in 1947 . . .

"We will not forget the cowardly attack upon the patriotism and integrity of the IUE-CIO membership by (GE vice president in charge of employes relations) Lemuel Boulware's press statement of Oct. 9, when he declared that we were more of a menace to national security than the Communist-controlled UE.

"We will not forget that in order to attack us, GE did not hesitate to make a collusive deal with a so-called union leadership that Boulware himself admits is Communist-controlled and therefore enemies of our nation."

Miners End Protest On WSB Action

FOUR HUNDRED thousand members of the United Mine Workers last week returned to work after the Wage Stabilization Board decided to review its decision chopping 40c a day after their wage settlement with the soft coal mine operators.

The industry and the public members joined in the original decision which lopped 40c from the negotiated $1.90 hourly wage increase over the protest of the CIO and other labor members of WSB.

The miners returned to the pits after UMWA Pres. John L. Lewis requested that work be resumed.

The WSB began reconsidering the decision after receiving a joint appeal from Lewis and Pres. Harry M. Moses of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association. At a White House conference, Lewis promised Pres. Truman he would do what he could to get the miners back to work.

TAKES OVER—First woman president of a State CIO Council is Audrey Smith, of Baltimore Local 2120 of the Communications Workers. She became president of the Maryland Council after Steve Moran was shifted by the UAW to Detroit.

"Took Her Appendix Out Last Week—Hope The Stitches Hold."

'Use Oil Revenue For Schools,' Outlook Says

"THERE is enough wealth in the 'tidelands' oil lands to pay for a kindergarten-to-college education for an entire generation of boys and girls."

So declares the current issue of the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, which says that America's schools are suffering from "the most severe crisis in history."

THE OUTLOOK referring to Gen. Eisenhower's endorsement of the proposal to give the U. S. off-shore oil rights to the states, says:

"It's a $50 billion treasure at stake, and now the oil men are gambling on a spin of the political wheel to take the golden pot from them. They put their hope in the Republicans, and are not perturbed by the GOP presidential candidate's backing and filling in his his series of statements on the subject.

"Gov. Stevenson has been courageously forthright," the Outlook continues, in opposing the surrender of Federal rights, knowing that it could cost him support in the oil states of California, Texas and Louisiana."

Enactment of the proposal by Sen. Hill (D., Ala.) to use Federal revenues from the submerged oil lands for improvement of public schools in the 48 states "would continue an American tradition dating back as far as 1618," according to the Outlook.

In that year, Virginia set aside revenue from public lands for public education.

"Today our schools and colleges stand in even greater need of government assistance," the CIO publication says. "The crisis is compounded from these elements—a sharply rising birthrate, aging school buildings, and an attack on the status of the teaching profession."

Rents Zoom Where Controls Killed

TENANTS last week were "hopping mad" in many of the 900 cities and towns where rents zoomed as much as 200% after rent controls were killed.

The controls lapsed Sept. 30 in those communities when no local action was taken to extend them.

Rent increases as high as 200% were reported in New Orleans. In Detroit the boosts zoomed as far as 140%, and in some Cleveland suburbs hikes as much as 125% were reported. At Nashville, Tenn., a woman was told her rent had been raised from $57.50 to $75 a month as a "first" installment.

These gouging increases made rent control an election issue in many cities—an issue favoring Fair Deal candidates since Republican lawmakers had weakened rent controls.

Another development in the rent situation was reported by Leo Goodman, director and secretary of the CIO National Housing Committee, whose chairman is Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers. (The committee aided CIO councils in spearheading the fight to retain controls. Some 1500 communities have decided to keep the curbs.)

GOODMAN reported that where controls were killed, "grudge-bearing" landlords were evicting tenants who fought for continued curbs or who protested to the local rent stabilization office.

Still another rent development was at Akron, O., where the National Association of Real Estate Boards encouraged the city council to attempt to end rent ceilings by deciding there was no shortage after federal authorities placed the community on the critical list in a move to assure continuance of controls.

The Akron CIO Council moved quickly by circulating a petition for a referundum on rent lids. In a similar referendum, Akron residents voted for controls by a 10,000 majority. Pending the outcome of the referendum, ceilings continue in effect.

As a result of federal action, rent curbs will be imposed on all housing in the Milwaukee area this week, when rent ceilings will be pushed back to the Nov. 1, 1951, levels. The Office of Rent Stabilization has held hearings in a number of other cities as part of the move to reinstitute controls after federal authorities declared the situation critical.

UPWA Gains Pension Pact At Armour's

AFTER MONTHS of negotiations, the CIO Packinghouse Workers last week reached a pension and wage increase agreement with Armour & Co.—the first of the Big Four packers to sign a new contract with the union.

The pact provides the first negotiated pension plan in the industry and covers 30,000 employes in 28 Armour plants.

Under the pension plan, which is financed by the company, a worker with 25 years' service will be able to retire at 65 with an income of $105 a month, excluding Social Security benefits.

THE AGREEMENT also provides a 4c hourly pay increase, an additional 4c an hour for women to bring their rate within 5c of that of the men workers, and was hailed by UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein as a "big step forward" for meat packing workers. UPWA said that the average wages were raised to $1.72 an hour.

UPWA also won time and half for Saturday work, effective Jan. 1; company-paid sick leave and life insurance policies of $2200 for men and $1900 for women, additional hourly pay raises ranging from 1½c to 3½c for plants in Atlanta and Tifton, Ga.; Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Tex. and Birmingham, Ala., and an additional increase of 2c for night work.

The new Armour contract will run for two years and may be opened every six months for wage negotiations. It is expected to set the pattern for contracts with the other major packers — Swift, Wilson and Cudahy—and the major independent plants.

Speakers For CIO Meet On Coast Named

A HALF-DOZEN labor, government and political figures have accepted invitations to address CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention, it was announced.

The convention will be held at the Hotel Statler, Los Angeles, from Nov. 17-21.

Among speakers listed on the preliminary convention program are Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor, Thurgood Marshall, counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Mutual Security Administrator W. Averill Harriman, David Cole, recently-named director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, and J. J. Wadsworth, deputy civilian defense administrator.

Also, Gov. Earl Warren of California, Mayor Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, and Archbishop J. Francis A. McIntyre of Los Angeles.

One highlight of convention week will be a human rights banquet honoring CIO Pres. Philip Murray. It will be sponsored by the NAACP's West Coast office, Southern California Council and Los Angeles Chapter Labor Committee. The dinner will be held Nov. 18 at the Alexandria Hotel.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE EYES OF VOTERS throughout the country are on Tuesday, Nov. 4, when the most important decision of the people will be made. The course of our country for the next four years will be decided by the people. I feel confident they will make the right choice.

The Republican Party, the party of wealth and special privilege, has poured tremendous sums into radio, newspapers, television to have the General elected. It has done everything it can to influence the voter, stooping to the vilest attacks by Sen. McCarthy and the "soap opera" productions of poor boy Richard Nixon. Platitudes and generalities by Gen. Eisenhower seem to be the order of the day. The General has adjusted himself to geographical location on most every issue.

Gen. Eisenhower has embraced the vile, mud-slinging, personal attacks of McCarthy and Nixon. The General has joined hands with the most vicious, reactionary Republican congressmen who will propose anti-labor legislation at the first opportunity.

★

IN TRAVELING throughout the country I am pleased to note that our people are not being taken in by the slanders, half-truths and generalities of the Republicans. We all too well remember the Republican orgies of graft and corruption of the Twenties that resulted in the suffering and privation that prevailed among the people until Franklin Roosevelt became President. These facts will be well in mind when the workers, farmers, and small business groups go to the polls and cast their all-important vote.

A Republican victory would mean a victory of all the anti-labor, reactionary forces of the nation and make the task of Labor very difficult. The wealth and special interests behind the Republican Party will demand their "pound of flesh" from their representatives.

Labor could then expect the most vicious attacks, and enforcement of the Taft-Hartley Act and similar laws to the maximum degree. We could expect the same kind of treatment experienced under Harding and Hoover.

A victory for Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman and Democratic congressmen throughout the country will mean a continuation of our progress and prosperity and would be hailed by liberty-loving people throughout the world. It is the bounden duty of each of us to vote, to encourage our families and friends to vote. To vote on the side of humanism and elect Gov. Stevenson for the next four years.

★

DIST. DIR. KOLETKA, CIO Chemical Workers, reports that in a representation election at the Coca Cola Co., Ashland, W. Va., the workers favored the UGC&CWA-CIO by a majority of two to one. Dir. Koletka, assisted by Reps. Derengoski and Clarence Rude, directed the campaign.

Reg. Dir. August Scholle reports that employes of General Motors Fisher Body Plant No. 2, Grand Rapids, Mich., voted in favor of the CIO Auto Workers by a vote of 858 to 119 for no union, void 3, challenged 10.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that the CIO Auto Workers were victorious in a representation election at Pratt Whitney Aircraft Co., North Haven, Conn., by a vote of 935 to 873 for the IAM-AFL, 20 void, 17 challenged.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that in a representation election at Federal Cotton Compress, Yuma, Ariz., the workers favored the CIO Packinghouse Workers by a unanimous vote of 31 to 0. UPWA Rep. Floyd Harris deserves full credit for this victory.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports the following representation election victories for CIO, LIU 78: DeMare Brothers, Newman, Calif., CIO 63, no union 6; Berberbor, Inc., Tracy, Calif., CIO 44, no union 14. CIO Field Rep. James Spangler was in charge assisted by Local Reps. McGraw and Parker.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that the AFL took a 10 to 1 beating from the CIO in a representation election at the Southern States Iron Roofing Co., Memphis, Tenn. The vote was: CIO Steelworkers 254, AFL Machinists 24, no union 65. CIO Field Rep. Ray Allen and USA Rep. Earl Crowder directed the campaign.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that in a representation election at the Barnes Lumber Co., Norfolk, Va., the workers favored the CIO by a vote of 107 to 9 against, 13 challenged. CIO Rep. Earl Davis conducted the drive.

Steel Local Wins Long Tieup

A NINE-WEEK strike of 2500 members of the CIO Steelworkers that started when the employer balked at the presence of a worker from another of its plants on the union negotiating committee was over last week.

The walkout tied up operations of the Whitin Machine Works, Whitinsville, Mass., and forced the company to furlough about 500 office workers. The firm makes textile machinery.

It started Aug. 18 when the company refused to continue negotiations because on the union side of the table was an employe of its plant at Charlotte, N. C. The settlement, approved at a union meeting on Oct. 23, provided for a wage increase of 7c an hour in both hourly and incentive rates, equivalent to 10c an hour; 5c an hour retroactive for all time worked since June 1, and a pension plan reopenable for discussion and negotiation on Dec. 31, 1954.

Tax Gimmicks Up Earnings Of Big Steel

THANKS to corporation tax gimmicks and price increases, profits of U. S. Steel Corp. increased some 50% on a per share basis in in the latest quarter.

But you would have a hard time figuring that out from reports on the financial pages last week.

The higher earnings came in the third quarter, including part of the period of the CIO Steelworkers' strike, and after the industry forced a price increase averaging $5.60-a-ton out of the government.

The third quarter earnings, after taxes, of Big Steel were $30,405,472, equal to 92c a share. This compared with $22,218,922 or 61c a share in the second quarter of this year.

The earnings increase came while sales dropped from $867 million in the '51 third quarter to $679 million in the latest period, because of the strike.

Big Steel voted its usual 75c quarterly dividend.

General Motors reported that despite the steel strike, its net income for the third quarter equaled $1.31 a common share, after preferred dividends. This compared with $1.01 a common share for the same period last year. For the nine months ending Sept. 30, earnings were $4.32 a share, compared to $4.14 in the same period a year ago.

Court Test OKs Time Off For Voting

CIO AUTO Workers last week won an important legal victory, with a decision requiring Illinois employers to give workers two hours off to vote without loss of pay.

The ruling, first ever made in a test of a 1933 law, resulted from a suit filed by UAW Local 788 against Illinois Malleable Iron Co. of Chicago.

Reg. Dir. Pat Greathouse hailed the ruling as "a great victory for democracy" and called it "doubly important since both presidential candidates have called on all employers to grant time off to vote on Election Day."

Attys. Abraham Brussell, Illinois CIO Council, and Harold A. Katz, UAW-CIO, handled the case.

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther reported the union was formally requesting time off for voting without loss of pay for its membership throughout the country.

In identical telegrams to management of all firms under UAW contract, the union said:

"One of the basic freedoms which must be protected is not only the right but also the opportunity of all American citizens to vote. Both presidential candidates, Gov. Stevenson and Gen. Eisenhower, have publicly stated that employers should allow their workers an opportunity to exercise their franchise."

Place Your Order Now!

Big Annual Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS

The CIO News will print another big special CIO Convention Issue on Nov. 24.

This special issue of The CIO News will give the complete story—in news reports, pictures, features and important texts—of the 14th Constitutional CIO Convention, to be held in Los Angeles, Nov. 17-21.

What the convention does will be big news and important news for every CIO union and every CIO member. International and local unions, CIO Councils and political action committees will need extra copies of this enlarged convention issue.

The CIO News Convention Issue will go to press Nov. 24. So get your order in immediately, and you can be sure your members will get the full CIO Convention story.

Special Rates

• BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for large orders.

In sending lists of addresses for bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each address. To facilitate bookkeeping, please send checks with smaller quantity orders.

• INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged by sending us mailing strips not more than 2½ inches wide.

Regular Rates

Apart from the special rates for the Convention Issue, unions which wish to take this opportunity to begin subscribing regularly to The CIO News may begin their bundle order or group subscription order with the Nov. 24 issue at the regular rates, which will be provided on request.

Just Clip and Mail!

The CIO NEWS
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the special 1952 Convention Issue of The CIO NEWS.

Please ship.....in bundle lots to the enclosed address.

Please have the 1952 Convention Issue individually mailed to membership lists for which we will furnish mailing strips. The total number of names to which we desire the paper sent is.....

☐ Check Inclosed ☐ Bill Us Later

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Organization .....

Murray Asks Reversal Of Anti-Immigration Law

THE CIO called for a reversal of the "virulently isolationist and anti-foreign" trend in U. S. immigration and naturalization laws in testimony before the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization at hearings in Washington last week.

The CIO stand was given by Pres. Philip Murray in a statement read on his behalf by CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

Murray was one of more than a score of persons, individuals and spokesmen for organizations, who appeared before the board in person or who filed statements. They were virtually unanimous in condemning the philosophy behind present laws and the McCarran Immigration Act, which becomes effective—ironically—on Christmas Eve.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers labeled the act "un-American" and suggested: "Let us, as the law does presently, give preference to relatives of residents of the United States in entry and as for the remainder—let it be first come first served."

The CIO, Murray said, is urging a liberal immigration policy which would admit to this country every year "a generous number of immigrants, and . . . in their selection there should be no discrimination based on color, religion or racial origin."

In addition, he continued, the CIO favors recognition of "the immediate need for special relief for persons displaced by World War II who still, more than seven years after the wars' end, have not found permanent homes." It also wants this country to offer "special refuge to the streams of refugees who continue to find their way through the Iron Curtain," he added.

"Our immigration policy is part of our over-all national policy," he concluded.

"For us, at the very time when we are striving to build a mutual security system in cooperation with our allies abroad, to make our immigration and naturalization laws ever more virulently isolationist and anti-foreign, not only makes very little sense; it embarrasses us in the pursuit of the wider objectives of our foreign policy.

"Both our national interest and the deep humanitarianism which has always characterized America as a nation require that we reverse this trend of the last two years, and establish a new policy which will be consistent with 20th century conditions and ideals."

Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk, spokesman for the National Council of Churches of Christ, denounced the McCarran Act as "an affront to the conscience of the American people." In some respects, he said, it is not compatible with principles of "Christian justice and love of country."

Rev. Thaddeus F. Gullixson, a member of the commission and also chairman of the Minnesota State Displaced Persons Commission, said the President's panel had been "jolted" by testimony on the reaction to the provision on Asiatics.

Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin testified that "it is time we disregard" the concept that immigrants from eastern and southern Europe are not as suitable for assimilation as those from England, Ireland or Germany. Considerations of race, color, creed and national origin are "invidious," he said.

HE ALSO called for return of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to the Dept. of Labor, where it was until transferred to the Dept. of Justice in 1940, in order to facilitate the integration of immigrants into American life.

The McCarran Act reflects a reckless and isolationist attitude "inconsistent with our democratic ideals and a positive hindrance in our efforts to give moral leadership to the free world," Mutual Security Director Averell Harriman said.

Statistician Louis H. Bean of the Dept. of Commerce said if it were not for "legal and economic barriers to immigration in the past 25 years—

"We would today have 16 to 17 million more people in this country . . . producing at least $35 billion more of national output, $15 billion more in wages, and $3 billion more in cash farm income."

Improves Wages

The U.S. labor movement formerly feared that unrestricted immigration would undermine union wage standards, CIO Pres, Philip Murray said in his testimony before the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization. He expressed doubt that it was well-founded.

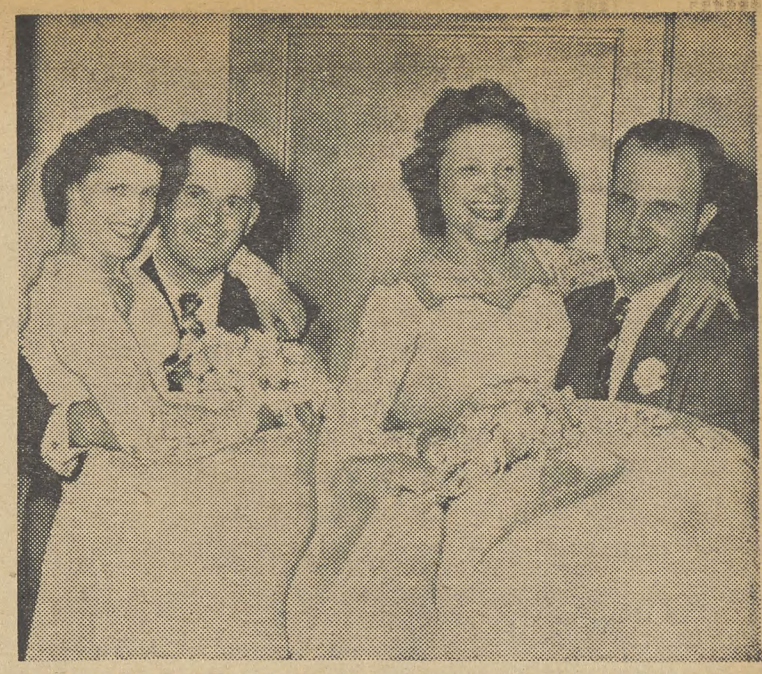
"In 1940-41," he recalled, "the five states with the largest number of immigrants had an average annual per capita income of $891, or about twice the $435 per capita income of the five states with the smallest number of immigrants. It may be that large scale immigration stimulates production and rising wages."

Warning Issued On Commie Front

The Negro Labor Committee-U. S. A. last week warned the labor movement to beware of a convention called by the National Negro Labor Council.

Frank R. Crosswaith, a NLC founder, said the council is the latest Communist attempt to infiltrate into the trade union movement.

The non-Communist Negro Labor Committee-U.S.A has CIO support in its program to combat racial discrimination and to secure civil rights for workers in minority groups.



ONE BIG UNION FAMILY—It was all in the family of the CIO Rubber Workers at this recent Akron double wedding. Two brothers, William Glen Phillips (left) and Harry Leon Phillips, married two sisters, Ardith Davis (left) and Reba Davis. And they're all members of URW-CIO Goodyear Local 2.

UAW Chrysler Locals Ask Pact Reopening

MORE THAN 100 delegates to the CIO Auto Workers Chrysler Conference at Detroit have given further support to the UAW-CIO efforts to reopen the five-year contracts with the industry's Big Three to bring them closer in line with present high living costs.

The delegates, who represented 25 local unions with some 95,000 members in Chrysler plants and offices, unanimously passed several resolutions demanding economic improvements in the Chrysler agreement.

"Our Chrysler members feel that we must do something about incorporating at least 21c of the 26c per hour cost-of-living spread now in the Chrysler agreement in the hourly base rates of the Chrysler workers," declared Norman Mathews, director of the UAW-CIO Chrysler Dept.

"They also feel that the lost purchasing power of our pensioned workers must be restored by increased pension benefits.

"Another issue of paramount importance to the Chrysler workers is that of the speed-up. The Chrysler Corp. must be made to realize that the Chrysler workers strongly resent company attempts to speed up various jobs beyond the normal productive capacity of the employes."

Proposals for reopening of contracts also have been made to General Motors and Ford. All proposals also include increasing the annual 4c hourly productivity raise to 5c. The UAW's long-term contracts, like other agreements, can be opened on consent of both parties. UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther has headed UAW negotiators in several sessions with GM.

Rubber Raises Get WSB Okeh

The CIO Rubber Workers reported that the Wage Stabilization Board has approved increases of 10c hourly for 150,000 URW members negotiated in recent contract settlements with the "Big Four" and smaller rubber firms. The hourly scale in the big plants now is $2.03.

Living Costs Stick On Same Old High Price Plateau

LIVING COSTS are riding high, sticking close to the all-time record.

The latest consumer price indexes of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics report fractional drops after climbing steadily for the past nine months.

But in both cases, the BLS figures are within a shade of records set last summer. And the monthly average of BLS figures this year is 190.4—up five from 1951 and up 19 from two years ago.

The BLS mid-September figures showed that the "old" index was at 191.4, a drop from 192.3 in mid-August. For the so-called "new" index, the drop was from 191.5 to 190.8.

End-of-summer decline in some food prices caused the decline. Rents and prices for clothing, house furnishings, fuel, electricity, and services all increased.

The high price plateau took some of the steam out of the latest report on factory earnings. Reflecting overtime pay for average work weeks of 41.1 hours, plus recent contract settlements, the BLS reported average weekly factory wages climbed to $69.58. The increase in the month ending in mid-September was $1.78 a week.

But the new record wage figure of $69.58 is still far short of the earnings which BLS has said is necessary for a modest budget. Last May the U. S. agency said a family of four needs $4167 a year just to get by. That's equivalent to $80.13 a week—or $10.55 more than present factory earnings.

While workers and consumers were trying to keep their heads above water, the business press reported "flurry of extra dividends" for many big firms after "significantly higher" sales and profits (after taxes) in the third quarter of 1952.

Among firms voting extra dividends, as cited by Labor Press Associated, were United Air Lines, Liggett & Myers, Fairbanks Morse, and Arkansas-Missouri Power Co. General Foods boosted its profits 28% in the first six months of the year, while Best Foods, Allis Chalmers, Parke, Davis and Republic Aviation all showed nine month profit increases.

A recent study by the Federal Trade Commission showed that manufacturing firms are doing better than ever. The study covered 83 biggest firms in 23 industries, compared their earnings—after tax increases—in 1951 with 1940. Figuring earnings after taxes on capital invested, FTC reported 55 of the firms did better, with many of them doubling their profit rate and some tripling it.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "old" BLS Index:

Period	Index		Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: June 15		170.2
1943 monthly average	123.6	1951: June 15		185.5
1944 monthly average	125.5	1952: Jan. 15		190.2
1945 monthly average	128.4	Feb. 15		188.3
1946 monthly average	139.3	Mar. 15		188.4
1947 monthly average	159.2	Apr. 15		189.6
1948 monthly average	171.2	May 15		190.4
1949 monthly average	169.1	June 15		191.1
1950 monthly average	171.2	July 15		192.4
1951 monthly average	185.9	Aug. 15		192.3
1952 monthly average	190.4	Sept. 15		191.4

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV | WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 10, 1952 | 82 | No. 45

Here's The Outcome . . .

The President

Dwight Eisenhower

The Next Senate

Republican 48

Democratic 47

Independent 1

The Next House

Republican 221

Democratic 212

Independent 1

The States

GOP governors elected 19

Dem. governors elected 9

Undecided 2

GOP Gains Knife-Edge Margin In New Congress

By MILTON PLUMB

THE 83RD CONGRESS, which convenes next Jan. 4, will be Republican controlled. Even the Senate, which had generally been considered "safely" Democratic before last Tuesday's election, was captured in the Eisenhower sweep.

This gives the GOP control over both houses of Congress along with the Presidency for the first time in 20 years.

The Republican hold on Congress, however, will be much less secure than the party's clear title to the White House. Despite Gen. Eisenhower's overwhelming triumph, the voters did not give his party anywhere near the same margin of victory in Congress. GOP control will be much weaker, for example, than it was in the 80th Congress.

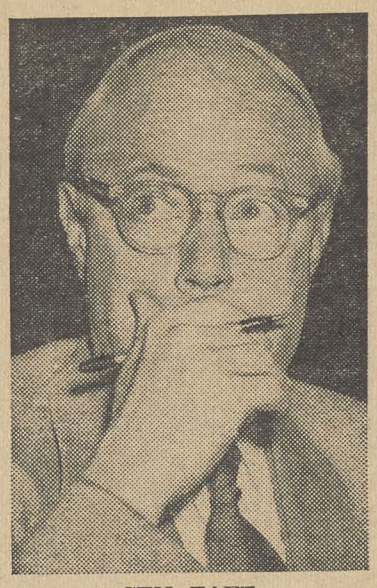
In the Senate the Republicans will hold 48 seats to 47 held by the Democrats and the one new Independent seat created when Sen. Morse, former Republican from Oregon, resigned from the party. Even if Morse votes with the Democrats on the motion to organize the new Congress, however, the tie can be broken in the GOP favor by the Republican Vice President, former Sen. Nixon.

CONTROL OF the House also will rest upon a margin of only a handful. Normal turnover of seats is sufficient to make it fully possible for the GOP to lose its control of either or both houses before the end of the Congress.

The outlook for sound social legislation in the new Congress, considered in the light of past records, is dim. Under GOP control, 11 of the 19 standing committees of the House and six of the 16 in the Senate are in line to be headed by the same Republican chairmen as in the "awful 80th" Congress.

The House and Senate also will have the same Republican leaders as in 1946 and 1947. Rep. Martin (Mass.) is again in line for the job of Speaker and Rep. Halleck (Ind.) is probable House Majority Leader. Sen. Taft (O.) is expected to be chairman of the GOP Senate Policy Committee.

All of these key figures in shaping Congressional policy are credited with casting just one "right" vote each in The CIO News Voting Guide to the 82nd Congress.



SEN. TAFT

"Mr. Republican" will have a lot to say in the GOP administration.

Nine incumbent Senators were defeated for re-election. These included three of the Senate's leading liberals, Sens. Benton (D. Conn.), O'Mahoney (Wyo.), and Moody (D. Mich.) as well as Democratic Leader McFarland (Ariz.) and Sen. Underwood (D. Ky.).

The liberal losses were partially offset, however, in the defeat of Senators Lodge (Mass.), Kem (Mo.), Ecton (Mont.) and Cain (Wash.). The last three, who had run up some of the most reactionary records in the Senate, will be replaced in the new Congress by Stuart Symington, Rep. Mansfield and Henry M. Jackson, all regarded as liberals.

LODGE'S DEFEAT by another liberal, Rep. Kennedy indicated the split in the Presidential and Congressional vote, since Lodge had been a key figure in the move to gain Eisenhower the Republican nomination. Kennedy, who has a much better voting record, also is expected to add to the liberal strength.

Labor-supported Senators who won re-election included Chavez (D. N.M.), Langer (R. N.D.), Pastore (D. R.I.) and Kilgore (D. W.Va.). Rep. Gore (D. Tenn.), who had defeated Sen. McKellar in the primary, also won over his Republican opponent.

On the other side, the Eisenhower sweep helped carry back into office such senators as Jenner (Ind.) and McCarthy (Wis.), as well as a number of others strongly opposed by organized labor. Both ran considerably behind the General, McCarthy trailing him by 200,000 votes and Jenner by 300,000.

There were a number of upsets in the House, and many capable Democratic representatives were defeated by less qualified Republicans riding Eisenhower's coattails. Among those whose loss will be felt are Reps. Havenner (Calif.), Irving (Me.), Denton (Ind.), Flood (Pa.), O'Toole, Clemente and Murphy (N.Y.), and Lind (Pa.).

The probable line-up of committee chairmen in the Senate and House in the next Congress follows:

SENATE

Agriculture and Forestry—Sen. Aiken (Vt.).
Appropriations — Sen. Bridges* (N.H.) or Sen. Ferguson (Mich.).
Armed Services—Sen. Saltonstall (Mass.) or Bridges (N.H.).
Banking and Currency—Sen. Capehart (Ind.).
District of Columbia—Sen. Case (S.D.).
Finance—Sen. Millikin* (Colo.).
Foreign Relations — Sen. Wiley (Wis.) or Sen. H. A. Smith (N.J.).
Government Operations — Sen. McCarthy (Wis.).
Interior and Insular Affairs—Sen. Hugh Butler* (Neb.).
Interstate and Foreign Commerce—Sen. Tobey (N.H.).
Judiciary — Sen. Langer (N.D.) or Wiley* or Ferguson.
Labor and Public Welfare—Sen. Taft* (O.).
Post Office and Civil Service—Sen. Carlson (Kan.) or Langer*.
Public Works — Sen. Martin (Pa.).
Rules and Administration — Sen. Jenner (Ind.) or Sen. Hendrickson (N.J.).
Small Business — Sen. Thye (Minn.) or Tobey or Saltonstall.

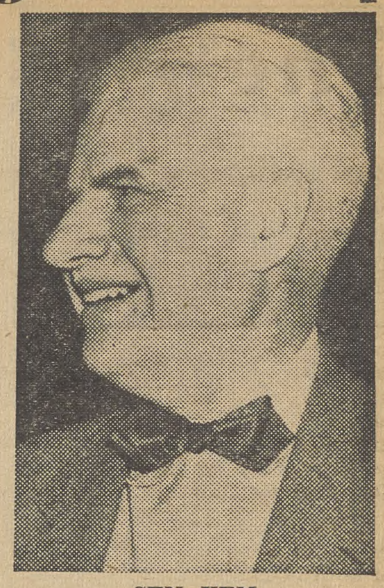
HOUSE

Agriculture—Rep. Hope* (Kan.) or Rep. Andersen (Minn.).
Appropriations — Rep. Tabor* (N.Y.).
Armed Services — Rep. Short (Mo.).
Banking and Currency—Rep. Wolcott* (Mich.).
District of Columbia—Rep. Simpson (Ill.).
Education and Labor—Rep. McConnell (Pa.).
Foreign Affairs — Rep. Chiperfield (Ill.).
Government Operations — Rep. Hoffman* (Mich.).
House Administration—Rep. LeCompte* (Ia.).
Interior and Insular Affairs—Rep. Taylor (N.Y.).
Interstate and Foreign Commerce — Rep. Wolverton* (N.Y.).
Judiciary—Rep. Reed (Ill.).
Merchant Marine and Fisheries —Rep. Weichel* (O.).
Post Office and Civil Service—Rep. Rees* (Kan.).
Public Works — Rep. Dondero* (Mich.).
Rules—Rep. Allen* (Ill.).
Un-American Activities — Rep. Kearney (N.Y.).
Veterans' Affairs—Rep. Rogers* (Mass.).
Ways and Means — Rep. Reed (N.Y.).

(—Designates chairmen during 80th Congress.)*

The Key Races

STUART SYMINGTON



SEN. KEM

Former RFC chief defeated GOP Old Guard isolationist.

HENRY JACKSON

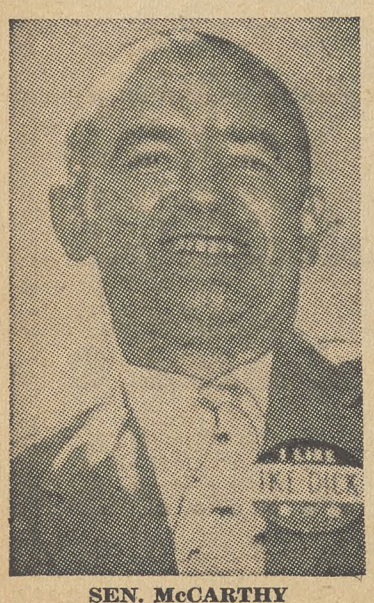
SEN. CAIN

Young congressman whipped the darling of the lobbyists.

REP. JOHN KENNEDY

SEN. LODGE

He won expected victory over an Eisenhower campaign chief.



SEN. McCARTHY

SEN. JENNER

Gen. Eisenhower's coat-tails proved a good place to ride.

SEN. BRICKER

MICHAEL DiSALLE

Ohio Republican stalwart sailed past former price controller.

Election Roundup—

The People Speak—It's Gen. Eisenhower

By AL ZACK

GEN. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER, 62-year-old lifetime soldier, last Tuesday was elected President of the United States.

It was the climax to 40 years of public service, all in the army, and 10 eventful years in the spotlight of public attention. Ironically, the President-elect had achieved prominence through appointments of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt and Pres. Harry S. Truman. His election victory ended the 20 years of the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

Tuesday's Eisenhower landslide also gave the Republican party slim control of both houses of Congress, on the basis of complete but unofficial returns.

In the presidential balloting, it was:

	popular votes	electoral votes
Eisenhower	32,927,505	442
Stevenson	26,484,529	89

It was the biggest popular vote ever received by any presidential candidate in an election which broke all previous voting records.

THE CLIMAX came quickly on election night. Despite predictions by pollsters that the election would be close and despite elaborate election coverage plans of TV and radio networks, which included gigantic mechanical brains, the results were early and appallingly apparent to all Stevenson supporters.

Except for part of the traditionally "solid South" and some of the border states, the Eisenhower landslide was complete. He cracked the Southland, taking four states—Virginia, Tennessee, Texas and Florida—and rolled up impressive votes in other states south of the Mason-Dixon Line.

The Democratic candidate, Adlai E. Stevenson, had waged a fighting, stirring campaign. It had been an up-hill fight all the way, with the little-known governor of Illinois battling against the tremendous personal popularity of "Ike," whose name had been a familiar and friendly household word for a decade.

Kroll Said

Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, released the following statement after Gov. Stevenson had conceded to Gen. Eisenhower:

"We are obviously not able to make an analysis of the election at this time. I assume that at some later date there will be a detailed discussion of all phases of the campaign.

"What is clear is that Gen. Eisenhower has been selected as the President of all the American people. He is entitled to their support in carrying out the duties and obligations of that office. We hope his administration will achieve the goals of world peace and domestic prosperity to which he has pledged himself."

In defeat, Stevenson was as eloquent as he had been in the campaign. "The people have rendered their verdict and I gladly accept it," he said in the early hours of Nov. 5.

His backers, many of them weeping openly, yelled, "No, no," and the governor, with a tired smile, continued:

"Gen. Eisenhower has been a great leader in war. He has been a vigorous and valiant opponent in the campaign. These qualities will now be dedicated to leading us all through the next four years."

As newsreel cameras ground away and the television cameras recorded the event for viewers throughout the nation, Stevenson added:

"That which unites us as American citizens is far greater than that which divides us as political partisans. I urge you to give to Gen. Eisenhower the support he will need to carry out the great tasks that lie before him.

"I pledge him mine."

Gov. Stevenson is sober as he concedes defeat while Gen. Eisenhower and the new First Lady smile in victory.

Stevenson concluded his concession speech in a Springfield (Ill.) hotel with these words:

"We vote as many, but we pray as one. With a united people, with faith in democracy, with common concern for others less fortunate around the globe, we shall move forward with God's guidance toward the time when his children shall grow in freedom and dignity in a world at peace."

Even in defeat, Stevenson had the wide but timid smile and the fund of good humor that had so marked his campaign. He felt, he said, like the little boy who stubbed his toe in the dark and whose plight had been described by Abraham Lincoln. "He was too old to cry but it hurt too much to laugh."

ONLY MINUTES LATER Eisenhower was before the television cameras, flanked by the Secret Service men who will be his constant companions until his successor is sworn in as President.

Victory Grin

The candidate who had won was as happy as his opponent had been sad. His wide grin, the Eisenhower trademark, flashed repeatedly. As he started to speak, however, the President-elect was as sober in victory as Stevenson had been in defeat.

"It is trite to say that this is a day of dedication rather than of triumph," he said. "But I am indeed as humble as I am proud of the decision that the American people have made. And I recognize clearly the weight of the responsibility you have placed upon me, and I assure you that I shall never in my service in Washington give short weight to those responsibilities."

He had generous thanks for all who had supported him and he was obviously tired, ready for a vacation after the strain of the campaign. But he had one closing thought. It was:

"We cannot now do all the job ahead of us except as united people. Let us unite for the better future of America, for our children and for our grandchildren."

THERE WAS NO DOUBT that it was an Eisenhower landslide—not a Republican landslide. While the party had won eyelash control of both houses of Congress—unless expected recounts change the picture—it had won on the Eisenhower popularity.

He had led the ticket all the way, in most cases running far ahead of the so-called "strong" GOP candidates. Even his personal popularity hadn't been enough to win victory for some of the most reactionary senators and congressmen.

Three Republican senators of the "Class of '46" went down to defeat. They were Kem of Missouri, who lost to Stuart Symington, long-time Democratic trouble shooter; Cain of Washington, who tasted defeat at the hands of liberal Rep. Henry M. Jackson; and Ecton of Montana, whose Senate seat was won by fighting Mike Mansfield, long-time congressman. In the House, other reactionary faces would be missing. Prominent among these was Rep. Vail of Illinois.

Old Guard Back

But most of the GOP reactionaries will be back in power: Taft, of course; Bricker, McCarthy, Jenner, Capehart, to name only a few. Jenner rode in on Eisenhower's coattails while McCarthy had run at the bottom of the Republican ticket, although he won by a safe majority.

In the congressional races, there were no clear-cut explanations for the assorted victories or defeats. Some of the reactionary Republicans won; some lost. Henry Cabot Lodge, the Massachusetts senator who had steered Eisenhower's convention victory and who was considered a "liberal" Republican, lost to energetic young Democratic Rep. Jack Kennedy.

All together, the Senate shaped up this way: 23 Republicans were elected while 12 Democrats also won. Added to those held-over senators whose seats were not at stake, these returns gave the Republicans 48, or exactly half, and the Democrats 47.

The remaining seat is occupied by Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon, elected as a Republican, who resigned from the party during the campaign as a protest at Eisenhower campaign tactics. He now refuses to say how he will vote on organizing the Senate.

Another question was Sen.-elect Price Daniel of Texas, elected as a Democrat but who supported Eisenhower's candidacy. He indicated that he may throw his support to the GOP.

If Morse votes Democratic and Daniel stays with the party, the Republicans could organize the Senate anyway, with Vice President-elect Richard Nixon voting to break the tie.

Adlai Said

In conceding defeat, Gov. Stevenson sent the following telegram to President-elect Eisenhower:

"The people have made their choice and I congratulate you. That you may be the servant and guardian of peace and make the vale of trouble a door of hope is my earnest prayer. Best wishes."

President-elect Eisenhower replied:

"I thank you for your courteous and generous message. Recognizing the intensity of the difficulties that lie ahead, it is clearly necessary that men and women of good will of both parties forget the political strife through which we have passed and devote themselves to the single purpose of a better future. This I believe they will do."

In the House, where 218 seats are necessary for a majority, the Republicans won 221. The Democrats had 213 seats but this total was already cut by the death of Rep. Adolph Sabath of Illinois, dean of the House, who died shortly after re-election.

Republicans also broadened their control of state governments, winning five more governorships. Added to the 25 they already held, this meant there were GOP governors in 30 states, Democratic governors in 18 states.

BY ALL ODDS it had been a strange campaign. Eisenhower was the amateur candidate; the self-styled non-politician. Stevenson, with a one-election victory under his belt in Illinois, was the politician.

But it was Eisenhower who made use of the familiar political handshake with men he reportedly despised. "I should have punched him in the nose," he said after clasping the hand of Sen. Jenner, the Hoosier who had called Eisenhower's army mentor and best friend, Gen. George C. Marshall, a "front man for traitors."

No Compromise

On the other hand, it was Stevenson who refused to support all Democrats just because they were Democrats. He specifically turned his back on Sen. Pat McCarran, the Nevada Democrat whose record matched that of most Republican reactionaries.

THROUGHOUT the campaign, the heaviest GOP fire had been directed against Pres. Truman, the man who didn't choose to run again.

Truman had campaigned hard and vigorously for Stevenson, fighting "harder than he had ever fought for himself." Shortly after his campaign special arrived in Washington, the President read a statement of congratulations to President-elect Eisenhower.

"I accept the decision," he said, "and I shall give my support" to the new administration; support which he urged his fellow citizens also to give.

Soberly, the President noted the complex problems facing the General and added, "there is no quick or easy solution to these problems."

"I am inviting the General," he added, "to meet with me here in the White House at an early date to discuss these problems, in order that it may be plain to the whole world that our people are united in the struggle for freedom and peace." The General accepted.

Truman gave a touching tribute to Gov. Stevenson, whom he called "a great new leader who will contribute much to our national life in the years ahead."

Noting there will be other elections and other debates between the two parties, the President said: "It will be in the best interest of all of us to close ranks and work together for our mutual welfare as citizens of this great republic."

November Fourth

A free people, using its sacred right to the secret ballot, has elected Gen. Eisenhower by what amounts to a landslide vote. There can be no question that the choice of Dwight Eisenhower was clear-cut and decisive over an equally fine American, Adlai E. Stevenson.

The CIO, like the rest of organized labor in this country, recommended the election of Stevenson. It would be folly not to admit that we were defeated; and it would be unsportsmanlike not to offer our congratulations, as Americans, to Gen. Eisenhower upon his great victory.

The CIO has no alibis about this election. It does not intend to whine or whimper because the man we endorsed was defeated.

It should be noted that Eisenhower ran well ahead of the Republican ticket in practically every state. While the Republicans have gained narrow control of the 83rd Congress, it is also worth noting that a substantial number of Democratic liberals will be sitting in the next Senate.

We will judge the incoming Eisenhower Administration on its merits and its record, rather than on preconceived notions or snap judgments. Ike has indicated he hopes to be a President serving all the people; if he fulfills those hopes, he will indeed win the support of all the people.

The new administration, taking office on Jan. 20, will find tremendous problems on the doorstep of the White House. These problems will not be limited to those about which Republican candidates—including the next President—talked about during the recent election campaign. Many of them will be inside the Republican Party, and the American people will watch with interest to see how they are solved.

On that record, the Eisenhower administration will be judged for its service not only to the United States but indeed to the entire free world.

As trade unionists, we will of course watch with particular interest the policies and actions of the Republican Party in the field of labor and labor-management relations.

The party of Abraham Lincoln has not always been anti-labor, and it need not be so. On the other hand, we cannot ignore the harassing-labor record of many of the Senators and Congressmen who were reelected.

Labor was not an issue in the 1952 election. Both party platforms recognized the inherent right of unions to organize and to engage in collective bargaining. If Pres. Eisenhower and the GOP leaders in Congress are faithful to the concept expounded in their platform, relations between labor and management can be harmonious and constructive. If, on the other hand, the hate-labor bloc is given free rein, workers will suffer—and so will the entire nation.

We can hope that the Republican Party, now that it has been returned to power after 20 years, will regard these problems—and such other problems as housing, social security, civil rights and health—with responsibility and a sense of practicality.

There is nothing in the election returns to show that the people want the great gains of the New Deal and Fair Deal taken off the statute books. On the contrary, they have been assured by the GOP that those great social experiments are here to stay and to be strengthened.

Only on such a course will the new administration retain the great vote of confidence it received on Nov. 4.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV November 10, 1952 No. 45

Early Winter

In Other Words—

Let's Not Kid Ourselves

The following article by Pres. O. A. Knight of OWIU-CIO is condensed from the International Oil Worker, the union's official organ. While its message is addressed primarily to Oil Workers, it could apply equally as well to members of many other CIO unions.

By O. A. KNIGHT

BILL JONES, the average Oil Worker, puts in 40 hours or so every week working for an oil company. He draws an hourly rate, which is fairly high as hourly wages go. He gets some fairly good fringe benefits from his company—sick leave, pension, holidays and other indirect benefits.

He's a member of the union, pays his dues, attends meetings now and then and when the chips are down he's willing to stand up and fight for his union.

He's raising a family and he's probably trying to buy a home and save some money. His wages have about kept up with the cost of living—but they haven't gained much. He's had regular employment for a good many years—but he still worries sometimes about layoffs, sickness, and how he's going to get along when he's old.

He's got a good job but he'd like a better one. He figures the union has served him fairly well, but sometimes he wishes that wages could increase faster than the cost of living and that he could have more security.

Bill Jones and all the other Oil Workers have joined this union because they think the union can help them obtain better wages, better fringe benefits and more security. The fact that most of the people belonging to this union have remained members, without compulsion, proves that the members are, by and large, well satisfied with the job the union is doing.

The thing that Bill Jones and some other members perhaps forget sometimes is that the amount of good this union can do is limited by its size.

OWIU-CIO has only about one-third of the basic oil industry organized. Because it is a good organization, OWIU-CIO has been able to do a good job of collective bargaining even though small in size. How much better a job could OWIU-CIO do if it had all the industry organized—or even three-fourths?

Now we are bargaining with one-third of the strength we should have. We are battling with one-third of the men against all the industry. There can be no denying that the industry is fully united; when the industry takes a position on wages or any other question, every single company takes that position. But when our union takes a position, only a third of the workers in the industry are lined up together.

Let's not kid ourselves. Bill Jones' plant may be 100% organized, but when his committee goes in to negotiate, that committee is negotiating with the entire oil industry—and it is a rich and powerful industry.

I believe that every member of OWIU-CIO will agree with me that he personally and individually would be better off if this union represented a greater portion of the wage earners in oil and allied industries.

Only when we have a substantial portion of the industry organized can we make fundamental changes and improvements in pension plans, for instance. There are many improvements which have been suggested by our members which are out of the question as long as we are a minority among the employes of the industry.

I SINCERELY believe that when this union represents three-fourths or more of the workers in the oil industry, strikes will be few and far between.

When this union represents a substantial portion of the industry, the companies will adopt an entirely different attitude toward us. The companies will recognize our strength, realize that we are a force to contend with, realize that our resources are great. And therefore the companies will readily grant many improvements across the bargaining table instead of holding out until a strike is forced.

That's why Bill Jones, the individual member, has a great stake in our organizing campaign. It's Bill Jones, the individual, who will benefit from gains we make. It's Bill Jones, the individual member, who carries the burden when strikes are forced upon us and who will benefit most if strikes are made less necessary.

Our program of organizing the remainder of the industry can move with whirlwind speed if each and every member will lend a helping hand now and then.

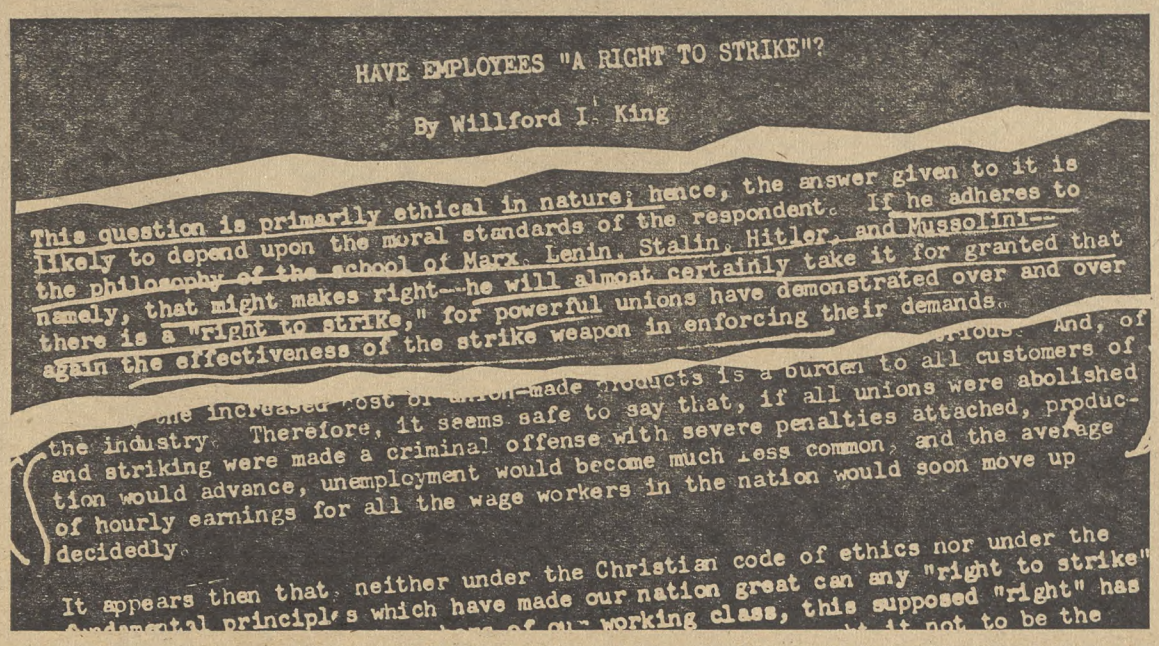
Back To Stone Age—

GE Tells Workers All Unions Should Be Outlawed

THE GENERAL Electric Co., which piously proclaimed before the Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee that it "accepts" unions, is spreading anti-union, fascist-type propaganda among its employes.

The employes work in GE's small motors plant at DeKalb, Ill., where they are represented by the CIO Electrical Workers. (GE doesn't like IUE-CIO; it prefers the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers because it's a pushover for management.)

The propaganda comes from the facile pen of Dr. Willford I. King, chairman of the Committee for Constitutional Government. This is the big business-financed outfit that carries the ball for the Republican reactionaries who would grab control of the country by controlling Congress, and would turn back the economic and social clock to the days of the McKinley administration.



HAVE EMPLOYEES "A RIGHT TO STRIKE"?

By Willford I. King

This question is primarily ethical in nature; hence, the answer given to it is likely to depend upon the moral standards of the respondent. If he adheres to the philosophy of the school of Marx, Lenin, Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini—namely, that might makes right—he will almost certainly take it for granted that there is a "right to strike," for powerful unions have demonstrated over and over again the effectiveness of the strike weapon in enforcing their demands.

...the increased cost of union-made products is a burden to all customers of the industry. Therefore, it seems safe to say that, if all unions were abolished and striking were made a criminal offense with severe penalties attached, production would advance, unemployment would become much less common, and the average of hourly earnings for all the wage workers in the nation would soon move up decidedly.

It appears then that, neither under the Christian code of ethics nor under the fundamental principles which have made our nation great can any "right to strike" ... working class, this supposed "right" has ... it not to be the King's opus is entitled "Have Employes 'A Right To Strike?'" It was distributed in leaflet form to foremen at the GE plant in DeKalb. Later, excerpts were picked up in the plant paper, which the company distributes to all employes.

Here's the heart of the King leaflet:

"This question is primarily ethical in nature; hence, the answer given to it is likely to depend upon the moral standards of the respondent. If he adheres to the philosophy of the school of Marx, Stalin, Hitler and Mussolini — namely, that might makes right—he will almost certainly take it for granted that there is a 'right to strike,' for powerful unions have demonstrated over and over again the effectiveness of the strike weapon in enforcing their demands."

It then argues that there should be no right to strike. With that bit of whimsy as a springboard, it goes on to proclaim that "all unions should be abolished," and that striking should be "made a criminal offense with severe penalties attached."

King's CCG is actually run by Edward A. Rumely as director. Rep. Patman (D. Tex.), who described the CCG as "neo-fascist" in a House speech, at the same time branded Rumley as a "plain and unadulterated Fascist."

Rumley was jailed for violating the Trading With the Enemy Act during World War I, and has been indicted for contempt of Congress by refusal to disclose the names of contributors to the CCG lobbying fund.

King's views on unions are nothing new. Another CCG publication is "Labor Monopolies or Freedom," in which the author, John W. Scoville, declares:

"What we should do is to repeal all federal labor laws on wages, hours of labor, collective bargaining, minimum wages, etc., and abolish all boards, bureaus and commissions that result from these laws."

The CCG regularly publishes tory GOP-big business viewings with alarum it calls "Paul Revere Letters." In No. 75 of the series, which rivals The Married Life of Helen and Warren for continued fiction, it says:

"It is now time for Americans to stop talking about the right to strike, and to recognize the truth that . . . strikes are unjustifiable in a civilized society."

He might have something there, if he could only figure out some way to civilize employers like GE.

Press And Politics—

Adlai Was 99.44% Right On One-Party Newspapers

WHEN GOV. STEVENSON referred to the "one-party press," the nation's editorialists were upset. "It wasn't sporting," they protested, adding in surprised tones, "Why some papers are supporting Stevenson."

Last week, Editor & Publisher, the publishers' bible, spilled the beans, revealing Stevenson had been 99.44% right when he called it a "one-party press."

Here's the results of the Editor & Publisher poll:

Eisenhower was supported by newspapers with 80.24% of the total daily circulation, or 40,129,-237.

Stevenson was supported by newspapers with 14.52% of the daily circulation, or 5,466,781.

This was a GOP increase from 1948 when it had 78.38% of the total daily circulation behind its candidate.

(These figures do not, of course, reflect those papers which distorted news of the Stevenson campaign or sometimes suppressed it, or which made use of slanted headlines, unfair news treatment or any other device common to the trade. They reflect only editorial page support.)

More meaningful than the bare statistics of daily circulation in the Eisenhower corner were these facts:

Stevenson had not a single bit of editorial support in the following states: Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah and Vermont.

Eisenhower had newspaper support in every state.

Stevenson had no newspaper support in the following major cities: Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Indianapolis, Birmingham, San Francisco and Baltimore, to cite only a few.

Eisenhower had no newspaper support in only one major city: Atlanta.

While Eisenhower had the support of most of the daily newspapers with mammoth circulation, at least two of his supporting papers, the New York Times and the Washington Post, found this support costing them the regard of thousands of readers.

BOTH PAPERS reported tremendous volumes of mail from readers—the Post said it ran 4 to 1—condemning them for their action. Both papers also ran into trouble with editorial writers who could not stomach the paper's policy and both felt called upon to explain repeatedly, in rather lame language, that they weren't going to switch from Ike.

Among the few major metropolitan dailies supporting Stevenson were: the New York Post, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Milwaukee Journal, Los Angeles News, Portland (Ore.) Journal, Atlanta Constitution and papers in smaller-sized cities like Sacramento and Fresno (Cal.) Bees, and the Springfield (Mass.) Daily News.

In upstate New York, traditionally Republican, the Auburn Citizen-Advertiser switched from Eisenhower to Stevenson in the middle of the campaign, explaining their action in a page one editorial, "Stop the Bandwagon—We Want Off."

Book Review—

Herblock Packs A Punch—Too Much, It Seems, For His Publisher

IN VOTELESS Washington, where the citizens watch the political scene with perhaps more concern than their brethren who can but sometimes fail to vote, the customary morning question is:

"Did you see Herblock this morning?"

Herblock is not a missing person, nor is he the gremlin which makes Washington's crowded buses run late when you've tarried too long over a second cup of coffee.

Rather, he is the most powerful and effective political cartoonist in America. One is tempted to say "political commentator" for Herblock can and does do more with a single cartoon panel than most commentators can do in a 1000-word column or a 15-minute broadcast.

His cartoons appear daily in the Washington Post, except, that is, for a period just before the recent election. At that time, the Post failed to carry its regular Herblock cartoons and one answer lies in the adjoining column. (That cartoon is one of the Post did NOT carry, although other papers purchasing this syndicated feature did.)

—Herblock in New York Post

"Naughty, Naughty!"

(One the Washington Post wouldn't publish.)

For the record, let it be added that the Post supported Gen. Eisenhower, long before it knew whom his opponent would be, and spent the campaign period lamely explaining to its readers why this support for a candidate who took positions the Post had opposed for years.

All of this extravagant praise —and much more that is rightly due but could not be expressed— results from publication of "The Herblock Book," a collection of about 150 of his best cartoons.

INCLUDED is a rambling text in which Herbert Block (Herblock is a trade name) explains his cartoons and comments on the passing parade. He displays a typewriter as sharp as his drawing pen—a knack for words which matches his knack for devastating drawings.

He ridicules those pompous inhabitants of Capitol Hill whose sole contribution to America has been to attack the dignity of fellow humans. (In case anyone needs reassurance, let us hastily add we mean McCarthy, McCarran, Nixon and Co.)

He strips the mantle of undeserved self-righteousness from the Tafts and the DAR—pictures the self-styled repentent ex-Communists for what they are—and acts as a much-needed conscience for official Washington.

His book is a pleasant visit with one of the most gifted commentators of our time and, next to that buck you gave to PAC, it's certainly the best investment we can advise for all interested in the Washington scene. —A. Z.

"The Herblock Book" by Herbert Block; The Beacon Press, Boston, Mass.; $2.75.

TWENTY-FIVE CIO unionists from the shops, first U. S. rank and filers to go abroad under union auspices, are shown here landing at Copenhagen, Denmark, to start three-week "life-seeing" tour of Scandinavia.

FIRST WEEK was spent at Danish fo of U. S. workers talks with Pres. Eil

'Life-seeing' Trip Ope

TWENTY-FIVE enthusiastic good will ambassadors from the Scandinavian countries are back on the job on this side of the Atlantic, spreading among their fellow-workers a message of friendship for—and from—the people of Denmark, Norway and Sweden.

They are the pioneers from industries and service trades, rank and file members of CIO unions, who were the first American workers to visit their fellow-workers abroad under the auspices of their unions and the CIO itself.

They went to school for a week in Denmark and spent another week touring the country. A third week they divided between Norway and Sweden. Some of them, as guests of the Mutual Security Administration, visited Germany and Italy on their way home. Still another group briefly visited in France.

THEY WERE not sightseeing. They were "life-seeing." That is the Danish way of describing a trip to meet people and see how they live, rather than the usual sort of trip that concentrates on national monuments, scenery and art galleries.

The 25 pioneers are members of nine CIO unions from 13 states and one Canadian province. The idea that took them abroad originated in a casual talk between George Guernsey, associate director of the Dept. of CIO Education and Research, and Erik Hauerslev, executive director of the Danish Workers' Education Service, during a CIO leadership training school 1951. The Danish Society, a scholarshi foundation, and the Danish Federation o Trade Unions were brought in. To the CI Depts. of Education and Research and In ternational Affairs went the job of shapin things up.

The plan was developed and offered t CIO international unions and industria union councils with requests to submi nominations. The cost, for approximatel four weeks including travel time and th stay abroad was $300 per person, plus ex penses between the home community an New York and return, lost time pay, an incidental items such as passport fees.

THE RECEPTION was enthusiastic—es pecially among the prospects. Several can didates volunteered to pay part of thei own expenses for the privilege of makin the trip.

The first week was spent at the Ros kilde Workers High School, taking th same courses offered a group of Danish union members attending at the same time. Each American had a Danish worke as a roommate. The lecturers include Danish leaders in the labor, political an cooperative movements and American from the U.S. Embassy including Sven Godfredsen, former CIO Newspaper Guil member now U.S. labor attache at Copen hagen. Victor G. Reuther, CIO representa tive in Europe, flew up from Paris to speak at one session.

The Americans made many friends

FLIGHT OVER GLOBE to Denmark is traced for Danish workers by Cecil Patrick, member of Transport Service Employes Union from Chicago.

QUICK PEEK was taken at France by five U. S. unionists on way back home. Housing project for 6000 workers at Chateney-Malabry was one spot visited.

INDIVIDUAL heating plant is examined by Ed Kohleim, a Steelworker.

KITCHEN of one Chateney-Malabry and Arthur Valenti (left) and Fran

h school at Rungsted. Here a group son, Danish Labor Federation.

WHILE STUDYING Danish labor and cooperative movements, Americans lived with workers' families. Frank Parker, of Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Birmingham, Ala., smiles in anticipation of Danish food.

s CIO Unionists' Eyes

y envied their Danish hosts for the sure they get out of little things, like wers on the dining room table, books, nily musical evenings. The Danes learned t they often had an exaggerated idea the American worker's prosperity. A of misconceptions on both sides were ared up.

RING THEIR second week in Denmark Americans visited social and cultural titutions and spent the nights in the nes of Danish workers. Old folks living their lives in comfort provided by the nish social security system, playgrounds children, cooperatives, factories, folk ools, libraries and town halls were all the schedule.

ost of the trip to Norway was spent Oslo, the capital. The U.S. group met h Norwegian metal workers attending orkers' education institute under the ction of Haakon Lie. The building kers gave a party for the Americans heir big hall, and a lot of information exchanged over food and drink.

n Sweden, the extent of workers' edu- on and the development of cooperatives le the greatest impression on the Amer- ns. But as in Denmark and Sweden, emphasis was on direct man-to-man hanges—hours of questioning and an- ring in union halls, hotel rooms, and r places that gave the Swedes a more listic version of Americans than the ies have done, and the Americans new erstanding of and respect for the great advances made by unions in the land of their hosts.

Now the visitors are back home. They are writing articles about what they saw and learned for their union and other labor papers. They are speaking before their own and other locals, before councils and community and church groups, spreading the gospel of understanding and trying to give those who stayed behind a share in their experience.

Was it worth while? Here are two views:

"I feel it has been a great experience for Danes and Americans both," said Pres. Eiler Jensen of the Danish Federation of Trade Unions. "For the Americans it must in many ways have been a new and undiscovered world they met, which as open minded and interested trade unionists they have benefited by visiting. This school is the first of its kind, but we will do our part to see that it isn't the last."

"I WANT more people like myself," said Frank Parker, of the Retail, Wholesale, & Department Store Union, Birmingham, Ala., "to go over there and show that the American worker is neither very wealthy nor very arrogant, as many Europeans expect to find him, that he has the same hopes and ideals as workers everywhere.

"I want them to find like I did that Denmark, for instance, isn't just a place on the map. I've been for NATO and UN forces in Korea right along, but I realize now I never really knew why. I know now and I'm for it double."

JAM SESSION led by Erik Hauerslev, executive director of Danish Workers Education Service (at piano), was sort of international community sing.

inspected by Kohleim (center) art, Auto Workers from Detroit.

PROJECT co-op store is eyed by Clethra Divinagracia.

RELAXATION came on flight home. Project was sponsored jointly by CIO Depts. of Education and International Affairs and Danish Labor Federation.

CIO Rail Union Gets Election For 14,000 Pennsy Workers

THE CIO Railroad Workers have won a long campaign for an election to gain bargaining rights for a total of 50,000 workers in the maintenance of equipment department of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

URRWA-CIO now represents 36,000 workers in the huge Pennsylvania Railroad department. The National Mediation Board has granted a petition of URRWA-CIO for a series of elections to determine the bargaining agent for approximately 14,000 workers in three other crafts. Elections will begin Nov. 10.

These three crafts are the machinists, blacksmiths, and sheet metal workers, their apprentices, and helpers. These workers are now represented by AFL unions, as were the other 36,000 in the department who earlier picked the URRWA-CIO.

The demand for the election came from the workers in the three crafts, who began sending authorization cards to the CIO union. Its campaign is headed by Eugene V. Attreed, URRWA-CIO secretary-treasurer.

URRWA-CIO petitioned the mediation board for an election last May. The AFL unions made two attempts to prevent the election. First, they submitted alleged revocations of authorization cards presented by URRWA-CIO to the board.

URRWA-CIO said an investigation showed that in most instances the names on the "revocations" were not on the rosters, and the CIO union produced affidavits that in the cases where the names were on the rosters, the "revocations" were forgeries.

Despite pressure by the AFL, NMB went ahead and ordered the election. But still the AFL tried to stall the vote by demanding a hearing, seeking to postpone the election until the effective date of the AFL union shop agreement had passed. NMB turned down the AFL request.

URRWA-CIO now represents the Pennsylvania Railroad boilermakers, electricians, carmen, molders, melters, core makers, and their helpers and apprentices; power house employes and rail shop laborers.

CHECK FOR BACK PAY due two sons in the service was given Mrs. Annabelle Royall, of Brooklyn, when U. S. Wage-Hour Div. inspectors turned up minimum wage chiseling by Kessler Clothing & Hat Co., Brooklyn. Unpaid wages were due Calvin (upper left photo), now a prisoner of war in Korea, and Charles (upper right photo), an Air Corps medical orderly. Mrs. Royall and a Marine son home on leave from Korea, Nathaniel, also look at photo (lower) of son James, in Navy.

Guild Settles N.Y. Contract On Strike Eve

A FEW HOURS before a scheduled election day strike, the New York local of the CIO American Newspaper Guild reached agreement on a new contract with the New York Daily Mirror.

The contract called for wage increases running from $4 to $6 a week for the more than 500 editorial and commercial department employes covered by the contract.

IN NATION-WIDE negotiations, meantime, the Guild reached a contract settlement with the Associated Press covering 1550 employes and providing for wage increases of $2 to $4 a week. The contract also boosts minimums for experienced workers from $98.50 to $110 and up to $131 in the AP's top bureaus.

Guild units at the New York Daily News and Herald Tribune moved nearer to strike action as management refused to budge and irate New York Times employes unanimously rejected a $1 to $2 wage increase offered by the Times management.

On the Mirror, the Guild won, besides the wage increase, a boost in minimums, a 35-hour week, four weeks' vacation after 12 years and severance pay up to 56 weeks' salary. Previous minimums ranged from $42.50 to $126 and the new minimums run from $45 for copy boys and messengers to $130 for experienced newsmen.

IN ANOTHER contract dispute between the Guild and a New York publisher, the World-Telegram & Sun management offered a $2 raise which Guild negotiators promptly called unacceptable.

Exec. Vice Pres. Thomas Murphy, rejecting the offer as "unrealistic," warned management, "By your action, you are insisting upon a repetition of 1950." He was referring to the Guild's strike at that paper in 1950 which the Guild won.

Contract discussions with the New York Post and the Brooklyn Eagle were in early, and as yet unsatisfactory, stages, the Guild local reported.

PAT HALL (above) was voted "Miss CWA of 1952" at the Communications Workers of America dance at Cincinnati.

Molony Elected To New USA Post

Two districts of the CIO Steelworkers have been combined to form a state-wide district in New York State. Joseph P. Molony, formerly head of Dist. 4 in the Buffalo area, was elected as director of the combined district, which represents more than 71,000 USA-CIO members.

UPWA Gains Union Shop At Cudahy's

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers last week won its first modified union shop with a Big Four firm when it signed a new contract with Cudahy Packing Co.

The agreement covers 10,000 workers in plants at Los Angeles, Denver, Salt Lake City, Omaha; East Chicago, Ind.; Wichita, Kans.; Sioux City, Ia.; Newport, Minn., and Albany, Ga.

UPWA also obtained a pension agreement in some respects better than the pension plan in the recent agreement with Armour & Co., another of the Big Four. Cudahy agreed to monthly pensions at 65—with retirement compulsory at 70—ranging from $90 with 15 years' service to $168 with 50 years' service.

Social Security credits are frozen at $85 a month during the life of the two-year agreement, which may be reopened at six-month intervals. The pension plan is retroactive to June 1.

The 14½c package increase includes a 4c raise plus 4c additional for women and 2c additional for night work. The differential between the other plants and the Albany, Ga., establishment was narrowed.

Wage-Hour Crackdown Aids Family Of GI Korea Prisoner

FOR A LONG TIME the Kessler Hat & Clothing Co. and the Kessler Export Co., both of Brooklyn, got away with paying wages as low as 38c an hour in spite of the fact that the Wage-Hour Act minimum is 75c.

But as so often happens, U. S. Wage-Hour Div. inspectors dropped in one day to look over the books.

Things happened quickly after that. The owners, Etta Kessler and her son-in-law, Melvin Taks, pleaded guilty to criminal charges of violating the act and refunded $927 in back pay to 11 present and former employes. They were fined $50 each on each of five counts, or $500.

One check, covering two brothers now in the service, went to their mother, Mrs. Annabelle Royall of Brooklyn. It represented money earned but not paid to Calvin Royall, Army rifleman taken a prisoner of war in Korea in May 1951, and his brother Charles, Air Corps medical orderly at Kessler Field, Miss.

Investigators who talked with Mrs. Royall during their probe discovered that she has two other sons in the service, Nathaniel, a Marine now home on leave from Korea, and James, a boatswain's mate on the U.S.S. Sierra. A fifth son, Herman, was wounded while fighting in France during World War II.

"WE'VE BEEN helping the government, now the government's helping us!" Mrs. Royall observed when she received the back pay check.

Reg. Dir. Frank J. Meunch of the Wage-Hour Div. said the firm's records show they paid beginners a straight wage of $20 a week for a 53.5 hour week. They made a practice, he added, of employing Puerto Ricans and other beginning workers unaware of the minimum wage law.

The companies buy used clothing which is resold to dealers in the Belgian Congo, Stanleyville and other parts of Africa.

Fairless Thumps For U. S. Sales Tax

DO YOU KNOW who pays all these taxes the big corporations scream about? You do. That's what Benjamin Fairless, president of U. S. Steel, admitted last week, as he advocated that business bill its customers separately for the taxes it passes on to them.

The taxes that manufacturers and merchants pay—and pass on to consumers—actually are "hidden" levies, he contended. He thought such a system of billing would arouse "a roar of protest that the most callous of our government spenders could never ignore."

Fairless didn't seem to think anyone would blame big business, including U. S. Steel, which reports increasing profits despite higher taxes, in many cases earned from government purchases.

Further into his speech, Fairless revealed his real objective—a direct sales tax on all articles consumers purchase. Nowhere in his speech did Fairless mention that a direct sales tax is considered by all unbiased economists, to be the most unfair type of taxation, since it falls most heavily on low-income families which are least able to pay.

Instead, Fairless pointed out that "the power to tax is the power to destroy," failing to mention that his own company was earning greater profits than ever before in its history despite higher taxes.

In his address before the Georgia Chamber of Commerce at Atlanta, Fairless had kind words only for profits. Profits, he said, "are the food which supports the life and growth of our business population, just as wages provide the food which nourishes our human population. And if too much of that economic food is taxed away, those populations will sicken and wither from malnutrition."

It was, in different words, the same cry uttered by all big business speakers since 1932, when Franklin Roosevelt saved this nation from the chaos into which big business government had driven it. (LPA)

Unemployment At New Low

The Commerce Dept. last week reported that there were 1,284,000 unemployed for the week ending Oct. 11—a new post-World War II low.

The Labor Dept. also substantiated this estimate. Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin said that employment rose to a post-World War II peak of 61.3 million in the middle of September, and the factory lay-off rate equalled the lowest for any September since the war.

Correction

Winner of first place in the talent contest conducted by the Kansas CIO Council, was Gayle Larson, sponsored by Local 710 of the United Auto Workers. In the CIO News of Sept. 29, this local was incorrectly identified as belonging to the CWA.

GIVE ONCE FOR ALL.—Like CIO unionists backing Community Chest and United Fund drives throughout the nation, members of CIO Steelworkers Local 1798 joined with management in pushing East Bay United Crusade at the Alameda, Calif., plant of Bethlehem Pacific Coast Steel Corp. C. D. Stanaro (left), management aide, confers with Local 1798 campaign committeemen Walter Kuhlman, William Simon, Robert Lawrence, Frank Pastana.

Your Gift Helps—

'March Of Dimes' Finances Tests Of New Polio Drug

WHEN YOU GIVE to the March of Dimes drive next January, you may be helping to find a way to stop polio.

Announcement was made at the Cleveland meeting of the American Public Health Association of a history-making experiment to find how to stop the disease, which was conducted with $1 million from the March of Dimes funds. CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the board of trustees of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis which conducts the Dime campaign.

Fifty-five thousand children in Utah, Texas and Iowa participated in the tests during recent polio epidemics. They showed that injections of gamma globulin gave marked protection against paralytic polio for at least five weeks. But the tests were not conclusive.

(Gamma globulin is a fraction of human blood containing disease-fighting antibodies, including those of polio, and is produced in the processing of blood.)

HALF OF the children were injected with gamma globulin, and the other half were "shot" with similar-appearing gelatin without beneficial effects. The gelatin-injected group served as controls against which the doctors could later measure the effectiveness of gamma globulin.

Dr. William McD. Hammon, professor of epidemiology at the Univ. of Pittsburgh's Graduate School of Public Health, who was in charge of the tests, said that nearly as many polio cases occurred in the gamma globulin group during the first week as in the control group. In the former group the cases were mild and within 30 days half of them recovered as compared with none in the control group.

But then things began to happen.

"During the second week," Dr. Hammon continued, "there was a marked difference between the number of polio cases in the gamma globulin and the gelatin groups—3 and 23 cases respectively.

"The reduction appears to have been greatest during this week, but protection appears to have continued through the fifth week. From the second through the fifth week only six cases occurred among those receiving gamma globulin and 38 among those receiving gelatin. This difference is highly significant."

32c Package Won By Steel At Baldwin

A CONTRACT package worth 32c hourly has been won by 8000 members of the CIO Steelworkers in four divisions of Baldwin - Lima - Hamilton Corp. at Eddystone, Pa.

The four USA-CIO locals won: A 10% across-the-board increase, with a 12½c minimum and averaging 16½c; a 15-minute washup time period; a 32-hour guaranteed work week; a new company-paid insurance plan; pay for holidays not falling within the work week; pay for holidays occurring in first 90 days of compensable injury; a 7-hour work day at 8 hours' pay for the third shift; 3 weeks' vacation after 15 years; adjustment on pensions to cover all the older people; posting of jobs; notice of recall by registered mail.

The insurance plan includes: $2000 life insurance; $2000 accident and disability; $30 a week for 26 weeks for temporary disability; $10 a day plus $100 for any one hospital confinement; $5 per in-hospital visit by a doctor with a maximum of $350; surgical benefits up to $240 for any one operation.

Only the insurance plan needs approval by the Wage Stabilization Board. (LPA)

'War Against The Schools' Gains Ground—And Our Kids Suffer

By MILTON PLUMB

THE BASIC importance to democracy of healthy schools will be reaffirmed at countless meetings of parents and teachers during American Education Week, now under way.

The American school system has made big contributions to the nation and to the preservation of democracy.

But the future of our schools is threatened by widespread indifference to educational needs on the part of parents of recent generations.

Our schools in many instances are losing the intellectual freedom that is essential to democratic education. They are being weakened by organized campaigns of intimidation and slander. They still seek to provide universal educational opportunity, but there are glaring exceptions and disparities arising.

IN SPITE of overwork, low salaries and poor working conditions, the nation's teachers contribute immeasurably to good citizenship, health, happiness and economic improvement of the community. And they are teaching the Three R's better than ever before. But in return they are often the victims of unprincipled attacks.

Sometimes teachers are criticized by parents who do not fully understand the reasons for new educational methods. More often, the attacks are directed by organized groups working for selfish or anti-democratic ends.

Groups of "super-patriots," such as the National Council for American Education run by Allen Zoll, are joined by lobbies for special interests like the American Medical Association and the National Association of Manufacturers in providing the direction and ammunition for this "war against the schools."

THE WORK of these groups in reflected in the identical pattern that is followed. Usually the crusade begins just before a vote on a new bond issue for educational purposes. Local taxpayers' associations condemn what they call "fads and frills" in the schools and demand a return to the "3 R's."

The phony basis of this charge is made evident in a study just completed by the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development. A survey of over 100 curriculum directors or supervisors in schools throughout the nation discloses:

1. The 3 R's still continue to have top priority in school programs.

2. Children taught by modern educational methods outstrip their parents and grandparents in learning the 3 R's at comparable levels.

3. The present school program, designed to meet the "needs of the whole child," provides better opportunities for developing real competence in the 3 R's than the parents of present students had.

The report points out that teachers who attempt to teach children when they are suffering from malnutrition, or from some type of infection, are wasting their time. School lunch programs, playgrounds and health activities—all attacked by those who call for 3 R's training—thus are shown to be necessary preliminaries if a child is to be able to learn the 3 R's when they are taught.

These attacks are seriously undermining our schools. Part of the evidence is found in today's unprecedented overcrowding, the continued use of unsafe and unhealthy firetraps as classrooms, and the failure to provide new school facilities to take care of a 50% rise in school population.

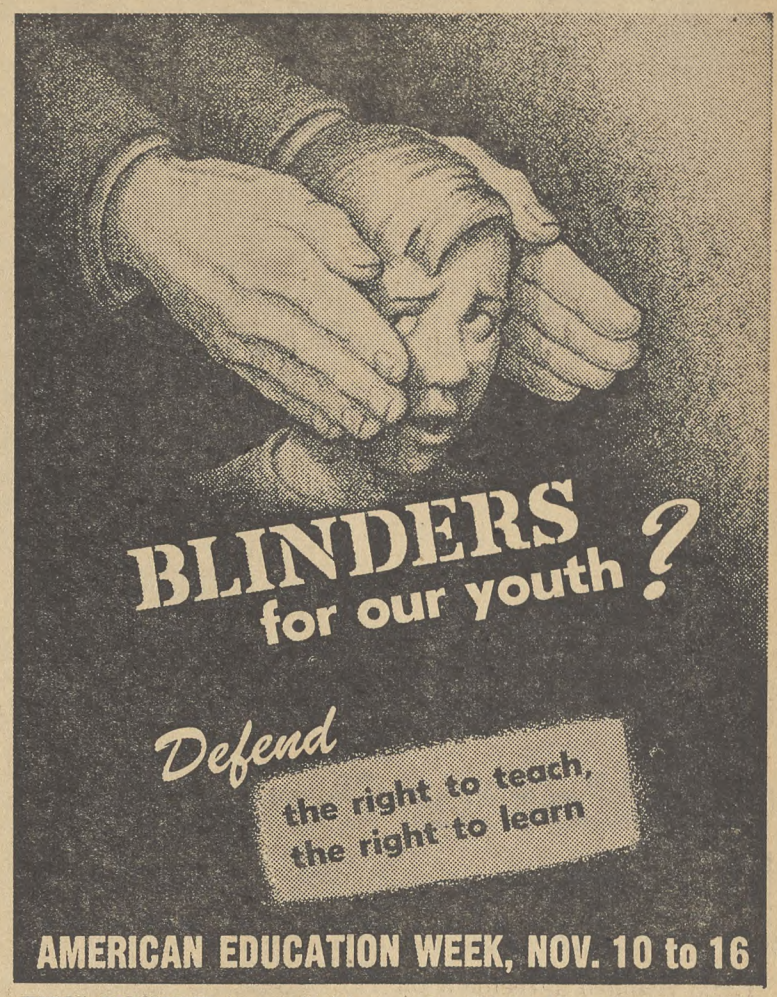
Figures on teacher turnover are even more significant as a symptom of educational disease. There are 900,000 teachers employed in the public schools, but each year 90,000 leave for new jobs. This exceeds the turnover in other professions, and in most business establishments such a high loss of skilled personnel would be disastrous.

The result has been a steady lowering of the qualifications required for teachers, so that the education of future citizens is being steadily entrusted to persons less and less qualified to teach. Today only about half of the 600,000 elementary school teachers have college degrees.

THE THREAT implicit in this situation to the future security of America was summed up in a recent address by Sec. of the Army Frank Pace, Jr.

"Billions we spend for physical defense will be wasted," he said, "if our children are not trained to deal adequately with the problems of a world of new specifications and new social and political requirements.

"The interdependence of education and military strength in our nation is so apparent to me that I wonder where any contrary idea might have developed."



THIS POSTER is available at the CIO Education and Research Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Jewish 'Point Four' Training Program Hailed By Labor

THE "POINT FOUR of Jewish Life" has been hailed by CIO and AFL leaders.

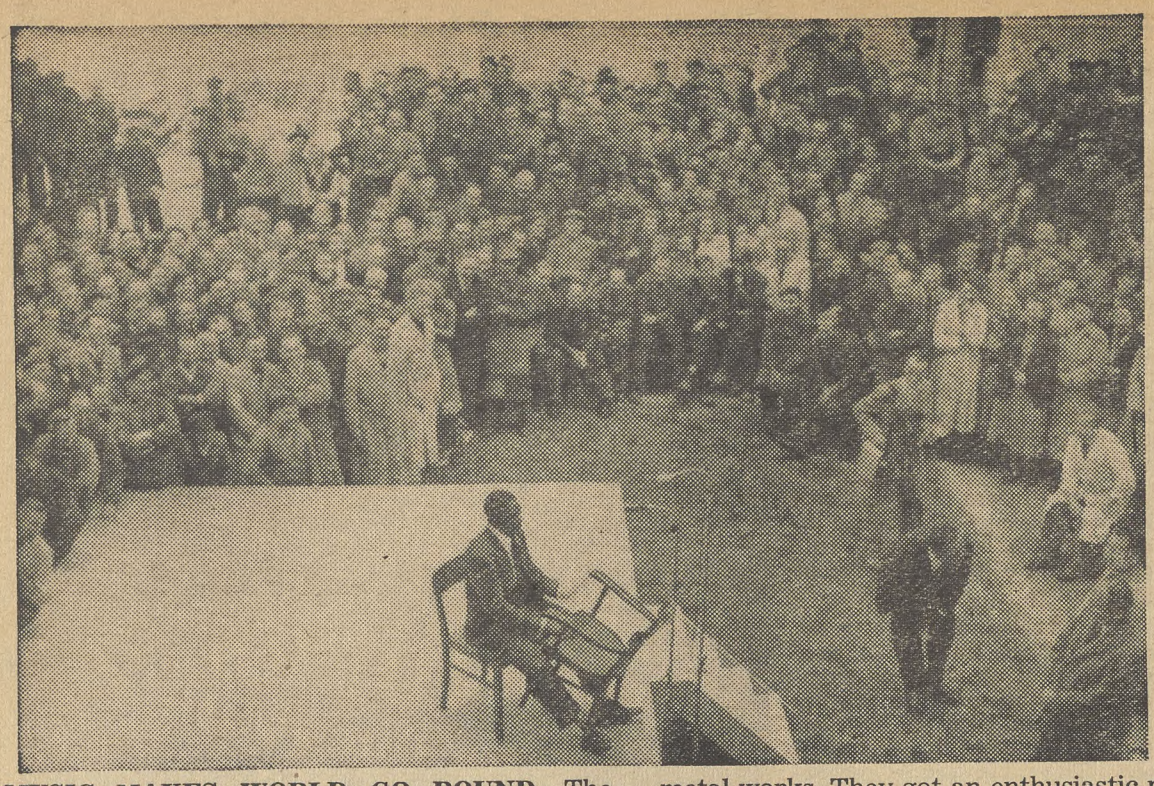
This high praise was bestowed on the American Organization for Rehabilitation Through Training (ORT) Federation at its 30th national convention in New York City.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray wired: "We in the labor movement appreciate how closely the aims which inspire ORT are equally our own."

Adolph Held, who is chairman of American Labor ORT, the largest delegation to the convention, recalled that Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers and Pres. David Dubinsky of the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers were among the first in this country to take up the ORT cause.

"All labor organizations, CIO and AFL, join in support of ORT's program and consider ORT not as an exclusively Jewish organization but as part of labor's own Point Four," said Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council.

Since the end of World War II, 200,000 men and women have attended ORT trade schools in Europe, Israel, Iraq, North Africa and Latin America. ORT also operates two schools in New York which help displaced persons make an economic beginning in the U. S.



MUSIC MAKES WORLD GO ROUND—The American all-Negro cast of Porgy and Bess (above) put on a show at the Berlin Borsigwerke metal works. They got an enthusiastic reception. At the right, Leontine Price, top woman star, has an attentive audience. Stefan Hoyzer, a publicity representative of German Trade Union Federation (DGB), said: "It was a very happy sign of the unity of all working people."

Oil Cartel Peril To Defense, U. S. Says

THE INTERNATIONAL oil cartel endangers U. S. national security, a Justice Dept. official charged in federal district court in Washington, D. C.

Leonard J. Emmerglick, special assistant to the attorney general, made the statement in opposing moves by the oil companies—including six big U. S. firms—for dismissal of subpoenas for their records.

A special grand jury was called in session Sept. 3 to investigate the alleged world oil monopoly, but the companies' court moves have kept it from doing much work.

Emmerglick said that the national security was endangered by the cartel agreements which he said make the U. S. dependent on foreign sources for oil.

He charged that since 1928 the companies have conspired "to divide up markets and divide up customers" and to hold down productive capacity.

"That holding down of capacity stunned us when Pearl Harbor was attacked," the U. S. attorney continued, "and we should have learned a lesson from it." He traced last spring's shortage of aviation gasoline to "concentration of business among a few firms." He added, "independent producers in this country no longer have any incentive to develop local fields."

Federal Judge James R. Kirkland crippled the government's move against the oil companies by ruling the government can use its oil cartel subpoenas for company documents dating back only to 1941.

COMPANY LAWYERS said the U. S. request for documents going back to 1928 was "a lot of archaeology." Emmerglick replied the government needs the pre-1941 documents to find out what firms joined the alleged oil conspiracy and when, and who dropped out and when.

The Justice Dept. official said the government could indict the companies and their officials with the Federal Trade Commission report and a handful of existing documents, but the U.S. Supreme Court has attached great value to documents of the formative period which precedes establishment of a conspiracy.

The Supreme Court will be asked to rule on the companies' request to review an earlier decision by Judge Kirkland, which denied their motions to discharge the grand jury in Washington and get up a new grand jury in New York.

The defendants include Socony-Vacuum, Standard of New Jersey (Esso), Standard of California, Texas, Gulf and Shell, the last a non-American firm. There are 21 companies in all involved.

ILO Pushes Technical Aid Projects

THE INTL. Labor Organization has 276 technical assistance projects in all parts of the world, according to an announcement last week.

Asia, where the need is perhaps greatest, has 97 of the projects; 85 are in Latin-America, 72 in the Middle East, 12 in Africa and 10 in Europe and North America.

All but 77 grew out of direct requests to the ILO by member countries. The remainder were sought by organizations cooperating in the technical aid program of the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

Heading the list is vocational training, with 70 projects. There also are 38 in cooperatives and handicrafts, 29 in social security, 26 to provide fellowships in varied labor fields, and 24 in general manpower and employment service organization. Working on them are 194 experts from 34 nations.

Unions Pick New Chief In Germany

WALTER FREITAG, head of the Metalworkers' Federation, was elected president of the German Federation of Trade Unions (DGB) at the annual convention in Berlin.

He was the victor in a contest with Christian Fette, who had held the post since the death of Hans Bockler in 1951. After the voting, the two issued a joint statement pledging themselves to work together for the well-being of the Free German labor movement.

The convention stood firmly against all Communist attempts to influence it. It called for a united and free Germany by a vote of 354 to 2, and refused to have anything to do with the Communist-dominated Free German Trade Union Federation (FDGB) in the Russian Zone.

Other resolutions asked West German firms to place orders with Berlin manufacturers to relieve unemployment, directed the executive board to continue the fight for progressive legislation on industrial organization and administration and reorganization of the national economy, and demanded the 40-hour week with pay for present hours.

Commies Lose Influence In Swedish Trade Unions

THE COMMUNISTS are losing whatever influence they ever had in the Swedish labor movement, according to an article in a recent issue of ITF, the publication of the Intl. Transport Workers' Federation.

The article is based on a survey made by the Press Dept. of the General Federation of Swedish Trade Unions (LO) which "indicates that they have now suffered a resounding defeat" despite a certain amount of continuing strength in Stockholm and a few North Sweden locals.

There are 325 central organizations of Swedish unions, the article points out. A few years ago, the Reds controlled 10 to 15 of them. Now they have appreciable strength in but two,

The country has 8892 local unions. At the end of the war, the Communists had majorities on about 500 local executive boards. Last year they were supposed to control about 130 locals, This year the figure is just under 100, or slightly more than 1% of the total. Of about 53,350 individuals serving on local boards, the article estimates "an absolute maximum of about 1000 are likely to be Communist sympathizers."

Benton Amendment—

More U. S. Aid Urged For Free Labor Abroad

THE BENTON Amendment to the Mutual Security Act, aimed at strengthening democratic unions abroad, should be more effectively applied than it has been in the administration of U. S. foreign aid programs, according to the Labor Committee on National Policy of the National Planning Association.

The NPA is a non-political, non-profit organization devoted to planning in agriculture, business, labor and the professions. The 38 members of the Labor Committee on National Policy, representing all labor groups, signed the statement.

"The part of the Benton Amendment with which we are concerned," it says, "stipulates that the foreign aid programs shall be administered in such a way as 'to encourage where suitable the development and strengthening of free labor unions as the collective bargaining agencies of labor within such countries.'

"The Labor Committee believes that this directive can be and should be more effectively applied in administration of our foreign aid programs. Such application would help to solve many of the deep-rooted economic problems confronting nations receiving aid from this country. . . .

"Throughout the non-Soviet world, the free trade unions are democracy's strongest supporters in actively combating . . . communism. Staunch resistance to communism will be encountered wherever a purposeful, democratic trade union movement is in existence, is effectively participating in the political and economic life of the country, and is bringing benefits to the people."

The committee made six suggestions to implement its proposal.

IT SUGGESTED that the whole MSA productivity drive be keyed to help free unions obtain their share of the benefits; that offshore defense orders be channelled into plants, especially in France and Italy, where free unions may be strengthened, and that MSA and U. S. unions cooperate with unions in other countries to develop more democratic and efficient procedures and techniques.

Also, that the foreign aid program in underdeveloped areas be used to establish a climate favorable to the development of free institutions, including unions; that some of the funds appropriated under the Moody Amendment to the MSA Act be used for concrete projects to strengthen free unions abroad, and that steps be taken to assure more equitable distribution of the rearmament burden among the people of the free nations.

"Constructive support for programs to develop democratic institutions, more dynamic economies and the promise of a better life," the committee said, "can be provided by an effective application of the labor provision of the Benton Amendment.

"Unless this economic and social objective is achieved, the basic goals of American foreign aid programs may be seriously imperiled."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

AFTER MANY WEEKS of hard work and sacrifice by many of us the presidential election has been decided. Gov. Stevenson, the candidate supported by organized labor, went down in defeat to Gen. Eisenhower.

Without question, the Korean situation, and the cry of communism that created fears in the minds of the people, played an important part in the outcome. More people than ever before in our history went to the polls to vote for their choice. The democratic processes of the people has spoken. Throughout the campaigning organized labor stood by the candidate of the party that stood for the rights of all the people. In casting the largest vote ever, the people thought otherwise.

Now is the time to dedicate ourselves to strengthening our great movement. In politics, we have experienced success and failures, and they come and go. But, keep in mind that our movement must go on forever. In the coming months there will be those who will seek to impair, yes, even destroy, Labor's gains. We must exert every determination to maintain our gains and to move forward to bring the people the basic things that our union movement stands for.

In the scramble for seats in Congress the picture is still uncertain and in some instances we have made gains. The reactionary governor, James Byrnes of South Carolina, was repudiated by the people who voted Democratic despite him. Sen. Cain of Washington was defeated. Stuart Symington defeated Kem in Missouri.

THE CIO CONVENTION will be opening on Nov. 17 in Los Angeles, and in all probability, our future course will be chartered to give our members the needed guidance for the future. With faith and determination the things for which CIO stand will eventually prevail because they are right!

Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports the settlement of the strike at the Electro Metallurgical Co., Div. of Union Carbide and Carbon Corp. The contract in addition to its other provisions carries with it a strong union security clause.

Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood of the Shipbuilding Workers reports that in a representation election held at John R. Crowley & Brother, Inc., Mobile, Ala., the workers favored IUMSWA-CIO by a vote of 38 to 4 no union.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports the following representation election victories for the CIO Steelworkers in the Philadelphia, Pa., area: Jetronic Industries, Inc., USA-CIO 23, no union 7; Bethlehem Quarry Co., USA-CIO 94, no union 47; Murlin Mfg. Co., USA-CIO 46, no union 4.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the CIO Woodworkers defeated an attempted AFL raid at the Hillyer-Deutsch-Edwards Lumber Co., Oakdale, La., by the following vote: eligible 466, IWA-CIO 283, AFL 131, no union 6, void 5, challenged 1.

REG. DIR. MICHAEL MANN reports the following CIO representation election victories: Hoffman Beverage Co., Newark, N. J. and New York, CIO Brewery Workers 4, no union 1; New York Water Service Corp. and Western New York Water Co., New York, N. Y., CIO Utility Workers 10, no union 4.

Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports that the CIO Paperworkers were victorious in a representation election at the Gaylord Container Corp., Tampa, eligible 137, CIO Paperworkers 67, AFL 6, neither 58, challenged 1.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports the following representation election victories: CIO Paperworkers won out at the B. C. Betner Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 23 to 18 AFL. UPA Rep. William Sheer directed the drive. CIO-LIU No. 78 beat the AFL Teamsters 2 to 1 in the Puritan Vacuum Precooling Co., Guadalupe, Calif., and Vacuum Cooling Co., Santa Maria, Calif. CIO Rep. Ken Gillie and LIU Rep. Gilbery Garcia handled the campaigns.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that in a representation election at Rose Lawn Dairy, Inc., Ft. Smith, Ark., the workers favored the CIO Chemical Workers by a unanimous vote. Intl. Rep. Sisco directed the drive.

TWUA Gains Hikes To 11c

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers last week continued to set the pace despite the raiding attempts by the AFL United Textile Workers.

Two weeks after defeating the AFL in an NLRB election at the Celanese Corp. plant at Newark, N. J., TWUA-CIO won increases of 3 to 11c an hour and other benefits for the 600 workers.

Carl Holderman, New Jersey CIO Council president and TWUA-CIO state director, said benefits include a three-week paid vacation after 15 years' service and two wage reopenings in the two year agreement.

Another dispute with the AFL union headed for a showdown, when the NLRB granted the TWUA-CIO petition for a combined election at the Thompsonville, Conn., and Amsterdam, N. Y., plants of Bigelow-Stanford Carpet Co., where a total of 4500 workers are employed. The AFL union opposed the move.

Another employers' attempt to halt the TWUA-CIO developed when the Double Woven Corp. of Dunmore, Pa., and the Picard Mills, Brooklyn, N. Y., sued the union in a New York City federal court for $1 million.

TWUA members have been on strike at the two plants since Sept. 19. The mills charged TWUA-CIO

Shoe Gains 'Best Pact' At International

RUSSELL TAYLOR, president of the CIO Shoe Workers, last week reported completion of negotiations with International Shoe Co., the industry's pace-setter, "for the best contract since 1939."

The contract provides a 4% wage increase for the 13,000 workers represented by the USWA-CIO in 31 plants. The 4%, Taylor said, was the maximum allowable under Wage Stabilization Board regulations. Since 1950, workers at International Shoe Co. have had a 17c hourly total wage increase.

Other new contract improvements included provision for vacation allowances for employes with less than 1100 working hours in a year, an important provision in an industry beset by layoffs.

THE SHOE WORKERS also won substitute paid holidays for Memorial Day and Fourth of July in 1953, which fall on a Saturday, and otherwise would have been unpaid holidays. The contract also tightens the job-transfer clause, enabling workers to reject transfers to lower paid jobs, and likewise tightens up the seniority clause.

At the same time, negotiations on a wage-reopening clause with the Brown Shoe Co. were completed on the same basis as with International Shoe.

Taylor said negotiations would open Nov. 14 with 75 New England manufacturers, involving 12,000 USWA-CIO members.

Navy Cites Steelworker For Heroism

A FORMER member of the CIO Steelworkers in Birmingham, Ala., and the son of a USA-CIO official there, recently won a Navy award for heroism.

Aviation Ordnanceman 1/c Hobart R. Baker, former member of Local 1489 and son of George T. Baker, one of the founders and a past president of the local, won the Navy Bronze Star for bravery during a fire aboard the aircraft carrier USS Boxer in North Korean waters.

The citation accompanying the medal said:

"Following the explosion of an aircraft gasoline tank, fire spread throughout the hangar deck (of the Boxer). Many aircraft burst into flame and there were numerous explosions from aerial bombs and machinegun ammunition. The safety of the ship and the entire crew were seriously endangered.

"Eventually he was overcome by smoke. He was removed to the flight deck and revived. He immediately returned to the hangar deck where he directed crews in removing the remaining ammunition. His inspiring leadership, outstanding courage and steadfast devotion to duty contributed immeasurably to bringing the fire under control and were at all times in keeping with the highest traditions of the U. S. Naval Service."

Place Your Order Now!

Big Annual Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS

The CIO News will print another big special CIO Convention Issue on Nov. 24.

This special issue of The CIO News will give the complete story—in news reports, pictures, features and important texts—of the 14th Constitutional CIO Convention, to be held in Los Angeles, Nov. 17-21.

What the convention does will be big news and important news for every CIO union and every CIO member. International and local unions, CIO Councils and political action committees will need extra copies of this enlarged convention issue.

The CIO News Convention Issue will go to press Nov. 24. So get your order in immediately, and you can be sure your members will get the full CIO Convention story.

Special Rates

• BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for large orders.

In sending lists of addresses for bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each address. To facilitate bookkeeping, please send checks with smaller quantity orders.

• INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged by sending us mailing strips not more than 2½ inches wide.

Regular Rates

Apart from the special rates for the Convention Issue, unions which wish to take this opportunity to begin subscribing regularly to The CIO News may begin their bundle order or group subscription order with the Nov. 24 issue at the regular rates, which will be provided on request.

Just Clip and Mail!

The CIO NEWS
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the special 1952 Convention Issue of The CIO NEWS.

Please ship.....in bundle lots to the enclosed address.

Please have the 1952 Convention Issue individually mailed to membership lists for which we will furnish mailing strips. The total number of names to which we desire the paper sent is.....

☐ Check Inclosed ☐ Bill Us Later

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Organization .....

State-By-State—

Detroit Was One Of Few Election Bright Spots

The course of the election in several states, as reported by CIO News correspondents:

MICHIGAN: Although the Republicans won a major share of the spoils on Nov. 4, the CIO, led by the Auto Workers, took considerable consolation from the fine showing labor-backed candidates made in Wayne County (Detroit) and in the precedent-setting reelection of Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

Williams eked out a 7548 victory over Republican Fred M. Alger, Jr., on the basis of a complete count of the record-breaking 2.8 million ballots cast. He thus became the first Democrat in Michigan history to win election to three terms.

He took Wayne county by a 276,000 majority. Sen. Moody (D.), although defeated by about 40,000 votes by Rep. Charles Potter for the Senate, did nearly as well, taking the county by 275,000. Gov. Stevenson, who lost the State by more than 300,000 votes, captured Wayne county by 164,000.

Five Democratic congressional incumbents were reelected — Reps. Machrowicz, O'Brien, Dingell, Rabaut and Lesinski. The Republicans hung on to the 12 districts they had, although there will be some new faces, and won a seat in a new district.

The Democrats clung desperately to a beachhead in the Legislature, even picking up a little ground. They added one Senate seat to get eight out of 32, and retained their 34 seats in the 100-man House. The latter figure is important, as it is just enough to sustain Williams' vetoes.

NEW YORK: With the help of reapportionment, under which the State lost two seats, the Republicans gained four House posts while the Democrats were losing six. They also made substantial gains in the Legislature.

The Republicans, who had 22 House seats in the 82d Congress, will have 27 in the coming 83d. The Democrats dropped from 22 to 16.

The Democrats found two bright spots in an otherwise drab picture. Rep. O'Brien, a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was reelected from Albany County although the county itself went for a Republican presidential candidate for the first time in more than 30 years. In Long Island City, Lester Holzman, the Democrat-Liberal candidate, scored a surprise victory over Rep. Ross (R.), who had won a special election earlier this year.

In the Legislature, the Republicans doubled their Senate majority and will have control by a 37 to 19 margin. In the Assembly, they gained 11 seats for a new lead of 98 to 52.

MINNESOTA: The Republicans swept Minnesota otherwise, but the Democrats clung to the four congressional seats they have held since 1948. Reelected by comfortable margins were Rep. McCarthy, St. Paul, and Rep. Blatnik, Virginia. Additional terms were won after close fights by Rep. Weir, Minneapolis, and Rep. Marshall, Grove City.

CALIFORNIA: With seven new seats added by reapportionment, the Republicans increased their majority of California's delegation in the House to seven seats, with one still in doubt. The new lineup will be 18 Republicans and 11 Democrats until a hair-line contest in the 13th district in Los Angeles is decided—probably when absentee ballots are counted on Nov. 21. Rep. Bramblett (R.) and Will Hayes (D.) were staging a close fight late last week.

Organized labor suffered the loss of one of its most effective friends in the House when Rep. Havenner (D.), gerrymandered out of most of his support in San Francisco by the Republican Legislature, was defeated by W. S. Mailliard.

Four liberal Democratic congressmen endorsed by the CIO were reelected. They were Rep. King, Los Angeles, the only one of the quartet who faced a real fight; Rep. Holifield, Montebello, and Reps. Yorty and King, Los Angeles.

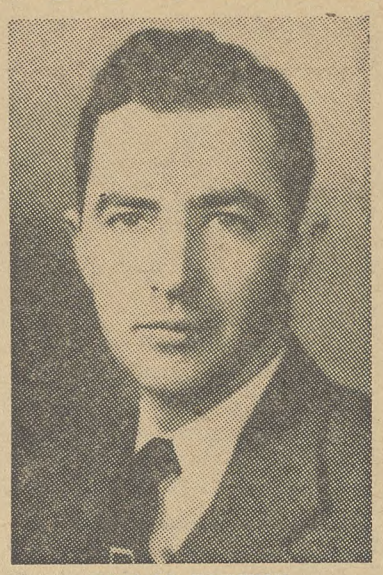
In a new district including industrial Contra Costa county, Assemblyman Robert L. Condon was elected to Congress. A veteran liberal lawmaker, he had strong CIO and AFL support.

The Republicans strengthened the iron grip they had on both houses of the Legislature.

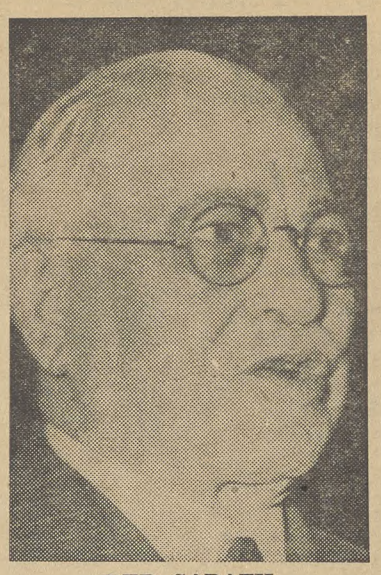
WASHINGTON: The CIO and other liberal forces in the State helped the liberal Rep. Jackson (D.), scored a resounding victory over the arch-reactionary Sen. Cain (R.), best known as a Senate errand boy for the real estate lobby.

The Republicans won five house seats and the Democrats none, with one contest still undecided as this edition of the CIO News went to press.

In that fight, for congressman-at-large, Democrat Don Magnuson, Seattle Times reporter and an active member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was slowly piling up a widening lead over Albert Canwell (R.), of Spokane. The latter won a measure of publicity for himself as a State legislator through his service as chairman of a "Little Dies Committee."



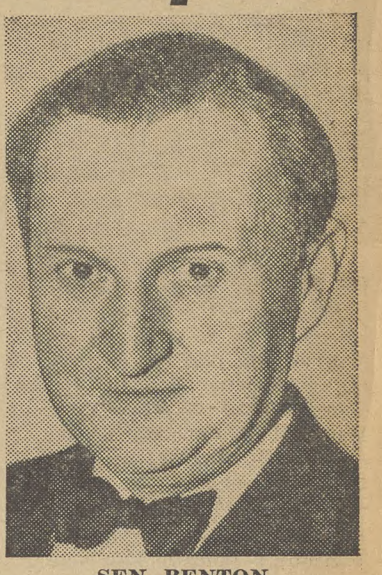
REP. McCARTHY



REP. SABATH

Fair Dealers won in Minnesota, Illinois House contests . . .

SEN. MOODY



SEN. BENTON

. . . but lost in vital races in Michigan and Connecticut.

Rep. Sabath, Liberal Dean Of House, Dies

REP. ADOLPH J. SABATH, "the grand old man" of the House, died last week two days after he was elected to his 24th consecutive term.

The Illinois Democrat, who represented the 7th District of Chicago with a population of 397,000, was 86.

Once a Bohemian immigrant boy, Sabath served as Representative 46 years—longer with no break than any House or Senate member in history.

During his entire period of service Sabath never wavered from his liberal principles. His record on behalf of forward-looking legislation and against reactionary measures included:

- Opposing inhumane and harsh immigration laws, and legislation proposing racial or religious discrimination and intolerance.
- Furthering enactment of all progressive and labor legislation during Pres. Roosevelt's administration.
- Introducing the first workmen's compensation bill.
- Advocating in 1909 passage of the first old age pension bill.
- Championing the Social Security, the Parcel Post and the Security and Exchange Commission Acts.

Redistricting, Cross Filing Initiative Moves Defeated

LABOR-BACKED propositions to improve state government operations were defeated in Michigan and California last week, while anti-labor "right to work" measures were approved in other state balloting.

Despite a vigorous campaign in Michigan, the CIO-sponsored proposal for legislative reapportionment was defeated by a 3 to 2 margin.

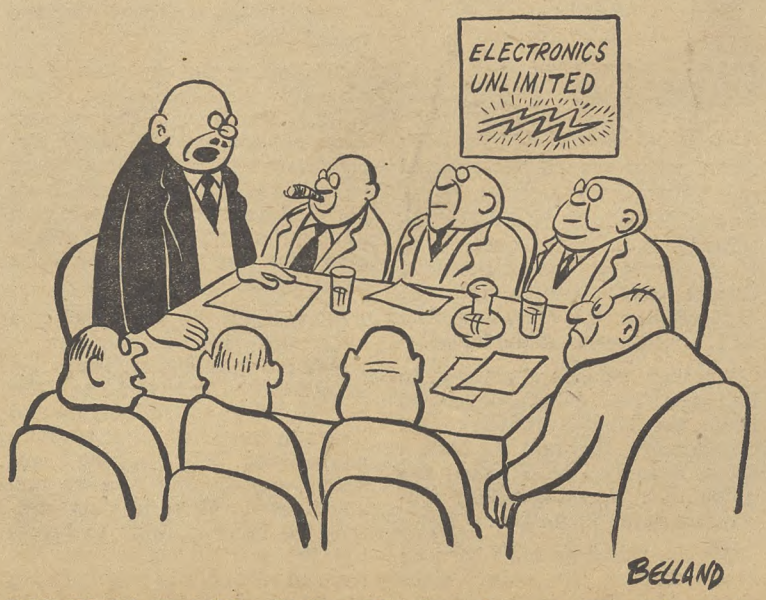
A separate redistricting measure, which would assure minority control of the Michigan Legislature by outstate Republicans, was approved by a smaller margin. The seven populous counties in southeastern Michigan, including Wayne, will elect 12 senators while the other 76 smaller counties will elect 22.

After a bitter press campaign before election day against the CIO-backed plan, the Detroit Free Press admitted afterwards that "outstate minorities . . . now move into more complete control of the legislative body."

CALIFORNIA voters turned down Prop. 13 to end the state's cross-filing system—which gives Republicans a big hand in primaries. Two new state loyalty oath measures were approved as constitutional amendments.

The union busting "right to work" drive was spreading in the West. Such a measure was leading in Nevada. It would outlaw all forms of union security and curb picketing. Arizona, which already had a "right to work" law, voted a new anti-picketing measure.

A race-baiting measure was enacted in South Carolina, where voters repealed provision for free public schools by a 2 to 1 vote. The measure was backed by Gov. James Byrnes, an Eisenhower supporter. Byrnes has said the state will close its public schools if the U. S. Supreme Court—on the basis of pending cases—rules that segregation in schools, as such, is unconstitutional. The adopted amendment would clear the way for Byrnes, in that event.



"All Right, Let 'Em Strike. We Can Operate The Plant By Ourselves. Uh. . .Does Anyone Know Where It Is?

No Scrooge Is WSB; $40 Yule Bonus Okehed

UNCLE SAM wants folks to have a Merry Christmas. Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam last week ruled that your boss may pay you a Christmas or year-end bonus up to $40—even though he had not done so in past years.

Putnam, who acted on the annual recommendation of the Wage Stabilization Board, said that the $40 can be paid either as a cash bonus or as a gift not exceeding that amount in value without charging the money against the amounts authorized by the WSB regulations.

WSB said employers may also give their workers additional days off with pay on the Fridays after Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's Day without charging the money against amounts authorized by the regulations.

Now all you have to do is to convince your boss on that $40 bonus.

Nichols Named To Brewery Post

Appointment of John P. Nichols, of Milwaukee, as research and education director of the CIO Brewery Workers has been announced by Pres. Karl F. Feller in Cincinnati. Nichols has been CIO Community Services Committee director in the Milwaukee area.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

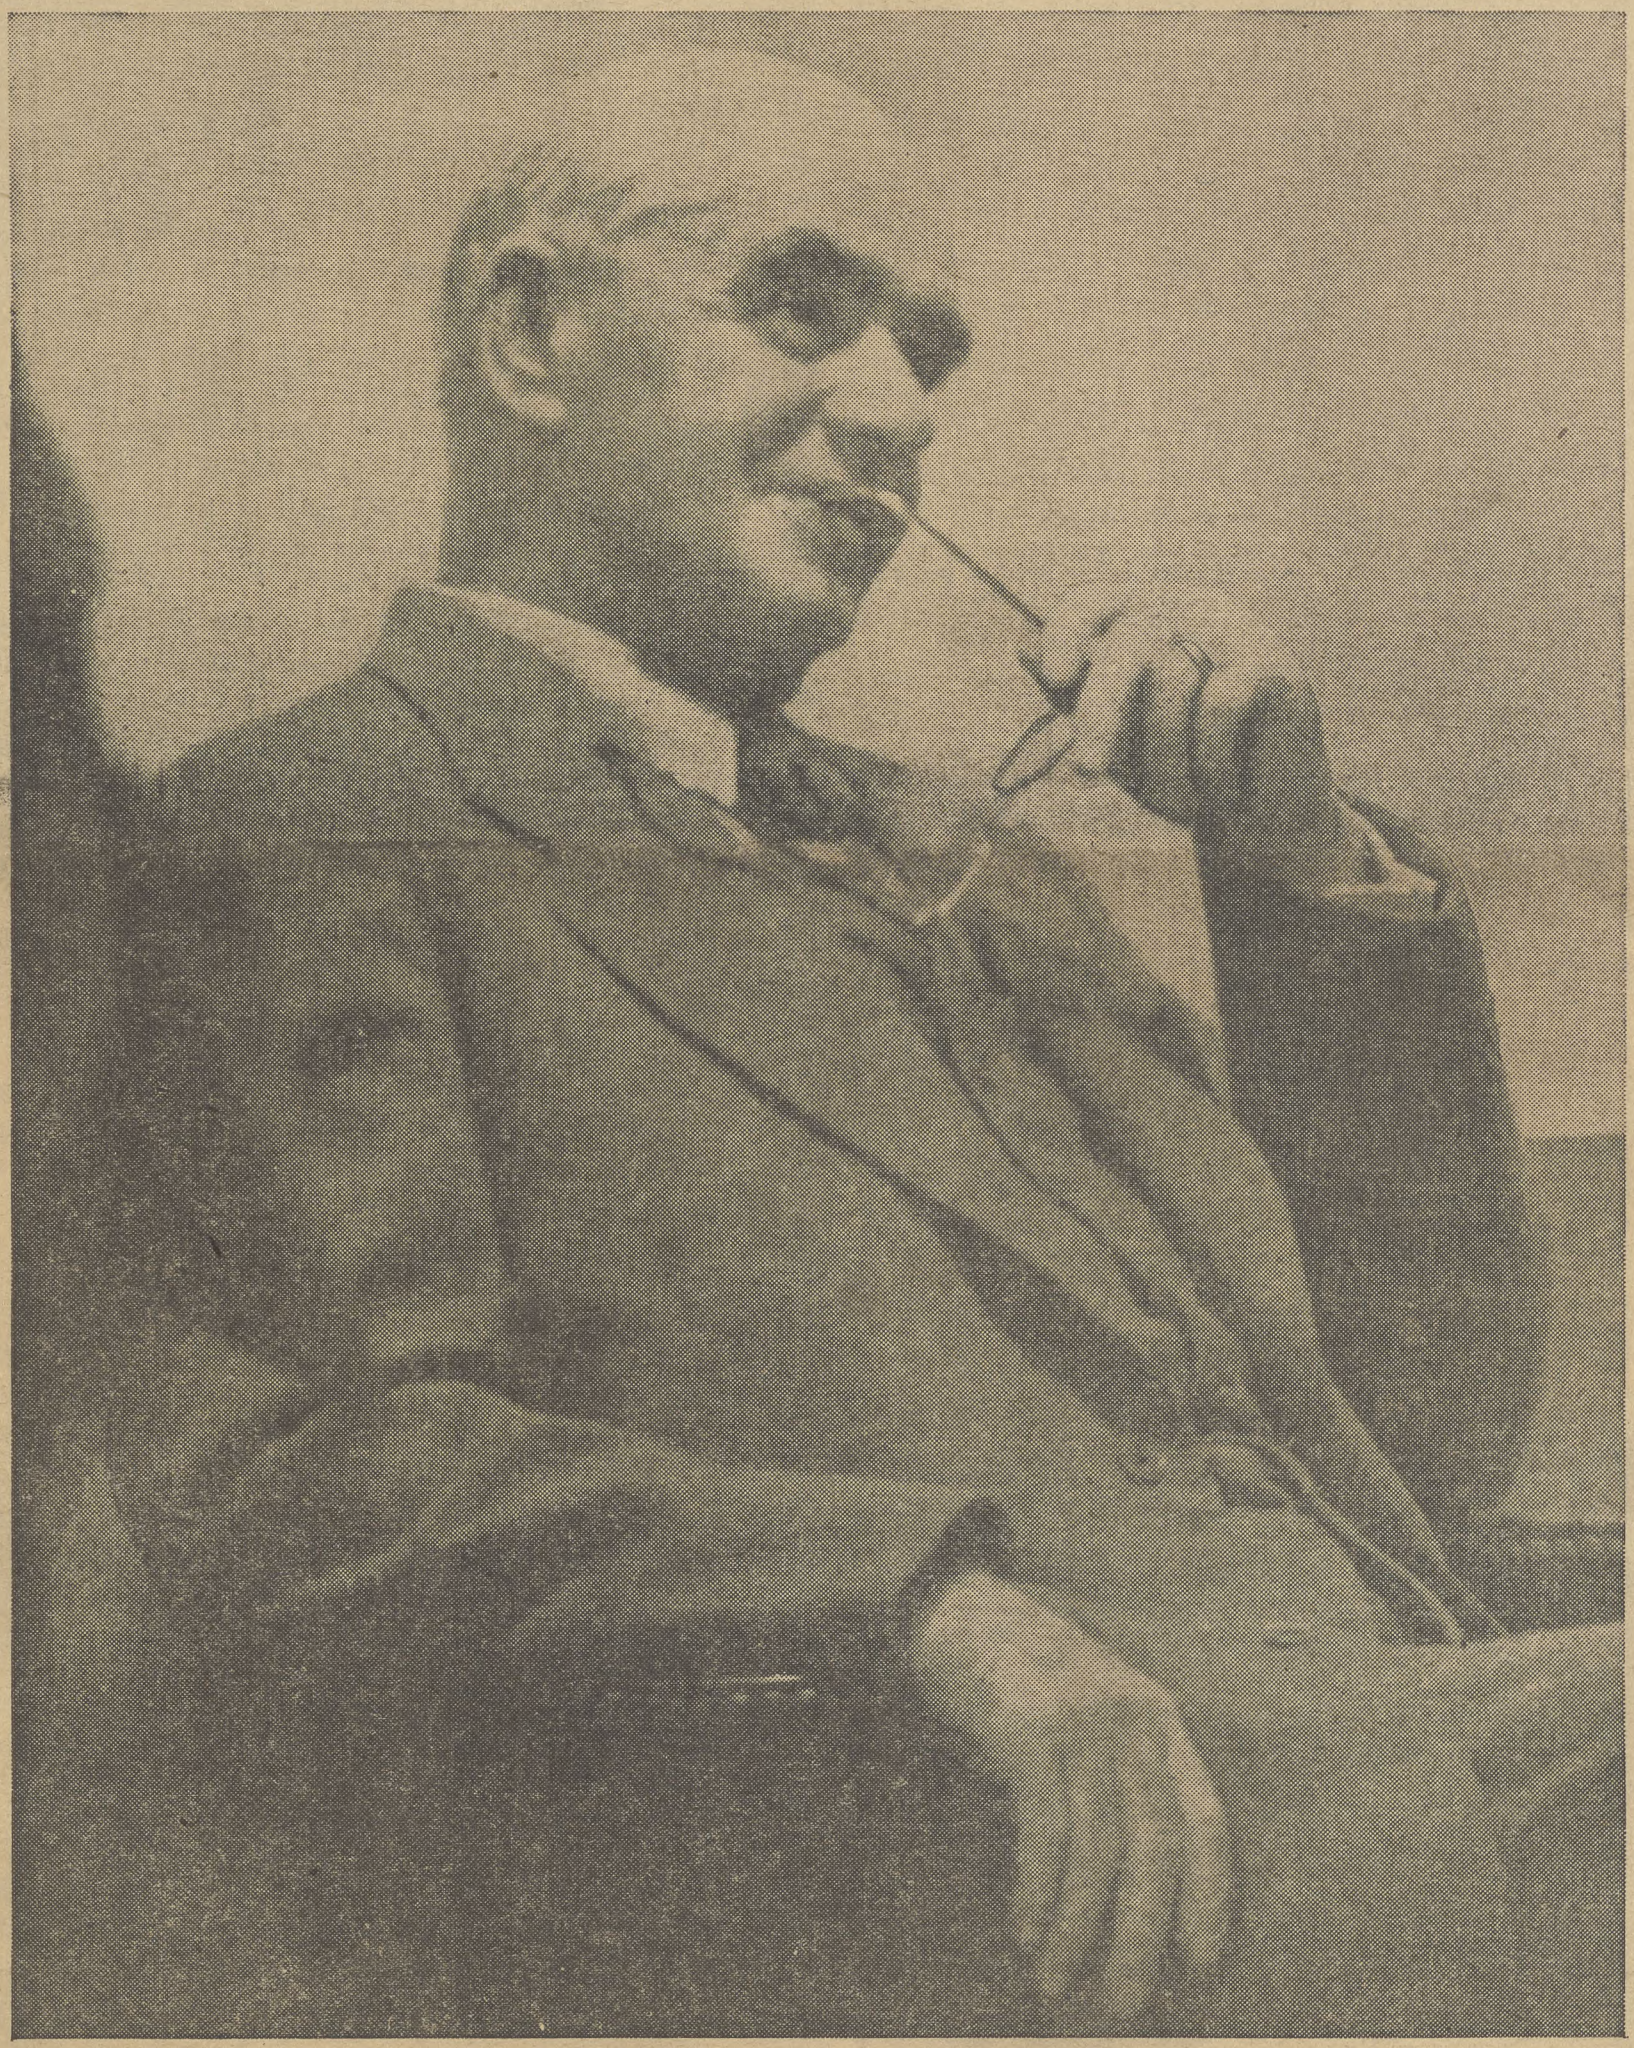
Vol. XV | 20 Pages In Two Sections | WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 17, 1952 | 82 | No. 46



Philip Murray

Born May 25, 1886 Died Nov. 9, 1952

CIO Parley Is Delayed To Dec. 1

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

PITTSBURGH—The 14th Constitutional convention of the national Congress of Industrial Organizations has been postponed until Dec. 1, out of respect to the memory of the CIO's beloved president, Philip Murray.

Meeting in the Urban room of the William Penn Hotel here on Nov. 14, the grief-stricken members of the CIO Executive Board unanimously made this decision. They moved the convention site from Los Angeles to the Hotel Chelsea in Atlantic City, N. J.

The board met in emergency session, 23 hours after the funeral of the man who had led the organization since 1940. It was a short, solemn meeting, lasting but an hour. Presiding were the CIO's executive officers, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Exec. Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

The first item on the agenda was the recommendations of the CIO vice-presidents, who had met two days earlier. The vice presidents had recommended that the convention be postponed and that the executive board meet in Atlantic City on Nov. 29, two days before the convention.

The vice presidents had also recommended that Philip Murray's final report to the CIO, prepared three weeks before his death (and summarized in this issue of The CIO News) be published on Nov. 17, as Murray had originally planned. They further recommended that the executive officers prepare a supplementary report, containing a fitting memorial to the late CIO president.

Both reports will be submitted to the convention on Dec. 1.

The Executive Board unanimously and without discussion adopted the four recommendations.

Eulogy Voiced

Carey then read a resolution in memorial to Philip Murray, text of which appears in the adjoining column. It was adopted by a silent standing vote.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers delivered the official eulogy of Murray to the Executive Board.

Pointing out that it had been his honor in previous years to nominate Murray for the CIO presidency, Potofsky said he could render "only inadequate tribute to his great and soaring spirit."

Potofsky described the late CIO leader as a man "so dedicated that he put service above self, human compassion above earthly material things.

"Philip Murray believed in what he fought for—and fought for what he believed. He hated poverty, ignorance, exploitation. He understood the worth of man, and he fought for his dignity, and peace and security of his beloved land, his family, his union, and finally of all the world."

Predicting that the "deeds and memory" of Philip Murray will last forever, Potofsky concluded:

"Had he left us a personal word, before death struck, I am sure he would have urged us to close ranks. In the world we now live, unity is the most pressing consideration for the CIO.

Warns of Enemies

"Not all who surround us are friends, and we must be on guard. We have political and industrial enemies who would tear us down, sap our strength, divide and conquer if they could.

"The great heritage, the noble heritage from Philip Murray which has descended to us must be preserved, strengthened and passed on to the hosts of young men who come after us.

"Let us dedicate ourselves to the goal of a strong, united CIO. Thus, Philip Murray will not have lived and died in vain."

Exec. Vice Pres. Haywood followed with a touching eulogy and in turn Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and Carey, who is also president of the Electrical Workers, paid tribute to the man they had worked with so closely.

All spoke of their deep personal grief and their love for the Scottish miner boy who had labored long and faithfully on behalf of the workers he loved.

Plead For Unity

All pleaded for unity in the ranks of the CIO, observing the best and most fitting tribute that could be paid to Murray was for a united, determined CIO to march forward to the greater victories he had so clearly foreseen.

On motion of Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, who also is president of the Textile Workers, the Executive Board unanimously named a committee of seven to recommend a "living memorial" to Murray—a memorial not of stone or wood, but one which would live and grow in the manner of the CIO leader.

Rieve was named as chairman of this committee which also includes Carey; Joseph Curran, president of the Maritime Union; Haywood, McDonald, Potofsky and Reuther.

The board announced that the CIO vice presidents and executive officers would meet at the Hotel Chelsea in Atlantic City at 2 p.m. Nov. 28, with the Executive Board meeting in the same hotel at 10 a.m. on Nov. 29. Convention committees are to meet there at 2 p.m. on Nov. 29.

It was indicated at the meeting that the CIO executive officers would guide the organization until the 14th Constitutional convention elects a successor to Murray.

The Steelworkers Executive Board was scheduled to meet on Nov. 15 in Pittsburgh to plan for the election of a successor to Murray, who was the founding and only president of that union.

Where, When

The 14th Constitutional convention of the National Congress of Industrial Organizations, originally scheduled to open in Los Angeles on Nov. 17, has been postponed until Dec. 1, and moved to Atlantic City, N. J.

The CIO Executive Board, in postponing the meeting out of respect to the late Philip Murray, announced the convention would open on Dec. 1, in the Hotel Chelsea, Atlantic City. Pre-convention sessions of the Executive Board will be held in the Hotel Chelsea on Saturday, Nov. 29.

In This Issue

SECTION ONE

	PAGE
CIO convention postponed	2
Death of Philip Murray	3
Editorial comment	4
Four-page photo-biography section	5, 6, 7, 8
Truman, Eisenhower tributes	9
Pres. Murray's last speech	9
U. S. labor tributes	10
Congressional, world labor tributes	12

SECTION TWO

Pres. Murray's final report outlines his philosophy of unions and democracy.	1-B
Legal Dept. report on T-H	2-B
Organizing gains told	3-B
High wage economy urged	4-B
Text from Murray's final report	5-B
International Dept. report	6-B
Unions report on organizing	7-B
Congressional reforms urged	8-B

CIO Board Says—

America Can Be Thankful For This Courageous Man

Here is the text of a resolution in memorial to Philip Murray, adopted by the CIO Executive Board meeting in Pittsburgh on Nov. 14:

Philip Murray, our leader, is gone.

His death has left a void in our ranks that we can never fill. During all the years ahead, we will remember that man, with his simple dignity, his warm heart, his penetrating intelligence.

Ours was a great privilege—to have been associated with Philip Murray during nearly two decades in the development of modern trade unionism in America. The CIO will always bear the imprint of Philip Murray, for his principles, his belief in man and God, are woven into the fabric of our unions and our lives.

Without his leadership and guidance, his patience and tolerance, the CIO could never have survived these dozen years of stress and turbulence, of war and peace.

We loved this great man. We worked with him, in a common cause—for the advance of labor, for the advance of democracy in our America, for peace throughout the world.

It is not for us to appraise his place in the history of our nation. That task we leave to the historians and the social scientists—yet we can predict their decision in the years ahead.

But we bear witness to his abiding faith in his fellow men and women, to his concern for their welfare, to his constant endeavor to insure that their unions and their government should be their servants, not their masters.

The working people of America knew him as their friend. In great industries and tiny shops, in big cities and small towns, in offices and on the high seas, the people instinctively recognized in Philip Murray a man who expressed their hopes and aspirations, their angers and fears, their belief that what had gone before was a prelude to brighter years ahead.

Philip Murray fought their battles—on the picket line, at the collective bargaining table, and in the halls of government. Yet he was as respected by his adversaries as he was loved by his people, because Philip Murray believed in fairness. He believed in the sanctity of contracts not merely between employer and union, but between men. His code was strict, but because he lived by it, he inspired the best in other men.

Philip Murray was a leader, and he regarded leadership not as a privilege but as a responsibility, a sacred trust.

As we of the Congress of Industrial Organizations grope for a return to our daily work, the inspiration of Philip Murray will always be with us. For us, for all Americans, he placed in clear focus the perspective of a better, more prosperous, more dignified life. But while he looked to the future with insight and clear vision, Philip Murray lived in the present—conscious of our daily problems, concerned less about theories than about the problems of humanity. The rug on the parlor floor, the picture on the wall, the music in the home—these he knew the people wanted and he spent a lifetime helping them achieve.

America can be thankful that it opened its arms to this young Scotch boy, that it gave him inspiration, and that its democracy proved fertile soil for his ideals, his courage and his belief in its working men and women.

Philip Murray Is Dead At 66

By AL ZACK

PHILIP MURRAY is dead. President of CIO for 12 of its 15 event-packed years and founding president of the United Steelworkers, Murray died in San Francisco on Nov. 9.

The Scottish immigrant boy had grown up with the Miners, led the organization of the steel industry, helped build and guide the Congress of Industrial Organizations, served his nation in war and peace, and was a leader of the free labor world respected and honored everywhere. He was 66.

Murray died of a heart attack shortly before he was to have left San Francisco for Los Angeles, and meetings preliminary to the opening of CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention which had been scheduled for Nov. 17.

Sorrowing members of the CIO Executive Board met late last week in Pittsburgh, and postponed the convention to Dec. 1 and moved it to Atlantic City, out of respect for the CIO's beloved president.

Murray was found dead on the floor in his Hotel Mark Hopkin's bedroom early on Sunday morning, Nov. 9. He had failed to answer a 6:30 a.m. phone call he had placed, planning to attend early mass before taking a train to Los Angeles.

Sorrow-Laden

Phil Murray's death was announced in a sorrow-laden statement by Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald and Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, of the Steelworkers. All were in San Francisco with Murray.

Murray had gone to the West Coast city, enroute to the annual convention, to attend the Western Regional conference of Dist. 38 of the Steelworkers. He made his last official appearance the night before his death, speaking at a banquet in his honor held by the West Coast Steelworkers.

Those of his associates who had accompanied Murray and his wife on the train trip to the Coast said he had been seemingly in excellent health and in good spirits. He had joked frequently with them on the trip and, at the banquet preceding his death, had apparently been in fine humor.

He was delighted to be at the San Francisco meeting, he told the delegates, not only because it enabled him to fulfill an engagement circumstances had often forced him to cancel, but because of his "Scottish desire to enjoy a piece of roast beef without having to pay for it."

A CAPACITY CROWD jammed St. Paul's Cathedral as high government, labor and industry figures were joined by thousands of mourning workers paying a final tribute to the man who had led them to great victories.

His final speech (reported in detail on Page 9), was in a confident vein as he looked to the future. With a final "Good night and God bless you all," he returned to his hotel for some sandwiches and a glass of milk and retired at 11:30 p.m.

When he failed to answer his phone at 6:30, the alarmed phone operator followed hotel procedure. A bellboy was sent to the room and, when his knocking failed to arouse the Murrays, he used a passkey to gain entrance.

This awoke Mrs. Murray and she discovered the body of the CIO president slumped between the twin beds. The hotel's assistant manager and a doctor rushed to the room, but he was dead. The Rev. Emery J. Prenovost, assistant pastor of Old St. Mary's Catholic church, a few blocks away, administered conditionally the last rites of the church. Murray's adopted son, Joseph, rushed from New York City to be with his bereaved mother.

Following an autopsy, Dr. John Manwaring ascribed death to "coronary occlusion due to arteriosclerosis with a myocardial infarction," or clot.

In their statement announcing the death of Phil Murray, the Steelworker officials said:

"His passing will bring sadness to workers throughout America and the entire free world. Philip Murray devoted his life to the cause of labor and democracy. He worked tirelessly for these causes and the world is a better place because of his services to the people—for greater human dignity, for the advance of mankind's well being. His passing fills our hearts with grief, for we know his place can never be filled."

Within a few hours, messages of condolence and tributes to the man who led millions of workers through the most trying days of the generation poured into the Murray household, the Steelworker offices and the CIO headquarters.

They came from Pres. Truman and Pres.-elect Eisenhower, from other persons high in public life, from labor officials all over the world, from the management representatives with whom he had fought vigorously but cleanly and from the rank-and-file members of the trade unions he had served so well.

Speaking for the CIO, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood issued a formal statement, which mourned the passing of the man who assumed the presidency of the CIO in 1940, in a time of peril, and had led it ever since.

"He gave us dignity and strength," they said, "and he brought stability and confidence that the CIO would play a permanent role in building a better America. Not only in America, but everywhere the cause of freedom is treasured, the name of Philip Murray was held in admiration and respect."

Newspapers, radio commentators and TV newscasters filed thousands of words on the death of Murray, on the story of his life, and speculations on the course CIO would take without his strong hand at the helm.

Emergency Meet

Immediately, Sec.-Treas. Carey, fulfilling the sad duty entrusted to him by the CIO constitution, called emergency meetings of the CIO vice presidents and of its executive boards. These meetings were called for Pittsburgh, where the leaders of labor went to mourn the passing of the coal miner who had left the pits to fight the workers' battle.

Arrangements were completed for Phil Murray's funeral and his body was flown to Chicago. It was taken by train to Pittsburgh, where it was met by hundreds of officials and CIO members. They escorted it to the Laughlin funeral home, near the Murray home in the modest Brookline section of Pittsburgh.

Plans for the funeral were changed later in the week, when the number of mourners planning to attend the requiem high mass obviously were far greater than the church's seating capacity. From the Resurrection Church, where he had been a devout worshipper, the services were moved to St. Paul's Cathedral at the invitation of Bishop John F. Dearden. The Cathedral could accommodate far more of those wishing to pay a final tribute.

President Truman named Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin, who had told re-

(Continued on Page 11)

'Because He Believed In God, He Believed In Man'

By GERVASE N. LOVE

PITTSBURGH—A handful of earth trickled through the white-surpliced priest's fingers on to the casket. The warm autumn sun beat down on the canopy over the waiting grave. The dry grass rustled in a soft wind. and all that was mortal of Philip Murray went to its eternal resting place.

Here and there, among the 2000 or so people who crowded the hillside that is St. Anne's Cemetery in Castle Shannon, a Pittsburgh suburb, a woman sobbed gently. The throng parted for Mrs. Murray, her son, Joseph, and the rest of the family, then slowly went back to the mile-long string of cars that had escorted the body over the miles from St. Paul's Cathedral, where a solemn requiem mass had been sung over his body.

The service at the grave was short and simple, yet impressive. Fourteen priests and the Cathedral choir chanted its Latin words. They were sombre, yet hopeful—hopeful with the firm conviction that the grave is not the end. Rev. James L. Quinn, pastor of the Resurrection Church in Brookline, which the Murrays attended, read the rest of the rite and led in prayers for the dead.

James Hahn, president of the Irwin local of the Steelworkers, the union Murray organized and which he headed in addition to his duties as president of the CIO, read a brief prayer. Children from nearby St. Anne's School, released to attend the last services for a great man, stood near the grave in solemn silence.

A few brief minutes and it was over: Phil Murray—gone in a more definite, final way than had seemed possible the night before. Then he had lain in the funeral home, still of the earth, as thousands of men and women in every walk of life, but especially workers, had paid their last respects.

St. Paul's Cathedral began to fill early on Nov. 13 for the 11 a.m. funeral. Before the funeral mass, Rev. George S. Higgins, of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, said a requiem mass for the repose of Phil Murray's soul at a side altar.

By 10 A. M., the 2200 seats were filled, except those reserved for the family and the active and honorary pallbearers. By the time the body arrived, every bit of standing room was taken.

In the crowd were the great and the small, men and women whose hands bore callouses, and men and women whose hands were soft. Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin represented Pres. Truman. An official delegation attended from the Mine Workers. Lewis G. Lewis, AFL legislative representative, was present on behalf of AFL Pres. William Green. There were nuns, and a uniformed delegation from the Salvation Army. There were senators, congressmen, mourners from other countries.

Twenty-seven priests, seven monsignori and Rt. Rev. Francis J. Hass, Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich., and one of the Roman Catholic Church's most prominent spokesmen on labor and social problems, were in the sanctuary.

Rt. Rev. Msgr. Henry A. Carlin, Vicar-General of the Diocese of Pittsburgh and pastor of Holy Rosary Church, Homewood, a neighbor of Phil Murray's when they were youths in the Westmoreland County mining community of Keystone, celebrated the mass. Rev. Charles Owen Rice, pastor of St. Brigid's Church, Pittsburgh, widely known as a labor priest, was deacon, and Rev. Paul A. Holzer, assistant pastor of the Resurrection Church, was subdeacon.

With acolytes, they met the funeral cortege at the doors and escorted the body to the altar rail. There, guarded by

(Continued on Page 11)

Philip Murray

May 25, 1886 — Nov. 9, 1952

President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations

President of the United Steelworkers of America

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President (Deceased Nov. 9, 1952)

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year. $1 50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV — November 17, 1952 — No. 46

A Leader Is Gone

In Other Words—

A Dearly Beloved Friend

Edwin A. Lahey, Washington correspondent of the Chicago Daily News, was an intimate friend of CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Here are excerpts from his article on the death of the CIO leader:

By EDWIN A. LAHEY

THE MAN SAYS: "Hear about Phil Murray? He's dead."

So you've got to write about it. That's your racket.

You comb your mind for the purple cliches of condolence and nothing comes. It seems a little indecent to write an obituary about a dearly beloved friend.

Anyway, death is as natural a thing as birth. And all death is sudden. The only reason it shocks is that we forget how alone everybody is, and death reminds us.

Murray is hard to describe at this moment.

Usually when the public read about him, he was one of the central figures in some dramatic industrial strife of national importance, a man sometimes given to extravagant invective in battle.

Those scenes in which Murray held the national spotlight seem a little unreal to one who has sat with him in the blackest moments of desolation and self-doubt; who has made sentimental journeys with him through the coal patches of western Pennsylvania; who has seen him weep; who has fled many a time with him from the world of importance into the comforting anonymity of a crowded grandstand at a race track.

Let's dig out the one inevitable cliche about Phil Murray, and get it over with:

He was a simple man.

For many years, members of the Gridiron Club in Washington have been inviting Murray to attend their dinners.

Murray never accepted. He never had been in a full dress suit, and would tell me in a dogged Scottish burr that he never would be.

The first time I rented a full dress outfit for $7 to attend one of these dinners, I was treated by Murray as a traitor to my class.

Once in New York, I dragged Murray to dinner in the Harvard Club, and it was a very uncomfortable evening. He was convinced that neither of us belonged.

The Franklin D. Roosevelts used to be a little nettled because they never could get the Murrays to dinner in the White House.

The reason was that Murray, close as he was to Roosevelt in politics and labor affairs, didn't feel that he belonged in FDR's social league.

With the simplicity in Phil Murray's makeup there was a very warm and human heart that made him a sucker for his friends.

In the middle of a national crisis, he could devote his time and energy to straightening out the domestic problems of some union official who might have been running around and drinking too much.

And yet, for all of Murray's sentimentality, softness of heart, and simplicity, he had statesmanlike qualities and lofty vision, and was indeed a big man internationally.

PHIL MURRAY, among other things, had a mind of his own, and he had his greatest intellectual growth in middle life.

Murray was not always a softie. His tenderness of soul could be pretty well covered. After years of hemming and hawing within himself about the Communists in the CIO, he lowered the boom on the Reds and drove them out of the CIO with a vigor that startled even the Communist leaders.

Above all, Murray had a deep sense of family life. It was in terms of the working-class family that Murray acted as a labor leader.

This concept caused him throughout the years of his leadership of the CIO and the Steelworkers to be greatly preoccupied with objectives like the guaranteed annual wage, industry-paid pension plans and industry-labor councils. These councils, he hoped, would attack the problem of industrial society with the main view of preserving and improving the family life of America.

Phil Murray had all the homey virtues. He could say things that would sound corny if anybody else said them, but they always rang impressively true when he uttered them.

He was more than the great labor leader that the official statements of public men call him.

He was a pretty lovable citizen.

The obvious question is, who will succeed him.

The answer is equally obvious.

Nobody.

Philip Murray

. . . The Story Of A Dedicated Man, His Hopes And Times, His Dreams For America.

By AL ZACK

"NO POWER will be put into play or can be put into play sufficiently strong to either undermine or destroy the United Steelworkers of America."

It was Philip Murray talking, addressing the Steelworkers he loved so well. The scene was a Western regional conference, held in San Francisco on Saturday, Nov. 8, the night before he died.

It was the last speech Philip Murray was to make and it was delivered in the same confident mood with which he had always faced life. The union and the CIO had suffered a setback only a few days earlier in the national elections. But Phil Murray was looking ahead to the kind of America for which he had always fought. In this country, he said, "it isn't a problem of garages or chickens or pots any more."

"The changes labor looks forward to," he went on, "are slum clearance, more television sets, more schools, more and better medicine, more of the better things of life."

It was for "more of the better things of life," that Phil Murray had struggled for most of his 66 years—more of the better things for more people.

Philip Murray spent his life fighting to end this pattern of violence in industrial relations and to bring decency, freedom and security for American workers. At his death, he was still fighting.

A Turning Point

In the true sense of the word, Phil Murray was a dedicated man. It was a dedication which began when, at the age of six, he first went into the coal mines of his native Scotland to work alongside his father. His wages were 30c a day.

Four years later, the Murray family—father, mother and 10 children—came to the United States which he loved so well. They landed on Christmas day, 1902, and soon settled down in the little coal mining town of Irwin, Pa., near Pittsburgh.

Phil was an ambitious boy, who studied correspondence school courses by night and worked in the mines by day. He was interested in mining and economics, but one of his first concrete lessons in labor-management relations came in 1904—and not out of a book.

It was a mine checkweightman, who was cheating the miners by short-changing them on their tonnage. Young Phil Murray tried words, and then his fists, as "negotiating weapons." He was fired.

Six hundred men followed him out of the mines, elected him president of their local of the United Mine Workers, and stayed out for four weeks until hungry families drove them back. The strike was broken, but Murray was not.

Years later he recognized that incident as the turning point in his life. "I've never had a doubt in my mind since then of what I wanted to do with my life," he often said.

From then on, Phil Murray's life was a matter of public record, told in thousands of newspaper items, and demonstrated in the growth of first the United Mine Workers, then the Steelworkers and the CIO.

After the battle at the coal mine, Phil Murray was escorted out of town by two deputy sheriffs and warned not to return. Eight years later he was already a commanding figure in the trade union movement.

In 1912 he was elected to the Mine Workers' executive board. Eight years later he became a vice-president of that union, a post he held until 1942.

It was in 1936, when the Committee for Industrial Organization was first coming to life inside the American Federation of Labor, that Murray became chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The steel barons had long resisted attempts of their workers to organize into free labor unions. But with Murray at the helm, the major share of the job was done in two years—hard, bloody years.

Phil Murray never forgot those years, and the blood that went into organizing the Steelworkers union. He often spoke of the Memorial Day Massacre at the Republic Steel Co. in Chicago—that suffering which meant the "Little Steel" victory. By the end of 1937 the union represented 75% of the workers in the industry.

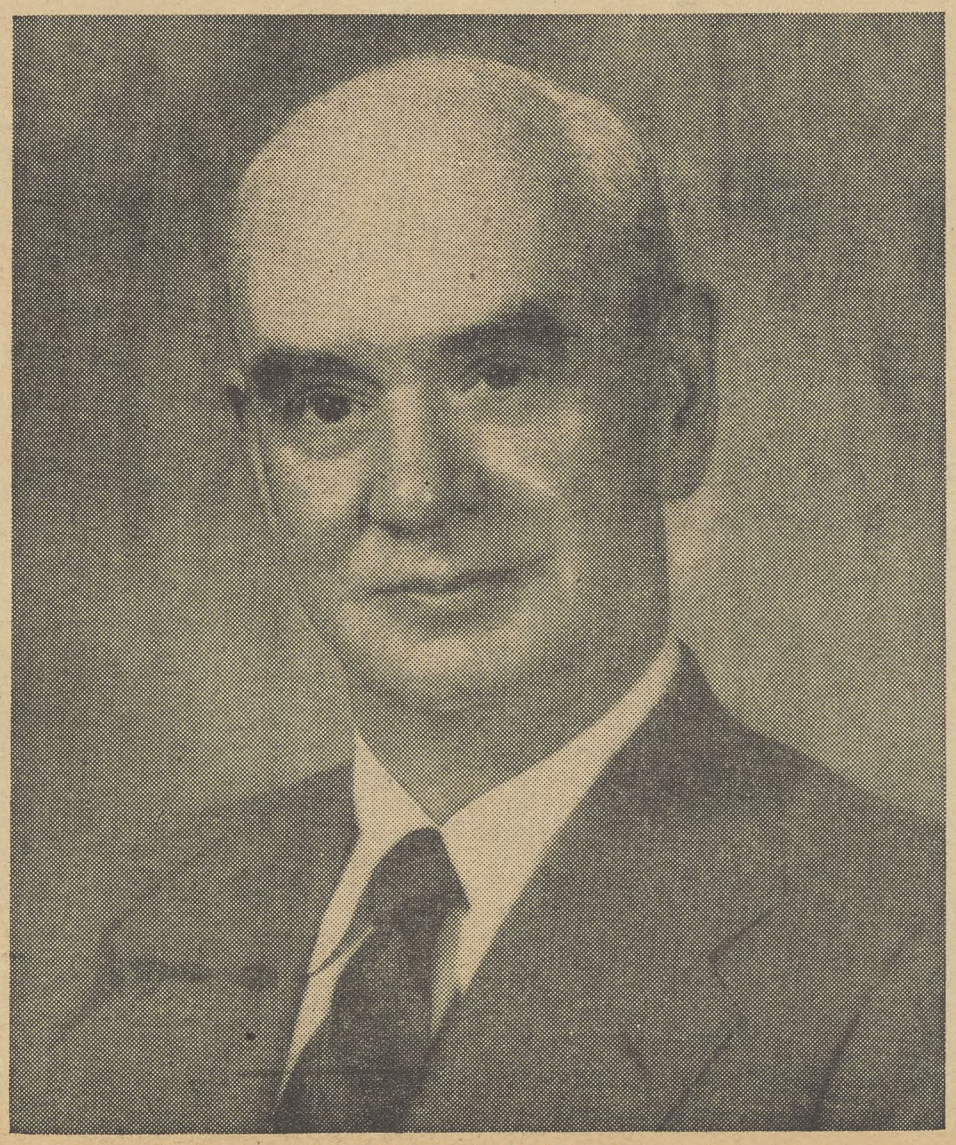
Murray never forgot those days of the strikebreaker, the tear bomb, the club-swinging special deputies and coal and iron police. He firmly resolved they would never return to America.

Phil Murray likewise never forgot the depression. He remembered clearly the dismal days when no smoke belched from the towering stacks of the steel mills; when workers had no jobs and their children went hungry; when homes were foreclosed and families were set out on the streets. He remembered the soup kitchens, the bread lines, the apple sellers—all of the signs of a great country flat on its back.

He was determined that these days should never return either. To that end he devoted himself to the battle on the political as well as on the economic front, and until his death he led the CIO's political arm, the CIO-PAC.

He had the satisfaction of seeing America rebuild itself—of seeing workers earning decent wages; children well fed and well clothed; families living in decent and healthful homes; elderly citizens assured of a future in which they could walk with their heads up and their dignity preserved.

Phil Murray modestly claimed no credit for this. But history will certainly show, what his friends, associates and the millions who make up the CIO well know—that Phil Murray played a major role in creating this new America. The tremendous growth of industrial unionism, under the leadership of Philip Murray, had brought about this change.



CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY

In 1938, when the first constitutional convention of the CIO was held in Pittsburgh, after the split with the AFL, Murray was elected a vice-president of the new organization.

Service To Nation

He held that post for two years, until his unanimous election to the presidency in 1940, to succeed the first CIO president, John L. Lewis. Murray was re-elected to that office at every CIO convention thereafter.

Much of Murray's energy was devoted to serving his country as a representative of the CIO. In 1940, he was a member of the National Defense Mediation Board, created by President Roosevelt to avoid labor disputes in defense industries. After Pearl Harbor, he was chief CIO representative on the combined CIO-AFL Labor War Committee which met periodically with the President on matters affecting labor and the war.

Immediately after the war, Murray headed the CIO delegation which participated in President Truman's joint Labor-Management Conference which ended in disagreement.

At the beginning of the national emergency created by the Communist aggression in Korea, Murray led a renewed campaign by labor for effective defense mobilization, anti-inflation measures, and (Biography continues on Page 8, more pictures on Pages 6 and 7.)

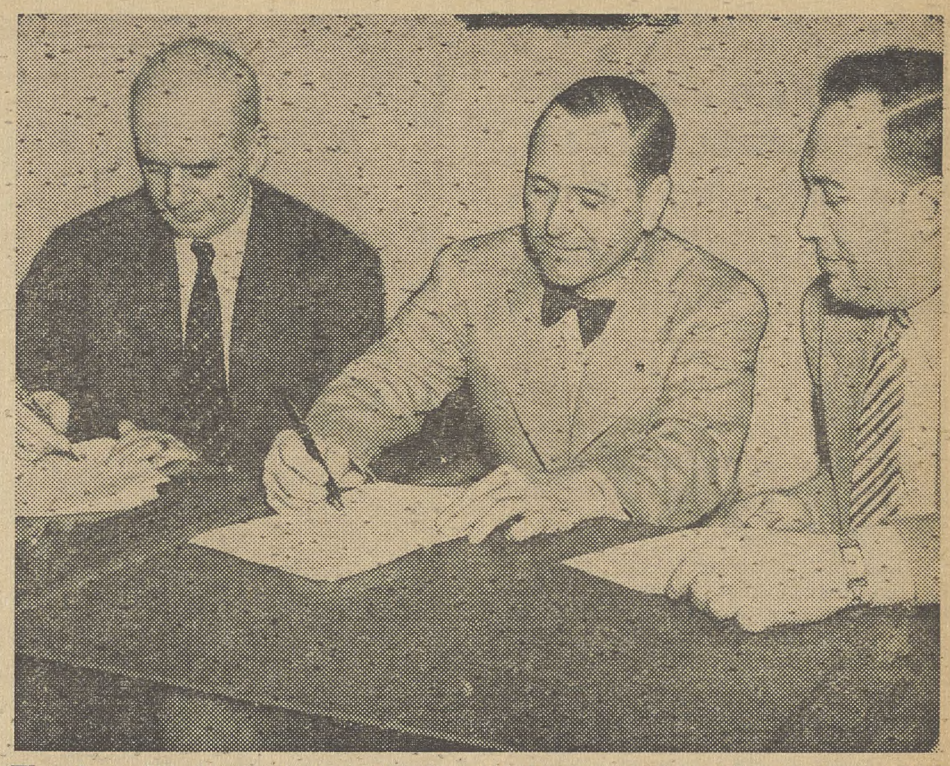
Philip Murray

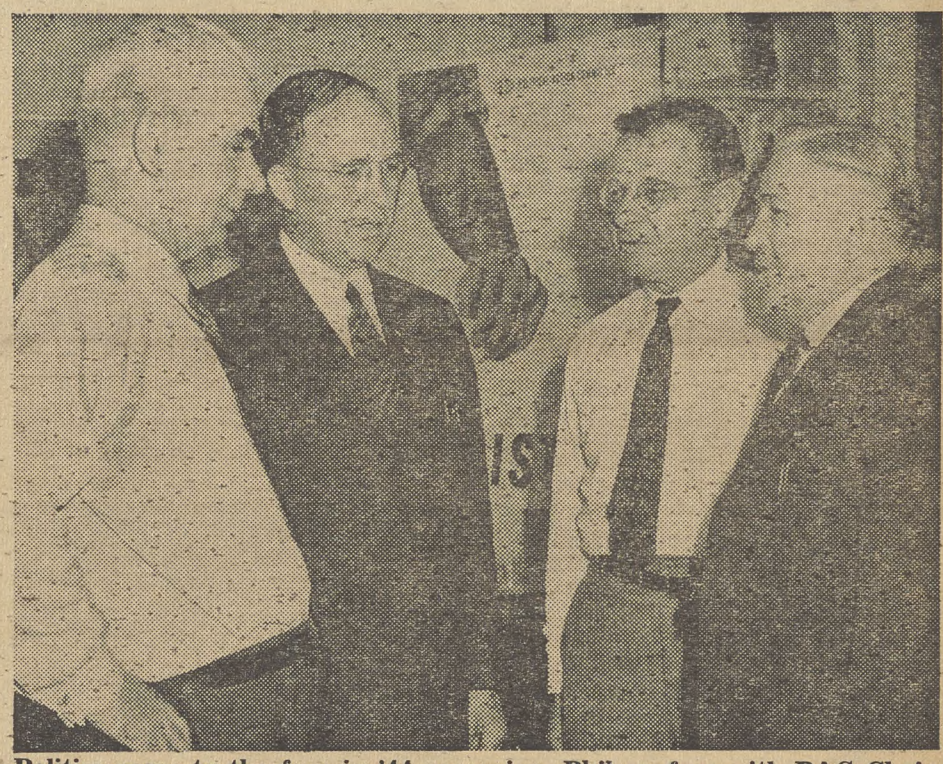
Photo Highlights Of A

Long a leader and vice president of the United Mine Workers, Murray goes to White House with Pres. John L. Lewis and Thomas P. Kennedy.

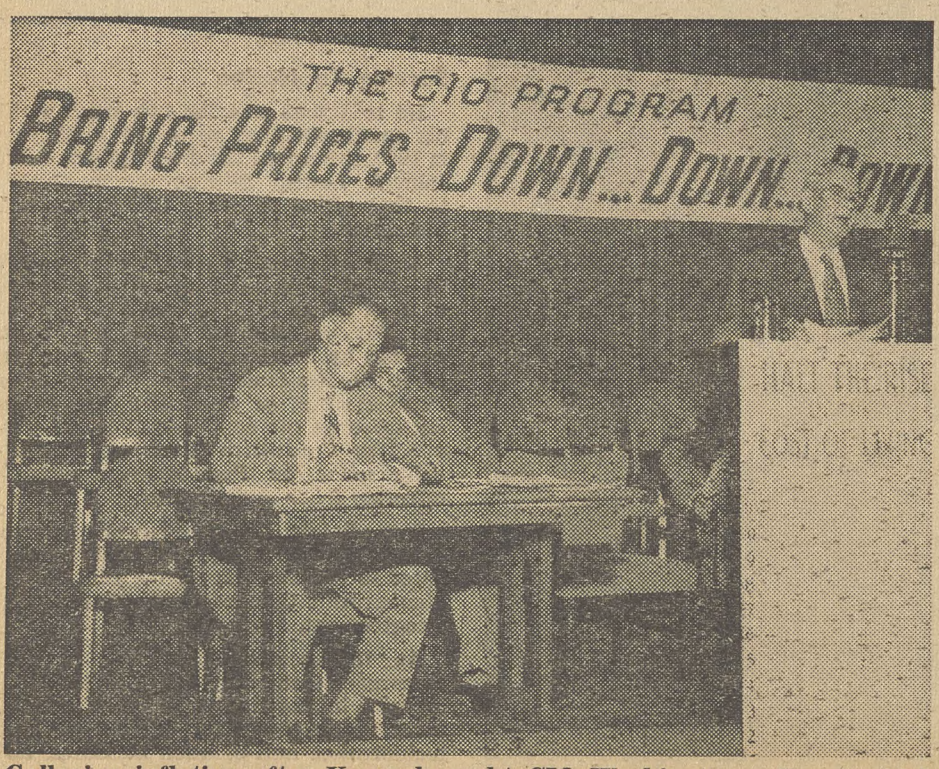


The Auto Workers' first contract with Ford was a 1941 milestone. Phil signs it with Harry Bennett and R. J. Thomas, then UAW chief.

"Marching for Johnny" was a CIO War Relief Committee benefit performance which Phil attended with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt in 1943.



Politics came to the fore in '44 campaign. Phil confers with PAC Chairman Sidney Hillman, Allan S. Haywood (right) and Martin Miller (center).



Galloping inflation after Korea brought CIO Washington rally at which Phil led drive for strong price curbs, fair defense policies.

Testifying on Capitol Hill, Phil on this occasion found Sen. Taft more interested in the ceiling than in CIO's legislative views.

'... The march of trade unionism will carry forward.'

Phil Murray's Philosophy: March Forward

PHILIP MURRAY'S final report to the CIO stressed his confidence that "democratic trade unionism in America will continue its forward progress" no matter how stiff the odds.

Murray's report, prepared just two weeks before his death, was intended for delivery to the 14th constitutional convention of the national Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Regardless of the election outcome, he said in a report completed before the victory of Gen. Eisenhower and the Republican's narrow capture of congressional control, "the march of trade unionism will carry forward."

Murray's last words for the six million members of the CIO he had led since 1940 were written in an optimistic mood, which weighed the problems facing the union movement and found them not insurmountable.

Increasingly, he noted, "Americans in every walk of life have come to realize the beneficial implications of trade unionism in the American economy." They realize, he continued, the close relationship between their individual welfare and that of industrial workers.

It was a result, Murray contended, "of the high wage philosophy which organized labor has preached and practiced for half a century." And he called this philosophy "indispensable to continuing prosperity or to new vistas of economic growth."

"It is impossible to imagine an America prosperous without adequate and increasing wage levels," he continued. "It is inconceivable that our millions of farmers can sell the products of their land in the absence of adequate and growing purchasing power in the hands of urban workers."

Only free, effective, militant, powerful trade unions can insure, the CIO president said, that workers will enjoy "the fair division of the national wealth to which we are entitled."

In a separate section of the report, Murray urged that price-wage controls be placed on a stand-by basis. He said: "The facts—a weak law, soft markets in some parts of the economy, and collapsing price and production controls—are clear. The basis for maintaining wage controls under these conditions at present no longer exists." (See stories on Pages 4 and 5-B.)

The 1952 steel strike, he observed, "demonstrated in clear fashion, as other smaller disputes in other industries have also shown, that the deep-seated acquisitive instincts of corporation management overcome their sense of reason when wages are the issue."

In theory, he commented, many corporation executives believe in high wages, which they frequently praise in institutional advertisements. "But altogether too many corporations cannot see their way clear to practicing that high wage philosophy when it affects their own employes."

Thus, Murray emphasized, the need for strong trade unions "for the strengthening of prosperity of community and nation."

"American labor must always look to the future with imagination, with faith in our destiny as a nation, with constant determination to push out the boundaries of our material well-being, our security as individuals and as a nation," he said.

American labor, he contended, has made "truly remarkable economic progress" in the last several years, despite inflation and the "negative approach of too many men in the national Congress and the state legislatures."

Despite this progress, Murray pointed out, large segments of our population are still as far distant from "the bright sun of general prosperity . . . as daylight seen from the bottom of a mine shaft."

"We should be able, by general agreement, to provide that necessary security against the hazards of illness, of old age, of disability, of unemployment which dominates the lives and thoughts of so many citizens."

"We cannot," he warned, "rest on our laurels."

Legal Report Says—

Thanks To T-H, Two-Thirds Of Workers Are Still Unorganized

LEGAL CASES arising out of the Taft-Hartley Law, Wage Stabilization Board decisions and cases involving segregation occupied a major share of the CIO Legal Dept.'s time during the past year, its annual report reveals.

"For the fifth year," the report says, "American workers have continued to suffer under the unfair, iniquitous, viciously anti-labor Taft-Hartley Act. This year has seen no amelioration in that act's evil effects."

The report discusses in detail cases arising out of Taft-Hartley, recapping a score of decisions. In total, the report says, these cases prove: "Labor cannot and will not rest until this evil legislation is stricken from the books."

The act continues to hamper organization of unorganized workers, the Legal Dept. noted, showing that fewer representation elections have been held under T-H than under the Wagner Act and that the percentage of elections lost by unions continued to increase.

"THANKS TO Taft-Hartley," it warns, "two-thirds of the nation's workers remain today unorganized."

The act also "continues to channel the NLRB's activities into the procurement of injunctions against unions, and away from correcting employer unfair labor practices," the report continues. "Under Taft-Hartley," it notes, "the reinstatement of workers fired for union activities has dwindled away; the Board has been busy getting injunctions against unions."

Attacking T-H proponents' claims that the act was passed to reduce strikes, the report shows this goal was not reached. "Workdays lost per year on account of strikes continue under Taft-Hartley and far exceed the Wagner Act average."

Discussing administration of the law by the board and in the courts, the report observes: "The developments favorable to labor during this period have been quite outweighed by those anti-labor: on balance the administration of the labor law, during this period, become more and more anti-labor."

In keeping with its practice of joining in legal tests of anti-democratic practices, the CIO Legal Dept. has filed a brief supporting the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its Supreme Court test of segregated schools in South Carolina, Kansas, Virginia and the District of Columbia. Orginally scheduled for hearing in October, these cases have been postponed until early in the coming year.

THE CIO BRIEF in these cases reaffirms its legal position in other segregation cases "that state laws compelling the separation of individuals because of race are necessarily unconstitutional," the department noted.

It expressed the hope that the court "will adhere to the line which it has been developing over the past few years and declare that the inequality inherent in segregation, which the lower court found to be a fact, is sufficient under the Constitution to render segregation itself invalid."

The report also noted "the Wage Stabilization Program has continued to give rise to numerous problems and to a heavy burden of work."

The Legal Department is headed by Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel to the CIO and the CIO Steelworkers.

High Court's Rulings In Steel Dispute Examined

ONE OF THE most widely reported — and widely distorted — legal decisions of 1952 involving labor unions came in the Supreme Court decision in the steel dispute, the CIO Legal Dept. annual report notes.

The major contention of the companies in the seizure case, the report observes, was "that the President lacked power to seize the steel mills on April 8, 1952, because he had failed to use the remedy provided by Congress for dealing with a work stoppage threatening the national health and safety, viz., the 80-day injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act."

THE PRINCIPAL argument of the industry, the report continues, was that the emergency arose out of the President's refusal to use the Taft-Hartley injunction sections. "They asked the Court to decide that the President did not have power to seize the steel mills because he should have used the Taft-Hartley Act."

Their purpose, the report declares, was clear. "If the companies could have persuaded the Supreme Court of the United States to uphold their contention, the President would have been placed in a position of defying the Supreme Court if he continued to refuse to invoke the injunctive provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"IF THE President were thus compelled to invoke those provisions, the companies could avoid a strike for 80 more days after the Supreme Court made its decision without being required to pay any additional benefits to its employes. In addition, they no doubt hoped to embarrass the President politically by proving that he was wrong in not invoking the Taft-Hartley Act on April 8."

It was to counter this argument that the CIO Steelworkers entered the case. The union did not argue whether the President had the power to seize the mills. It did argue that, whatever this power was, it was not diminished by his refusal to use Taft-Hartley. The union contended that use of Taft-Hartley was optional when the strike was first called on Jan. 1, 1952.

However, when the union delayed the strike to April 8, at the request of the government, it gave the companies and the country far more time than the 80-day delay provided by the T-H injunctive powers. "Under those circumstances, the union argued, "the President was under no obligation to start the delay process all over again with a Taft-Hartley injunction. Indeed, we said, it was extremely doubtful whether a court would grant an injunction under those circumstances."

Examination of the Supreme Court decision, the report continues, "reveals that, on this issue, the companies lost and the union won." At least seven of the justices, the report notes, "seem to agree with the union" and "two expressed no opinion on that subject."

The report details each opinion and analyzes it and concludes, "The court fairly rejected the companies' argument that the President lacked power to seize because he should have used the Taft-Hartley Act. The position of the Steelworkers in the case was thus fully vindicated."

CIO Housing Group Aided Rent Battle

A MAJOR SHARE of the CIO National Housing Committee's activities during the past year were channeled into the campaign to block real estate interests seeking to kill rent ceilings.

Much of this battle developed when Congress adopted a home-rule provision to the rent control law, ending controls unless locals governing bodies took affirmative action by Sept. 30, the committee, headed by Chairman Walter Reuther, reported.

W. REUTHER

"Throughout the United States, from Maine to California, CIO Councils were active in the leadership seeking to secure affirmative action by local governing bodies to request extension of the federal rent program," the report shows.

"From the largest city, Chicago with its population of 3½ million of whom 68.5% live in rental dwellings, down to the smallest size communities, CIO Council representatives and local CIO housing committees presented facts and figures justifying the need for continued rent stabilization."

In many communities, the report reveals, CIO documentation "was the turning point in persuading the city council to vote for continuation. Over 1500 governing bodies of local communities, after extensive hearings, debates and studies, voted to request the federal government to extend the federal rent program."

"This contrasts sharply," the report observes, "with the claims of those who have opposed this program as one representing federal imposition over local objection."

The committee: Walter Reuther, chairman; L. S. Buckmaster, Lewis Clark, A. F. Hartung, Joseph Fisher, David J. McDonald, J. J. Moran, Burl Phares, Jacob Potofsky, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Sam H. Scott, William Snoots, Willard Townsend, and Leo Goodman, secretary and director.

CSC Work Paid Off For Steel Strikers, Families

"WORKING WITH both voluntary and public agencies, the National CIO Community Services Committee helped to provide aid and assistance to CIO members and their families in the time of need, disaster and industrial strike."

The committee listed such aid as helping to provide assistance to members of the CIO Steelworkers and their families during the strike this year.

"Approximately $5 million worth of goods and services were provided to the striking Steelworkers and their families this summer, through public and voluntary community agencies, in Youngstown, Gary, Detroit, Joliet, Pittsburgh, etc.", CSC said. "This is a conservative estimate based upon a sampling of available reports."

The committee also sent more than $20,000 worth of comfort kits to Korea for distribution to UN fighting men, was instrumental in obtaining admission of the Seamen's Services as a member agency of the United Defense Fund, and was cofounder of the American Travel Association to help promote relative inexpensive travel overseas.

Members of the committee: Irving Abramson, chairman; John Brophy, secretary; Ted F. Silvey, treasurer; Leo Perlis, national director; Joseph A. Beirne, Harry Boyer, Joseph W. Childs, Harold J. Garno, John J. Grogan, Bessie Hillman, Louis Hollander, Emil Mazey, David J. McDonald, August Scholle, Sol Stetin and Milton Weihrauch.

Research Dept. Expands Services In Past Year

A WIDE RANGE of problems, both long-run and immediate, were tackled during the last year by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, according to its annual report.

The report was divided into discussion of activities in the two fields in which the department serves. Its work in the research field was summed up thus:

"Alike in our services to CIO officials, cooperative efforts with our affiliates, and liaison work with government agencies, we have gathered facts and presented arguments to carry forward policies adopted by the CIO to secure a better living for our members and promote national prosperity and welfare."

The report recounted the department's cooperation with the CIO Steelworkers in preparing economic material for presentation to the Wage Stabilization Board. It noted that in connection with the Defense Production Act, it urged on government agencies and Congress "adoption of policies outlined by the CIO convention and executive board that would avoid inflation and tend towards equality of sacrifice."

SIMILAR presentations were made at all levels of government in connection with taxes.

"In advising on production plans during the defense emergency," the report noted, "we have aimed at the translation of general CIO policy into concrete program application. We have continued to point out the importance of expanding national capacity but not at the expense of avoidable unemployment.

"We urged that new facilities and government contracts be placed in areas where experienced manpower was available. We sought to avoid having provisions for accelerated tax amortization of defense plants result in scrapping of established operations or in excessive government subsidy of corporate profits."

"The trend in the Education Div. of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research," says the report, was toward an increased emphasis on international affairs in the pamphlets, films, posters and institute field. There has been more careful planning both in using foreign visitors in the educational program and in helping each to get a person-to-person contact with American workers.

"There also has been a great deal more time devoted to advising projects being financed by the Fund for Adult Education of the Ford Foundation, such as the Inter-University Labor-Education Committee and the American Labor Education Service.

"More special cheap editions of books are becoming available through the department. Pamphlets are being distributed more effectively. The 16mm. film program continues to grow.

"INTERNATIONAL unions, state councils and local unions have become increasingly aware of the importance of education programs in building strong, democratic trade unions.

"It is important that they make full use of the services available to them from the National CIO and that the National CIO furnish them with the services and materials needed in developing programs which will help every member of the CIO to better understand his responsibilities in the present scene."

CIO Sets Organizing Landmarks In 1952

"SEVERAL ORGANIZATIONAL landmarks were established during the year," the CIO Dept. of Organization reported.

The department hailed the NLRB election victories scored by the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee in New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania which resulted in a contract with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., "the largest financial institution in the world." The department is headed by Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who also is director of CIO councils.

ALLAN HAYWOOD

Another high spot of the year was the union shop agreement won by the United Railroad Workers of America for the non-operating groups of the Pennsylvania Railroad—"the first such contract in the country with a major carrier."

Organizational advances were not confined to the continental United States. National CIO and CIO international representatives played a "decisive part" in getting the Wage and Hour Division Administrator to raise the minimum wages in the Puerto Rican sugar industry to 75c an hour. The Puerto Rican labor federation, CGT, is affiliated with the CIO.

As a result of CIO militancy, many industrial unions in the Puerto Rican raw sugar mills have joined the CIO Packinghouse Workers, and groups of sugar field workers are expected to follow suit.

CIO won 1348 of the 2524 NLRB representation elections in which it participated during the year and the results in 87 of these elections were indeterminate.

"A significant rebuke is given Taft-Hartley advocates by these figures when it is known that of all of these thousands of petitions, only 27 were for decertification and 10 of the 27 were won by the unions," the department said.

The CIO also won all but two of the 570 union shop authorization elections in which it participated. Of 17 cases before the National Railroad Mediation Board, the CIO won all but three.

There now are 35 international and national unions and organizing committees under the CIO banner.

Also affiliated with the CIO are 206 local industrial unions. During the period 20 new local industrial unions were chartered, four local industrial unions were transferred from direct affiliation with the CIO to international unions or organizing committees, and 24 local industrial union charters were canceled.

Three hundred and four industrial union councils are affiliated with the CIO. In the past year the CIO chartered nine new councils, one council withdrew and one charter was revoked.

Haywood's report compliments the department staff for its "excellent job in thwarting the secession movement within the Textile Workers Union of America."

(Details on Page 7-B)

90,000 In South Join CIO In Year

NINETEEN FIFTY-TWO was the best year for the CIO Organizing Committee. The southern organizing drive won 160 National Labor Relations Board bargaining elections, bringing an additional 90,000 workers into the CIO family.

The representation victories were won in eight states—Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Texas.

In its report the committee said:

"At the present time there are over 50 elections pending before the NLRB involving an estimated 17,000 workers.

"Organizing campaigns are under way at some 150 factories, mills and plants employing approximately 100,000 people. These campaigns are progressing satisfactorily; it is expected they will result in the early filing of a number of new election petitions.

"In addition to the NLRB election victories there have been a number of cases in which CIO unions were recognized as bargaining agents without formal elections. Thousands of additional members have been secured for CIO International Unions through the servicing of locals by CIO Organizing Committee staff members."

The committee credited its Publicity and Public Relations Dept. and its Dept. of Community Relations with bringing "the CIO message and program . . . to the attention of every segment of society in the South."

It was reported that the committee's Legal Dept. attorneys have represented the committee in 17 major court cases and in over 75 NLRB cases, in addition to helping CIO affiliates whenever such services were requested.

"GREAT HELP" was attributed to the formal meeting of the committee last January in Atlanta. The message was attended by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization; Dir. John Riffe; Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; James B. Carey, CIO secretary - treasurer and president of the Electrical Workers; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers; Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker, Rubber Workers; Pres. Morris Pizer, Furniture Workers; Pres. Harry Sayre, Paperworkers; Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood, Shipbuilding Workers, committee state directors, representatives and staff members. Haywood served as chairman.

"That section of our country is noted for it's unorganized labor, starvation pay, and sweatshop conditions!"

'We're Prepared To Meet Half Way With Business'

DESPITE CIO'S efforts to achieve industrial peace and labor-management cooperation, "we have all too often run head-on into a stony cliff of stand-pat, nearsighted, narrow-minded resistance from employers."

That is what the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in his prepared report.

"The spokesmen of many great corporations revile us or sneer at us when we express the fear that they are maneuvering to smash our trade union organizations," he said. Noting an increasing number of employers publicly stating they "wish to live with us in a spirit of cooperation and understanding," Murray added:

"We hope so, and we are ready to meet them half way."

Despite these statements, he noted, the lobbying organizations of Big Business push almost daily for anti-labor legislation.

"Perhaps the time has come to ask those businessmen who either practice or preach a philosophy of friendship for labor, whether the time has not arrived to work decisively within the business organizations to which they belong for a change in attitude," he continued.

CIO Unit Says Profiteers Plan Raid On Resources

A WARNING that private interests have opened a campaign to obtain publicly-owned natural resources and exploit them for private profit is sounded in the report of the CIO Regional Development and Conservation Committee.

"Ominous signs point toward a dangerous attack next year in Congress," the committee reports, "on the national forests, the publicly-owned grazing lands and the national parks.

"Certain elements among the cattlemen and wool growers, and among the lumbermen, have made it very clear that they intend to press for the transfer of such stands to the states; the purpose will be to put these resources into the hands of legislators known to be favorable to or under control of the special interests in question.

"In the alternative, efforts will be made to sell the federal lands directly to private interests for destructive exploitation at fantastically low prices. Another approach will be to vest permanent control in permittee and lessee in a manner which will be equivalent of outright sale for a song.

"Our entire national experience with the way such private interests have wrecked our soil, ranges, forests and recreational facilities should lead us to fight vigorously against all such destructive maneuvers."

The report recounted the committee's extensive activities in helping to work out a watershed rehabilitation program. Special attention was given the Missouri Valley, scene of two destructive floods in 10 months. The continuing interest of the CIO and the committee in pressing for expansion of outdoor recreational areas—of vital importance to industrial workers and other city dwellers—was stressed.

The committee: Allan S. Haywood, chairman; Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary; J. William Belanger, Harry Boyer, Earl A. Crowder, James A. Davis, Irwin L. DeShetler, Chester Dusten, Joseph Fisher, Harold J. Garno, Rodney C. Jacobson, A. T. Jones, A. J. Kojetinsky and Clarence Palmer.

Anti-Bias Group Flays Dixiegops

CIO'S COMMITTEE to Abolish Discrimination continued throughout the past year to "wage our all-out fight for the extension and improvement of human relations in our country," it said in its annual report.

"Because of the continuation in Congress of the vicious coalition between reactionary Republicans and the Dixiecrats," it reported, "improvement of federal programs in this field have remained almost at a complete standstill."

JAMES B. CAREY

Only progress, the committee reported, had been achieved through the independent action of Pres. Truman in his Executive Orders. It called special attention to the President's order directing government procurement agencies to include in all contracts a clause specifically prohibiting discrimination in hiring.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is chairman of the anti-bias committee, was named by Pres. Truman to a special committee charged with enforcing this order.

The committee reported it had continued to make the CIO struggle against Senate filibuster under Rule 22 a major objective. Extensive research into means of combatting this vicious rule had been completed, the report showed, and the committee outlined plans for working with the CIO Legislative Dept. in an all-out effort to abolish it when the new Senate convenes in January.

"THE PRESENT rule," the report said, "stands as a menace to all legislation which comes before the Senate. Its enactment of course was inspired by the forces in our country that oppose any and every improvement in civil rights legislation."

During the year, the committee worked closely with the newly-established Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, representing 53 national organizations, "in a crusade to bring the whole question of civil rights before the American people."

On the legislative front, the committee said, the only measure that made any progress was the fair employment practice bill introduced by Senators Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.), which CIO supported. This measure was reported out favorably by a Senate committee, over the opposition of Senators Taft (R. O.) and Nixon (R. Cal.), but was prevented from coming on the floor for action.

Members of the committee are: James B. Carey, chairman; Willard S. Townsend, secretary; Harry Read, director; W. Richard Carter, Arthur Goldberg, Neal Hanley, Bessie Hillman, James J. Leary, George Maher, William H. Oliver, Morris Pizer, Thomas Shane, George L-P Weaver, Philip Weightman and Boyd L. Wilson.

Job Outlook Drops In '52 For Seamen

THE SIZE of the U. S. Merchant Marine and the number of employed seamen rose and then declined, while shipbuilding industry employment continued to climb during the past year, the CIO Maritime Committee reported.

The Korean war caused the upturn in the merchant marine, which reached its peak last Feb. 1, when 99,000 seamen were sailing aboard 2046 ships. The return of more than 500 ships to the National Defense Reserve Fleet resulted in a drop in the number of employed seamen to 72,350 by last Sept. 1.

BY LAST June 30 shipyard employment had risen to 98,124, but the committee said that "if a more realistic shipbuilding program is not initiated, the private shipyards will be again closed down by the end of 1953."

Lack of stability in the shipbuilding industry was attributed to the government's policy of placing shipbuilding orders in Navy yards instead of private yards and its "irrational practice of tightly allocating steel for the industry."

The committee cooperated with the port and vessel security program.

Committee members: Joseph Curran, chairman; Hoyt Haddock, John J. Grogan, Herbert Daggert and William Steinberg.

Murray Warned Of Recession Dange

Urged Increased Buying Power

WEAKNESSES in the national economy constitute a sign of danger, the late CIO Pres. Murray warned in his final report on the state of the nation's economic health.

Basically, the danger signs grow out of "inadequate consumer buying power as compared with our ability to produce an increasing output of consumer goods," he said. Consequently, he urged that existing wage controls be relaxed and placed on a standby basis.

The lag in buying power indicates the possibility of an economic turndown, he emphasized, after the leveling off of defense expenditures scheduled to begin in mid-1953. The balance in the economy since the last CIO convention he described as "uneasy."

"The post-Korean inflationary price level has been frozen into the economy," he explained. "Declines in some prices have been largely offset by rises in others. Consumers' prices generally have crept upward while raw materials and wholesale price indexes have slipped from their 1951 highs.

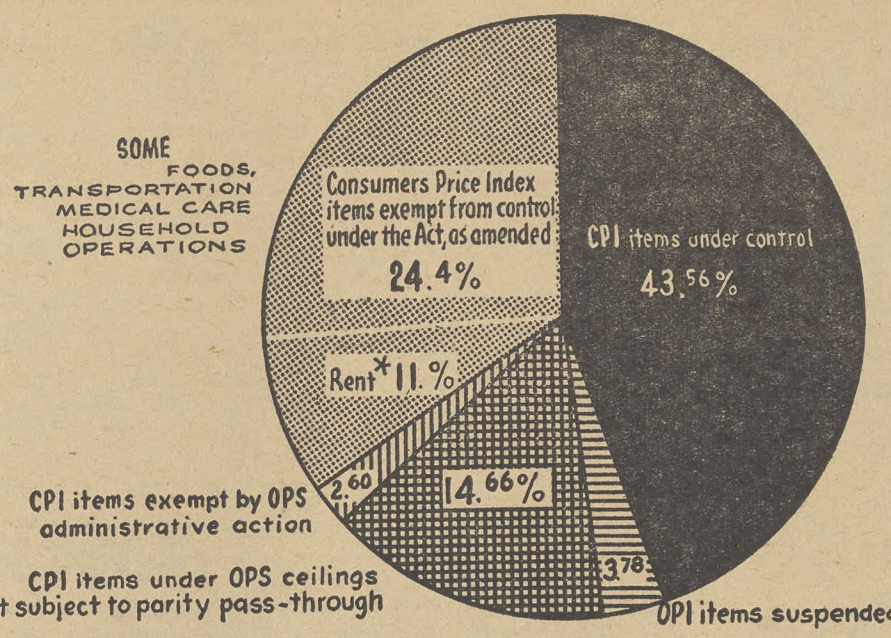
"Despite high national levels of employment and production, there have been signs of weakness. Post-Korean inflation distorted markets and pressed down on wage and salary earners and pensioners.

"The inflationary price level priced many families out of the markets. The buying power of large groups of the population has failed to keep pace with the economy's ability to produce civilian foods and services.

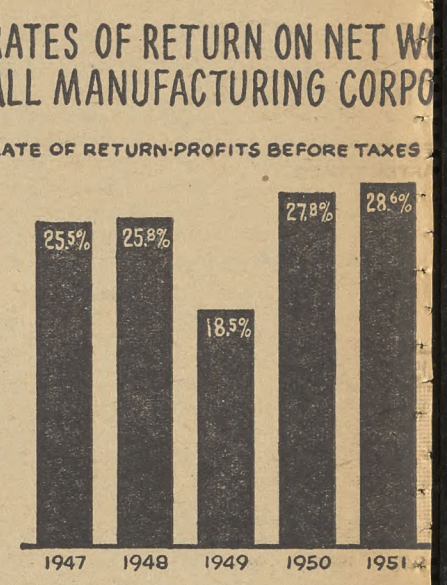
"The index of durable goods production (such as steel and other metal products) —related to the defense effort—has continued to show strength. But the non-durable goods production index (textiles, clothing, shoes) has reflected the uneasy levels of consumer spending since the spring of 1951.

"And there is neither a widespread backlog of consumer demand, nor any substantial consumer savings among low and middle-income families that can be easily converted into spending."

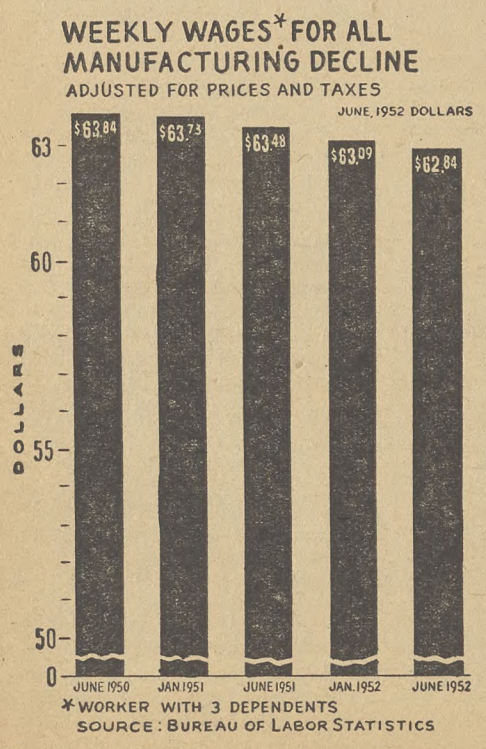
Murray maintained that deflation is a danger from within the economy, while international tensions offer "the threat of resumed inflationary pressures." The danger of further Communist aggression, he said, may make it necessary to boost expenditures and production for the national defense, rather than curtail them.



More than half of all living costs now aren't effectively controlled.



That's part of reason why busin



Because of price boosts, tax hikes, real wages declined.

"Sharp rises in the prices of a few raw materials could start a new wave of business hoarding, a buying spree and price gouging," he said.

"After the Korean war started, it took more than two months before an economic stabilization law was passed and several more months to establish a price control agency. When controls finally were established—seven months after the war in Korea began—there were few meaningful price rollbacks.

"The consequence of congressional indecision in those early months after the Korean outbreak has been a price level that is now about 12% above June 1950. That experience should have taught us all the importance of nipping inflationary pressures in the bud."

Inadequate From Start

Murray divided his report into three sections—economic stabilization, business price policy and the role of government in the economy.

Economic stabilization started out with a Defense Production Act that was inadequate from the start and has been weakened by amendments ever since, he wrote.

"From the beginning," he continued, "it was impossible to control food prices effectively. Amendments to the act in 1951 and 1952 have eliminated completely any hope of placing firm controls on food prices under the existing law.

"It has been impossible, under the act, to place margin controls (down payments) on the commodity exchanges where raw materials (such as tin, lead, wool, cotton, wheat) are bought and sold. While down payment margins for purchases on the stock exchanges were increased to 75% under the authority of New Deal legislation in an attempt to curb speculation, during the wave of post-Korean inflation the commodity exchanges were left scot free.

"No attempt was made to control effectively the extension of commercial loans which fired the engines of inflation after the Korean outbreak. On the other hand, rather inflexible controls for consumer and housing credit—with insufficient concern for the needs of low and middle income families—were imposed by the Federal Reserve Board. And now, under terms of 1952 amendments to the law, those credits have been removed."

Murray analyzed the Capehart, Herlong and other amendments to the Defense Production Act and showed how they combined to force consumers' prices ever upward.

"We are compelled to face the fact that there no longer is a comprehensive price control program," he concluded. "Price controls and the price control agency have been in the process of liquidation for the past few months."

He emphasized that the basis for rigid control of wages—the only control that has stuck—"no longer exists."

Real Wages Drop As Profits Climb

The buying power of average weekly earnings of workers after taxes has declined in the last two years despite sharp increases in productivity and profits, Pres. Philip Murray pointed out in his final report to the CIO.

"In June 1952 dollars," he said, "the average weekly earnings—after taxes—of manufacturing workers with three dependents declined from $63.84 in June 1950 to $62.84 in June 1952, a decline of more than 1.5%.

"The buying power of workers' earnings has failed to grow with the expansion of the civilian economy's ability to produce."

But with inflationary pressures still a threat, he urged standby control legislation as a safety measure.

"The new Congress," he wrote, "should arm the government with authority to impose controls — indirect as well as direct—whenever necessary, without the legislative and administrative delays that occurred in 1950. Such controls should be imposed immediately if living costs—especially food prices and rents—move up steadily. If food prices do not rise, there will still be the need for selective controls on the prices of those raw materials yet affected by the pressure of defense production."

The CIO president was strong in his condemnation of the pricing policies of business. As in the 1920's, he pointed out, "business generally has taken advantage of high levels of demand in recent years to extract the highest possible profit."

"In addition, administered and monopolistic price arrangements have been frequently used to keep profiit margins and prices high, despite the economies of high volume production and rising productivity," he said.

Danger of High Prices

"High prices—growing out of excessive profit margins as well as inflationary pressures—endanger the continued expansion and development of the economy. This condition must be countered now if the mass consumption base of the economy is to be maintained and strengthened. It is of no value to wait until a depression is upon us to start a rash of price-paring in an atmosphere of shrinking markets, panic and fear of bankruptcy."

Business has geared itself to a system under which it can make a profit at a moderate or even low level of production, Murray said, even though unit production costs decrease as production rises. Productivity since 1948 has been rising at an average of about 4% a year, he continued, and despite wage increases, unit costs have dropped—"although labor costs are only one factor in production costs, industry seems to behave as if it were the only factor." The high prices have cut mass purchasing power.

"We must expand our ability to consume the growing output of our economy," Murray wrote, "if high levels of production

PAC Campaigners Worked Hi

IN THE BITTER 1952 elections, the CIO's Political Action Committee reached its greatest peak of activity, and operated on a sounder basis than ever before.

These facts were revealed in the PAC's annual report, prepared a few weeks before Gen. Eisenhower's victory on Election Day.

"What is definite," PAC Dir. Jack Kroll said, "is that labor's political action is reaching maturity and will continue to grow in power and influence."

JACK KROLL

Kroll called the 1952 election "the sternest challenge" faced by the liberal forces in the past two decades. "Backed by a virtually unanimous press, aided by the total resources of the nation's advertising industry, financed to an unlimited extent by the nation's special interest groups, supported by all elements of a unified Republican party, and equipped with a national hero as their front man, the reactionary forces in the country made their most desperate drive for power," he reported.

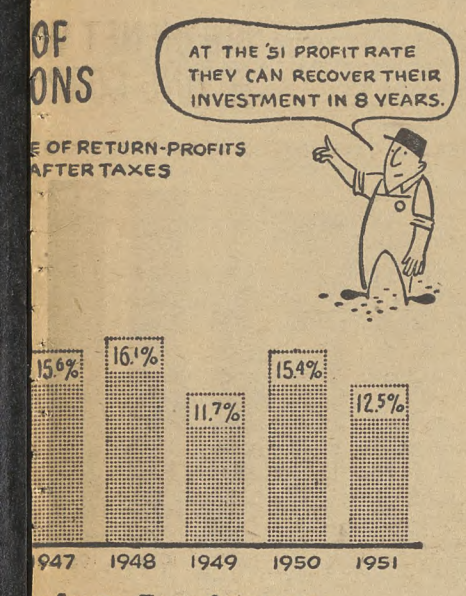
In opposition, was "the strongest, most active political movement in the history of the CIO," the PAC report shows. "More people, better informed on the techniques and know-how of politics, worked harder than at any time in the past."

During 1952, more trade union members registered than at any time in the past, PAC said, but it pointed out a conservative estimate showed 40% still were not registered.

While the increase in CIO registration during the past four years amounted to 12%, the need for continued registration work among members, and among their families where the registration percentage was far lower, was apparent.

PAC stepped up its activity among women workers and CIO wives as well as among minority groups, its report revealed. In the latter group, PAC was often the focal point for community activity, with heightened CIO prestige one of the tangible results.

In Coming Year



fits on net worth are at peak.

employment are to be maintained . . .
n increase in consumer buying power resent—to offset the probable trends overnment and business expenditures e near future—is necessary for the run health of the national economy . . .
basic solution of this problem would ve a change in business pricing prac-ivate groups in the economy have the of trying to balance wage-price-profit-tment relationships, but the govern-t must step in when they fail, Murray There is no need to fear such inter-ion so long as a democratic frame-k is provided, he continued, and there othing new in it. Unemployment in-nce, old age and survivors' benefits, price supports and similar legisla-of the last 20 years he described as lt-in stabilizers."
."

ill needed, he maintained, are improve-ts in coverage and benefits under the al Security Act, unemployment com-ation, workmen's compensation, a onal health insurance plan, low and le income housing, federal aid to ed-ion and standby programs to aid em-ment and consumption when the econ-faces a turndown.

he maintenance of a sound economy sential," he concluded, "not only for welfare of the American people; it is ired by the demands of the inter-nal situation . . . We owe it to our-s and to the peoples allied with us ughout the world to husband our ngth and to maintain our national omy on a sound course."

Rigid Curbs On Wages Decried

MOST OF THE economic controls that were designed to protect the country against inflation have been swept away or weakened, but controls on wages are just as rigid as ever, the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray wrote in his final report.

"Wages, in effect, are controlled at several levels," he said in that section of his report dealing with the nation's economy.

"Adjustments in wages, fringes or other working conditions are negotiated by unions with management; market conditions and management both act as factors controlling such adjustments.

"The rules, regulations and time lag imposed by the Wage Stabilization Board are an additional controlling factor.

"In some of the soft parts of the economy, wage controls have become meaningless in the past several months, because unions in those economic areas have been engaged in battles to maintain current wages and working conditions against management attempts to obtain reductions.

Long Delays Cited

"There was a backlog of about 12,000 cases pending before the Wage Stabilization Board at the end of September: 3000 national board cases and 9000 cases before the regional boards. Many of those cases had been pending for three months or more. There were some 170 cases before the board at that time that had been held up for as long as a year because the WSB failed to adopt a productivity wage adjustment regulation.

"When organized labor decided, through the United Labor Policy Committee, to accept wage stabilization, it was specifically and emphatically stated that wage stabilization can be viewed favorably only as a part of an over-all economic stabilization program.

"Congress provided the government with an inadequate economic stabilization law in 1950. It made the law much weaker by a series of amendments in the two years that followed. Administration of the weak authority of the law has not been firm and effective. And now, the price control program is being abandoned—as a result of congressional action and soft markets.

"The facts—a weak law, soft markets in some parts of the economy, and collapsing price and production controls—are clear. The basis for maintaining wage controls under these conditions no longer exists."

ler Than Ever In '52 Election

AC's political education activities in outstripped all previous efforts. More 15 million pieces of literature were ibuted. Special efforts were made to material into CIO homes and CIO papers were supplied with pertinent vo television series were presented. the "People's Political Poll," was on tations for six weeks, while "Issues of Day," prepared in collaboration with CIO Publicity Dept. was presented 15 stations for 13 weeks. Response th was favorable, PAC reported.

UNE, one CIO member was a dele-and one an alternate to the Republi-National Convention. Two weeks later, CIO members attended the Democratic ention as delegates or alternates.

O Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter P. Reuther testified on lf of CIO before the platform-writing nittees of both parties. Later, the report recalled, the CIO Executive d recommended the Stevenson-Spark-ticket and lauded the Democratic orm as "the most liberal and progres-ever adopted."

State and local council PACs recommended 287 candidates for House of Representatives, U. S. Senate and gubernatorial seats, and approximately 1000 CIO members were candidates for public office at all levels.

IN SUMMING up the year's activity, the PAC committee said: "The development of a politically educated and active membership, aware of the political forces at work within the framework of our government, and actively participating in the formulation and administration of government policy, is one of the greatest contributions we can make to the extension and development of our democracy. That contribution we are making daily and in an increasing measure."

The Political Action Committee: Philip Murray, chairman, deceased; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer; Jack Kroll, director; Joseph Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, James B. Carey, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Jacob Potofsky, Michael Quill, Walter Reuther, Emil Rieve, Al Hartnett, Emil Mazey, T. M. McCormick, William Pollock, Frank Rosenblum, Desmond Walker and Carlton Werkau.

Murray Told CIO—

'Labor Must Look To Future With Faith and Determination'

PHILIP MURRAY'S last report to the CIO, prepared a fortnight before his death, stressed his confidence that "democratic trade unionism will continue its forward progress."

Whatever the outcome of the election, he wrote just before the elections, ". . . even if a hostile administration or a hostile Congress were to sit in Washington, I am confident that the march of trade unionism will carry forward." The partial text of his report follows:

Increasingly, during the past few years, Americans in every walk of life have come to realize the beneficial implications of trade unionism in the American economy.

Ask the merchant in the industrial town, ask the farmer, what he sees in the effects of trade unionism and collective bargaining—and I think, in a steadily growing majority, his reply will show a keen recognition of the close relationship between his own welfare and that of the industrial workers. When wages are high, when employment is full and steady, the entire community cannot fail to enjoy the results.

The great surge of prosperity that has been experienced not only by industry but by the business and professional and farming blocs of our population are, in very large degree, closely related to the fact that workers' wages are higher than ever before.

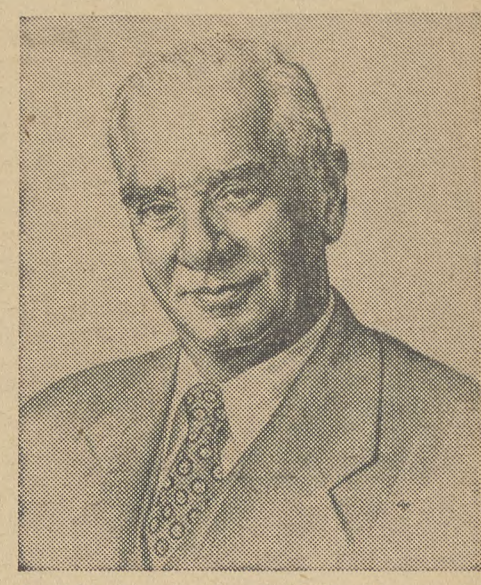
The high wage philosophy which organized labor has preached and practiced for half a century in this country is indispensable to continuing prosperity or to new vistas of economic growth. It is impossible to imagine an America prosperous without adequate and increasing wage levels. It is inconceivable that our millions of farmers can sell the products of their land in the absence of adequate and growing purchasing power in the hands of urban workers.

WITHOUT trade unions—free trade unions, effective trade unions, militant trade unions, powerful trade unions—the workers of America, whether organized or unorganized, will simply not enjoy the fair division of the national wealth to which we are entitled. The steel dispute of 1952—lasting over a period of many months and attracting great public attention not only in America but throughout the world—demonstrated in clear fashion, as other smaller disputes in other industries have also shown, that the deep-seated acquisitive instincts of corporation management overcome their sense of reason when wages are the issue. Many corporation executives, I am convinced, believe in the theory of high wages. The institutional advertisements of the corporations frequently praise the high wage philosophy that underlies our American prosperity. But altogether too many corporations somehow cannot see their way clear to practicing that high wage philosophy when it affects their own employes.

So, whether the employer be liberal or paternalistic, or reactionary and archaic, unionism is absolutely essential for the protection of the workers and for the strengthening of prosperity of community and nation.

AMERICAN LABOR must always look to the future with imagination, with faith in our destiny as a nation, with constant determination to push out the boundaries of our material well-being, our security as individuals and as a nation. We have faith in the ability of man to control, for peaceful and constructive objectives, the destinies of this world we inhabit.

In a nation so abounding in natural resources and in technical knowledge, we should be able to devise plans and projects that will bring the benefits of our society to those large groups at the bottom of the economic ladder to whom the bright sun of general prosperity is still as far distant as the daylight seen from the bottom of a mine shaft. We should be able, by general agreement, to provide that necessary security against the hazards of illness, of old age, of disability, of unemployment which dominate the lives and thoughts of so many citizens.



A 1951 pen sketch of Philip Murray by Coak, The CIO News cartoonist.

OUR ALLIES in the free world have long been looking to America for moral and spiritual leadership in these matters, which, in the long run, rank in importance with the short-run necessities of military preparation and defense.

There is abundant evidence that the peoples of Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin America have been confused and bewildered by many of the intemperate and thoughtless speeches of the 1952 political campaign. We owe it to ourselves and to our friends and neighbors abroad to remove that confusion and to show them that the American democratic system is flexible and capable of reacting quickly and forthrightly to the needs of its people.

We have gone a long way toward achieving respect abroad by our decisive resistance to Communist aggression in Korea. We have spoken, not only with words, but with the lives of our young men, to show that we will not allow aggression to succeed. It is clear that the successful resistance to Soviet aggression undertaken by the people of America and our friends in the United Nations has, over the last two years, increased the will of the free world to defend itself.

THERE ARE SIGNS that elsewhere in the world Soviet aggressive imperialism has been restrained by the progress of economic recovery and military rearmament in the free world—processes stimulated by cooperation between our government and other free countries.

But the free world cannot relax. Whatever the zigzags of the Soviet line, there is yet no reason to believe there has been any change in their drive for a totalitarian world.

I know it is the intent of the members of the CIO, and of the people of America as a whole, to continue the support of the United Nations and to strive to strengthen that world organization in its powers to take collective action for collective security in defense of individual nations and individual peoples. The United Nations remains the great hope of the world for peace and freedom.

Supplemented by our constructive programs of information, of mutual security, and of technical assistance to the underdeveloped areas of the world, the foreign policy of the American people and their government will strengthen democracy in its years of challenge from the Kremlin.

In the years ahead, as in the years gone by, the CIO will play a leading role in the struggle for human freedom—in the continuous battle of God-loving men and women against racial persecution, intolerance, selfishness and greed.

World Scene—

U. S. Must Talk To Peoples, Not Rulers

THE CONSTANTLY broadening scope of organized labor's interest in world affairs was reflected in the report of the International Affairs Dept.

It showed that the department, working jointly with the International and Latin-American Affairs Committees, followed world developments with close attention, and in accordance with CIO policy, supported programs aimed at strengthening free trade unions and promoting peace and prosperity. Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers is chairman of both committees.

JACOB POTOFSKY

The report recalled the CIO's recognition that Russian imperialism has made the building up of military strength of the free world necessary, and that this strength, coupled with the free world's economic revival, has deterred the Soviet from further aggression. It commended the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the European Defense Community, and welcomed steps toward similar arrangements in the South Pacific. The United States, it pointed out, has a "prime responsibility" to convince Asians that 19th century imperialism is dead.

"We believe that our government," the report went on, "should continue its major role in organizing the defense of the free world. We insist, however, on the principle of true equality of sacrifice, both within the nation and between nations, if our whole effort is not to be self-defeating."

It called for full sovereignty for the West German Federal Republic and support of the Schuman Plan.

CIO support of the Mutual Security Program, including mutual defense, the Mutual Security Agency, Point Four and other programs, was restated. But the report warned that military defenses alone are not enough in opposing communism. It is also necessary, the report pointed out, to "maintain internal economic conditions adequate to safeguard against the political consequences of serious economic deterioration."

"The CIO believes that the security of the democratic world will be based in the final analysis upon the strength of democratic institutions within the countries that comprise it," it said.

"It believes that the free trade unions constitute one of the most important of those institutions, and the MSA must expand and intensify its efforts to encourage and support the development and growth of free unions so that they may play their proper economic and political role so necessary to a strong and healthy democracy.

"At the same time, the CIO cautions against any possibility that the increased military emphasis may be regarded as diminishing the necessity for labor participation."

THE REPORT on activities of the CIO European office, headed by Victor G. Reuther during the last year, points up one of the failures in the MSA program.

"Paradoxically," it says in discussing France and Italy, "production and national income have shown marked signs of recovery since the immediate post-war period. However, social and economic problems have arisen which clearly indicate the failure of the workers to share in the recovery.

"A weak free trade union movement in both countries, unable to win real wage adjustments and impose social reforms on powerful conservative industrial and political groups, is a strong reason why a large part of the working population continues to support the Communists.

"On the other hand, the social irresponsibility of these groups and the steadily mounting social tensions and frictions which it engenders feed the growing support for anti-democratic forces of the right among non-working sections of the community."

THE SECTION flatly declared that MSA efforts to boost production have been carried on with too little regard for the workers—although they have strengthened democracy.

"But through the CIO office in Europe and from CIO observations in the rest of the world," it continues, "it is plain that to be effective . . . American policy must direct itself towards the people of the world, to the workers, in factories, in mines, in the shops, in the offices and on the farm, and not to their rulers. More attention must be paid to family budgets than to national budgets and more concern must be shown for the prices families must pay to live than for the profits corporations collect."

International Committee members are: Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman; Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, James B. Carey, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, David J. McDonald, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum and Michael Ross, secretary.

Latin American Affairs Committee members are: Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman; L. S. Buckmaster, Lewis J. Clark, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Martin C. Kyne, Willard Townsend, David J. McDonald, Emil Mazey, Ralph Novak, David Sternback, R. J. Thomas and Ernst Schwarz, executive secretary.

Regional Conferences Aid Work Of CIO State, City Councils

THE 1952 report of the CIO Councils Dept. reviews accomplishments of the past year and sets forth needs for improvements.

Inter-council conferences were held in seven major regions. These include New England, Middle Atlantic, Southeast, South Central, Pacific Coast and the Western Mountain States, a Midwest region centered on Chicago, and another centered on Columbus, O.

These meetings "dealt with the important and basic issues of state workmen's compensation laws, state unemployment insurance laws, and the duties and methods of state councils generally."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and also director of councils and organization, delegated responsibility for the management of the regional conferences and the preparation of guide books used at the meeting to Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of councils and CIO assistant general counsel. Smith worked in consultation with Haywood and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

The guide books used at the conferences have since been published. One on workmen's compensation was prepared by Sec. Treas. Jacob S. Clayman of the Ohio CIO council. Harry Kranz, legislative director of the New Jersey CIO Council, prepared the other guide book, on unemployment compensation.

"Few activities of the CIO in recent years have been greeted with more enthusiastic response on the part of the people participating," the department reported.

Problems faced by the councils are listed as follows:

- "Per capita taxes remain, in too many cases, on the low levels originally fixed in 1938."
- "There are far too many instances in which local unions are not affiliated to the councils in any way. In other cases, locals may be affiliated, but they are not paying per capita tax on their full membership."
- Attention also was called to the effectiveness of Rule 20 in settling disputes over the election of representatives to executive boards of state councils.

CIO Sympathy Voiced On Death Of Weizmann

IN THE MIDST of its own grief last week, the CIO joined in mourning the death of the great Jewish statesman, scientist, inventor and humanitarian, Dr. Chaim Weizmann, first president of the Republic of Israel.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey sent this message of condolence to Joseph Sprinzak, now Israel's President:

"The six million members of the CIO join with democratic labor all over the world in mourning the death of Pres. Chaim Weizmann. We of organized labor knew him as far more than a superb statesman and the heroic founder of a great republic. We knew him as a magnificent democratic leader and humanitarian.

"In Pres. Weizmann was fused the genius, idealism and nobility of spirit that only rarely in history enriches human progress so immemorably. The promise of a genuinely democratic world and international fraternity has been immeasurably advanced by Chaim Weizmann's unique life and contributions to human dignity and brotherhood."

N. Y. Guild Protests Race Tags In Press

The New York Newspaper Guild has joined in a campaign to have New York newspapers drop racial tags, particularly Negro and Puerto Rican, from their crime stories.

Recently, New York newspapers, charging a "crime wave" existed, have been using racial tags in all crime stories. The Guild is aiding a fight begun by the Citywide Coordination Committee Against Racial Bigotry.

'Shockingly Delayed Action' On Health Measures Rapped

CONGRESS has "shockingly delayed action" on essential public health measures, the CIO Committee on Social Security reported.

Reporting that new union health centers have been established and many new improvements won in collective bargaining provisions dealing with health and medical care, the committee pointed out that these gains for CIO members do not diminish the need for federal legislation. It termed the gaps between need and service "appalling."

"The American Medical Association has maintained its shortsighted and selfish opposition to adequate health measures," the committee said. In contrast, "Our unions have continued in the forefront of efforts to secure improved health facilities in communities and states as well as in Congress."

The committee reported continued and growing opposition from organized business pressure groups to improvements in social security.

"The same forces which originally opposed its enactment block essential improvements and seek to whittle away protection already provided by law," the committee said.

The committee charged that insurance companies have fired increasing attacks on state disability insurance legislation.

"They wish to have the field entirely to themselves because even under the few existing state laws, the great economy of state operations has tended to cut private margins," it pointed out.

Members of the committee are: Emil Rieve, chairman, Katherine Ellickson, David J. McDonald, Irving Simon, Joseph Beirne, Emil Mazey, John Yancey, Joseph Childs, Jacob Clayman and Harry Block.

GCEOC Charters Teachers Local

The CIO Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee has chartered its first local union of teachers in New York City. Raymond E. Diana, speaking for the committee, said several hundred teachers had joined the new local.

CIO Officials Serve Nation In 8 Mobilization Agencies

MEMBERS of the CIO continued during the last year to perform important work in government agencies concerned with the defense mobilization program.

The late Pres. Philip Murray of CIO and the Steelworkers and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers served on Pres. Truman's National Advisory Board on Mobilization.

On the Wage Stabilization Board, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers and Vice Pres. John Livingston of the Auto Workers served until they were forced to resign by the pressure of union business.

CIO members now on the board are Vice Pres. Joseph Childs of the Rubber Workers, John Brophy of the National CIO and Ben Sigal of the Electrical Workers. Delmond Garst of the National CIO is an alternate member, and David Stewart of the Oil Workers and Ben Fischer of the Steelworkers are serving on the WSB Review and Appeals Board.

In the Economic Stabilization Agency, Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers has been special assistant to the administrator.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers heads the Office of Labor in the National Production Authority, and Ted Silvey of the National CIO is deputy assistant administrator. H. H. Bookbinder of the Clothing Workers is deputy assistant administrator of NPA Textile, Leather and Specialty Equipment Bureau. Other CIO representatives are labor specialists in additional NPA divisions.

GEORGE L-P Weaver and Everett M. Kassalow of the National CIO are special assistants to the chairman of the National Security Resources Board. Carl Mattern of the Oil Workers is special assistant to the Petroleum Administrator for Defense, and Varrow Jones of the Steelworkers is special assistant to the administrator of the Defense Materials Procurement Agency.

Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg of the CIO Education and Research Dept. and Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council are CIO members of the National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee, with Mrs. Katherine P. Ellickson, associate research director, serving as an alternate member.

CIO Unions Report Organizing, Contract Gains In Past Year

Here's a digest of organizational growth and bargaining highlights of CIO's affiliated unions and organizing committees, as reported by Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood:

AUTO WORKERS: The UAW has approximately 1.3 million members in more than 1200 locals. It conducted "an intensive and highly successful drive to organize office and salaried workers covered by the UAW jurisdiction," winning 32 and losing five NLRB elections in this field.

BARBERS: Despite long strikes, attempted raids by rival unions and the depressed nature of the business in many areas, the Barbers Union retained its loyal membership and has 44 locals in 17 states.

BREWERY: "Continued organizing activities" brought 3382 new members into the Brewery Workers during the last year. The union won 26 out of 46 NLRB elections and growth in Canada accounted for nearly 40% of the total membership growth.

BROADCAST ENGINEERS: The Broadcast Engineers increased their membership in Canada where they organized the technical workers of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. as well as several subsidiary groups. The Canadian Congress of Labor and the Steelworkers "aided immeasurably" in the Canadian drive.

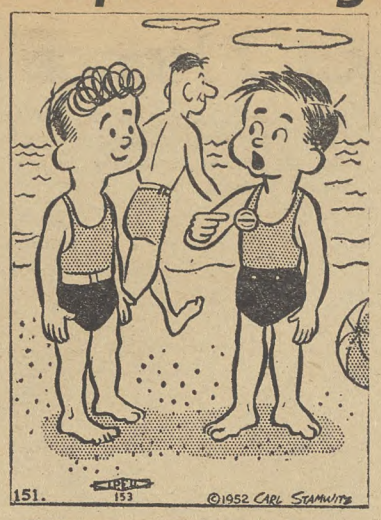
CLOTHING: The Clothing Workers credited organizing efforts and their union label campaign for organization of 98% of the workers in the men's apparel industries. ACWA reported its health centers in Philadelphia and New York City "provided medical care for thousands of members and at the same time supported extensive medical research programs."

COMMUNICATIONS: The first year's operation has established as "a proven success" the new structure of the Communications Workers under which the locals deal directly with the international. The structure replaced a three-level operation. A defense fund of 50c per member per month, "will underwrite more militant action for the benefit of telephone workers everywhere."

ELECTRICAL: The Electrical Workers increased their membership by 65,000 during the past year and now represent 387,000 workers. Between its third and fourth annual conventions, IUE won 77 NLRB elections. Contract advances in 1952 were more impressive than during previous years and IUE again set the pace in the field. Organizing campaigns are being conducted in the Midwest in cooperation with the UAW, and in Canada with the assistance of CCL, the Steelworkers and Textile Workers.

FURNITURE: The Furniture Workers won 53 of 88 NLRB representation elections and obtained bargaining rights for 7305 more workers. Wage gains were reported in "every part of the country," and were "particularly substantial" in newly organized plants.

GAS, COKE: The Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers increased membership by 12,183 in the past year to bring the total to 71,695. "Practically every local has negotiated significant improvements in wages and working conditions since the 1951 convention," it was reported.



"I always wear Dad's Union button in swimming. He says it's the only thing nowadays that keeps a fella's head above water!"

GLASS: The Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers "successfully organized new plants covering 2500 members in 1952" and the total number of employes covered in these plants eventually will be 3800.

GOVERNMENT: "Consistent and substantial growth" was shown by the Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee. GCEOC "combatted" attempts to place new legislative shackles on government workers by "miltant organization and—where possible—by action to change office holders."

INSURANCE: The Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee hailed a contract covering 5000 employes in the largest insurance company in the world, Metropolitan Life, in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York City. IAWOC "continued to regain for CIO the last remnants of the insurance membership which formerly belonged to the expelled UOPWA."

LITHOGRAPHERS: The Amalgamated Lithographers boosted membership by 2000 during the past year, and have obtained the 36¼-hour work week for 90% of the membership. Vacations of at least two weeks have been won for 78% of the members and 26% of that number get three weeks. Paid holidays range from six to 11.

MARINE ENGINEERS: The Marine Engineers pointed to important improvements in agreements with dry cargo, tanker and collier operators on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coasts, and in the Western and Southern River Districts and on the Great Lakes.

MARINE & SHIPBUILDING: The Marine & Shipbuilding Workers won over 50% of plant-wide elections involving 2612 workers, 62% of unit elections covering 1489 workers, and 91% of union shop elections embracing 12,479 workers. Four major shipyards came under IUMSWA jurisdiction during the year.

MARITIME: The Maritime Union has 50,000 paid-up members, holds 188 working agreements, and as of July was the collective bargaining agent for crews of 733 ocean-going freighters, passenger vessels, tankers and colliers. The NMU Pension and Welfare Plan has paid members approximately $1.25 million in life insurance, accident claims and in-hospital benefits, with ship company contributions being raised from 25c to 50c for each man on the payroll.

NEWSPAPER: The Newspaper Guild's membership went "over the 25,000 mark for the first time in the Guild's history." The Guild credited its success to a four-paint local-ANG organizing program. Guild shop clauses have been included in 15 additional contracts, organization has been completed in nine departments of newspapers under ANG contracts, and 20 new groups representing 1119 persons were brought into the Guild.

OIL WORKERS: The Oil Workers in the past year succeeded in forming for the first time a coalition of CIO, AFL and independent unions in the petroleum industry that won total wage and differential increases for a half million workers.

OPTICAL: The Optical & Instrument Workers made "forward strides" so that its members' wages kept pace with the cost of living. UOIWA found the "wake freeze" handicapped its organizing drive at the American Optical Co. plant, Southbridge, Mass., but progressed in a drive to organize office workers in the optical industry.

PACKING: Since the 1951 CIO convention, the Packinghouse Workers increased membership by 16,000 in the past year and took part in government hearings that resulted in boosting the minimum wage for Puerto Rican sugar mill workers to 75c an hour. (Since the report was written, UPWA signed new contracts with two of the Big Four packers—Armour & Co. and Cudahy Packing Co.—containing wage increases, pensions and other benefits totalling 14½c an hour for 40,000 employes.)

PAPER: The Paperworkers won bargaining rights in 19 additional plants during the current year. Despite wage freezes, red tape, prolonged negotiations and most of all the Taft-Hartley Act which encouraged attacks by craft unions, UPA won its bargaining demands but had to resort to 27 strikes since its 1950 convention. In the two-year period UPA obtained general wage increases of 18 to 20c.

PLAYTHINGS: The Playthings Workers reported "after a prolonged period of internal turbulence," the union elected in May 1952 "a new administration dedicated to organization of the union's jurisdiction along the lines of principled trade unionism. A campaign has been initiated toward this end, and the officers hope soon to report substantial progress."

RADIO: By early 1952, the Radio Association held contracts with 211 companies. "Collective bargaining agreements were improved and pension and welfare plans strengthened and expanded," since the 1951 CIO convention," ARA said. The union pointed to the "unhealthy state" of the maritme industry and to ARA's record of pressing for "some degree of stability" and for "improved administrative procedures."

RAILROAD: The Railroad Workers hailed the period since the 1951 CIO convention as "the most successful" in its history. URRWA listed collective bargaining victories on nine railroads. As a result of legislation which makes the union shop and the check-off permissible in railroad contracts—which URRWA was instrumental in having passed—the union negotiated

"If you're running away, son, remember—don't take any lousy non-union jobs!"

union shop contracts with virtually all carriers under contract. When the URRWA signed a union shop contract with the Pennsylvania Railroad, it was "the first contract of its kind with a major carrier."

RETAIL - WHOLESALE: The Retail, Wholesale Union listed 15 groups that it has organized. These included S. H. Kress and Woolworth's in the South. Local 906 was credited with "organizing a shutdown of the Schulte chain which resulted in a great victory for the union."

RUBBER: The Rubber Workers won 39 representation elections out of 74, certification for four groups of workers in Canada, and 22 union shop elections. URW chartered 23 new locals, and 11 other new units recently organized were merged with established local unions.

SHOE: The Shoe Workers in the past year won a number of NLRB representation elections, "especially in Massachusetts, where many new union shop agreements have been obtained." USWA organizers are "in constant pursuit" of "run-away" shops, and the union is conducting a major organizing campaign centered in Pennsylvania.

STEEL: The Steelworkers "completed one of the most eventful years in its history," attaining the strongest position it has ever known in America's basic industry. USA-CIO reviewed its "long, protracted, bitter dispute with various companies in the industry over the question of wages, working conditions and union security" in 1952. It related how it "postponed strike action for more than 100 days at the request of Pres. Truman, in the hope that a possible solution would be found in the dispute."

The union struck only when the industry refused to accept the recommendation of the Wage Stabilization Board, but the walkout was interrupted by "prolonged legal developments." These culminated in a Supreme Court ruling that Pres. Truman had no right to seize the industry. Then the strike resumed and after several weeks the major companies settled for increases averaging 21.5c an hour, cuts in the geographic differential, tremendous economic benefits for iron ore miners, and a modified union shop.

The settlement "represents a major and significant advance for the workers of the steel industry, and indeed will have major and beneficial effects on the workers in other industries through the years ahead," the report said. The union reported "a current total of 2169 collective bargaining agreements in effect with 1695 employers in this country covering 1,062,668 workers and has 118 collective bargaining agreements with 110 companies covering 26,165 Canadian workers."

STONE: The Stone Workers chartered 11 new locals and two new groups affiliated directly with headquarters, won 17 of 26 NLRB representation elections, gained increases as high as 29c an hour, as many as nine paid holidays, union shops, improved vacation plans, group insurance and pension plans.

TEXTILE: Despite a recession in the industry and the splinter tactics of a defeated minority group, the Textile Workers won recognition in 131 plants employing 15,000 workers during the year. TWUA also negotiated contracts in the overwhelming majority of these plants and conducted organizing campaigns. There was a set-back in the northern cotton-rayon industry, "where a number of arbitrators have ordered wage reductions." Wage gains "continued in other branches, such as dyeing and finishing, carpet and rug" and "escalator provisions have protected the buying power of the workers in most divisions." TWUA extended "heartfelt thanks" to the National CIO and various international unions for aid in fighting splinter leaders.

TRANSPORT: The Transport Workers hailed winning the 40-hour week with 48 hours' pay for 45,000 municipal transit workers in New York City. TWU also listed other contract gains for these workers including "a pension system which compares favorably with the best in the transit industry anywhere in the U. S." The TWU Transport Division membership has doubled since the 1951 CIO convention.

TRANSPORT SERVICE: The Transport Service Employees obtained bargaining rights for six new groups of workers in California, Florida, New York and North Carolina. Half of these are non-operating railroad or Pullman Co. workers—"a significant gain in view of the general employment trend in the railroad industry."

UTILITY: The Utility Workers chartered 15 new local unions, added several groups to established locals, won 12 of 20 NLRB elections, and gained wage increases averaging 14c an hour.

WOODWORKERS: The Woodworkers scored "notable" organization gains in the South "in the face of intensive anti-union activity on the part of manufacturers, individually and in association." IWA conducted a series of strikes in the U. S. and Canada to gain wage demands, chartered 25 new locals to bring the total to 279, won 39 of 60 NLRB representation elections, eight union shop elections out of eight, and 32 elections or certifications in Canada.

Labor Daily Backed

The Kanawha Valley Industrial Union Council in Charleston, W. Va., has unanimously endorsed Labor's Daily. The paper is published by the AFL Intl. Typographical Union. The CIO Council urged members to subscribe to the paper and hailed it as "pioneering a new era in the progress of organized labor."

Congress Reforms Held Key To Legislative Gains

THE 83RD CONGRESS should enact reforms in election procedures and revise the methods by which Congress conducts its legislative business, the CIO Legislative Dept.'s annual report emphasizes.

"Anti-democratic conditions that persist in the selection of Senators and Representatives in parts of our nation, coupled with the congressional committee tenure system, continue to concentrate power over legislation in the hands of a comparatively small number of reactionary members," the department said.

"Gerrymandered congressional districts and widespread failure of states to reapportion districts in accord with population shifts are denying millions of Americans the full value of their vote. These factors, in combination with the poll tax, permit a minority of the population to control Congress and open the door to overwhelming influence on legislation by reactionary vested interests."

The department bitterly criticized the 82nd "horsemeat" Congress, which it said "almost action for action," followed the pattern of the Republican-controlled 80th.

82nd Congress Hit

"Few Congresses in history have produced as unenviable a record of subservience to vested interests and indifference to the needs of the American people as the 82nd Congress," it declared. "Had the infamous 80th Congress—to which the 82nd bore a strong legislative resemblance—not intervened, one would have to go back many decades to find another Congress with so many shortcomings."

The report paid tribute to the liberal minority in the Congress for "their valiant and consistent efforts to stem the reactionary tide," and said that the similarity between the two Congresses is not surprising when the nature of coalition rule in Congress is understood. Both Congresses had the same Republican leaders, it charged.

"The 82nd Congress, by virtue of Dixiecrat collusion with GOP leaders," it said, "was actually, for practical legislative purposes, just as much a Republican controlled Congress as the 80th.

"This is indicated by the fact that in the case of nearly all controversial measures, bill after bill was passed or defeated by votes showing a majority of Republicans on the winning side and most Democrats on the losing end."

The balance of power rested with the minority group of reactionary Dixiecrats, many of whom held committee chairmanships, the department said. It was their support of the reactionary GOP legislative program that enabled the latter to win its objectives without nominal control of Congress.

The control of the 82nd Congress by the Dixiegop Coalition "re-emphasizes and underscores the urgent need for reforms, the department said. It called for a continuing attack on the methods used by reactionary forces to gain and maintain control over Congressional legislation.

"Congress itself must join in the fight to provide election procedures that will insure a national legislative body truly representative of all the people." it declared. "This is essentially a national problem and as such places upon Congress the responsibility to act for the nation as a whole in this matter."

In addition to reforms of the election processes, the department said Congress must undertake many long-overdue revisions of its own rules and operations.

Seniority Criticized

"In both chambers," it charged, "one of the most disgraceful and discouraging shortcomings is the slavish adherence to the tenure system in determining committee chairmen and appointments to committees. In the midst of complex social and economic problems requiring special knowledge for intelligent understanding, this practice in making committee appointments stifles and thwarts the legislative process."

The department said that labor has been made especially aware of this shortcoming because of the "fantastic" make-up of the House Labor Committee. That committee, it pointed out, has been dominated by members from agricultural districts who possess practically no understanding at all of the complexities of industrial relations.

Congressional committee chairmen and members should be elected by democratic choice and vote of their fellow members in each Congress, the department urged.

The department's analysis of action in the last Congress on bills in the fields of labor, economic controls, civil rights, immigration, foreign policy, housing and rent control, social security, education, regional development and natural resources, monopoly, universal military training and veterans, reveals almost no important constructive action.

The department pointed out that, in the coming year, the new Congress, whatever its makeup, can be made responsive to the will of the people only if CIO members back home make their views known to their Representatives and Senators by writing them as legislative issues arise.

"Congress will be apathetic to the needs of the people only if the people permit it to be so through indifference to legislative processes," the report said.

Youngsters Got Shortchanged

"The Congress which showed no concern about providing sufficient food for children's stomachs likewise did nothing about insuring adequate food for the nation's minds," the Legislative Dept. report declares.

Placing blame for both of these shortcomings squarely at the door of the House Education and Labor Committee, the department said that the committee kept important labor and education measures bottled up without giving Congress a chance to vote on them.

"There is little hope for a square deal for either education or labor as long as this important House committee remains dominated by men who care little for the promotion of educational and labor welfare."

TV Programs Expanded By CIO Publicity Dept. In '52

THROUGHOUT the past year, the CIO Publicity Dept. used every available medium of communication in its efforts to tell the story of the story of the CIO and its position to union members and the public.

It encountered a fluctuating press reaction to CIO, Pub. Dir. Henry C. Fleisher reported. This reaction ranged from highly complimentary when the CIO's statement on ethical practices was adopted at the 1951 convention, to outright hostility during the long steel dispute.

The year was marked by CIO's entry into the increasingly important field of television, Fleisher noted. In conjunction with CIO-PAC, the Publicity Dept. produced a 13-week, 15-minute series entitled "Issues of the Day." These films combined short dramatic sketches with interviews with leading public figures, and were shown on a number of stations, with local councils or groups of unions purchasing the air time.

Discussing future CIO interest in television, the report called it "perhaps the most effective medium of communication now available." Recognizing the high cost of TV broadcasts, the report added, "It is clear, however, that the CIO and its affiliated unions cannot afford not to make use of television in the future."

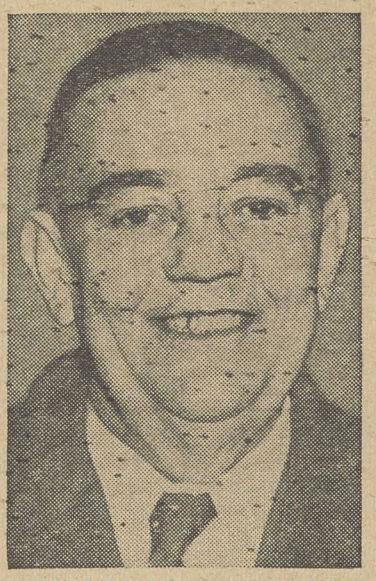
During 1952, The CIO News continued to "serve as an accurate source of information about our organization and to present, faithfully and conscientiously the opinions of our organization on a great realm of issues," he reported.

NOTING THE need for expanded circulation of The CIO News, Fleisher called attention to its function as "a partial antidote to the falsehoods, or the lack of authoritative reporting, about the CIO in the general press."

The Publicity Dept. also arranged for the appearance of many CIO spokesmen on a variety of sustaining radio programs, devoted to discussions of pressing national issues.

In July, the department director attended the first Publicity Conference held by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Berlin. This conference developed an extremely good public relations program for the use of unions in less developed areas and discussed common problems faced by trade unions in telling the story of workers to the public.

First Year Success Of CIO Peace Plan Hailed



DR. GEORGE W. TAYLOR

IN ITS FIRST full year of operation, the CIO's "Family Peace Plan," designed to settle internal jurisdictional questions, has proven a complete success.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray reported the mechanism for this "rational settlement of disputes" was clearly "a remarkable piece of pioneering."

"The mere existence of a fair and impartial method of settling such disputes has had the effect of making the disputants more willing to settle their intra-union differences amicably and informally," Murray said.

Exec. Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood reported the machinery, which operates through the Dept. of Organization which he heads, has had "remarkable success," proving it "an act of great vision, one calculated to win the endorsement of all trade unions and the respect of the whole American public."

Dr. George W. Taylor, an outstanding expert on labor-management relations and on union problems, was retained as arbitrator under the plan. He has worked in close cooperation with Haywood and the International Unions involved in such cases.

During the year, 32 jurisdictional disputes were brought to the attention of National CIO. Of that number, 19 were settled before reaching arbitration.

Dr. Taylor has handed down decisions on seven cases and decisions on the six others were pending.

Business Hostility To Annual Wage 'Cushion' Decried

THE CIO COMMITTEE on Guaranteed Annual Wages reported that "American management, on the whole, has so far refused to face up to its responsibility of providing steady jobs and income to American workers."

Five years after the Advisory Board to the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion adopted a strong statement for guaranteed wage plans, the steel companies "still" refused even to join with the CIO Steelworkers in exploring this form of security, the committee found.

"Our demands in regard to guaranteed annual wages deal with a fundamental problem which must be solved by American democracy," the committee said. "The relatively high level of employment in the last 12 years has not wiped out memories of past depressions. As recently as the spring of 1950, unemployment approached 5 million, and even during the current defense effort, many thousand of our members have suffered temporary or prolonged employment."

Members of the committee: Otis Brubaker, chairman; Katherine Ellickson, Ted F. Silvey, Solomon Barkin, Gladys Dickason, Nat Weinberg, Rosalind Shulman and Joseph Swire.

Place Your Order Now!

Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS Postponed

Because of the death of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the postponement of CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention, publication of the CIO News' Convention Issue will be delayed.

Instead of publication on Nov. 24, the Convention Issue will appear on Dec. 8, immediately after the convention adjourns.

All convention orders now received will be mailed on that date.

Now, more than ever, all CIO local unions and councils will need The CIO News 1952 Convention Issue. Rush your orders to The CIO News, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Half-Century

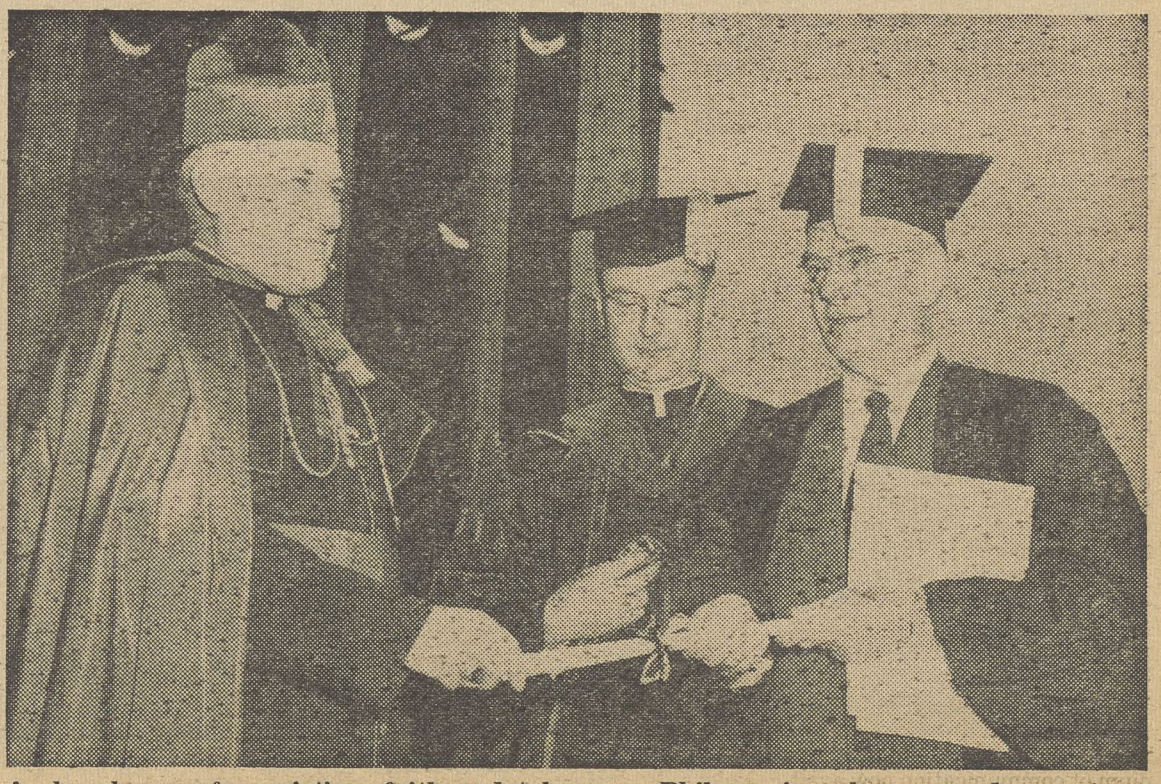
...World War II, and free American labor built the arms for ...il gets Medal for Merit from Sec. of War Patterson.

Phil had time for a smile and a greeting when youngsters were around, as on this tour of a Washington Community Chest agency.

...rch in Gary during historic 1949 national steel strike, in which ...won company-paid pensions and social insurance.

He landed some big ones on a fishing trip with Vin Sweeney (left), steel union publicity chief, and his nephew, Philip Murray Curran.

...thday" and high praise for his lifelong fight against bigotry ...l by a group of Negro leaders to Phil in 1949.



A churchman of conviction, faith and tolerance, Phil receives honorary degree from Archbishop Richard J. Cushing (left) at Boston College. (More pictures on next page.)

Philip Murray. 'And God Bless You All'

A friendly handshake between Phil and U. S. Steel's John Stephens opened negotiations in October, 1951.

But the steel deadlock, after months of bargaining, WSB sessions and Supreme Court arguments after seizure of the industry, last June exploded in nationwide strike that lasted eight weeks. Phil was chief spokesman for the union in the long dispute, afterwards urged industry and labor seek a more amicable pattern of relations.

(Continued from Page 5)

equality of sacrifice in the defense program. In 1950, he served as a member of the Advisory Committee to the National Security Resources Board and later, in 1951, as a member of the President's National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy.

One public office which Philip Murray held for many years, and of which he was proud, was that of school board member in his home town of Pittsburgh. He had a deep and continuing interest in education—the interest of a self-educated man determined that all children should have the educational opportunities destiny had denied him.

Murray received honorary degrees from Howard and Duquesne Universities and from Boston College, and held innumberable positions with public service organizations working in the fields of charity, health, civil rights and tolerance.

Served Nation Often

He served on numerous government boards during the past 25 years. Among these were: the Pennsylvania Regional War Labor Board, 1917-18; National Bituminous Coal Production Committee, 1917-18; National Industrial Recovery Board, 1935; NPA Advisory Council, 1935; Labor - Management - Agriculture Policy Committee of the War Manpower Commission; Advisory Committee, Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion.

He was long interested in strengthening the international bonds of free democratic trade unions. He was a vice president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and was active in its work and growth.

But his main interests were his union and his family. He was married on February 7, 1910 to the former Miss Elizabeth Lavery, who was with him in San Francisco when he died. Their adopted son, Joseph W. Murray, who lives in New York City, flew immediately to the West Coast.

In his last speech, Phil Murray was looking to the future, but recalling the past as well. He spoke of the early days of the Steelworkers Union, when the first contracts were signed in 1937.

Wages at that time were 62½c an hour, Murray recalled at the last meeting he addressed. In the 15 years since then, the Union had made tremendous gains, until today the average rate is $2.08 an hour, plus vacations, insurance, pensions and a host of what are known as "fringe benefits" but which add up to better living for thousands of workers and their families.

Those weren't gains won easily or quickly. They were achieved after the hardest kind of fighting—on the picket line, at the negotiating table and often in government forums. They were won, Phil Murray always said, by the fighting hearts of the millions who made up the CIO and its strong unions.

But it was Phil Murray who led the way to those victories, many of them achieved because of his breadth of vision and personal confidence. Such victories and the single-mindedness that made them possible, would have made some men arrogant, remote and tough.

They made Phil Murray tough in mind and body. But he always remained simple, humble and soft of heart. He was a reasonable man, who found no reasonableness in injustice, to which he reacted with fierce anger.

He drove himself hard, but he never forgot how to laugh, or to cry, either.

He was a devoted man—devoted to his church, his country, his family, and devoted as well to the millions of CIO members.

Millions Loved Him

In return, Phil Murray had the genuine affection of millions of workers whose lives had been made better through his untiring efforts.

As he left the last union meeting in which he was to ever speak, Phil Murray turned and said:

"Good night and God bless you all."

It was his parting message to the workers he loved so well and had served so faithfully.

A few hours later Philip Murray was dead. He died as he had lived, simply and quietly, alone with the woman who had shared the griefs and joys of 42 years of marriage.

The people who love freedom, all over the world, were saddened at the loss of one of the world's great fighters for freedom and democracy.

The members and officers of the CIO were bowed with grief. They had loved this simple man, who had lived and labored to win for them more of the better things of life.

A great man had gone to his reward.

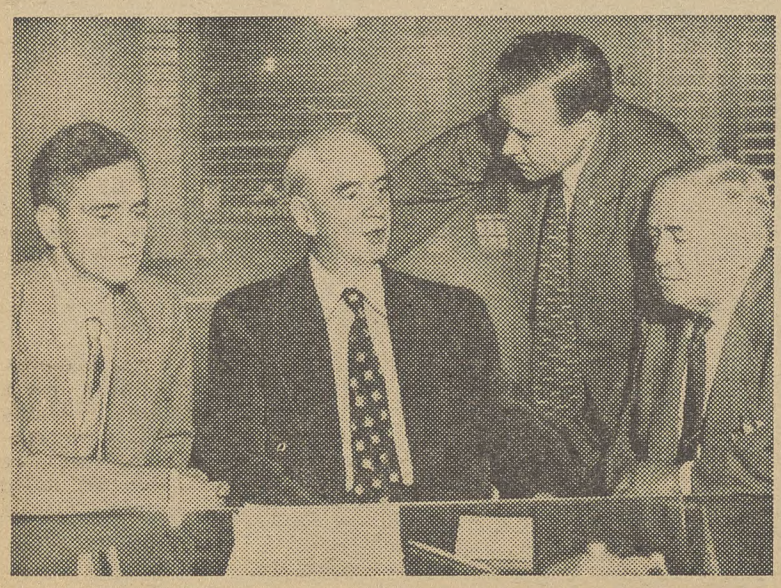
Anniversary

The death of Philip Murray in San Francisco on Nov. 9 came on the 17th anniversary of the formation of the CIO.

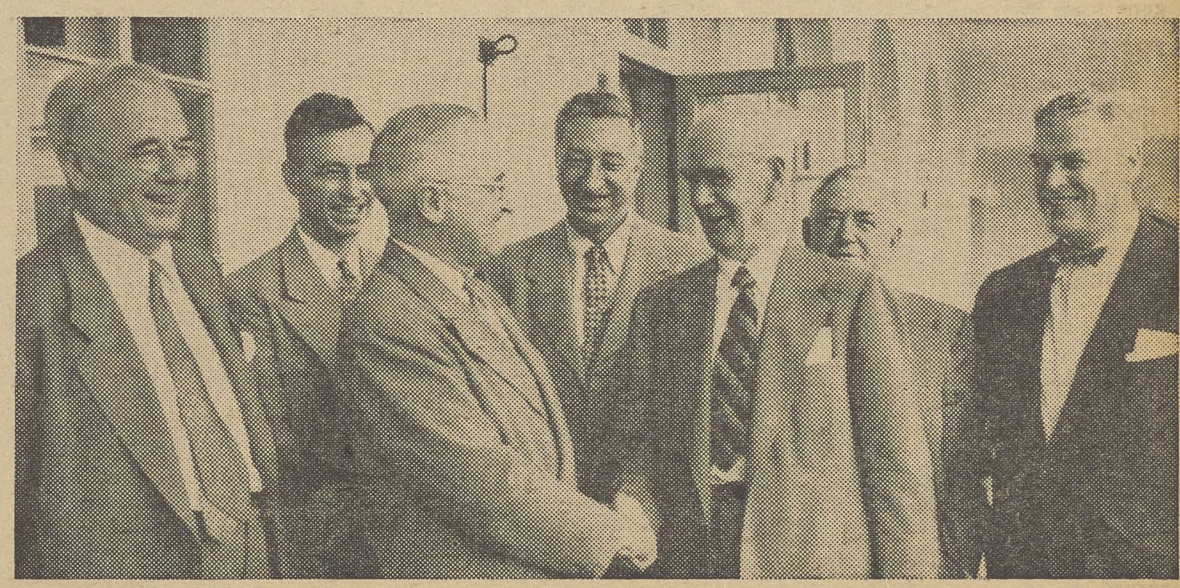
It was on Nov. 9, 1935 that officials of seven unions of the American Federation of Labor met to form the Committee for Industrial Organization, designed to bring union organization to workers in the mass production industries. Later this action was to bring a split with the AFL and the formation of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Murray, a vice-president of the CIO in its early years, became president late in 1940 and held that post until his death.

A young man of the Miners.



While steel strike was on, Phil conferred in Chicago with CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.



At the White House, Phil exchanges warm greetings with Pres. Truman during PAC rally in capital. From left: PAC Dir. Kroll, Carey, USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, Haywood, USA Sec. Treas. David J. McDonald.

H.S.T., Ike, Adlai Mourn Loss Of Murray

THE NATION'S top political leaders last week joined the workers of America in mourning the death of Philip Murray.

In a message to Mrs. Murray, sent immediately after announcement of the CIO president's death in San Francisco, Pres. Truman said:

"I am deeply saddened by Phil's death. In your own grief perhaps it will help to remember that his contribution to our contemporary life was extraordinary, that he served his country well, that he always will be revered by millions. Mrs. Truman joins me in that prayer that God may give you strength and peace."

The President also telephoned Mrs. Murray. He issued the following formal statement:

"Philip Murray's death is a loss to the labor movement, to the industrial community and to his country.

"As labor in the last 20 years has increased its strength and its responsibility through rapidly expanding organization, Philip Murray has become respected generally as a Christian gentleman, as an able negotiator and as a man who could be trusted by his own people and by his employers.

"He served labor all his life. For many years he also served the government in various advisory capacities. He was currently a member of the Defense Mobilization Advisory Board.

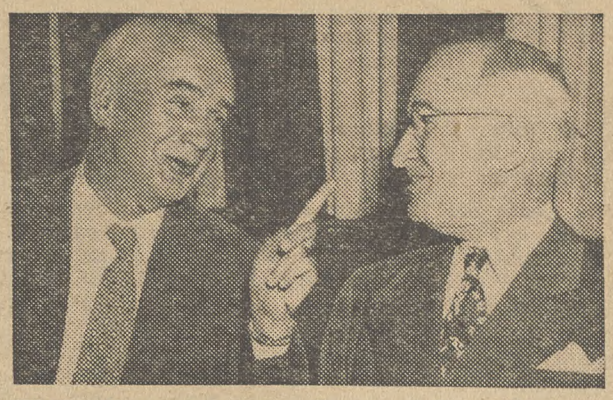
"Since the middle 1930s, he was president of the United Steelworkers and in 1940 he added the presidency of the CIO to his responsibilities. He carried on in both jobs during the difficult war years and the post-war readjustment. He was a sincere and devoted friend to countless Americans. I was honored to be among them and am deeply grieved by his death."

President-Elect Dwight Eisenhower, vacationing in Augusta, Ga., issued the following statement:

"For many years, Mr. Murray has been an effective force in the labor movement of our country. His tireless efforts on behalf of working men and women of his organization helped obtain increased protection for millions of American workers. I join with all others who had the opportunity to know him in mourning his death."

Gen. Eisenhower also sent a personal message of sympathy to Mrs. Murray.

From Springfield, Ill., Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson,



Philip Murray wags a finger at Pres. Truman at CIO-AFL dinner in 1950.

titular leader of the Democratic party, sent the following message:

"Many people in this country have lost a good friend, myself included. Philip Murray was a great leader in the labor movement. His life and work will be long remembered."

Murray's Last Speech—

'Build Your Unions--U. S. Is Going To March Ahead'

PHILIP MURRAY ended his life as he had lived it—talking with workers about their problems and looking with confidence toward a better tomorrow.

His last speech was in San Francisco at a banquet in his honor held by District 38 of the Steelworkers, as part of a Western regional conference. Pres. Murray was introduced by Dist. Dir. Charles J. Smith, who called him "the greatest man that labor has ever produced."

Speaking in a quiet, conversational tone, Murray outlined his personal views of the function of the trade union movement. It was, he said, "to feel the pulsebeats of the people; to live close to the people; to understand the people's problems; and then to use the constructive, intelligent strength of the organization to promote the well-being of the members of the union, to promote the well-being of the families of the members of the union, and by so doing to promote the well-being of nations."

Over the years, he recalled, the Steelworkers Union had firmly adhered to that code and as a result had increased average earnings from 62½c an hour to an average of $2.06 to $2.08 an hour. Added to this, he noted, were pensions, paid holidays, vacations and other gains.

Noting the increases in living costs during that period, Murray continued: "In January of 1937 the Bureau of Labor Statistics fixed the cost of living index at 99.1. In October of 1952 the cost of living index provided us by our federal government shows that living costs have gone from 99.1 to 194.2.

132% Better Off

"The average weekly earnings of people employed in our industry have gone up 221%. The material gains which run beyond the cost of living figures to which I have made reference from 1936 on to October of 1952 are 132.5% higher than they were in 1936. That is when you give due consideration to the increased cost of living, and you find just about the relative position that the average steelworker occupies today as against Jan. 1, 1937.

"In other words, your standard of life is 132.5% higher despite the increased cost of living today than it was on Jan. 1, 1937."

"I should not want anyone here to get the foolish notion that we are the only group in the United States that has benefited by these conditions," Murray observed.

"The increased purchasing power of our population has flowed into all business channels. It has provided opportunity for the greatest era of industrial expansion that has ever taken place in the history of this nation.

PHILIP MURRAY concludes his last union speech, only hours before his death. He looked with confidence to the future.

"Wherever you go you will find employers introducing new equipment, providing new facilities, to afford greater efficiency and increased production, or they may be expanding their plants to provide more employment for the workers. That is why we have about 63 million people gainfully employed in the United States today—the highest in the history of the nation. Our farmers are better off, of course, than they have ever been at any period in the nation's history. Businessmen are a great deal better off today than they ever have been for any sustained period in the history of the nation.

"Everybody is better off."

But, he continued, the job was far from done. "I have consistently contended that this great nation of ours has not even scratched the surface of its own economic possibilities . . . There is no reason why, in the course of the next 10 years, people will not be much better off than they are even today."

The fight to organize strong labor unions had been a long, hard and often bloody one, Murray recalled. "I can remember distinctly, oh, just some 25 years ago, being chased over the hills of West Virginia and Pennsylvania and Kentucky and Tennessee. I could not go into a town to organize people. A federal court in the northern district of West Virginia at one time served me with 32 injunctions."

"Do you know why," he asked. They were for "calling meetings to organize workers." Such meetings, Murray said, were violations of what he called "the 11th Commandment . . . Thou shalt not organize people."

In those days, he recalled, people "were hungry, hours of labor were long, conditions of employment were bad, and wages were miserably low. In 1931 and 1932 I went into mining towns in the State of West Virginia where children were eating out of garbage cans. People were living in hovels. No pictures on the walls, no carpets on the floor, no music in the homes. The working population of the United States of America was suffering and in too many instances was starving. Disease, sickness and poverty were rampant and, yes, death stalked in the wake of every worker's family because he could not purchase medicine."

Taft-Hartley Evils

Turning his attention to the Taft-Hartley Act, Murray detailed the way it could be used to smash unions in time of rising unemployment and he recalled news items on "the legislative program suggested by the National Association of Manufacturers for the new Congress."

It contains, he said, suggested amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act, providing in substance:

1 "That is must become more difficult for workers to organize in plants that are not now organized.

2 "That there must not be industry bargaining.

3 "That the act should be amended under certain conditions even to restrain employers and labor unions from engaging in company-wide bargaining."

On the subject of new legislation, to be proposed by the incoming Republican administration, Murray said: "We will lend wholesome, constructive support to any administration that has in mind the progressive measures that the people of the United States want to promote the well-being of the people of the United States, and we shall resist with all our power any effort on the part of special political groups to deprive people of certain of their constitutional rights which they enjoy."

The future to which labor looks, Murray continued, is that which the average American seeks, "a little more of the sunshine of life, a little more of the good things of life."

"They are looking for more slum clearance, more home construction, more television sets, more schools, more and better medicine. That is what America is looking forward to. It is not going to turn its back on those things. It is going to march ahead."

And, he continued while the delegates applauded loudly, "nobody under the canopy of the blue heavens outside here tonight is going to prevent America from marching in that direction."

In what was to have been his last speech, Phil Murray concluded with a plea for building stronger unions. "Build, make it stronger, solidify your ranks, close your ranks, cooperate and work with the leaders of your organization."

"Thank you, good night and God bless you all."

Big Steel Praises Murray

U. S. STEEL CORP. last week posted notices in all its mills and mines suggesting that all employes observe "one minute of reverent silence" in memory of Philip Murray.

It was typical of the industry's tribute to the man who had fought them hard and often across the bargaining table.

U. S. Steel suggested the minute of silence be observed at 11 a.m. Thursday, the hour the requiem high mass started.

"With the death of Mr. Philip Murray," the U. S. Steel notice read, "the United States has lost a great citizen and the steel industry has lost a great champion."

The notice was signed by Benjamin Fairless, U. S. Steel president and board chairman, who also paid tribute to Murray in these words: "The United States of America has lost a great citizen as well as a great labor leader. While differing from his point of view at times, I always had respect for Philip Murray as a Christian gentleman."

John A. Stephens, U. S. Steel vice-president, noted, "I feel that I have lost a friend as well as an associate. Publicity with regard to our differences (in negotiations) always overshadowed the more numerous instances in which we found ourselves in agreement on basic mutual objectives."

John Bugas, vice president in charge of industrial relations for the Ford Motor Co., said: "Philip Murray's death has taken from labor an able, an honest and courageous champion."

All U. S. Labor Joins In Mourning Murray

The entire American labor movement joined in paying tribute to CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Some of the statements and messages:

Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, CIO Auto Workers:

"The death of Philip Murray is a tragic loss to the labor movement of the free world and to the cause of social justice and human freedom everywhere.

"In his lifetime Philip Murray dedicated himself to the task of bringing a fuller measure of economic security, human dignity and happiness into the lives of working people. He will be long remembered by the millions whose lives he enriched.

"No one better understood the hopes and aspirations of the working people, and no one worked as hard in the vineyards of American democracy to make it possible to realize these hopes and aspirations.

"In the struggle against Communist tyranny and all forms of totalitarianism, American democracy was strengthened by Philip Murray's leadership, vision, courage, and devotion.

"We in the UAW-CIO have lost a true friend, the labor movement a great leader, and America a great citizen."

Pres. James B. Carey, other officers and Executive Board, CIO Electrical Workers:

". . . Since the establishment of our union to smash the Communist infiltration of our industry, IUE-CIO has benefited from Mr. Murray's staunch support and wise leadership in the struggle between Communist subversion and Americanism.

'A Tragic Blow'

"Mr. Murray's death is a tragic blow to the American trade union movement and free labor unions throughout the world. His unswerving devotion and service to the advancement of all American working men and women have endeared him to millions of ordinary Americans he loved so well.

"A man of deep religious feeling, gentle manner and a passionate belief in the justice of his dedication to working men and women, Mr. Murray brought to the leadership of the CIO the virtues of humility and great wisdom.

"Mr. Murray's death is a loss to every American who works for a living. The world is a better and finer and more hopeful place for his having devoted his life to the working people of America. His memory and works will be cherished by future generations as deeply as they are honored by us."

Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union in an editorial in The Pilot, the NMU's publication, wrote:

"It is very difficult to express in ordinary words what Philip Murray meant to us as members of the CIO. He was the spark that built the prestige of the CIO to a height which few believed it would attain. He established stability and responsibility to such an extent that those in industry who feared it had to respect its constructive leadership. He was a statesman and a fearless fighter for equal rights for all people, regardless of race, creed or color."

AFL Pres. William Green telegraphed Mrs. Murray: "I was tremendously sorry when I learned of the death of Brother Philip Murray. Notwithstanding differences of opinion between us for reasons best known to the public, I always held him in high regard and esteem . . . I consider his death a great loss."

Pres. John L. Lewis, and other officers of the United Mine Workers joined in a telegram to Mrs. Murray:

"It is with a deep sense of shock and regret that we learned of the passing of your husband today. As a former officer of the United Mine Workers and as president of the CIO, Philip Murray held a distinguished place in the economic and public life of our Nation.

"Through the years of trial and tribulation that have beset the men and the women of the American labor movement Mr. Murray has made a contribution that will not be forgotten. We extend our sympathy and condolences in your sad bereavement."

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum and Executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg, CIO Clothing Workers:

"The sudden and unexpected death of Philip Murray comes as a great shock to American and world labor and to all his fellow citizens who knew how unremittingly he fought for the well-being of all men and women who toil.

"He died as he lived, fighting for peace and human decency. His loss is a great blow not only to the CIO and the United Steelworkers but to all other trade unions which look to him for his inspiring guidance and leadership.

"Philip Murray's life from the coal pits to the highest position militant American labor could offer him was a true saga of struggle and sacrifice, setbacks and triumphs, all in behalf of those who have known poverty, misery and exploitation. He will never be replaced in the hearts of those who knew him and had the exalted privilege of fighting by his side."

Pres. Emil Rieve, CIO Textile Workers:

"Now that Philip Murray is dead even his enemies have words of praise for him, but those of us who loved him in life are well aware that words cannot add to his greatness nor fill the void left by his passing—the void in the nation, in the labor movement and in our hearts . . .

Inspired Affection

"More than any other figure of our times, with the possible exception of Franklin D. Roosevelt, he had the faculty of inspiring personal affection at any distance. He was a great leader and a great man. He leaves all with a solemn obligation to remain true to the ideals he personified."

O. A. Knight, CIO Oil Workers president: "The untimely death of Philip Murray leaves a scar on our hearts which never will fully heal. Our union has lost a leader, whose wisdom, fairness, understanding and statesmanship can never be completely replaced. May God grant that those of us who survive shall always remember the virtues of this truly great man and that we shall try to carry on the work of the CIO in the pattern which he fashioned."

Woodruff Randolph, president Intl. Typographical Union, along with other union officers: "We who knew Philip Murray as a man and as a distinguished leader in the organized labor movement have been inspired by his devotion to his principle of life and the enormity of his contributions to the cause of working people everywhere. He was a great unionist and a great citizen."

J. A. Brownlow, president, AFL Metal Trades Dept.: "The working people of America have lost a true friend and a real champion. His accomplishments maintain for him a place in the nation's history which will live forever."

The CWA News, publication of the CIO Communications Workers, said:

"Tribute to this leader of American labor was paid immediately by the mighty in industry and government, but the greater tribute lies in the hearts of millions who, while not knowing Philip Murray carried some of his spirit in their living because of the dignity they have achieved from his work and sacrifice.

"The Communications Workers of America has joined with the family of CIO and all free labor in mourning the passing of this great American. Our debt to Philip Murray can never be paid. Our grief is infinite."

Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell, CIO Shoe Workers, wired Mrs. Murray: "Labor and workers in general have suffered a great loss. For many years the force of his leadership has been felt all over the country and thousands of workers have benefited from the gains made during the years he has been the leader of organized labor."

The CIO Newspaper Guild: "There has been taken from us a great leader, of labor and of the people. His wisdom and courage is lost at a time when it could not be more needed. The best tribute to our lost leader is to close ranks and press on toward the goals of human love that were, and are, his and ours."

Pres. Michael J. Quill and Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz, New York City CIO Council, wired Mrs. Murray: "The officers and executive board members of the New York City CIO Council mourn the loss of your husband and our great leader. His untimely passing leaves a deep void in the hearts of all those who have known him and accepted his leadership. Not only the labor movement but the nation is bereaved by the loss of this great man."

Millions Mourn

Pres. William Steinberg, CIO Radio Association, wired Mrs. Murray: "I am deeply grieved at the news of Phil's death. He devoted his life to making the world a better place to live in and he will be mourned by millions of Americans who benefited from his lifetime of work in their behalf."

Pres. A. L. Hayes, AFL Machinists: "I extend my deepest sympathy. I have known Pres. Murray personally and I knew him to be a great champion of democracy and the plain people, and his death is a loss not only to the CIO but actually to the plain people in the United States."

Clinton S. Golden, former USA-CIO vice president: "Profoundly shocked and saddened over reports of the death of Phil Murray. He died as he lived, in the service of his union and the working people of our country."

Pres. A. R. Mosher and Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald, Canadian Congress of Labor: "The executive board of the Canadian Congress of Labor has learned with the deepest regret of the death of your great president, Philip Murray. By his contribution to the welfare of the workers in the United States and Canada he has won a place in history as one of the great labor leaders of the world."

Vice Pres. Matthew Woll, American Federation of Labor: "I have always regarded Phil as a faithful and trusted leader in labor, public and social affairs—one whose services will be greatly missed and difficult to replace."

J. William Belanger, president of the Massachusetts CIO Council and a director of the CIO Textile Workers:

"Philip Murray's death is a great loss to the labor movement and the nation."

CIO Statements—

'The World Is A Better Place Because Of His Services'

The following statement was issued in San Francisco on Nov. 9, by Vice Pres. James Thimmes Sec.-Treas David J. McDonald and General Counsel Arthur Goldberg, of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO:

"WE ARE GRIEVED to announce the sudden and untimely death of Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and of the United Steelworkers of America. His passing will bring sadness to workers throughout America and the entire free world.

"Philip Murray devoted his life to the cause of labor and democracy. He worked tirelessly for these causes, and the world is a better place because of his services to the people for greater human dignity, for the advance of mankind's wellbeing. His passing fills our hearts with grief, for we know his place can never be filled."

The following day, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood issued the following statement on behalf of the Executive Board of Congress of Industrial Organizations:

"THE PASSING of Philip Murray is a matter of deepest grief to the officers and members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. During a half century of devoted service, he gave the American trade union movement a new measure of social responsibility and devotion to the cause of democracy.

"Philip Murray was elected to the presidency of the CIO in a period of crisis. He gave us dignity and strength, and he brought stability and confidence that the CIO would play a permanent role in building a better America. Not only in America but wherever the cause of freedom is treasured, the name of Philip Murray was held in admiration and respect.

"Obviously we in the CIO can never forget this service to our cause, nor the statesmanlike quality of his leadership."

Churchman Hails Murray's Courage, Zeal

RELIGIOUS LEADERS of all faiths joined in mourning the death of Philip Murray, sending messages of condolence and tribute to Mrs. Murray, the Steelworkers and the CIO.

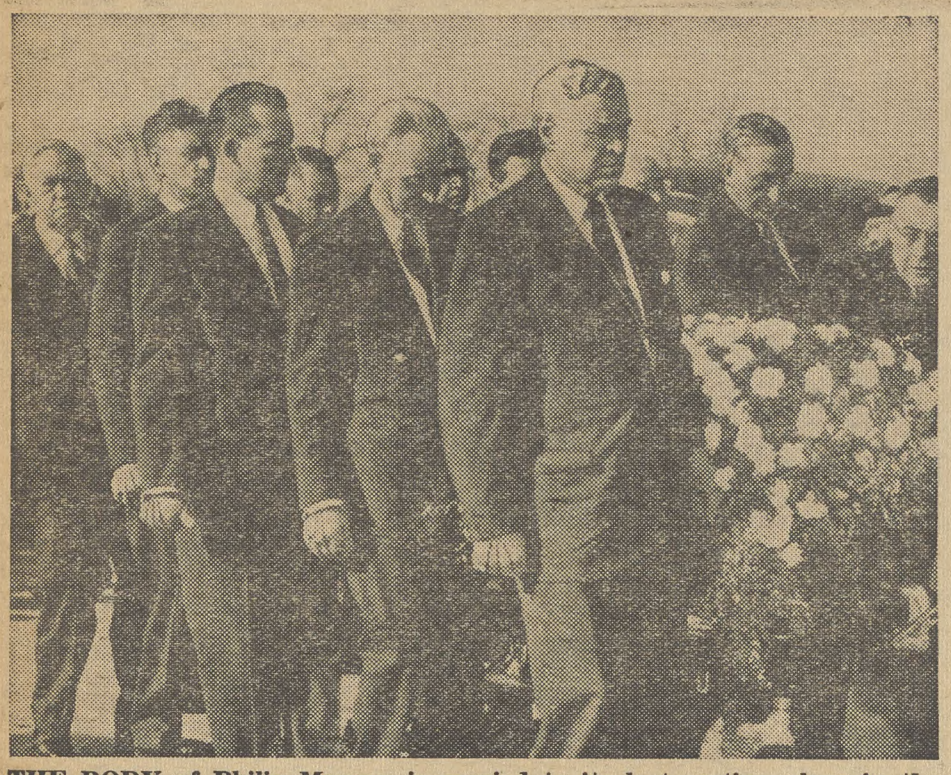
Typical of these statements was that of Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle of Washington, chairman of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. Archbishop O'Boyle said:

"The death of Philip Murray is a great loss not only to the Congress of Industrial Organizations but to the entire American labor movement and indeed to all of us, his fellow citizens. Thanks to his genius as an organizer, his courage and selfless zeal, the American labor movement has become a tremendous force for good in the life of the United States, serving not only the interest of its own members but the general welfare of all the American people and contributing much, particularly in these latter years, to the cause of international peace. Mr. Murray always kept before himself the cause of social justice.

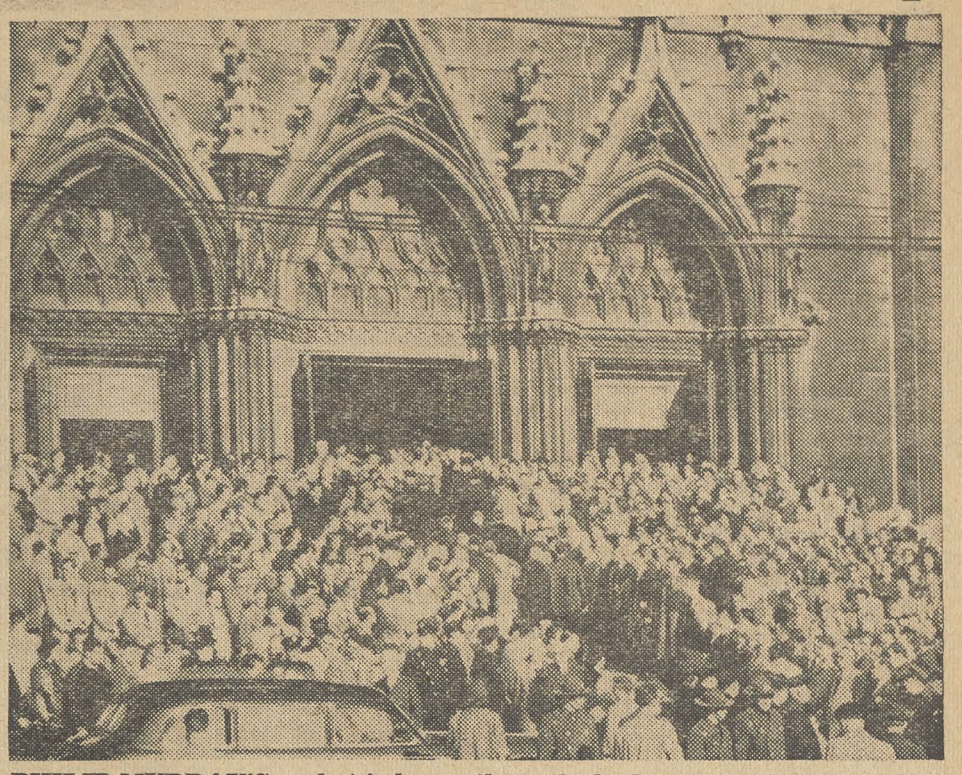
"He went to work in the mines in eastern Pennsylvania as a very young boy, and while still in his teens, was elected to office in his local union. From that day to the very moment of his sudden and unattended death in San Francisco, he labored unceasingly to build up a strong and effective trade union movement in the United States and to encourage harmonious labor-management relations.

"He was a God-fearing man, a Christian gentleman, and truly a man of the people. May his noble soul rest in peace and may his bereaved widow be comforted in her grief by the knowledge that he will always be held in grateful memory by the country which he loved so dearly and to which he contributed so much as one of its most distinguished citizens."

Thousands In Last Tribute To Philip Murray



THE BODY of Philip Murray is carried to its last resting place in the little cemetery near his Pittsburgh home. Fellow labor leaders, relatives and friends were active bearers. In the picture, left to right, Allan S. Haywood, James B. Carey, Murray Curran, John Murray, David J. McDonald, James G. Thimmes and Pat Fagan.



PHILIP MURRAY'S casket is borne through the huge crowds surrounding Pittsburgh's St. Paul's Cathedral where a solemn requiem high mass was chanted for the repose of the soul of the man who led the CIO for 12 years. Thirty priests, seven monsignori and the Rt. Rev. Francis J. Haas, Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich., attended or participated in the mass.

More About Death

(Continued from Page 3)

porters "I lost a great friend," to officially represent him at the funeral. Political leaders of both parties and the top management of the steel industry he knew so well, also announced plans to attend the final services.

In an unprecedented move, the U. S. Steel Corp. suggested to all its mines and mills, that a minute of reverent silence in honor of Mr. Murray be observed at 11 a.m. Thursday, the time of the funeral. The Republic Steel Corp. lowered its flags to half-mast and issued a similar request to its employes and the the Ford Motor Co. followed suit.

One of the first industry spokesmen to praise Murray was Admiral Ben Moreel, chairman of the board of Jones & Laughlin. He said, "I feel that I have lost a true friend. After the recent disastrous strike in the steel industry, Phil and I, with Arthur Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO, and Lee Austin, president of our corporation, lunched together to discuss ways and means of avoiding repetitions of that costly strife.

"We had made plans to do this. What better monument could be erected to Phil's memory than for all of us, working together with good-will and faith in each other's integrity, to establish that complete cooperation of management and labor which he spent his life to achieve?"

On the eve of the funeral, the grief-stricken vice presidents and executive officers of the CIO met in Pittsburgh. It was a short simple meeting and out of it came four recommendations to the Executive Board which was to meet on the day after the funeral.

It recommended that the CIO Executive Board meetings and the CIO convention be postponed out of respect to Murray. It also recommended that his final report as president of the CIO, prepared several weeks before his death for delivery to the convention, be released on schedule and that a subsequent report, with an appropriate memorial to Philip Murray, be prepared for the convention's action.

Throughout the two days before the funeral, thousands filed past Murray's bier in reverent silence, many of the workers weeping openly as they paid a final tribute to the man who had never been too busy to help them solve their personal problems.

The newspapers, which had fought him bitterly during his lifetime, in death were friendly and saddened. They paid tribute to his genius as an organizer, his steadfastness in the fight for workers' interest, his warm smile, his real eloquence and his never-forgotten ability to speak the common language.

He was a man, they said, who always stood first for the welfare of the worker.

Those were words which would have pleased Philip Murray, for that is how he planned and lived his entire life.

Phil with Mrs. Elizabeth Murray.

Pallbearers For Murray Listed

Active pallbearers for the funeral of Philip Murray were:

Philip Murray Curran and James Malone, his nephews; John Murray, a brother; Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald, Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, and Smaille Chatak, all of the United Steelworkers; Exec. Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the CIO, Patrick Fagan, member of the Pittsburgh city council and Ed Lahey of the Chicago Daily News.

Honorary pallbearers were:

Members of the executive board of the United Steelworkers, the vice presidents of CIO and Mayor David Lawrence of Pittsburgh; John J. Cane, member of the Pittsburgh city council; Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, official representative of the President of the United States.

Sens. Harley M. Kilgore of West Virginia, Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, Matthew M. Neeley of West Virginia, James E. Murray of Montana, Wayne Morse of Oregon, and Herbert Lehman of New York; Reps. John W. McCormack of Massachusetts, Augustine B. Kelley of Pennsylvania, John Blatnik of Minnesota, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., of New York, and Herman P. Eberharter of Pennsylvania and Gov. John S. Fine of Pennsylvania.

John Brophy, CIO member on the Wage Stabilization Board; Dr. John R. Steelman, an assistant to the President; Judge Michael Musmanno of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court; Thomas Murray of the Atomic Energy Commission; Clinton Golden, former vice president of the United Steelworkers; Walter White, former executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; A. R. Mosher, president of the Canadian Congress of Labour; Boyd Wilson of the United Steelworkers; and Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director.

More About Funeral

(Continued from Page 3)

candles, it remained during the mass and the service for the dead that followed.

The final blessing was given by Bishop Haas, assisted by Fathers Rice and Holzer. Bishop Haas also gave a brief eulogy.

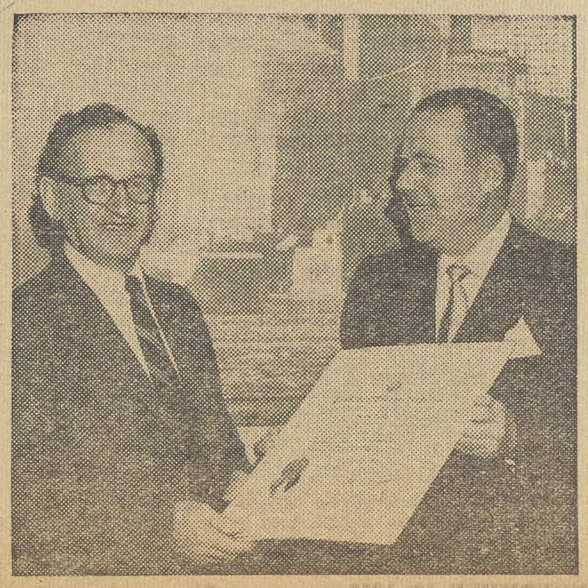
"All of us are here to pay our respects to a great, good man," he said, "and to get down on our knees and ask Almighty God, if there be need of it, to admit him to eternal life.

"Why was he a great, good man? Because he believed in certain things, and because he believed in them, he did certain things. The law of God was in his heart, and the law of conscience was in everything he did. The law of conscience was in his entire life. Take off from there, and you have the reason for his tremendous achievements.

"Because he believed in God, he believed in man. Phil Murray believed man was a person of being and judgment, endowed with the faculty to think for himself by his creator, and to be treated as a human being.

"Further, he believed a human being was a creature on whom God had conferred his own freedom—including the right to choose his own representatives.

"All this follows from the first precept that Phil Murray believed in God. Because he believed in humankind, he believed in democracy."



OUTSTANDING WORK in photograph journalism won for Sam Falk (left), New York Times photographer for 27 years and a CIO Newspaper Guild member, the first Certificate of Distinguished Service presented in his field by New York City. The presentation was made by City Commissioner of Commerce Walter T. Shirley.

Free Labor World Mourns For CIO Leader

Scores of messages of sympathy were received at CIO headquarters from organizations and individuals in foreign countries. Here are some of them:

J. H. Oldenbroek, secretary general, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions:

"On behalf of millions of free trade unionists throughout the world and the executive board of ICFTU, please accept heartfelt condolences on the inestimable loss suffered by American labor in the death of your great leader, Philip Murray. A son of the people who devoted his entire life in selfless service to the workers' cause, a staunch internationalist and a founder member of ICFTU, his passing will be mourned not only by American workers but also by a wide circle of friends and comrades in the international labor movement."

Clement Atlee, leader of the British Labor Party and former Prime Minister: "Deepest sympathy in the great loss you have sustained in the death of Philip Murray."

David A. Morse, director general, Intl. Labor Office:

"On behalf of ILO and personally our deepest sympathy goes out to the CIO and the family of Philip Murray on this great loss. My country has lost one of its foremost citizens and the CIO its most devoted servant. His kindly understanding strength was his greatest characteristic. This characteristic allied to a profound intelligence played a large role in building up your great organization and Philip Murray leaves behind a legacy of abiding memories which will help sustain those who miss him so much."

Pres. Walter Freitag and the executive board of German Federation of Trade Unions:

"We express to the CIO our deeply felt sympathy on the death of your most worthy president, Philip Murray. With the death of Philip Murray the international union movement loses an extraordinary personality who has contributed much to the raising of the living standard of the working man in America. Express also to the family our heartfelt sympathy."

Sec. Italo Viglianesi, Italian Union of Labor: "Please accept heartfelt condolences of Italian Union of Labor upon the death of Philip Murray, uncompromising champion of labor's rights."

Chairman Arthur Deakin, British Trade Union Congress: "Condolences and heartfelt sympathy in the passing of our dear friend and your great leader, Philip Murray."

Pres. Armando Sanchez, Sugar Workers Union, Puerto Rico, affiliated with CIO: "Puerto Rican labor movement joins in expressing profound grief at sudden death of our dearly beloved and respected Pres. Murray."

Pres. Johann Boehm and General Sec. Anton Proksch of the Austrian Federation of Trade Unions:

"With deep concern we read in today's papers of the unexpected passing away of your president, Philip Murray, one of the great figures of American and world trade unionism. Philip Murray was well known in Austria as the advocate of the industrial unions which developed so magnificently under his wise leadership and spread the benefits of trade unionism to broad sections of the American workers. But we also know he sincerely advocated the American aid programs which made it possible for European workers to overcome in a few years the ravages of the last World War and reach a certain amount of stability and well-being."

Message From Histadrut

Mordechai Namir, general secretary, Histadrut:

"We deeply mourn the untimely passing of Pres. Philip Murray, great man and leader whose dynamic personality imbued with profound idealism and deep love for suffering man and devotion to his advancement and happiness and whose life entirely and unselfishly devoted to the cause of labor freedom and international peace and cooperation served as an inspiration and example to labor in the world. We mourn him as a great friend of our national cause who stood by us in times of trial and struggle and whose tireless support, sympathy and understanding served as great encouragement to us on our way to statehood and emancipation . . . "

Pres. Erich Ollenhauer, Social Democratic Party of Germany:

"Grieved to hear of the sudden death of your president. Philip Murray was an outstanding leader of American labor, liked and respected far beyond his own country. His wise counsel will be greatly missed in the international labor movement. Please convey to his family and your organization our deep sympathy."

Leon Jouhaux, vice president representing labor on the governing body of the Intl. Labor Organization; former secretary general of the French General Confederation of Labor and founder of the Force Ouvriere:

"I learned with sorrow of the death of Philip Murray. Present to his family my deepest condolences. I bow before his mortal remains and share with the militants of the CIO the pain which they feel in the irreparable loss suffered by the American labor movement."

Pres. Gaston Tessier, Intl. Confederation of Christian Trade Unions:

"Learned with emotion of the death of great union leader. Express to his family sentiments of deep Christian sympathy."

Auguste Cool, president of Confederation of Christian Trade Unions of Belgium and a vice president of the Intl. Confederation of Christian Trade Unions:

"Confederation of Christian Trade Unions of Belgium participate in great loss and express sympathy to CIO. Will remember Murray in their prayers."

Sec. Leo Crawford, Congress of Irish Unions: "Deepest sympathy from the Congress of Irish Unions on the death of Mr. Philip Murray."

H. A. Chappell, National Pres. Canadian Brotherhood of Railway:

"We in the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees and other transport workers were shocked to hear of the sudden passing of Brother Philip Murray. Please convey to officers of your organizations and members of Brother Murray's family our deep and sincere sympathy."

Danes Sorrow

Pres. Eiler Jensen, Danish Federation of Trade Unions, who is attending UN meeting at New York City: "Deeply moved by death of President Murray. Beg to express my heartfelt condolences."

Theresa Casgrain, Quebec provincial leader, Cooperative Commonwealth Federation:

"The annual convention of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, Quebec section, expresses deep regret on the death of a great leader of the working people of America, Philip Murray."

Sec. Georges Delamarre, French Force Ouvriere: "We participate in the cruel mourning which strikes you in the loss of Philip Murray. We send you all our sympathy and our sincere condolences for the federation."

Pres. Ernst Scharnowski, West Berlin Section, German Trade Union Federation: "German Federation of Trade Unions, Berlin, grieves with you for your most worthy president, Philip Murray, and sends heartfelt sympathy."

A. Malave Villalba, acting general secretary, Venezuelan Confederation of Labor: "In the name of Venezuelan Confederation of Labor, please accept our deepest sympathy in the death of Brother Philip Murray."

German Condolences

Pres. Hans Jahn, German Railroad Workers Union:

"I express my personal sympathy as well as that of the railroad workers organized in the German Railroad Workers' Union in the heavy loss with which the CIO has been afflicted through the death of your highly honored president, Philip Murray. With his death the American and the international labor movements have lost one of their greatest representatives. His understanding for the German unions, and the help he accorded to their reconstruction will guarantee him permanently an honored remembrance."

Pres. Konrad Nordahl, Norwegian Federation of Trade Unions:

"Please accept my heartfelt condolences at the death of Philip Murray, a great leader not only of American but world labor. Please convey my condolences to his family."

Chairman Adolph Held, Jewish Labor Committee: "With profound sorrow the Jewish Labor Committee shares with its brothers and sisters of CIO, the loss of that valiant fighter for human rights, Philip Murray."

Boris Shiskin, economist, American Federation of Labor: "Phil's passing is a great loss to Americans and trade unionists around the world. To me he was a great friend, a grand person and a great man."

LABOR'S WORLD ROLE was of increasing concern to CIO Pres. Philip Murray in recent years. He was a vice president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Phil is shown in 1949 meeting with Arthur Deakin of British Trade Union Congress.

Congressional, Public Leaders Hail Murray

Here are a few of the many statements and messages on the death of CIO Pres. Philip Murray by American congressional and public figures:

Sen. Morse (Ind. Oreg.): "Philip Murray was a devoted Christian. He was the kind of Christian who believed in putting into practice the human values of Christianity in its entirety. His labor record was a record which indicated that he recognized that our capitalist system exists to serve the people and not the people to serve the capitalistic system.

"American labor and employers and the American people have lost a great industrial statesman and his loss will be sorely missed in the years immediately ahead. To his family I extend my sincere sympathy. May they take some comfort in the fact that Phil Murray was a great American."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) wired Mrs. Murray: "Am shocked and grieved over the death of your beloved husband and my dear friend."

Sen. Taft (R. O.): "Philip Murray was a great labor leader."

Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin: "I have lost a great friend, whose wise counsel and deep understanding of human problems have been invaluable through the years. Mr. Murray was one of the greatest Americans of our time. He understood the danger of communism and took an active part in the struggle against it. Few men have supported our struggle against this evil with greater vigor and a keener awareness of what is at stake than he and his associates."

Stuart Symington, Senator-elect from Missouri: "Deeply distressed at Phil's death. America has lost its greatest labor statesman and I have lost a beloved friend . . ."

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.): "I was deeply grieved to hear of the death of Philip Murray. His loss will be felt by working men and women in all industries to whom he devoted his life and dedicated his energies and talents. His monument is a lasting one—the American labor movement to which he contributed so much."

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.): "Philip Murray was a great labor leader, but above all, he was a great American. The Steelworkers' union that he helped build and the CIO which his leadership did so much to mature . . . will remain a living monument to his memory. The greatest tribute . . . is the fact that the labor movement can survive the loss and continue to build on the foundations Philip Murray did so much to lay."

Chairman Paul Herzog, National Labor Relations Board: "My four colleagues join me in transmitting heartfelt condolences on the passing of your revered leader. The nation is much poorer for the loss of a labor statesman whose integrity and unceasing devotion to the cause of collective bargaining have long inspired millions of fellow Americans."

Sen. Smith (R. N. J.): "Deeply regret sad news of the death of Mr. Philip Murray. Have always appreciated his sincerity of purpose and his able leadership for the things he believed in profoundly."

E. Roland Harriman, American Red Cross president: "On behalf of the board of governors of the American Red Cross, the staff and myself, I extend deep sympathy to the CIO in the great loss the nation and so many of us have sustained in the death of Philip Murray."

James J. Herkenham, Jr., director of labor union service, National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis: "Please extend to the membership of CIO, his family and associates, our deepest sympathy in the death of Philip Murray. His untimely death is not only a great loss to the labor movement but to the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis and the nation as well."

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, widow of the late President: "I am shocked to hear of the death of a great man, a great labor leader and a great American. Mr. Philip Murray contributed much to his country. We are all the poorer because of his passing."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV | WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 24, 1952 | 82 | No. 47

SILENT TRIBUTE to Philip Murray was expressed during funeral of late president of CIO and Steelworkers, as work stopped for a moment in steel mills. At Jones & Laughlin Pittsburgh mill, workers from left are William Kiray, Raymond Morgele and Robert Lees.

CIO Convention To Hear Adlai

—See Page 3

Taft, Martin Tell Ike What's What

—See Page 2

Taft, Martin Lay Down Law To Ike On GOP Policies

(See cartoon, Page 4)

By MILTON PLUMB

PRESIDENT-ELECT Eisenhower and other top leaders of the Republican Party last week began to lay down their plans for taking over control of the government next Jan. 20.

The General's brief visit to Washington brought another tremendous ovation to the man chosen by the American people to head their government during the next four years. An estimated half a million people—most of them U. S. employes who will have the job of carrying out the new President's policies at the working level—hailed the General warmly as he arrived to confer with Pres. Truman.

The latter had invited Eisenhower to a White House conference to discuss the shift in government functions. They spent an hour and 17 minutes together — both privately and with advisers — and afterwards Eisenhower described the meeting as "informative and instructive."

Eisenhower was accompanied by Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.) and Joseph M. Dodge, Detroit banker. He had earlier designated both as his representatives to confer with the Truman Administration in a liaison capacity about the budget and other matters.

Names 3 To Cabinet

In the midst of his conferences, the President-elect announced the first three members of his Cabinet, two of them with big business backgrounds. They are: Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors, as Secretary of Defense; John Foster Dulles, Wall Street lawyer (and author of Ike's "liberation" pronouncements during the campaign which worried U. S. allies in Western Europe), as Secretary of State; and Gov. Douglas McKay of Oregon, as Secretary of Interior.

ALTHOUGH the Republican Old Guard brass was excluded from the opening conference with the President, it was far from unheard from. Sen. Taft (R. O.), Republican Policy Leader in the Senate, timed his first press conference since the election to correspond with Eisenhower's arrival in Washington.

He beat the White House meeting by a couple of hours, making his views available to the press in plenty of time for the General to see them in a Washington newspaper, if he stopped to read one.

Taft told the press that:

1. He is "available" for the job of Senate GOP Majority Leader in the new Congress.
2. He has recommended to Eisenhower men to serve in the Cabinet.
3. He does not see "any necessity for Eisenhower's intervention" in the fight now going on among Republicans to determine the Senate GOP Majority Leader.
4. He thinks the new President should invite the chairman of the Senate GOP Policy Committee (his present post) and the chairman of the Senate GOP Conference, as well as the Senate Majority Leader, to his weekly legislative meetings.
5. He expects Congress to make "no substantial change" in the anti-strike injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, but anticipates that membership in the National Labor Relations Board may be increased from five to seven to give the GOP Administration "control" of the board.

Taft's outline of the Old Guard program, presented before Eisenhower had a chance to announce his own plans, was promptly picked up by other GOP Congressional leaders who with Taft had shaped the policies of the "awful" 80th Congress.

Rep. Martin (R. Mass.), slated to be the next Speaker of the House, said that he is in full agreement with Taft. He made his statement after Taft had obligingly walked across Capitol Hill to Martin's office to tell him what he had said in his news conference.

And Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) followed up by announcing that Taft is his choice for Senate Majority Leader. "He's available and I'm for him," he said.

The following day Taft and Martin conferred with Eisenhower in New York. The two former leaders of the 80th Congress outlined to the President-elect their legislative program for the 83rd Congress.

As he left the meeting, Taft was characteristically more communicative than Martin about what had taken place. He said that taxes and the 1953-54 budget had figured in the discussion and that the three had agreed on the necessity of asking the new Congress to extend the law empowering the President to submit government reorganization plans.

T-H Amendments

Taft said "the question of going ahead with amendments" to the Taft-Hartley Act also figured in the meeting, and that he intends to draw up proposals along the lines of changes he recommended in 1949, with some new alterations. He said, however, that he did not know whether these amendments would actually be submitted.

Other subjects which Taft said were discussed were the excess profits tax law, the question of continuing price-wage-rent controls, the expiring reciprocal trade law and a proposed commission to study the role of federal bureaus in health, housing and social security programs.

The meeting was "very harmonious," Taft said. "No differences of opinion developed that I know of." He acknowledged, however, that with the exception of the decision in regard to the Reorganization Act, no final conclusions had been reached.

REPORTERS noted that no foreign aid or foreign policy matters had been included in Taft's list. A reporter asked if he subscribed to the doctrine of "more trade and less aid" in dealing with Europe.

Eisenhower, however, revealed that he is supporting the government's present stand in the Korean truce deadlock—that there be no forced repatriation of Chinese and Korean war prisoners held by the United Nations.

This reaffirmation of U. S. policy came in a meeting between Ike and Sen. Wiley (R., Wis.), prospective Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman. Wiley has differed with Taft and other GOP isolationists in the past.

But everything that happened in the past week made plain that Taft and Martin will be in the driver's seat when the GOP 83rd Congress comes to Washington soon after New Year's Day.

Another Voice Is Heard From

Ex-Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.), who became a congressional favorite of the big business lobbyists and then a high-paid lobbyist himself, last week demanded a new assault on organized labor.

Speaking before the Ohio Chamber of Commerce in Cleveland, he attacked industry-wide unions in familiar language, claiming they make "the so-called trust of the 1890's pale by comparison." (For the facts on today's trusts, see Page 7.)

Ball's prescription for restoring union activity to its "proper" level: Restrict bargaining to local plants; prohibit all forms of "compulsory" union membership, the dues checkoff, and all company-wide or multi-employer bargaining and strikes.

PRES. TRUMAN and the man who will soon occupy the White House, Gen. Eisenhower, smilingly shake hands during their history-making meeting in Washington.

Truman Reaffirms Fair Deal, Cites Medical Care Needs

ONLY THOSE "blind to history" would interpret the Republican election victory as a mandate to end programs for social and economic progress.

That is Pres. Truman's belief. He made it plain in his first post-election speech, delivered last week in Washington to the Association of Military Surgeons.

Referring specifically to government-supported medical research and his proposal for national health insurance, the President said the nation's health problems are not, "for me at least, a matter of partisan politics."

"The health of the American people," he added, "is one of our basic national resources. It is as important to the welfare of our country as our land, our water and our minerals.

"Our National Government has been concerned about the preservation and development of these resources for decades. It is just as logical, just as important, for us to be concerned about health."

Truman recalled having named a committee of 15 prominent citizens, including UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, to study the entire problem of the nation's health and make recommendations. He said he had given the committee a free hand and that it was hard at work, conferring with experts and holding public hearings.

"I DO NOT KNOW what the commission will recommend, he continued. "But I have great confidence in its members."

The committee report is due next month, Truman noted, "Of course I cannot tell you what effect this report will have upon the new administration. I hope they will consider it on its merit. They would be wise to do so."

The attacks on his health program came, Truman said, from doctors who had been misled into believing it contained "some hidden danger to their livelihood and independence."

"Nothing," he added, "could be sillier."

'Real Progress' Reported By HST On Aid To Allies

PRES. TRUMAN last week told Congress that "real progress" has been made in strengthening the free world under the Mutual Security Program.

But, he added, "much remains to be done before the goals of the free world are safely reached."

The President, reporting on the first six months of this year, said that American arms shipments to western Europe were "considerably behind" schedule, partly because of Korean priorities. Consequently the North Atlantic Pact nations face "some delay" before their armies will be boosted to 50 divisions—a goal that was to have been reached this year.

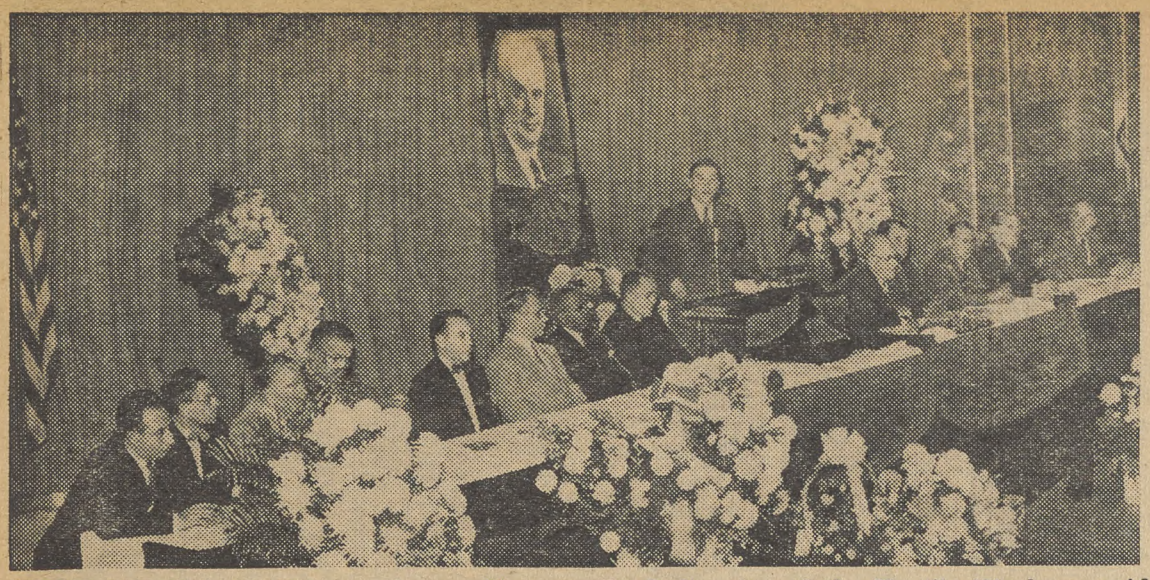
"There are obstacles and, no doubt, disappointments ahead," Truman said. "A worldwide conspiracy backed by a powerful nation cannot be dissipated easily or cheaply. The economic and social ills of centuries cannot be cured overnight."

Nevertheless, he added, "progress—enough to justify cautious optimism—has been made."

The President said that although much of the world had been in a state of unrest during the period reviewed, steps taken under the Mutual Security Program show a "clear and heartening trend toward greater security and greater prospects for human progress through evolutionary processes."

On the positive side, Truman pointed out that western Europe's economy was producing at an overall high rate and that European nations were taking steps that moved them "closer to the ancient dream of European unification."

OLD GUARD Republican chieftains, Sen. Taft (left) and Rep. Martin plan strategy before meeting President-elect Eisenhower, to talk GOP legislative program.



MORE THAN 1000 CIO members, officers and friends attended New Jersey CIO memorial services for Philip Murray. The service was held at Newark on Nov. 13, day the CIO and Steelworkers president was buried. Alexander Barkan (at rostrum), PAC director of the Textile Workers, said "not since the death of F.D.R. has the trade union movement . . . been so shocked and grieved at the loss of a great leader and a great American." State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman was chairman.

Steelworkers Name McDonald To Top Office

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD of the CIO Steelworkers last week named Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald to assume the powers and duties of the presidency until the regular election of officers by referendum on Feb. 10.

McDonald will be a candidate to succeed the late Philip Murray, founding and only president of the Steelworkers and president of CIO. Murray died Nov. 9 in San Francisco.

The USA-CIO executive board, meeting in Pittsburgh, endorsed McDonald's candidacy. It also endorsed Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes for re-election to that office. McDonald told newsmen he is confident Thimmes also will become a vice president of the CIO at its next convention, representing the United Steelworkers.

The CIO's vice presidents represent the major unions but the 1.2 million member USA has had no CIO vice president, being represented by Murray, who was president of both organizations.

McDONALD said the executive board had also endorsed I. W. Abel, director of the USA's Dist. 27 in Canton, O., as a candidate for secretary-treasurer to succeed McDonald. The board also confirmed the reappointment of Arthur J. Goldberg as the Steelworkers' general counsel and Vincent D. Sweeney as public relations director.

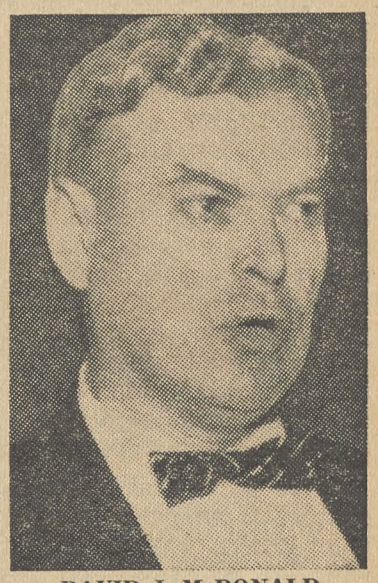
After receiving the interim appointment, McDonald said:

"I am most humble. I shall miss Philip Murray as much as, if not more than, any man in the world and I hope that Almighty God will give me the wisdom to carry on as I know he would want me to carry on.

"I shall devote every bit of energy I possess to furthering the interests of the United Steelworkers and the working men and women of our country.

"This is a great country, the greatest conceived by the mind of man. It will likewise be my purpose to make it greater, not only for the people of America, but for the people of the world."

McDonald, who was 50 the day he was designated by the executive board to asume Murray's duties, had been Murray's aide for 30 years. He went to work in a Pittsburgh steel mill at the age of 21 and six years later became Murray's personal secretary. The late CIO president was then a vice president of the United Mine Workers.



DAVID J. McDONALD

In 1936, when Murray became chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, McDonald became secretary-treasurer. When the United Steelworkers of America was born in 1942, he was elected to the post of secretary-treasurer. He was re-elected at all succeeding elections.

McDONALD has been active in civic and charitable affairs in his native city of Pittsburgh and is a member of the board of the American Arbitration Association and the board of the National Community Chests and Councils.

He is a member of the CIO Executive Board, representing the Steelworkers, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Political Action Committee and a member of the CIO Committee on Latin American Affairs. McDonald is married, has one son and lives in Mt. Lebanon, Pittsburgh.

The Steelworkers elect by national referendum. Under their constitution, nomination by 40 local unions is necessary to place the names of candidates for national office on the ballot. For district directors, nomination by five local unions is necessary.

Nominations must be completed by Dec. 13. The executive board authorized local unions which had already completed nominations to make substitute nominations if they wanted to do so.

CIO Convention To Hear Adlai At Murray Memorial Service

MEMORIAL SERVICES for the late Philip Murray, president of the CIO from 1940 until his death on Nov. 9, will highlight the 14th Constitutional convention which opens Dec. 1 in Atlantic City.

The services will be held Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 3, midway through the convention.

The parley will be in Westminster Hall in the Hotel Chelsea, with Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois delivering the memorial address.

Rev. Charles Owen Rice, pastor of St. Brigid's church, Pittsburgh, and a life-long friend of Murray, will open the services with a brief address and invocation. He will be followed by Gov. Stevenson, the Democratic candidate for President in the recent campaign. Another speaker will be Donald MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

As plans for the special memorial services were completed last week, the flood of telegraphed tributes and messages of condolence on the death of Murray continued to pour into CIO headquarters. Some of these messages follow:

CIO Furniture Workers Press: "The death of CIO Pres. Philip Murray is being mourned by men and women in every walk of life. He devoted nearly all of life to the cause of democratic trade unionism."

United Shoe Workers, Ohio Valley District Council: "Philip Murray was known and loved in every worker's community in our country. His, indeed, was a career of service to labor and to all the American people. To the wife, son and friends of Philip Murray, words will not permit a true expression of our deep sorrow at your great loss. Let us say your loss and sorrow is shared by all who knew and loved him."

CIO Playthings Workers: "Philip Murray's life was one of complete dedication to the American labor movement which grew and flourished under his statesmanlike leadership. We pledge ourselves to honor his memory with renewed striving for economic progress and social justice for all, the lights by which President Murray so nobly lived."

Wisconsin CIO News, proposing a "living memorial" to Murray in the form of college scholarships for CIO members' children: "We want a memorial to remind the people in the future of the great man who was one of us. For Phil Murray we want a living memorial — one that will go on breathing hope and courage into the souls of people, as Phil did with so many of us."

California CIO Council: "Philip Murray has left a living monument, the United Steelworkers of America and the CIO. The best tribute we can pay him is to continue his life's work of perfecting the process of democracy and the effective functioning of industrial unionism."

Denver Area CIO Council: "The greatest tribute that organized and unorganized labor can pay to the memory of this great leader, whose kindly yet firm voice was raised in the defense of the millions he represented officially and unofficially whenever and wherever the need arose, is to carry forward with ever-increasing determination and activity those ideals and principles for which he always stood, worked and died."

Timetable

Here is a list of meetings to be held at the Chelsea Hotel, Atlantic City, leading up to the 14th Constitutional CIO Convention:

Vice presidents' meeting, 2 p.m., Nov. 28.

Executive Board meeting, 10 a.m., Nov. 29.

Convention committees meetings, 2 p.m., Nov. 29.

Opening Convention Session: Hotel Chelsea, 10 a.m., Dec. 1.

State Councils Shift Conventions

THE DEATH of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the resulting postponement of the National CIO convention until the week of Dec. 1 caused a number of state CIO councils to change their convention plans.

Following is a state-by-state roundup of those councils whose previously scheduled conventions would have confiicted with the national convention:

TEXAS—Sec.-Treas. D. Roy Harrington reported that the Texas State IUC convention had been moved to Dec. 12, 13 and 14 at the Buccaneer hotel, Galveston.

MARYLAND — The Maryland IUC will hold its convention Dec. 11, 12 and 13 at the UAW hall, 16½ W. Franklin St. Hagerstown. Convention headquarters will be the Hotel Alexander, Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Della said.

VIRGINIA—The Virginia State IUC convention is now scheduled for Jan. 8, 9 and 10 at the ACWA hall, 104 N. Belvedere St., Richmond, according to Pres. Charles C. Webber.

OHIO—Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman reports the Ohio CIO convention will be held Jan. 8, 9, 10 and 11, with headquarters at the Hotel Hollenden, Cleveland, and sessions at the Public Auditorium.

ILLINOIS—The Illinois State CIO convention has been moved to Jan. 16, 17 and 18, Sec.-Treas. Maurice McElligott reports. Convention sessions will be at the Hotel Marquette, Peoria.

INDIANA—New dates for the Indiana State IUC convention are Dec. 19, 20 and 21, Pres. Neal Edwards reports. Convention sessions will be at the Claypool hotel, Indianapolis.

MASSACHUSETTS and RHODE ISLAND—CIO conventions in these states will go on as scheduled. The Massachusetts convention will be Dec. 5, 6 and 7 at the Hotel Bradford, Boston, and the Rhode Island convention Dec. 6 and 7 in Providence.

I. W. ABEL

JAMES G. THIMMES

'We Will Get Along'

The last time Philip Murray spoke to a convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations was shortly after his unanimous re-election as president at the 1951 convention. In his acceptance, Murray said:

It shall of course be my obligation and, as I understand it, my responsibility to carry forward in the course of the next year all of the legislative matters passed upon by you in this convention. There are many things to be done, the nature of which transcend in importance any of the work that this great organization has done since its inception.

There is present before us the greater need of organizing the unorganized, the millions of people all over this land who yearn for the opportunity to affiliate themselves with CIO organizations. We have the capabilities, we have the machinery, we have the leadership, and fortunately for us we also understand the nature of those people's problems.

In addition, to that there is the greater need of political activity. We do not claim we are the Moses that has come out of the proverbial wilderness, we do not profess to know everything, but we know something about the fundamental facts of life, and we understand and we appreciate the people's problems, economic and social and political, and it should be the business of this mighty organization to throw its full weight behind every potential candidate for public office that lends support to the lofty aspirations, ideals and objectives of this great organization.

We must lend every possible degree of comfort and support to our nation, and to its people, and to our government in the prosecution of those policies that have to do with fighting, staving off every form of totalitarianism and imperial Communist aggression.

The duties and functions of the CIO do not rest in the office of the President. The President himself is the most limp, weak individual in the United States of America. Whatever strength he may possess comes from you. If his picture appears in the paper, if there is a parade on the platform, if there is a hullaballo on the floor of the convention when he is nominated, it is not he, it is an evidence of the spirit of the people, and it is indicative of the true spirit of this great organization that no officer, I don't care who he may be, in a national union or in the CIO, can portray himself as an important man. He is not. The thing that is important is the people, the people in mills and mines and factories and offices. They are important.

That is the kind of an organization that this must be. It must be a workers' organization, not a club for old, or fat, or bald-headed, or gray-headed men like me. It must not be that. It must be a crusading organization that has dedicated its life, its soul, its spirit, its mind and its heart to serving human beings.

And, you know, that is why you are strong, and that is why you are going to grow stronger, because the millions of people back home whom you are privileged to represent in this convention are your life's blood, they are your sinew, they are your muscle, they are your counsellor, they are your advisers; and you, my good friends, just happen to be their servants.

And if we keep those things in mind, as I am quite sure we will—we always have—we will get along, this organization will survive. I know of no power on earth that can either divide or conquer the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President (Deceased Nov. 9, 1952)

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV November 24, 1952 No. 47

Hall Of Mirrors

In Other Words—

'The Common Love Of Good'

This personal view of Philip Murray's life and service to the American people was voiced by Rev. George G. Higgins, friend of the late CIO president and assistant director, Social Action Dept., National Catholic Welfare Conference. Here is a digest from his column, which appeared in several Catholic newspapers:

By REV. GEORGE G. HIGGINS

PHILIP MURRAY, God rest his noble soul, has been repeatedly eulogized these past 10 days as one of the greatest labor leaders in the history of the United States.

He was more than that. He was a great human being and will be honored as such in the folklore of American trade unionism long after the details of his phenomenal career as a labor statesman have ceased to be of interest to the average American.

Even now, just a few short days after his sudden death in San Francisco, I remember Philip Murray not as the tremendous genius that he undoubtedly was in the field of labor-mangament relations, but rather as a very humble and very kindly and a very wholesome Christian gentleman, the least pompous and least pretentious public figure I have ever had the pleasure of meeting.

I remember him as a very thoughtful man who was always just as respectful to the stenographers in his office as he was to the great and the mighty, a man who preferred the simple hospitality of a poor man's kitchen, in an isolated mining patch in western Pennsylvania, to the more luxurious and more sophisticated hospitality of Washington society.

I remember Mr. Murray as a man who sincerely enjoyed taking the children of his younger associates to the movies, the type of man to whom children were instinctively attracted. I remember him as a man who could calmly resist tremendous pressure from industry and government in economic affairs but was completely at the mercy of his friends and associates whenever they went to him, however unreasonably, to ask for his assistance in solving a personal problem.

I remember him, finally, as a natural leader of men who commanded the loyalty of his membership—and was respected even by the Communists—for what he was, even more than for what he said or did.

These qualities in the character of Philip Murray I first came to appreciate 12 years ago when I met him for the first time on one of his frequent trips to Washington. As a graduate student of labor economics at the Catholic University of America, I managed, through the good offices of a mutual friend, to be invited to Mr. Murray's apartment for an evening's conversation—or so I had expected—on labor-management relations.

FORTUNATELY, from my point of view, we never got around to such a prosaic subject. The only formal education I received that evening was an under-graduate course in poker. Mrs. Murray—a lovely woman to whom our heart goes out in deepest sympathy in her bereavement—ended up with almost all the chips. It was characteristic of Mr. Murray that he was embarrassed at my having lost a couple of dollars and referred to his embarassment whenever we happened to meet during the intervening years.

I last had the pleasure of talking to Mr. Murray 10 days before his death. I called at his office in Pittsburgh, without an appointment, merely to say hello. I remained, unreasonably, for more than an hour, during which time Murray again exemplified—by his instinctive courtesy to the girls in his office, by his solicitude about the personal problems of mutual friends of ours, and by his warming sense of humor—that he was not only a remarkably great labor leader, but even more important than that, a remarkably good human being.

Philip Murray had his faults. Of course he did. Some of them were the rather obvious defects of his virtues; others, presumably, were hidden from the eyes of men and were known only to himself and his Creator. Say a prayer for him, and ask Almighty God to raise up other men of Murray's tremendous stature to carry on the tradition of social justice with which his name will always be gratefully associated in the history of the United States.

Political Action Does Pay—

Hoosier CIOers Beat Jaycee In Vote Contest

By BERNARD J. SCHUCK

Editor, The Lampmaker, UAW-CIO Local 663, Anderson, Ind.

THE CIO in Anderson, Ind., is purring in post-election satisfaction over a thumping Nov. 4 victory over the local Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The Jaycees challenged the CIO to a get-out-the-vote contest on Election Day. They defied the CIO Political Action Committee in the farm-industrial community of Madison County to see which could get a larger percentage of its members to the polls.

Final tabulation of the voting lists by Fred Honnold, the PAC chairman, showed the CIO won by a margin of six percentage points.

The drive was spearheaded by the CIO Auto Workers and its Citizenship Fund, and with volunteer help from the Steelworkers, Paper Workers, Utility Workers and Clerks, about 15 CIO locals combined their efforts to ring up a 96.6% voting record.

The best the competing Jaycees could do was 90%.

The CIO-PAC had the gigantic task of registering, voting and keeping records on 15,000 members in the county. Compared to this was the less than 200 members of the Jaycees.

The county's 65 precincts had a total of 57,000 voters, an average of 85% turnout per precinct. The efforts of the CIO-PAC showed an improvement factor of 10 percentage points, demonstrating that political action DOES pay off.

The contest served to explode another false idea about the labor vote—that workers vote contrary to union recommendations. In an accurate check by the CIO-PAC, every precinct with a heavy CIO registration went according to CIO endorsements.

Only a slight defection to Gen. Eisenhower was noticeable, but even that was not enough to make much difference in Gov. Stevenson's majority. A compensating defection by the average voter in the same precincts was apparent in the senatorial race between Gov. Schricker (D.) and Sen. Jenner (R.).

Many precincts voted their CIO membership 100%. Most reported that only a few failed to cast ballots. In practically every case, PAC workers reported, the "no shows" were caused by sickness or by last-minute emergencies that called workers out of town.

Final tabulations put Anderson and Elwood, the county's two largest cities, in the Stevenson column by substantial majorities. In both cities the CIO, particularly UAW-CIO membership from General Motors' Delco-Remy and Guide Lamp Div., make up a big proportion of the voters.

Outlying precincts, where only a few CIO members live, brought in enough votes to offset the Stevenson lead in the cities. They were not sufficient, however, to put Jenner ahead. In the final count he trailed his Democratic opponent by 3000 in the county.

The Jaycees did not reckon with the CIO-PAC setup. In Madison County, the CIO-PAC keeps an up-to-date file of every CIO member. PAC "fact books" were mailed to every member in the county, as well as cards telling the unionists their individual status as registered or non-registered voters.

"It's the best filing system in the State," commented H. J. Noel, Indiana CIO-PAC director after looking over the collection of filing cabinets in the office of the Madison County CIO Council.

The Jaycees lit a Freedom Flame on the lawn of the Court House some months ago. The flame has now gone out. Delco Sparks, the newspaper of UAW Local 662, claims it is because the Jaycees work at the community job of Americanism by jerks and spurts, with accompanying blurbs of publicity.

On the other hand, the CIO and the PAC work at it day after day.

Landlords Toss Figures— Get Swatted Right In Face

STATISTICS are a dime a dozen when landlord lobbies and local real estate boards start fighting to kill rent ceilings.

But here's a case when figures — phony figures — boomeranged right in the landlords' faces.

It happened in the Allentown-Bethlehem, Pa., area. Some weeks ago, the local real estate operators presented a "survey" to the city council—a "survey" claiming there were 713 vacant rental units. The council took it at face value and voted to kill rent ceilings.

But labor groups kept on fighting. The Allentown Daily News-Digest, one of the Unitypo dailies published by the AFL Typographical union, checked on those 713 "vacancies" claimed by the landlords, finding that about the only actual "vacancies" were non-existent addresses, two houses that had been torn down or houses for sale from $33,000 up.

As the old rent law expired, CIO and AFL unionists focused their fight on Washington, demanding the federal government name Allentown-Bethlehem a critical defense housing area and re-establish rent controls.

Last week their campaign was won. The Office of Rent Stabilization granted the critical housing area, ordered a rent rollback to last Aug. 1, and extended ceilings to virtually all types of housing, including hotels, rooming houses, and motels as well as houses and apartments. The new controls are much stiffer than those previously in effect.

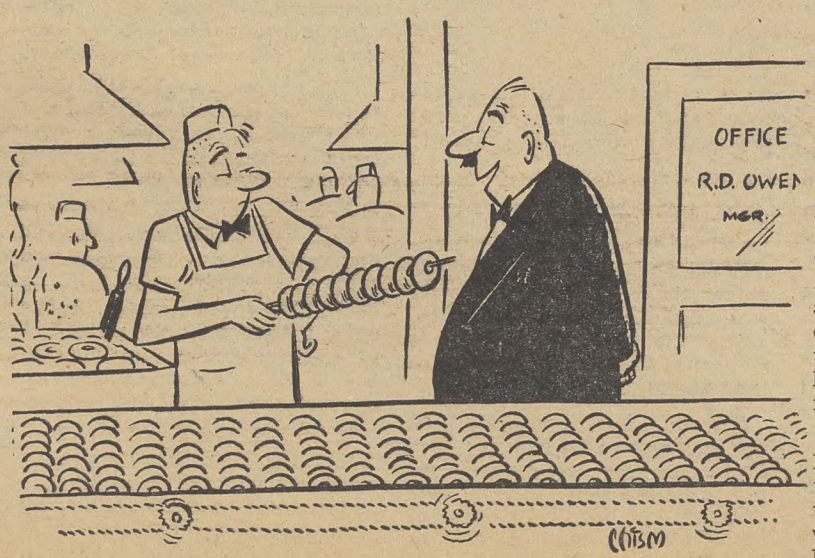
Among other rent ceiling orders was a critical housing area designation covering large parts of St. Louis and Itasca counties, Minn., on the Mesabi iron range.

Church, Labor Group Lauds Phil Murray

AMONG THE religious leaders who paid tribute to the late Philip Murray, president of CIO and the Steelworkers, were Rev. Joseph W. Merchant and Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, directors of the National Religion and Labor Foundation. They said:

"A great prophet, statesman and humble man of God has inherited immortality. Philip Murray embodied the warm humanity, the vision of high ideals of all great faiths, the aspirations of the common people, and the forthright courage of the great prophets, which endeared him to millions of Americans.

"The National Religion and Labor Foundation, in common with all humanity, has lost a good friend. To his family, the United Steelworkers of America and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, we extend our deepest sympathy and our prayers. We are grateful that God gave him to us all. His achievements will remain an inspiration, a living memorial, and a guide for future generations in their struggles against bigotry, falsehood and injustice, and in behalf of the liberty and dignity of all human kind."



"Well, Hooper, what do you think of the doughnut business so far?"

Press Performance—

Detroit News Waves Bloody Shirt In Gutter Attack On CIO Unions

HERE IS A PRIZE example of how metropolitan newspapers twisted the facts to smear the CIO and candidates it supported in the last election.

The culprit is the Detroit News which published a page one editorial, two days before the election, entitled "Want a Bloody Strike?" It was deliberately intended to scare voters into backing reactionary political candidates.

The editorial reprinted the unsupported assertion of the Detroit Edison Co., then struck by the CIO Utility Workers, that the CIO had threatened "the bloodiest strike in the history of Detroit."

It pointed out the CIO was supporting Gov. Williams, who won reelection, as well as the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket and Sen. Blair Moody, who was defeated.

"All in favor of having 'the bloodiest strike in the history of Detroit' will vote for Williams, Moody and Stevenson, for if the three are elected the CIO'ers will regard the people's verdict as permission to start the flow of citizens' blood," the editorial concluded.

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers, in a letter to the newspaper, recalled that the "Detroit News in the past has been guilty of bias, distortion and prejudice, but this editorial has reached the gutter level of irresponsibility."

MAZEY CHARGED the News had "adopted the unsupported smear and slanderous tactics of McCarthyism. It has adopted Hitler's big lie technique in a manner in which it deliberately falsified the facts and issues in the Detroit Edison Co. strike and in the support that the CIO gave the Democratic Party candidates in the state of Michigan."

"I charge the Detroit News and its moronic editorial staff," Mazey continued, "with deliberately lying."

Mazey recalled the record showed no bloody strikes, in fact not a single incident of violence in any CIO strike in the Detroit area since the election of Williams in 1948.

"The Detroit News editorial," he said, "should arouse every fair thinking citizen about the abuses of the so-called free press. Newspapers in America have the responsibility of presenting news and events to the general public in a fair and unbiased manner.

"FREE SPEECH does not give anyone the right to yell fire in a crowded theatre. Free press does not give anyone the right to write inciting editorials that have the same affect as yelling fire in a crowded theatre."

Mazey recalled the Detroit News had refused to sell advertising space to the UAW in 1951 to present its views on a dispute with Hudson Motor Car Co., unless "we agreed to completely distort the facts in the case."

It also recalled a phony News story several years ago, charging an alleged bomb plot at the Briggs Manufacturing Co. Investigation revealed the "bombs" were actually sample fire bombs saved by the Briggs fire marshal after the last war to use in demonstrations. The News buried the explanation on Page 53, leaving many readers with the false opinion that the UAW had plotted to bomb the Briggs plant, Mazey noted.

"I am probably wasting my time in writing this letter," Mazey concluded, "because I feel certain that the editors of the Detroit News and those who manage the paper neither have the courage, the courtesy, or the guts to print my letter."

Mazey was—his letter was not printed.

14c Package Settlement In Detroit Strike

A PACKAGE increase of 14c an hour and arbitration of penalties inflicted on seven employes last week ended the 23-day strike of 4000 CIO Utility Workers at the Detroit Edison Co.

The agreement, which runs to Feb. 1 1954, raised wages 6c immediately, with 4c more in June and 4c in fringe benefits.

Agreement came after 11 hours of continuous negotiations, with federal and state mediators. Settlement was delayed when the company said five union members were to be discharged and two suspended because of "destructive acts" during the strike.

The union balked at signing the agreement and finally it was agreed that the seven men would be recalled by the company, given four hours' call-in pay. Then the penalties were invoked for the second time and the cases submitted to arbitration.

School Segregation, T-H Moves By States Challenged By CIO

THE CIO has presented friend-of-the-court briefs in two important Supreme Court cases—one testing the segregated school theory and the second involving the Taft-Hartley Act.

Both briefs were filed by Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and Asst. Gen. Counsel David E. Feller.

The CIO brief in the segregated school case specifically dealt with a case involving public schools in Topeka, Kan., but the arguments broadly covered the entire problem since the CIO contended segregated schools were by their very nature unconstitutional.

"The mere fact of compulsory separation," the CIO argued, "constitutes a denial of the equal protection of the laws, forbidden by the 14th Amendment."

The CIO brief argued that the "compulsory intermingling is not the only alternative to compulsory segregation." Rather, it said, "the alternative to enforced segregation is freedom of choice and the question is whether a state may deny that freedom to individuals and require them, willy-nilly, to separate according to race."

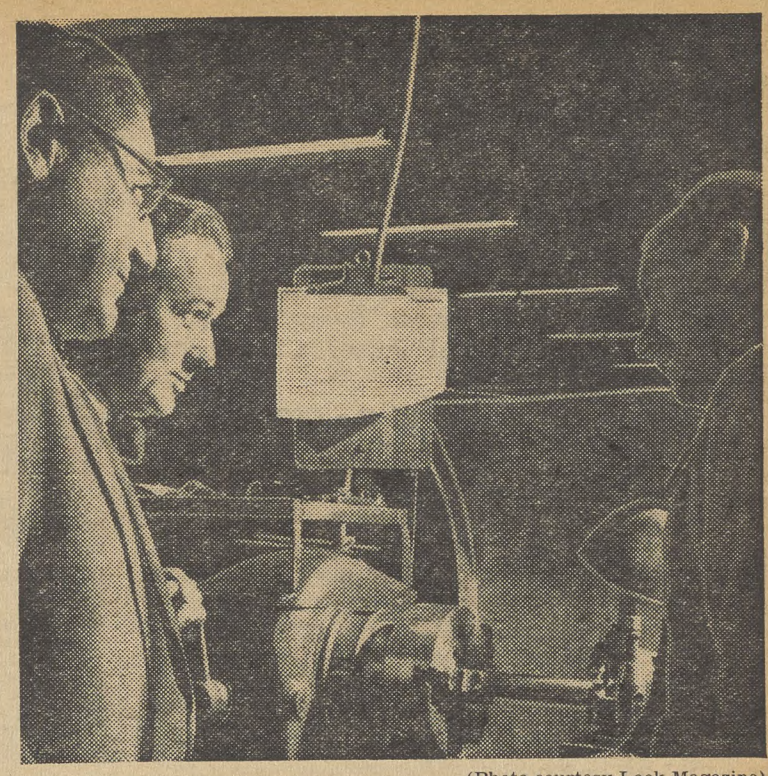
Noting that public school education was compulsory, the brief observed "students are not only unable to avoid segregation in the public schools, as by not attending, but are more adversely affected by it because they are younger. The testimony of sociologists is uniform as to the deleterious effects of segregation on Negro children, and in a different way, on white, and the younger the children the more these effects are accentuated."

THE SECOND brief was filed in a case testing the rights of state courts to enjoin alleged violations of the Taft-Hartley Act. The case resulted from an injunction granted by a Montgomery, Ala., court, prohibiting picketing of a construction project on the allegation that the Taft-Hartley Act was being violated.

The CIO brief argued the state court was without power to issue injunctions to enforce compliance by a union with the provisions of the Taft-Hartley act.

"The notion that the Congress intended to entrust to the courts of the 48 states the power to enforce the Taft-Hartley Act is so repugnant to the text, the philosophy and the legislative history of the act that further argument against it seems superfluous," the brief observed.

The CIO argued that if the Alabama courts were upheld it meant state courts "may issue such injunctions against alleged violations of the act without notice or hearing; that such ex parte orders, under the practice of many states, carry no automatic expiration date or requirement that a hearing be promptly held on a motion to dissolve; and that, in the interim, substantial rights to participate in concerted activities, guaranteed by the act, may be irreparably damaged without any possibility of relief."



(Photo courtesy Look Magazine)

COMPANY PRESIDENT Albert Hubschman and C. B. Newell, CIO Steelworkers' district director, chat with one-legged Harold Neiss, one of the many handicapped workers employed by Roller-Smith Corp.

Martin Wagner Named ICFTU Aide At UN

MARTIN WAGNER, former president of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and a veteran of the labor movement, has been named representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to the United Nations.

He succeeds James J. Leary, former CIO regional director at Kansas City, Mo., who has rejoined the CIO staff as a national representative.

Wagner, 59, first became a union member when he joined the Miners while working at Glen Carbon, Ill., in 1916. He later headed a union in a gas plant in St. Louis, Mo., becoming first vice president and later president of the mine union's Dist. 50.

As a member of the UMW executive board, he cast the only vote in support of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray at a "trial" which was eventually thrown out as unconstitutional. He continued to stand by Murray when the Miners pulled out of the CIO.

In May of 1942 he took the lead in establishing the National Council of Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers. When it became a CIO international union the following September, he was elected its first president and continued to serve until early this year. Under his leadership, the UGCCW increased in membership from 5000 to 72,000.

MARTIN WAGNER

CIO Joins ICFTU In Plea For UN Tunisia Mediation

THE UNITED NATIONS was called on last week by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to set up a Good Offices Committee to mediate and settle the dispute between the French government and the people of Tunisia.

A message was sent to each UN delegation on behalf of the ICFTU by its general secretary, J. H. Oldenbroek, and by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee, and AFL Vice Pres. Matthew Woll.

It charged that "the French government in the Franco-Tunisian crisis so far has shown that it is not yet ready to satisfy the legitimate national aspirations of the Tunisian people." Tunisian demands, it added, express neither blind extremism nor "narrow and unthinking nationalism."

The ICFTU reminded the delegations that the UN Charter and the Declaration of Human Rights proclaim "the right of peoples to self-determination," and that the UN Assembly has before it a recommendation on self-determination adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and referred to it by the Economic and Social Council.

"If these documents become a dead letter," the message said, "the cause of peace will certainly suffer and the trust which the people of the world have placed in the United Nations will be seriously shaken."

The ICFTU is concerned over whether the French government will grant an exit visa to Farhat Hached, secretary of the Tunisian General Federation of Labor, so he can attend a meeting of the ICFTU executive board in New York on Dec. 1.

CCL Protests Anti-Strike Maneuver

A STRONG protest against government action which, in effect, is serving to break a strike of the CIO Oil Workers at the Canadian Copper Refineries, Montreal, Que., was registered last week by the Canadian Congress of Labor executive council.

The walkout has closed the plant for 18 weeks. Alex McAuslane, OWIU Canadian director, said the union was certified as bargaining agent 14 months ago, and that the company, after flatly refusing to negotiate, has now started prolonged legal proceedings aimed at blocking bargaining.

"DESPITE these circumstances," he explained, "the Canadian Dept. of Trade and Commerce has issued export permits enabling the company to have its work done in the United States, where the workers handling it receive at least 60c an hour more than the Montreal employes."

The CCL board also called on the government to recognize unions of its "prevailing rate" employes on the same basis as that granted by law to unions of other workers, and asked immediate institution of the 40-hour week with overtime, sick and furlough leave, checkoff and wage negotiations for them.

Handicapped Get A Hand From Steelworkers Local

THE STORY of how CIO Steelworkers Local 4330 worked with management in providing jobs for physically - handicapped workers was told nationally in a recent issue of Look Magazine.

The article, by Frank Edwards, cities the experience of the steel local and the Roller-Smith Corp., in Bethlehem, Pa.

By their work in the plant, Edwards reports, handicapped workers demonstrated they aren't really handicapped.

Edwards is the AFL-sponsored news commentator heard nightly on MBS. His article in Look, reproduced with permission, follows:

"WHAT FACTORY would hire a blind man to operate power machinery, polio victims to perform delicate assembly jobs, or advertise for skilled workers over 60?

"The Roller-Smith Corp. of Bethlehem, Pa., has done all these things because its president, Albert Hubschman, has faith in the handicapped, thinks industry is missing a good bet in not hiring them.

"A burly, incisive man who once sold vegetables on the streets of Newark, N. J., Hubschman has had his share of adversity. Says he of his workers:

" 'We hire people for their minds, not their muscles. We call them handicapped persons. The truth is, they are handicapped by the fact that American industry makes virtually no effort to use their talents.'

"HUBSCHMAN'S firm employs 1400 persons in three plants in Bethlehem and Allentown. As the only independent manufacturer of basic electrical equipment in the U. S., it competes with industrial giants like General Electric and Westinghouse.

"On the Roller-Smith production lines are many workers who are termed 'unemployable' by other factories.

"Take for example, drill press operator Robert Barroll, who is 26, and totally blind. When not operating the press, he moves to the plating department, where his highly developed touch qualifies him as a rapid assembler of parts. Although he has a college degree, company after company had refused to hire him before he applied at Roller-Smith.

"Stores clerk Ellis Young, 52, is a polio victim. Harold Niess, 45, has an artificial leg, but he's a first-rate factory special-assignment man.

"Among the elderly employes are many who have been with the company since its inception nearly 50 years ago. Included are a 71-year-old assembler; a system clerk who is 61; a draftsman, 66, and dozens of skilled craftsmen past 50.

"Company officials say that the so-called 'overage' and 'handicapped' workers are settled, skilled and eager to make good. 'Every employee must pull his share of the load and every employe does,' says Hubschman. He has records to prove it."

ICFTU Unit Meets In N. Y.

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will meet Dec. 1 to 5 in New York City at the invitation of the CIO, AFL, and the United Mine Workers.

This will be the first time since the founding of ICFTU that its executive board will hold one of its bi-annual meetings in the Western Hemisphere. The three U. S. labor bodies are affiliates and founding organizations of the ICFTU.

The U. S. labor groups have arranged a program of entertainment which includes a sight-seeing bus tour, a visit to the United Nations and a dinner in honor of the board Dec. 5.

TWU Names Kutch

The CIO Transport Workers has named Joseph Kutch, former Gary, Ind., newspaperman, as editor of the TWU Express.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to fully realize that our chief and our buddy, Phil Murray, is not still at the helm. So closely did he follow and participate in all of the problems and triumphs of CIO that no task was undertaken or accomplished without his constant guidance and concern.

Just a few hours ago, I found myself reaching for the telephone to consult with him about a certain matter. It was with a heavy heart and a sense of infinite loss that my hand dropped back on my desk at the shock of remembrance.

I was on the train to San Francisco with Phil—his last trip for the movement in which he so strongly believed. On the train he was happy, vibrant, full of life and the vision of going forward to greater gains for workers everywhere and for our movement. There was no hint that he would be so abruptly taken from us.

Our lives followed parallel courses. As boys we went into the mines together; both with the heritage of the British Miners' Union and the teachings of our fathers, who had been in the mines before us.

We came to America in about the same manner and at about the same time to enter the mines here and take up the cudgels of organizing our fellows for human dignity and the betterment of our families' lives.

We worked, always close together, to achieve the dream of a strong miners' union. He called me into the crusade of building the CIO and bringing the benefits of organization to the millions of workers in the mass production industries. We shared this task to the very end.

★

IN ALL THESE YEARS, Phil was always the inspiration, the guide, the comforter, the leader. But, sorely as he is missed; and surely as he can never be fully replaced, we must not pause for more than a moment. Phil would not have let down himself, and he would not want us to.

We must dedicate ourselves more fervently to the completion of the task he had undertaken for himself and for us, and to the realization of his dream of workers' homes with security, plenty and beauty for all the family.

My readers, I know, will forgive me for expressing these very personal and intimate thoughts of my life and association with Philip Murray. We worked on a team, in which there were many players—but Phil was the captain who gave us inspiration and leadership. It has been a great privilege, not only for me but I am sure for all the others, to work together and play together with Phil. My mind is flooded with memories of our times together—good times and adverse times. Like all the others, I am sure we will treasure those memories for the rest of our lives.

★

STATE DIR. ERNEST PUGH reports that the CIO Woodworkers won a representation election at Gray Lumber Co., Waverly, Va. The vote was 99 to 8, out of 125 eligible workers. IWA Organizer Earl Davis was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that workers at the Federal Cotton Compress, Glendale, Ariz., favored the CIO Packinghouse Workers by a vote of 27 to 1. UPWA Rep. Floyd Harris directed the drive.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the Jonas Furniture Co.; Los Angeles, Calif., the workers favored the CIO Furniture Workers by a vote of 20 to 11. UFWA Board Member Eppy Galvan handled the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election by a unanimous vote at the Midwest Concrete Industries Co., Des Moines, Ia. USA Rep. Floyd Piper conducted the campaign.

Intl. Vice Pres. Claude Ballard reports that the CIO Woodworkers won a representation election at the Hillyer-Deutsch-Edwards Co., Oakdale, La., by the following vote: eligible 466, IWA-CIO 283, AFL 131, no union 6, void 5, challenged 1.

Vote Frauds Investigated

A THREE-MAN senatorial investigation team last week began probing charges of "widespread and flagrant" election frauds in Michigan's tight U. S. Senate race.

Rep. Potter (R.) defeated Sen. Moody (D.) by 40,000 votes, the first count of ballots showed, but Neil Staebler, Michigan Democratic party chairman, charged fraud and violations of election laws.

In his 14-page complaint, Staebler also claimed voters were offered as much as $5 each to cast ballots for Gen. Eisenhower. However, this charge will not be investigated by the Senate elections subcommittee, which has authority to deal only with senatorial elections.

Moody refused comment on the charges, although there was some previous indication he would seek a recount. Potter at first said the complaint came from "bad losers," later refused to talk.

Illegal voting, intimidation of voters, violation of bi-partisanship requirements for election boards, inaccurate counting of split tickets with votes for Moody as straight GOP ballots, refusal to allow qualified challengers to be present and other violations were all charged by the Democratic chairman.

Trial Begins On Dupont Trust Charge

THE BIGGEST anti-trust suit ever taken by the federal government got under way last week after more than three years of preliminary legal maneuvering.

At stake was the grip of the Dupont family of Delaware on "the tremendous industrial trinity" of the Dupont Corp., General Motors and U. S. Rubber.

The government wants the Dupont Corp. to divest itself of its GM and U. S. Rubber holdings.

It opened its case with a charge that never in history have "so few had such dominant control over so much." Willis Hotchkiss, in charge of the prosecution, promised the government will reveal "the inner operations of one of the most powerful private corporations not only in this country, but in the world."

It will seek to bulwark its case, he continued, by baring "certain aspects" of the financial operations of three Dupont brothers who "over the last half-century have constituted a partnership unparalleled in the history of business and finance."

THE BROTHERS are Pierre, Irenee and Lammot Dupont. The last died after all three were named defendants along with the three companies, the Christiana Securities Co. and the Delaware Realty & Investment Corp., Dupont holding companies, and 183 other members of the Dupont family.

The case is being heard without a jury by Judge Walter L. La Buy in U. S. District Court in Chicago. Testimony directed by three government lawyers and 28 attorneys representing the defendants is expected to take at least two months.

Hotchkiss told Judge La Buy that Dupont owns 10 million of the 44 million shares of GM stock, or 23%, which yields "complete control;" and one-third of a million shares of U. S. Rubber, or 18% with "absolute control."

He said the case is "in a category all its own" in the size of the economic interests involved and the degree of concentrated control.

IUE Gains On Coast

THE CIO Electrical Workers is gaining in its West Coast organizational campaign.

Latest bargaining victory was in Oakland, Calif., were the IUE-CIO won a National Labor Relations Board election at the General Electric cable and control plant.

The vote was IUE 44 to 33 for the United Electrical Workers, expelled from CIO some years ago as Communist dominated. IUE-CIO Intl. Rep. Al Fineman was in charge of the campaign.

In Southern California, the NLRB has certified the IUE as bargaining representative at the Standard Coil Products Co. The CIO union won a runoff election at the plant some two months ago, but certification was delayed by UE protests over challenged ballots. The full NLRB tossed out the UE protests.

Place Your Order Now!

Big Annual Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS

The CIO News will print an all-important special CIO Convention issue on Dec. 8.

Delayed by the postponement of the 14th Constitutional Convention after the death of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the Convention Issue will be printed shortly after the Atlantic City parley adjourns.

What the convention does in electing CIO's new president and in acting upon important policy issues will be big news and important news for every CIO union and every CIO member. The CIO News Convention Issue will give the complete story—in news reports, pictures, features and important texts.

Now, more than ever, all CIO unions and councils will need The CIO News 1952 Convention issue. Rush your orders now to The CIO News, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Special Rates

• BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for large orders.

In sending lists of addresses for bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each address. To facilitate bookkeeping, please send checks with smaller quantity orders.

• INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged by sending us mailing strips not more than 2½ inches wide.

Regular Rates

Apart from the special rates for the Convention Issue, unions which wish to take this opportunity to begin subscribing regularly to The CIO News may begin their bundle order or group subscription order with the Nov. 24 issue at the regular rates, which will be provided on request.

Just Clip and Mail!

The CIO NEWS
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the special 1952 Convention Issue of The CIO NEWS.

Please ship.....in bundle lots to the enclosed address.

Please have the 1952 Convention Issue individually mailed to membership lists for which we will furnish mailing strips. The total number of names to which we desire the paper sent is.....

☐ Check Inclosed ☐ Bill Us Later

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Organization .....

2 Marine Unions Get 15% Hikes In Arbitration

MEMBERS of two CIO seafaring unions—the Maritime Union and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association—stand to gain retroactive wage increases estimated to total $1.25 million, plus higher straight time and overtime pay in the future.

These benefits were granted in a decision by Aaron Horvitz, arbitrator. The increases are retroactive to June 16 but are subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval. NMU Pres. Joseph Curran reported the arbiter's decision.

Pay boosts of from 10 to 15% were won by 40,000 NMU members on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts. There are many pay categories for seamen, but a key example of the increases is that for able seamen who were boosted from $262.89 to $302.32 a month.

Overtime pay for NMU members with a basic wage of less than $298.49 a month was raised to $1.48 an hour from $1.29; those earning more than $298.49 a month get $1.87 an hour overtime pay in place of $1.63.

MEBA members on all dry cargo and passenger vessels on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coast were awarded 14.5% increases. Wages for engineer officers serving aboard a Liberty-type vessel range under the decision from $366.92 a month for a fourth assistant to $835.37 for chief engineer.

Their overtime pay was boosted 15c to $3.10 an hour and penalty pay was hiked by 10c to $2.07 an hour. Horvitz also ruled that chief engineers and nonwatch-standing assistants, who normally work 44 hours at sea, are to receive an additional payment of $102.69, upping the present rate by $4.69.

Horvitz was named by the unions and employers associations to decide the wages issues when negotiations became deadlocked last June. He was expected to reach a decision soon on the wages of members of the CIO Radio Association.

11-24

Latin Unionizing Problems Discussed

Unionization of Spanish-speaking workers will be discussed at a meeting of union representatives and labor educational organizations to be held in New York on Dec. 20.

ACWA Pickets Force Rice-Stix To Talk

PICKETING has been extending to two more operations of the Rice-Stix Co., forcing the company to resume negotiations with the CIO Clothing Workers.

Approximately 650 ACWA members have been on strike more than six weeks at the Farmington, Mo., and Water Valley, Miss., plants of the firm, which manufactures cotton garments.

In an effort to break the strike, the company stepped up operations at its Dallas, Tex. warehouse. ACWA countered by throwing a picket line around that establishment. Rice-Stix got a temporary restraining order Nov. 14, but picketing was resumed four days later when Judge Thorton refused to make the injunction permanent.

In another move to cripple the firm's operations, ACWA set up a picket line at a retail store at Sedalia, Mo., operated by a Rice-Stix subsidiary.

Meanwhile negotiations were resumed Nov. 13 at St. Louis at the request of Rice-Stix, and have been continuing every day.

Gladys Dickason and Ralph Brazier, ACWA vice presidents who are in charge of the strike, last week credited good progress in negotiations to the two new picket lines and the solidarity of the strikers.

THE STRIKERS have held firm despite court actions limiting picketing at the Farmington plant and eliminating it entirely at the Water Valley factory.

Since protests some weeks ago by CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, the Mississippi court has failed to proceed with contempt citations against the ACWA strikers. The CIO protest was directed to Atty. Gen. James McGranery, who has ordered an investigation on possible violations of the Civil Rights Act by Mississippi authorities.

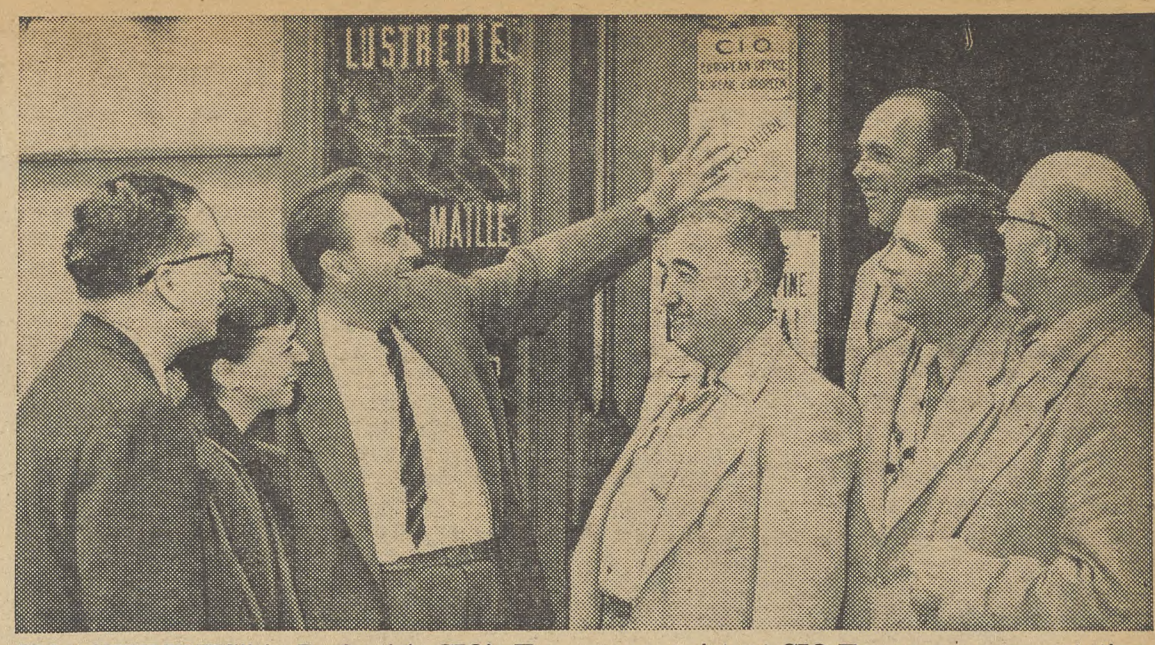
Mississippi National Guardsmen last week were returned to Water Valley by order of Gov. Hugh White.

The strike began when Rice-Stix failed to engage in real collective bargaining after ACWA won NLRB representation elections at the two plants.

Knight Resigns NPA Position

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers has resigned as head of the labor office of the National Production Authority. He was appointed to the job in June, 1951.

Knight, who was serving on a part time, no pay basis, was praised for his services by National Production Administrator R. A. McDonald. Ted F. Silvey, who served as Knight's first assistant, has been appointed to the post.



CIO "STUDENTS" in Paris visit CIO's European offices accompanied by U. S. Labor representatives in Europe. From left: Harry Martin, of MSA Labor Information; Barbara Wertheimer, ACWA; Charles Levinson, assistant CIO European representative; Bill Kemsley, MSA; Jack Pierce, CIO Community Services Committee; Don Stevens, Michigan CIO; Howard Conquergood, Canadian Congress of Labor.

Talmadge Is Defeated On Vote Curb

HERMAN TALMADGE, Georgia's anti-Negro, anti-labor governor, took a first-rate beating on election day, when the voters turned thumbs down on a proposal to close Georgia's elections to all but Talmadge-machine candidates.

His proposal, in the form of a constitutional amendment, would have "killed the possibility of a second party in one-party Georgia, and the opportunity for independent candidates to run in the general election," Georgia CIO Exec. Secy. David Burgess reported.

The Georgia CIO played an active role in defeating the Talmadge proposal by a margin of 26,000 votes. On the side of the powerful political machine, which spent $250,000 in the unsuccessful campaign, were the Klu Klux Klan, big business money, state employes and the Talmadge-bossed Democratic party of Georgia.

CIO joined with the League of Women Voters, the Council of Church Women, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, AFL, and Railroad Brotherhoods to form the Citizens Against the County Unit Amendment, which defeated the proposal.

"We did our part," State CIO Pres. Bill Crawford said. "We prevented Talmadge and his gang from becoming the absolute dictators of our state. In the face of a $250,000 campaign to arouse racial hatreds, the people of Georgia are to be congratulated in keeping their elections free of dictator's control."

IUE Strikers Gain 5% Wage Hike At Sylvania

THE SIX-WEEK strike of CIO Electrical Workers against Sylvania Electric ended last week with a contract providing a 5% increase and a 6c hourly minimum wage boost.

Retroactive to Sept. 11, the increase will raise average hourly pay from $1.35 to $1.44.

The IUE-CIO negotiators also secured pay for strikers for the election day holiday, which came during the strike. The agreement also provides for three days off with pay for employes when death occurs in the immediate family.

THE CONTRACT covers workers in four Sylvania plants and will cover two other plants following an NLRB election Dec. 18, if the workers vote IUE-CIO.

The two plants are in Williamsport, Pa., and Warren, Pa. In Williamsport, a company-sponsored back-to-work movement resulted in one employe filing for a decertification election.

The Warren situation was complicated by what IUE-CIO called a "bald strike-breaking maneuver" by the AFL Machinists. The Machinists' action prompted one IAM local in Warren to plead with its national and district offices not to aid the company.

"Even if the IAM could win the plant, we wouldn't want it on such a scabbing basis," the IAM local members said, but the petition was filed despite this protest.

SYLVANIA admitted it was opposed to company-wide bargaining and wanted to deal with locals on an individual basis, where its strength would far outweigh that of its workers. It attempted to force a second election at the Williamsport and Warren plants on acceptance of the master agreement, but failed.

Final agreement provides that when the Warren and Williamsport workers vote for the IUE on Dec. 18, they will automatically fall under the master agreement.

The IUE contract, in addition to wage and holiday improvements, provides:

No cut in rates for a worker transferred to a lower-rated job because injury prevents him from performing his regular work.

Extension of the one-month's pay given employes drafted or recalled into military service to those who enlist.

"Gentlemen, this is Prof. Ersatz. He has a very interesting economic idea. Instead of sharing the wealth, he proposes to distribute the poverty."

Douglas To Get Hillman Award

The fourth annual award of the Sidney Hillman Foundation for meritorious public service will be presented to Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court at a dinner at the Statler Hotel, Washington, at 6:30 p.m., Dec. 11.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the foundation and the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, of which Hillman was first president, said:

"Justice Douglas' distinguished record on the bench, as well as his practical efforts to cement our bonds with the freedom-loving peoples in other lands, merit the widest recognition. We are proud to be able to extend to Justice Douglas this measure of our esteem."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 1, 1952 82 No. 48

Here's a general view of Atlantic City, where delegates to CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention meet this week to elect new CIO president.

Mourning CIO Meets To Elect New President

—See Page 3

UAW Sets Plant Gate Drive On Job Bias

—See Page 9

CIO Meets With Ike, Reaffirms Labor's Goals

—See Page 2

Top CIO Chiefs Meet Ike, Decry Drive On Labor

A TEN-MAN DELEGATION of CIO national officials met late last week with President-elect Eisenhower, offering him support for "constructive endeavors" by his administration and a warning that labor "will react vigorously to any effort to cut living standards, to attack labor, or to obstruct progress . . . for our American democracy."

The CIO group was led by the executive officers, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood. It conferred with Eisenhower on Nov. 28 at his Commodore Hotel headquarters in New York City.

The meeting was the first with the President-elect since the vigorous national political campaign, in which CIO and affiliated unions had backed the unsuccessful candidacy of Gov. Adlai Stevenson on a Fair Deal platform.

THE SESSION got under way at 10 a.m. and lasted 55 minutes. It was pleasant in tone. The CIO leaders offered congratulations, which the General accepted. The discussion was general in nature.

A statement issued by the CIO officials after the meeting made plain that CIO will continue fighting for "increasing living standards, controlling inflation, repeal of anti-labor legislation, promoting needed welfare measures for the people, improving social security, and strengthening our structure of civil rights and civil liberties, while resisting totalitarian aggression and infiltration."

The CIO leaders, according to the announcement, told Eisenhower that he "will certainly have the support of union members and every other American" in "constructive endeavors" to ease the "terrible international confusion" and to win "peace with honor."

The New York meeting "covered a variety of subjects," but CIO leaders, it was announced, did not make any recommendations to Eisenhower on selection of a labor secretary—one of the few Cabinet posts still open. (See story, Page 12.)

Joining Haywood and Carey in the conference with Eisenhower were Walter P. Reuther, Auto Workers president and a CIO vice president; David J. McDonald, Steelworkers secretary-treasurer; Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers president; Joseph Curran, Maritime Union president and a CIO vice president; Emil Rieve, Textile Workers president and a CIO vice president; Hedley Stone, NMU treasurer; Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO and Steelworkers general counsel; and Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director.

Text of the CIO statement:

"We have had a most pleasant conversation with President-Elect Eisenhower.

"The conversation covered a variety of subjects of mutual interest.

"We congratulated Gen. Eisenhower on his election, and as Americans, pledged our support to him as the President of the United States.

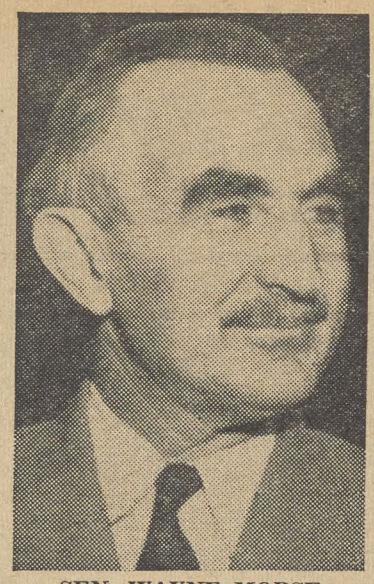
"The new administration will have tremendous problems, and it takes office at a time of terrible international confusion. Needless to say, the hopes of all the American people are directed toward a solution of these problems that will bring peace with honor and stability with freedom and economic progress to the entire world. In his constructive endeavors to achieve these goals, Gen. Eisenhower will certainly have the support of union members and every other American.

"THE CIO, of course, remains loyal to its program, which calls for increasing living standards, controlling inflation, repeal of anti-labor legislation, promoting needed welfare measures for the people, improving social security, and strengthening our structure of civil rights and civil liberties, while resisting totalitarian aggression and infiltration.

"As it has in the past, the CIO will give support to those members of Congress who work for these objectives; and, as we told Gen. Eisenhower, we will react vigorously to any effort to cut living standards, to attack labor, or to obstruct progress towards worthy goals for our American democracy.

"We made no suggestions to Gen. Eisenhower as to his appointment of a Secretary of Labor. We did, however, emphasize that the Secretary of Labor should be a person who is devoted to the strengthening of the Dept. of Labor and to the interests of democratic American trade unions."

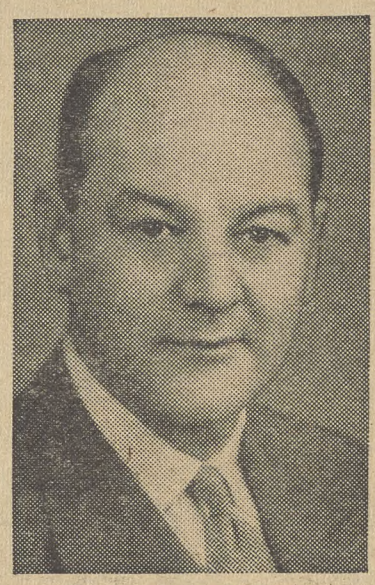
Among Speakers At CIO Convention



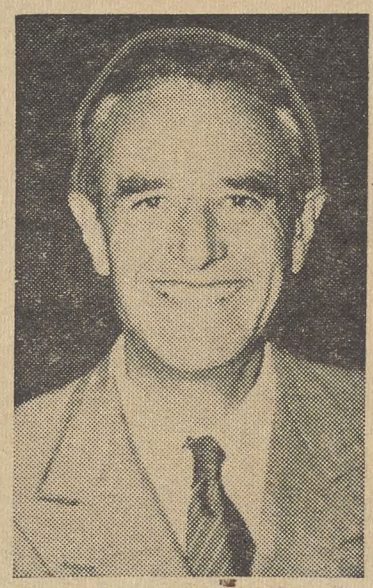
SEN. WAYNE MORSE
Republican maverick

GOV. ADLAI STEVENSON
Murray memorial speaker

MAURICE J. TOBIN
Secretary of Labor



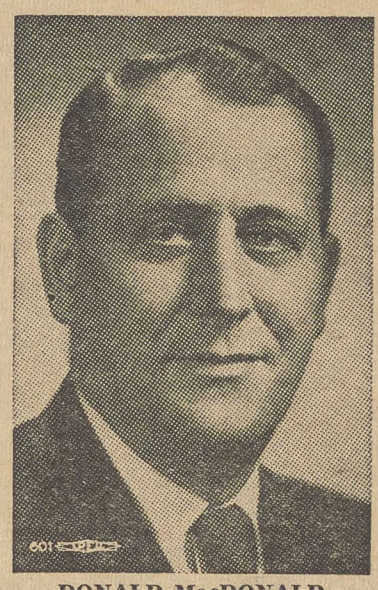
J. J. WADSWORTH
Civilian defense aide



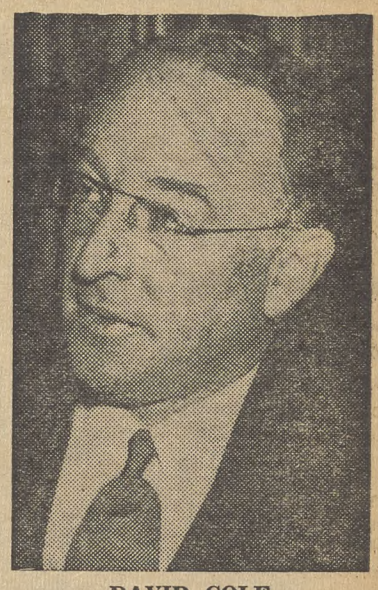
W. AVERELL HARRIMAN
Foreign aid chief

THURGOOD MARSHALL
Counsel for NAACP

A. R. MOSHER
President of CCL



DONALD MacDONALD
CCL secretary-treasurer



DAVID COLE
Top U. S. mediator

Wage Parley Called By Textile Union

COLLECTIVE bargaining policy for more than 150,000 CIO Textile Workers in almost 550 northern mills will be drafted at meetings to be held Jan. 10-11 in Boston.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said delegates representing some 60,000 employes in about 150 woolen and worsted mills will meet Jan. 10 and representatives of more than 90,000 cotton and rayon workers in some 400 plants will assemble the next day.

"The cotton-rayon conference will be asked to work out proposals for a new agreement which will serve the best interests of the workers," Rieve said. "Obviously one matter will be ways and means of restoring the wage cut of about 8.5c an hour which was unfairly imposed on these workers by a series of arbitration decisions last spring."

Cotton-rayon pacts expire next Mar. 15, while some woolen and worsted agreements expire the same month. The key American Woolen Co. pact and a majority of the others run until Mar. 15, 1954, but have wage reopeners.

American Woolen has announced that its mills at Lawrence, Mass., and Dover, N. H., both idle for a year, will be closed permanently Dec. 17.

ARA Gains 11% Pay Hike

AN ARBITRATOR last week awarded members of the CIO Radio Association on the East and Gulf coasts a base pay increase of slightly more than 11%.

The award by Aaron Horvitz, veteran arbitrator, also increased overtime and premium pay by 5%. A week earlier he awarded increases estimated at $1.25 to members of the CIO Maritime Union and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

Radio officers were given a flat monthly across-the-board increase of $25, with 5% on top of that. Overtime pay was boosted by 15c to $3.10 an hour and premium rates by a dime to $2.07. The old scales ranged from $411.66 a month for a single operator on a freighter to $583.81 for the chief operator on the United States, the nation's largest passenger ship.

40-Hour Week Won By CIO In N. Y. Grocery Chain

ABOUT 1300 members of the CIO Retail, Wholesale Union last week won the first 40-hour week for retail grocery workers in the New York metropolitan area.

RWDSU Local 474 got the shorter week with a $3 increase over the wage formerly paid for 45 hours in an agreement with Safeway Stores. The pact also provides 25c an hour premium pay for work done before 8 a.m. and after 6 p.m. Increases are retroactive to Oct. 1.

The agreement is expected by the union to set a pattern for 25,000 chain store employes in the New York area.

Clerks will now get $72 a week, head meatcutters $96, journeymen meatcutters $81 and meat wrappers $61 for the five-day week. The workers are employed in 160 Safeway units in New York City, Long Island and Westchester county.

Safeway said it planned no price increases to cover the added payroll costs. Some of its western stores previously agreed to the 40-hour week. (LPA)

CIO Meets To Pick New President

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE 14TH CONVENTION of the CIO—postponed two weeks by the death of Philip Murray—opens in Atlantic City, N. J., on Dec. 1 with a big agenda, including the election of a new president of the organization.

Hovering over the convention will be the memory and tradition of Philip Murray, who in the years since his election as president left an indelible imprint upon the CIO.

The sessions open in the auditorium of the Hotel Chelsea—the exact spot where in 1940 Murray had first been elected to fill the CIO's top post.

Who his successor will be had not been agreed upon as the CIO News went to press. Leading figures in CIO affairs—including its executive officers and vice presidents—met for a day of discussion in New York on Nov. 24.

Without any formal agreement among themselves, they decided to meet in Atlantic City for further pre-convention discussions on Nov. 28.

PRE-CONVENTION meeting of CIO officers was held last week in New York. Shown at session in headquarters of CIO Clothing Workers are (left to right) Joseph N. Curran, Walter P. Reuther, Allan S. Haywood, David J. McDonald, James B. Carey, Joseph A. Beirne, Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, Jacob S. Potofsky, and O. A. Knight.

ATTENDING the day-long New York meetings, which were called by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, were these key men in CIO affairs: Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers; Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, who has been handling the activities of the union's presidency pending his probably uncontested election as steel union head in February; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers and Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Clothing Workers—both of whom are also CIO vice-presidents—were prevented by previous appointments from attending the meetings.

No statement, except the bare announcement of the Nov. 28 meeting, came from the group after it had met three times during the course of the day.

During the course of the Nov. 24 session, however, a special committee to create a "living memorial" for Philip Murray announced that it will recommend creation of a "Philip Murray Memorial Fouundation." The recommendation was to be placed before the Executive Board at Atlantic City on Nov. 29.

Emil Rieve, chairman of the special committee, said, in announcing the proposal, that "CIO unions will be asked to subscribe funds to the Foundation to perpetuate the name and humanitarian philosophy of the late CIO president.

"The Foundation, it is anticipated, will be directed by the officers of the CIO and friends of Mr. Murray outside of the ranks of labor," Rieve said.

"The type of projects in which the Foundation will expend its funds will be considered by its officers at a later date."

Rieve said the Foundation would serve as a "living memorial" for Murray, "and that its essential purpose will be to carry out Philip Murray's deep interest in the spiritual and economic advancement of working men and women."

Members of the committee who joined with Rieve in the statement were Executive Vice.-Pres. Haywood, Sec.-Treas. Carey and Reuther, Curran, McDonald and Potofsky.

A MURRAY memorial ceremony on Dec. 5 will be one highlight of the Atlantic City convention.

The first convention speaker will be Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, who will be making his final official address to a labor group. He will be heard the opening afternoon.

On Dec. 2, Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon, who bolted the Republican Party during the campaign, will speak in the morning, Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor and Civilian Defense Administrator J. J. Wadsworth will talk during the afternoon.

Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will address the delegates the morning of Dec. 3. At the Murray memorial service in the afternoon, speakers will be Gov. Adlai Stevenson (D. Ill.), Rev. Charles Owen Rice, Pittsburgh labor priest, and Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the CCL.

Final scheduled speakers on Dec. 4, are David Cole, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, in the morning, and W. Averell Harriman, Mutual Security Administration director, in the afternoon.

'We Must Carry On In Spirit Of Philip Murray'

Following are excerpts from the supplemental report of the CIO executive officers and vice presidents to the 14th Constitutional Convention of the National CIO which opens at Atlantic City, N. J., on Dec. 1:

WE PREPARED this report with a heavy heart. The death of Philip Murray on Nov. 9, 1952, robbed America of an outstanding citizen and our organization of its great leader.

The contributions which Philip Murray made to the CIO are known by all of us; but each officer of our organizations and of our affiliated unions knows of special contributions and services by Philip Murray to our cause. His leadership was manifested not only in the development of solutions to big problems but his advice and guidance were instrumental in helping us solve the myriad small problems that the CIO and its affiliated unions are confronted with during each day.

IT IS CLEAR that the special position which Philip Murray held in our minds and hearts can never be filled.

The future will bring us new leaders as well as new problems. We shall endeavor to meet the issues of the future with as much wisdom as we can muster and with constant concern for the welfare of our organization, its millions of members and the even larger group of American citizens outside our ranks who look to the CIO to carry on a militant struggle for the attainment of the people's objectives.

In the tradition of Philip Murray, we will best be able to serve our people and the nation.

In the tradition of Philip Murray, we will best be able to strengthen democratic unionism, democracy in America and a free world which craves peace, stability and economic progress. To these goals, we solemnly pledge ourselves . . .

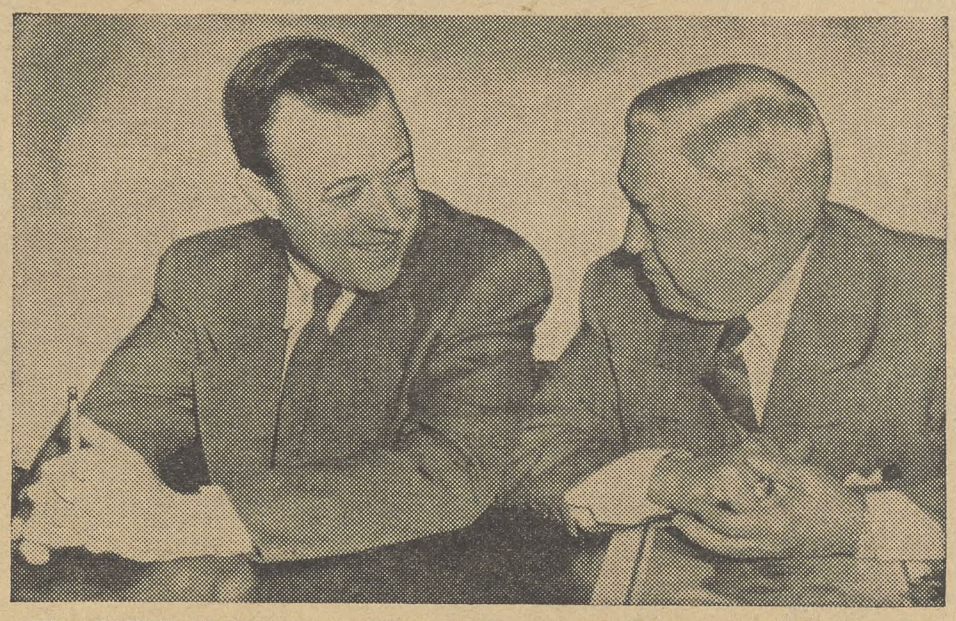
Philip Murray built the CIO into an efficient administrative organization. When America was plunged into war, Philip Murray led the mobilization of the resources, the talent and the initiative of the CIO, its unions and its members to help the United States defeat its enemies.

Men of varied political complexion from every walk of life came to recognize that labor and primarily the CIO, under Philip Murray's leadership, played a tremendous role in our nation's victory.

But the peace for which the world was waiting and which proved to be of such short duration, brought little peace to the CIO and its great President. In the months immediately after the end of hostilities, there were great economic battles to be waged with the barons of industry who hoped once again to relegate organized labor in America to a secondary position and to depress the living standards of the people.

PHILIP MURRAY was a tower of strength in those days of bitter economic dispute and he led our organizations to victory over the most intense anti-labor attack in recent years.

When industry turned to the legislative branch of government to carry on the attack that failed to win on the picket lines, Philip Murray threw all of his strength into the fight against the vicious Taft-Hartley Act; and to his dying day, he breathed fiery opposition to that ill-conceived piece of legislation. The eventual repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act will be one more memorial to the heritage of our great leader, Philip Murray.



CIO OFFICERS MEET—Walter P. Reuther (left), president of the CIO Auto Workers and a CIO vice president, confers with Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, in New York. Daily press reports say they are the two major candidates for CIO president at this week's Atlantic City convention.

As the cold war between the free world and the Communist dictator world began to develop, the CIO, under Philip Murray's leadership, successfully handled its most difficult internal problem—that of Communist infiltration into the leadership of a number of unions. Philip Murray tried desperately to reduce to a minimum the success of the Communist infiltrators. When he felt that the influence of the Communist Party had been brought to an irreducible minimum in the leadership of a few of our affiliated organizations, he led the successful drive to expel those organizations from the ranks of free trade unionism. It was a successful move, as result of his leadership.

WITH THE CIO purged of subversive influences, the stage was set for our organization and its affiliated unions to play an even greater role in American life. Our unions made significant contributions to the welfare of Americans through the development of pension and welfare programs; wages were brought to new high levels and renewed attacks on discrimination and intolerance were led by our President.

When he went to his ultimate reward, Philip Murray had not completed his life's work; but his objectives were so broad, his humanitarianism so fundamental, that Philip Murray's life work will never be finished so long as there is exploitation in the world, so long as discrimination remains in any form, so long as mankind fails to live by the words of the Golden Rule.

We pledge ourselves to carry on the work and the spirit of Pres. Murray's contribution.

The CIO Convention

The responsibilities which face the postponed convention of the CIO, as it meets in Atlantic City this week, are of tremendous proportions.

It is no easy task to carry out the legacy of a man of such great stature as the late and beloved Philip Murray.

But, certainly the responsibility will be in the mind of each delegate; and, if we correctly interpret the thinking of the officers of this organization, there is an overwhelming desire to meet that responsibility, and to carry on in the noble traditions of Philip Murray.

On that basis, then, it can safely be predicted that the CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention will be successful and constructive.

The AFL's Loss

The CIO was quick to extend to the American Federation of Labor the deep and genuine feeling of loss caused by the death of William Green.

A faithful servant of the workers of America, he had worked long and devotedly in their interests. Though the years had brought divergences of opinion and a good deal of sharp debate, the members and officers of the CIO, like their counterparts in the AFL, recognized Bill Green as a man of honor whose every thought and every act was based on his concept of what was best for American labor and for American democracy.

Coming so soon after the death of our own Phil Murray, the loss of William Green is another blow to American workers.

In the deaths of the CIO's Phil Murray and of the AFL's Bill Green, American workers have suffered heavy blows. But the labor movement to which they both dedicated themselves has grown strong under their leadership—and the best tribute to these stalwarts is in the permanence of the organizations which they served.

In George Meany, the AFL has chosen a logical successor—a man of energy and intelligence who should continue, in his new post, the great contributions he has already made to the Federation.

We congratulate him on his election, and wish him every success in the years ahead.

Welcome To ICFTU

The six million members of the CIO extend warm fraternal greetings to the Executive Board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which meets this week in New York.

We doubly welcome these leaders of international labor because they represent those in other countries who are closest to us—53 million workers who have organized themselves into trade unions in nations where freedom has not fallen under the blight of one of the world's twin evils, communism and fascism.

May their sessions, the first of a worldwide labor organization to take place in the United States, be made more fruitful by the atmosphere of freedom and liberty in which they take place. And when they go back home may our welcome follow them, so they will come back again—and again.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY
President (Deceased Nov. 9, 1952)

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV December 1, 1952 No. 48

A Living Tribute

In Other Words—

Disaster Grows In Argentina

This report on the economic crisis in Argentina is abstracted from an article in Facts & Figures, publication of the Research Dept. of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

THE ECONOMIC and financial situation of Argentina is disastrous and a lack of dairy and meat products has worsened the food situation.

The country's agricultural economy is disorganized through a lack of agricultural machinery, exploitation of products by the State, migration of farm workers to cities, and—aggravating these circumstances—bad weather conditions. There is no wheat, corn, barley, oats or rye for internal consumption. Bread is of miserable quality, being mixed with 30% of millet, which gives it a green-gray color. There is no linseed for exportation.

While Argentina has always been an exporter of agricultural products, today she must import wheat from Hungary. According to the latest information, 200,000 tons of wheat are being imported from the U.S.A. in exchange for corn, a product of which Argentina has no real surplus.

Cattle breeding continues to decay. Once, in 1951, Peron told a group of visiting U. S. Congress members that Argentina had a stock of 80 million head of cattle; the truth is that the number is not even as high as 30 million. This is the reason why there is no beef for internal consumption and the government has seen itself obliged to ration meat and introduce meatless days. In spite of all these restrictions there is no meat for export.

In consequence, Peron's Argentina cannot live up to her agreements with Brazil for providing wheat, nor to those with Great Britain on the sending of meat. While only a few years ago the country exported 400,000 tons of meat to England, the amount in 1952 will not exceed 150 tons.

Because of lack of gold and foreign exchange (the gold reserves amount to only 800 million pesos, and foreign exchange to two billion pesos), the country is practically closed to the importation of raw materials, agricultural machinery and other articles. (One pesos=7.2c.)

The social consequences of these conditions is lack of consumer articles, a raise in the cost of living and the beginning of unemployment.

The monthly statistical bulletin of the United Nations gives figures about the inflationary spiral. Taking as a basis 1948 and comparing it in terms of the cost of living to August 1951, the Bulletin points out that the cost of living rose 3% in Switzerland, 6% in Belgium, 8% in the U. S., and 149% in Argentina.

It is the depreciation of Argentina's money due to fantastic inflation and other most grievious errors which have led to those disastrous consequences. Wages and salaries do not match the rise in the cost of living, and this causes a descent in standards of living.

Lately deflation seems to be setting in with disastrous consequences, due to lack of purchasing power as well as to unemployment. Many long-established business houses, facing bankruptcy, had to accept short term loans at interest rates up to 10%, due to government credit restrictions. Bankruptcies during January-August 1952 were five times those of the same period in 1951.

OF 130,000 textile workers, around 35,000 are already out of work, and the percentage in the building industry is almost as high.

Leaders of the puppet Confederation of Labor lately indulged in agreements with business and industry on whom and how many people to fire in order to spread work through reduced hours. Peron seemingly also hopes through these procedures to drive workers back to the land, where they are badly needed, thus putting them again at the mercy of the feudal landed aristocracy.

We must not conclude this description of the Peronist "Paradise" without mentioning the black market, which is flourishing more than ever. Here the favored few can buy meat, eggs, and butter, but for a high price. The others have to content themselves with gray-green bread and potatoes, if and when they can obtain them through regular channels.

This is the true picture of the Peronist dictatorship and its economic and social decline.

The consequences are already apparent. Deep unrest is stirring the Argentine workers, who less and less know how to make both ends meet. And some of the puppets of Juan Peron and his late wife, like their main satellite, Espejo, already feel the bottom falling out of their usurped thrones.

Behind The Headlines

No Fuss, No Muss, But Bang When GOP Rolls

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

YOU WON'T even know what hit you, for it will be done indirectly, and neatly, and legally. But your cost of living will go up—even if taxes are cut, which is unlikely.

For example, what good is a tax cut if we get a national sales tax? Yet, that's what business economists have been crying for, and the new administration is pledged to "listen to business."

Or what good is a tax cut, if the price of gasoline goes up, and the gas you use for cooking, and for heating; and your telephone bill, and your electric bill? If rail freight rates go up, and trucking rates, you'll feel the result in your pocketbook at once.

And it won't need any legislation, either. For these rates are set by various regulatory commissions, and all the new administration needs to do is to see that the "right kind" of appointments are made to these commissions. That is what the conservatives mean when they say that now they have an administration that will "listen to business."

Here's how the oil lobby and power lobbies can turn the trick of increasing your bill for gas and oil and electricity without any congressional action; Thomas Buchanan, only member of the Federal Power Commission who voted for the people in the Phillips Petroleum case, was up for reappointment. Confirmation was blocked in the Senate, so he now has an interim appointment. The power and oil lobbies will see to it that he is not confirmed.

Or take the Federal Trade Commission, whose job it is to see that you are not gypped, that the anti-trust laws are obeyed, that the small business man has a chance. Best friend of the people on the FTC is John Carson. His term is up. There is little chance that he will be confirmed for another term.

And that's how it can go on other regulatory bodies, including the Securities and Excange Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Communications Commission.

THE GOP can have at once three of the five commissioners on the SEC; two of three on the Civil Service Commission; three of five directors of the Export-Import Bank; three of five members of the Civil Aeronautics Board; two vacancies on the Tariff Commission, and the chairman.

The GOP can have one spot on the FTC now and three of the five members by next September; one spot on the FPC now, three of the five by next June; one spot on the Atomic Energy Commission now, three of the five by next June; two spots on the ICC this December, and six of the 11 by December 1954, and one spot on the NLRB by next August, and three of the five by August 1955.

And if packing these agencies is too slow, the business boys will push what they have been trying to do for years—undercut or bypass these commissions, shifting regulatory power from the commissions to the courts. And that would mean being able to tie up cases for years, since most court dockets are hopelessly crowded, and cases can be dragged from one court to another for decades.

The Eisenhower victory was sweet for the petroleum industry especially, for Ike has promised to give the oil people what they wanted on off-shore oil deposits worth some $40 billion. Three states will get title, and 45 states will lose any possible revenue from a national resource. And state regulatory bodies are notoriously more friendly than federal commissions have been.

The oil and gas people will continue to be 27.5 per centers. That's what they now get under the law as a "depletion allowance," and there's no chance the 83rd Congress will reduce it. The 27.5% is such a wonderful gimmick that the oil industry's rate of profit is the highest in the country.

But that's not all. There will be no more projects modelled on the Tennessee Valley Authority, and there may be a drive to kill TVA. The power people are putting out feelers about forcing the government to sell all the great electric power resources developed during the past 20 years. And that means higher prices to you.

And finally, there's the biggest plum of all—control of atomic energy.

Here's how Thomas L. Stokes, well known columnist, put it: "You'd never know it from the campaign, but there are much bigger stakes in government than mink coats and deep freezes. There are those who do know it, and act on it. They bear watching from now on."

Press Performance—

'Objective' S. F. Daily Gave GOP Up To 83% Of Space

FRESH EVIDENCE of the way the nation's one-party press rigged its election coverage in favor of President-elect Eisenhower has been placed on the record by a West Coast labor paper.

San Francisco Labor, local AFL publication, couldn't believe its eyes when the San Francisco Chronicle, which likes to call itself "the New York Times of the West Coast," claimed it had "achieved an outstanding record of quality and equality of news treatment throughout the campaign."

So Labor took its yardstick in hand and checked the Chronicle's "home" edition for the last four weeks of the campaign. Here are the results:

Eisenhower got 57% of the campaign news space; Stevenson 43%.

The GOP congressional candidate got 83% of the news stories of that race; the Democrat 17%. (He was Franck R. Havenner, veteran liberal, who was defeated.)

Republican legislative candidates got 81% of the space devoted to those races; the Democrats 19%.

THE SURVEY followed charges by 94 distinguished American newspapermen and authors, that the Chronicle along with other powerful papers was engaged in "an unrelenting attempt to play down one of the candidates" (Stevenson). The Chronicle objected furiously, claimed it was unbiased in its news columns and said, "We can document the integrity of our record."

Here's the documentation, and it doesn't prove "integrity" on the part of the staunchly conservative, Republican paper, which prides itself on being "objective":

Eisenhower was given 231 stories using 2247 column inches of space and topped by 291 eye-catching headlines. Stevenson had 179 stories, 1886 column inches of space and 211 headlines.

On Page 1, Eisenhower won 51 stories using 479 column inches; Stevenson 40 stories in 379 column inches. Eisenhower had three page one pictures, Stevenson two; but Ike had 21 pictures on inside pages to seven for Adlai. In space, Ike's pictures took 436 inches to 128 for the Illinois governor.

Labor also checked, informally, other San Francisco papers and some from other sections of the country. "More shocking even than the results of the Chronicle study," it said, "was the discovery that actually the Chronicle's treatment of campaign news was not a singular thing. Slanted as it was, it nevertheless was typical of—or even better and less partisan than—most."

Corn Flakes

"When the merchandise is good, the press can sell it."—Charles McCahill, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, after the election.

Strike Voted At N. Y. News

The New York Daily News, one of the richest newspapers in the country, is facing a strike by the CIO Newspaper Guild because it is trying to chisel on the citywide contract pattern set with other papers.

The Guild members, at a series of meetings, authorized their officers to call a walkout in consultation with officers of the Newspaper Guild of New York.

All Perfectly Legal—

'Big People' Get Lowdown On How To Give Tax Collector The Go-Bye

IT'S "HUNTING" season for the big boys; the time of year when they scurry from tax consultant to tax consultant seeking ways to "evade" (that's a lawyer-like way of saying "dodge") federal income taxes.

From now until Dec. 31, they'll be juggling figures, lining up dependents, and uncovering loopholes in an attempt to cut their tax bills.

The big boys are getting lots of help too. Prentice-Hall, a big New York publishing house, has prepared a super-secret report, which it will distribute to a thousand of the favored few, on how to do the job on dodging taxes and still remain "legitimate."

The Prentice-Hall report is called "How 'Big People' Reduce Their Federal Taxes" and the company advises it is of no value unless "your personal income is upward of $15,000 a year or if your company has net income of more than $50,000."

The secrets in this report, the company says, do not "cover ordinary tax savings." It covers the "special arrangements, the special methods that bring a larger kind of tax relief."

Included in this hush-hush report, not meant for the eyes of ordinary mortals, is the lowdown on "how the larger taxpayers use the capital gains tax —how they apply the less publicized 'splitting' provisions of the law—how they handle their life insurance — how they cut taxes by making gifts to their families."

It also "shows how they gain special tax advantages through the use of stock options—pension and profit plans—the corporate split up plan—the multiple unit plan—the family partnership plan."

And if that isn't enough, the report "explains the tax angles they (the big people) apply in connection with a country place or a farm—how they set up their hobbies—the plans they follow to reduce the tax on income from investments — the special ways they handle gifts to charity."

Prentice-Hall says this dope has been "worked out by the best brains in the country." And, it adds, "the methods are of course perfectly legitimate."

All these secrets, Prentice-Hall confidentially informs its clients, have "till now been in the hands of a relatively few wealthy individuals and large business organizations."

But because this New York publishing house seems to feel it a duty to help others evade federal taxes, it is now making this material available "to the top thousand executives in America."

"Boy, there's a job you can have."

Plenty Of Suds In Ads—If Not In The Soap

FAB WILL not wash clothes as clean without rinsing as with rinsing. Nor will it wash clothes without rinsing cleaner than or as clean as soap with rinsing.

Same goes for Tide, Cheer, Surf, and Hum, all detergents widely ballyhooed by the makers.

The four companies involved —Colgate-Palmolive-Peet, Proctor & Gamble, Lever Brothers and the Theobald Industries—have signed stipulations with the Federal Trade Commission agreeing to discontinue such advertising claims.

In addition, Theobald, makers of Hum, will stop advertising that Hum protects the colors in dyed cloth and that it produces 25% more suds, or any amount more, than other synthetic detergents. (LPA)

Book Review—

The Story Of CIO's 'Ambassador To The South'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

DANIEL in the lion's den had no more need for courage than Lucy Randolph Mason did in facing some of the raging, hate-ridden anti-unionists she often confronted during the 15 years she has worked for the CIO in the South.

In 1937, when she first came to the CIO, Miss Mason was assigned to the South as public relations representative. She says the closest name to describing her job was "roving ambassador" or "ambassador to the South."

Later when Van A. Bittner became head of the CIO's southern organizing drive in 1946, she was assigned specifically to look after civil rights cases, an activity she already had been doing with much success.

A DESCENDANT of southern families of historic fame and a daughter and granddaughter of ministers, this white-haired little lady with her mild pleasant face and gentle manner looks like the last person on earth you'd pick for the exciting role she played during tempestuous and often violent and stormy years of the CIO's organizing drive in the South.

Priceless stories of her spirited arguments with judges, police officers, leaders of anti-union citizens' committees and others who believed the CIO was spawned by the devil, are scattered through Lucy Mason's personal story of the CIO's campaign in the South, as told in her book, "To Win These Rights," recently published by Harper & Bros.

LUCY RANDOLPH MASON

The stories are fascinating, not only for their dramatic interest and on-the-spot pictures of some lawless officials of the law, but also because they make you see through the eyes of an honest, intelligent and sensitive woman the tragic results of the South's low-wage standards and discrimination against Negroes, and the appalling prejudice and stupidity in high places that the CIO often faces in its efforts to improve the lives of southern workers through unionism.

Of course much progress has been made in recent years, but violence and bloodshed against union people is by no means a thing of the past.

The great value of Lucy Mason's work for the CIO in the South stemmed mainly from two things. One was her ability to get in to talk to people of influence in a local situation involving violation of union members' legal rights, thanks to the respect they felt for her family connections, along with her own pleasing personality. It was a rare occasion when Miss Mason could not ease the tension of an interview by mentioning a relative or a famous forebear whose name was familiar to the man she was tackling.

The other thing that made her invaluable was the spunk, intelligence and logic with which she presented the CIO's case after she got an interview or hearing. Many a stuffed shirt who at first gave her condescending or light-minded replies was often reduced to red-faced confusion, especially when others present laughed in appreciation of her quick wit.

Anyone rash enough to challenge Miss Mason's right to speak up for union people in the South would step smack into a trap, for as George Mitchell writes in the introduction to the book, some of Lucy Mason's famous Virginia forebears were statesmen distinguished for their fight for the rights of plain people.

GEORGE MASON, who wrote the Virginia Declaration of Rights that became the Bill of Rights in the U. S. Constitution, was her mother's great-great uncle. Robert E. Lee was her father's near cousin, to mention a few.

More often than not, Lucy Mason succeeded in her talks with men in authority in getting them to recognize, at least in some degree, the legal rights of the union that were being violated. Now and then she even won them over to a completely new outlook on union activity, that often was of great help to the CIO. But not always. Miss Mason tells at length an ironic story of one of her "less successful ventures."

It was an interview with a banker in a Virginia town who headed a citizens' committee opposing organization of a new clothing factory built by a northern company with a subsidy from the town. A friendly smile greeted her remark that her brother-in-law was also a banker in Alexandria, Va., but when Miss Mason told him her CIO mission, the banker's smile froze.

"We don't want the CIO around here," he said, glaring at her with hostility. When Lucy Mason reminded him of the federal laws which guaranteed the right of workers to organize, and protected the right of free speech and assembly, he dismissed it burlesquely as "so much piffle," she reports.

"We don't know anything about civil rights," the banker said, "but we know how to protect our own rights. The Labor Board is unfair and should be disregarded until Congress wipes it out."

Later Miss Mason went to see the judge in town, but found that the banker had already warned him, and the judge met her coldly. He pounded the desk as he said, "I'm not going to talk to anybody about this damned CIO. I'm against it and am going to do all I can to keep it out of here." And he left the room, banging the door behind him.

BESIDES THE fascinating stories of her own personal experiences in calling attention to the many violations of union rights and trying to force law officers to obey the law, Lucy Mason has brought together in her book a number of short life-stories of union members who rose to positions of union leadership out of the ranks of the workers in mills and plants throughout the South.

In her concluding chapter summing up the meaning and achievements of the CIO's southern activities, Miss Mason mentions particularly the prominent part the CIO played in the struggle to improve the lot of the Negroes.

"In recent years the wall has begun to crumble," she writes. "While many forces have worked toward this end, the union movement has been at the forefront, drawing the energies of once prejudiced people into a joint endeavor that overcomes every barrier."

Book Offered Through CIO

As a special service to CIO members and unions, copies of "To Win These Rights" are available through the CIO Publicity Dept.

Lucy Randolph Mason, a CIO staff member for 15 years, tells in the book the story of CIO organizing in the South.

Published by Harper & Bros., "To Win These Rights" are available at $1.25 paper bound and $1.75 cloth bound. Address orders to CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Oil Unions Plan For Coalition Council

NEW STEPS have been taken to form a permanent coalition of CIO, AFL and independent oil unions, it was reported last week by the Intl. Oil Worker, publication of the CIO Oil Workers.

This action grew out of the first coordinated strikes of these unions last May. Ninety thousand oil workers took part in the walkout, which was led by OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight and won a 15c hourly wage increase and other benefits.

Three meetings already have been held to cement the coalition. Others are planned on a regional basis.

Following the founding session of the Coalition Council in Chicago, a meeting was held at the OWIU-CIO headquarters in Denver, at which an activities and wages program was adopted. Just prior to the Denver meeting, an Inter-Union Council of Tide Water Associated Employes was formed at OWIU headquarters.

The general Coalition Council designated Knight as permanent chairman. Millard Sands of the independent Central States Petroleum Union served as secretary.

Knight pointed out that the coalition can reduce the necessity of strikes to enforce its bargaining requests by increasing its size and strength. The program called for:

1. Exchange of information by unions and intensive efforts to acquaint the members of unions in the coalition with its objectives, including a tentative plan to issue a coalition newspaper.
2. A series of regional coalition conferences.
3. Annual productivity wage increases of 10c an hour in addition to cost of living adjustments, and a return to the 36-hour week or shorter if necessary, with no loss of pay in case of extensive job curtailment.
4. Studies of pensions, sick leave and medical and hospital benefit plans.
5. Broadening of the coalition.

The first of a series of regional coalition conferences will be held in New York Jan. 24-25. The Inter-Union Council of Tide Water Employes agreed to hold at least two conferences a year, with the first to be held between Jan. 15 and Feb. 28 in Boston.

CSC Appointment

Harold S. Schrubbe has been named staff representative of the National CIO Community Services Committee in Milwaukee, succeeding John F. Nichols. Schrubbe is recording secretary of CIO Brewery Workers Local 9.

Jews Protest 'Defamation' By Satellites

THE JEWISH people and the state of Israel are the objects of a "calculated campaign of defamation" by the Soviet empire nations, Dr. Israel Goldstein, president of the American Jewish Congress, charged last week.

His declaration was based on so-called testimony at the trial in Prague, Czechoslovakia, of 14 purged Communist leaders.

"It is now evident," he said, "that the purpose of this trial, like its many predecessors in Cominform countries, is to publicize so-called confessions which are mass-produced in order to fit any pattern that a Communist regime desires.

"What is new and especially disturbing in this trial is that that Cominform has clearly decided to inflame and exploit anti-Semitic sentiment for its own purposes.

"There have been many signs that the Communist regimes have been moving steadily in this direction for some time. Today, in the light of this trial, there can no longer be any doubt that the Jewish people and the state of Israel have become the objects of a calculated campaign of defamation by the Cominform states.

"Free Jewish communities throughout the world, which fought the anti-Semitic excesses of Czarist Russia and the racial policies of Nazi Germany, will equally oppose these new variations on the ancient theme of anti-Semitism in whatever guise they appear."

CIO Backs UAW In Test Of Super-Seniority Rights

THE NATIONAL CIO last week filed a friend of the court brief with the U. S. Supreme Court in a super-seniority case which might have "serious and perhaps disastrous effect upon the conduct of collective bargaining negotiations by all unions."

At issue is a clause in the contract negotiated by the Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co. George Huffman, an employe of the firm's Louisville, Ky., plant, in a suit complained that the seniority sections of the agreement discriminated against certain employes in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

He alternately charged that his veteran's employment rights under the Selective Service Act had been violated, but two lower courts have rejected this claim.

The specific clause was written at the behest of government officials. It was designed to protect workers who went into service without having established seniority in the plant. It provides automatic seniority, covering length of service in the armed forces, for such veterans. In the present case this seniority outranked that of Huffman, who had gone to work after the disputed employes had entered service. Huffman later went into service.

In urging the court to reject the finding of the Sixth Circuit Court, the CIO said that to do otherwise would be to uphold Huffman's contention that the union "went outside the province of the matters within the legitimate interest of the bargainers and into forbidden territory."

THE UAW'S action, CIO contended, was a voluntary attempt to comply with governmental urging "that private interests and private groups supplement these statutory rules (the GI Bill of Rights) by giving additional protection to such returning servicemen" as had no seniority rights.

The Court of Appeals decision, the CIO contended, went "far beyond the question of veterans rights." "The question at issue," CIO said, "really is whether unions venture into 'forbidden territory' when they recognize the social values of the community and negotiate provisions with employers which give recognition to those values conferring increased benefits upon those who, in the community scale of values, are deserving of such protection."

Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel, and David E. Feller, assistant general counsel, filed the CIO brief.

Who Is Closing America's Open Door?

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

McCarran Act Hit—

Liberal Policy On Immigration Urged By CIO

THE CIO last week called for a "liberal long-run immigration policy" with special provisions for the homeless displaced by the war and for refugees escaping from behind the Iron Curtain.

The proposal is offered in the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook, which at the same time analyzes the development of the country's policy of restricted immigration and the legislation which currently reflects it, the McCarran Act.

The Economic Outlook is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research. Much of the material in the November issue was prepared in collaboration with Irving M. Engel, New York attorney and a member of the President's Committee on Government Contract Compliance.

The publication charges that U. S. immigration laws for years have violated the country's basic ideal that any person can become an American—"in spirit as well as in citizenship."

THE NEED for fundamental changes became apparent after World War II, the Outlook recounts. The act sponsored by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) and Rep. Walter (D. Pa.) was the result. In vetoing it, Pres. Truman told Congress that "the time to shake off this dead weight of past mistakes is now."

Both branches of Congress passed it over his veto with votes that the Outlook states reflected the anti-foreign attitude that "has been supported to an increasing degree in recent years by reactionary industrialists." The votes came from Republicans and southern Democrats.

"By this action," the Outlook observes, "Congress passed up a long-awaited opportunity to reform the many unfair and undemocratic features of our immigration policy.

"On the basis of a few worthwhile reforms, sponsors of the bill presented it as a liberalization of our policy. Actually it perpetuates most of the existing evils and creates some new ones.

"It provides new grounds for excluding future immigrants and for deporting immigrants previously admitted. It opens the door for new ways of depriving naturalized Americans of their citizenship.

"To the law's credit, it permits citizenship for Orientals, many of whom previously were ineligible. It also assigns small quotas to certain Far Eastern countries from which immigration formerly had been banned.

"But at the same time, it continues the policy of preference for northern Europeans over southern and eastern Europeans and finds new means of tagging non-whites as less desirable."

THE OUTLOOK points out that organized labor fears nothing from the immigrant, whom it welcomes both as a worker and a consumer.

"A new immigration policy should include realistic responses to three problems," it suggests.

"First, there is the need for a liberal long-run immigration policy. Secondly, there is the immediate need for special relief for persons displaced by World War II who have not found permanent homes — more than seven years after the war's end.

"Thirdly, there is the current problem of offering special refuge to the refugees who continue to find their way through the iron curtain to the West.

"A liberal immigration policy would admit to our shores a generous number of immigrants—based on the economic and social conditions of the nation.

"An improved immigration policy would eliminate the national origins quota system—in operation since 1924—which is a departure from our basic American traditions. Equal rights and equal opportunity require that no national, racial or religious group should be discriminated against under our immigration laws."

Reds Spending $1.4 Billion Yearly For Propaganda War On Free World

THE RUSSIANS are spending $1.4 billion a year on the services of 1.4 million propagandists to make the world safe for Stalinism, according to a report prepared for the Senate Subcommittee on Overseas Information Programs by its staff.

The "well-calculated, cold, cynical, intolerant, virulent" propaganda that results is a successful combination of force and persuasion, the report noted. The 10,000-word document, a detailed analysis of Russian propaganda techniques, was prepared under the direction of Dr. Sergius Yagobson of the committee staff and John Hauk of the Library of Congress.

"Soviet propaganda is a mixture of realism and dogma," it explained. "It operates in the guise of defense, but is always attacking. It is unscrupulous in its methods and merciless in the exploitation of vacuums and complacency, and of weakness and shortcomings of the opponents."

The report also said:

"It provides slogans, old and new, expressing simply and elementarily—and as euphonically as possible—the most important objectives of the moment. It is one-basic-theme-propaganda directed against one final enemy, hammering day after day, week after week, on the same subject. . .

"It is centrally planned, but it is diversified in the channels through which it flows, and by the audience it tries to reach. It is flexible though it operates within a definite set of premises. It pursues immediate — though often inconsistent — tasks, but has the unity of long-range aims.

"IT IS RATIONAL though it appeals much more to the emotions, rational sensitiveness and baser instincts."

The free world is up against great odds in trying to counterbalance Soviet propaganda, according to the report, because it has almost no means of getting either news or its own propaganda into and out of Russia.

On the other hand, Russian correspondents have access to free world news sources, and newspaper headlines are always at the disposal of Stalin when he choses to answer "a few questions addressed to him by a foreign journalist."

The staff told the subcommittee that Russia is using its embassies abroad and their staffs, with many of their agents operating undercover; the Russian Orthodox Church, which has become a "willing stooge of the party propaganda apparatus;" all mass communications media; some 325,000 persons constantly under training in Russia; Soviet "friendship" societies in other countries; a "tremendous" distribution of literature; athletics, and the arts and sciences.

The report said the Russian "peace" offensive is "intended primarily to demoralize the anti-Communist forces, undermine their will to fight and resist, strengthen neutralist sentiment, destroy peace of mind . . . and to establish the myth of 'warmongering' America."

The Stockholm peace petition has "borne dangerous fruits in befuddling world opinion," the report said. About two million Americans signed it, compared to a quota of five million, the report added.

Christmas Immigration Gift To Fascists Assailed By JLC

PENDING Justice Dept. interpretations of the controversial McCarran Immigration Act, permitting entry into this country of persons closely allied with, and perhaps still sympathetic to, fascist activities, was under fire last week.

The Jewish Labor Committee, in a protest to Atty. Gen. McGranery, said the action was "breaking faith with the millions of Jews and non-Jews whose lives were sacrificed in the crematoria of Nazi Germany and the concentration camps of Fascist Italy," and with those of "our sons who fought and died so that our nation would never be the victim of an invasion of totalitarian armies."

Urging McGranery to rescind the interpretation made by "misguided individuals in Washington whose memories are too short," the JLC added:

"We cannot over-emphasize the feeling of indignation that all of us who have long dedicated ourselves to the fundamentals of democracy feel about the interpretation."

Unless rescinded, the interpretation will go into effect on Christmas Eve when the McCarran Act becomes law.

Sec. of State Acheson blasted the act itself in a five-page statement to the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization. He said it threatens America's ties with friendly nations which can supply essential "sites for military bases and strategic materials."

Price Control Knifing Told

THE SENATE-HOUSE Committee on Defense Production —made up largely of Dixiegop Congressmen who over the past two years have repeatedly stuck a knife in price controls—last week owned up to part of their wreckage.

The committee issued a study of "consumer commodity prices and margin spreads" in which it warned that present loopholes in the Defense Production Act may make it difficult for the government to hold down prices in the future.

The report did not mention the specific amendments passed by Congress in 1951 and 1952 which brought new rounds of price boosts in their wake and cost consumers tens of billions of dollars in new inflation.

The committee acknowledged, however, that the amendments "could encourage upward price movements in various areas of consumers' goods and services, if and when demand increases."

The failure to mention the specific amendments thus criticized is understandable in view of the committee's membership. A check of The CIO News voting guide to the 82nd Congress shows that every member except Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) voted "wrong" on at least one of the key issues relating to sound economic controls.

THE PRESENT chairman, Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), voted to prohibit price rollbacks on beef and supported other weakening amendments; the ranking Republican, Sen. Capehart (Ind.), who will head the group in the new Congress, had an even more "pro-inflation" voting record and authored one of the amendments Pres. Truman denounced as "economic boobytraps" providing "built-in" inflation.

Other members include Sen. Bricker (R. O.) and Rep. Talle (R. Ia.), who both voted "wrong" on all key anti-inflation issues and sponsored crippling amendments. Talle went so far as to propose ending virtually all price controls last June 30. Although this amendment actually passed the House, it was later thrown out in conference.

THOUGH THE committee didn't get specific and hedged on the question of which part of the economy has been getting the extra money the consumer has paid out, Price Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods, who announced his resignation effective Nov. 30 after three months in office, gave the public a fill-in.

Woods, who quit because of "dissatisfaction with the price control law," made clear that special interests are getting the gravy.

"I think it is a weak law and I don't think it imposes a fair burden on everyone," he said. "It seems all I have done is sign orders increasing prices."

CIO SUPPORT for the demand of the CIO Transport Workers for the eight-hour day on private transit lines in New York City was pledged by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president. He spoke at a hearing before Theodore W. Kheel, impartial chairman of the industry in the city. To the right are TWU Sec.-Treas. Gustav Farber; TWU Pres. Michael Quill and TWU Local 100 Pres. Matthew Guinan.

Price Index Climbs Back Close To Peak

THE BUREAU of Labor Statistics' Cost of Living Index, after two months of edging downward, started up again in the month ending Oct. 15, according to the latest report.

However, about one million members of the CIO Auto Workers lost 1c an hour in wages. The BLS price index increase, one-tenth of one point, was not sufficient to offset slight drops during the two previous months of the quarter. Cost of living adjustments in UAW-CIO contracts are made every three months.

The "old" index, on which most union escalator clauses are based, increased from 191.4 to 191.5. That is nine-tenths of a point under the all-time high of 192.4 which was chalked up for July 15. The rise was due largely to higher prices for fuel, electricity, refrigeration, rents and services.

The UAW-CIO has made a net gain of 25c an hour in cost of living boosts since 1948. Walter P. Reuther, UAW-CIO president, in commenting on the wage drop, said the union would welcome the 1c drop if it represented a definite trend toward lower prices. However, he pointed out, the Oct. 15 level resulted from seasonal reductions in the cost of fresh fruits and vegetables—prices that already have started up again.

"The same elements," he observed, "who destroyed effective price controls and either destroyed or weakened other anti-inflationary measures now have the responsibility of leadership in Congress. We sincerely hope that this new responsibility will cause them to act responsibly; and that they will find some way to halt rising prices.

"While the greatest danger for the months immediately ahead is further inflation, now is the time to start preparing for and planning against the even greater dangers of deflation that will face us toward the end of next year."

The "new" BLS index also rose one-tenth of one point, from 190.8 to 190.9. The all-time peak, 191.1, was reached on Aug. 15.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "old" BLS Index:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: June 15	170.2
1943 monthly average	123.6	1951: June 15	185.5
1944 monthly average	125.5	1952: Jan. 15	190.2
1945 monthly average	128.4	Feb. 15	188.3
1946 monthly average	139.3	Mar. 15	188.4
1947 monthly average	159.2	Apr. 15	189.6
1948 monthly average	171.2	May 15	190.4
1949 monthly average	169.1	June 15	191.1
1950 monthly average	171.2	July 15	192.4
1951 monthly average	185.9	Aug. 15	192.3
1952 monthly average	190.6	Sept. 15	191.4
		Oct. 15	191.5

Union Shop Won By Auto At Goodyear

THE NAVY BLIMPS and aircraft parts made in Goodyear Aircraft Corp. factory at Akron, O., will be manufactured in a union plant in the future.

The company, an affiliate of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., agreed to the full union shop last week as part of a new contract that ended a 64-day strike by Local 856 of the CIO Auto Workers. The 5000 members of the local, which has represented the workers for 10 years, approved the settlement at a meeting Nov. 24.

The main point of contention during the walkout and in the negotiations before and after it started was an automatic progression plan, such as the UAW-CIO has in its agreements with other aircraft firms. The company finally capitulated, the last in its field to do so.

The settlement also included a general wage increase of 10c an hour retroactive to Sept. 1, elimination of one classification of workers, and 33 other contract improvements. The contract runs to Aug. 8, 1954, and provides for two wage reopenings on 10 days notice by either party.

CIO Supports TWU In 8-Hour Day Demand

CIO LAST WEEK threw its support behind the demand of the CIO Transport Workers for the eight-hour day on nine private transit lines in New York City.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, pledged CIO backing for the demand at a public hearing before Theodore W. Kheel, impartial arbitrator for the industry in New York City.

He said that the CIO would support any attempt by its affiliates to gain what has long been achieved by other unions. Haywood referred to his own days as a miner, and said there "would be Hell to pay" if some miners worked the eight hour day and others longer.

Workers on the city-owned transit system in New York City, for whom the big TWU Local 100 also bargains, have worked the eight-hour day since last June 1. Local 100 membership authorized calling a strike Dec. 1 if they were not granted an eight-hour day on eight bus lines and one trolley line, all privately owned.

TWU Pres. Michael Quill was quick to reply to appeal by Thomas Fennell, an attorney for two of the bus lines, to Kheel to obtain an injunction against the strike.

"I urge you, Mr. Kheel, to turn a deaf ear to this request," Quill said. "In case you don't know it, he's asking you to try to obtain an injunction to stop this strike. The day of the labor injunction is past. Fennell is living 40 years ago.

"We say to him that he cannot prostitute or substitute for collective bargaining the injunction, and, if he thinks so, he's got another guess coming."

Pres. Matthew Guinan of TWU Local 100 replied to Kheel's appeal that the union change its strike plans. He said he could give no assurance that the union would change its plans because collective bargaining had bogged down.

In addition to Haywood, other CIO officials at the hearing included Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg; R. J. Thomas, assistant organizing director, and Michael Mann, regional director.

IWA Appeals Court Ruling Periling Welfare Funds

A COURT decision which the CIO Woodworkers warns "could open the door to an entire new concept that a union does not have the right to negotiate health and welfare benefits for its members" has been appealed to the Oregon Supreme Court.

A circuit court judge ruled, at the request of the Coos Bay Lumber Co., that the firm could not make contributions to an insurance fund of 7.5c an hour, negotiated by IWA Local 7-116 as a pay increase for that purpose, unless it obtained individual authorizations from employes.

IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung, citing the 1950 contract with the company for the pay increase, said:

"It is our position that the agreement was solely for the purpose of providing means by which the company would pay 7.5c into the union's health and welfare insurance plan. The effect of Judge King's decision is that the contracting parties could work out the agreement if the money was not shown on the employes' checks, or if each employe signed an individual consent.

"The attack on the agreement is similar to attacks that have been made over the past several years against any fringe benefits—whether vacations, holidays, pension plans or what have you—negotiated by unions. Some employers take the position that unions should not have the right to negotiate such fringe or health plans. Theirs is the philosophy of despotism, benevolent or otherwise." (LPA)

Macy's Local Wins Ruling

AN ARBITRATOR'S decision last week granted a $2.75 weekly raise to all employes of Macy's department store, New York City, hired on or before last Apr. 2. The decision reversed the company's interpretation of an earlier arbitration award.

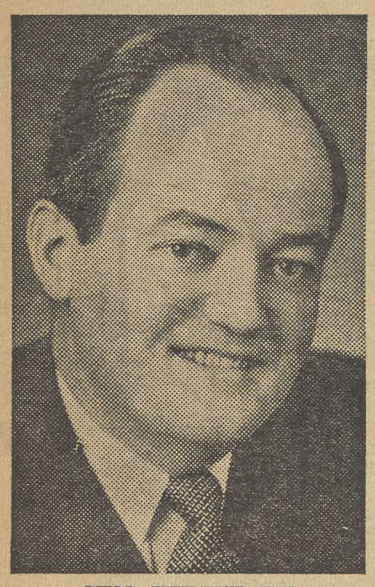
Macy's employes are represented by Local 1-S, CIO Department Store Workers. Macy's agreed to submit the dispute to the arbitrator, Theodore Kheel, after 1000 workers left their jobs recently. They were protesting deducting other increases previously given from their $2.75, and, in some cases, withholding the entire raise.

Employes eligible for the pay increase will receive it retroactive to last Feb. 1, or the date on which they completed 30 days' employment prior to last May 2, whichever is later. The earlier award was issued by another arbitrator.

Named To Board

Terrell Thompson, past president of Chevrolet Local 659 of the CIO Auto Workers, has been named to the county welfare board in Flint, Mich.

Humphrey Plans FEPC Challenge For GOP



SEN. HUMPHREY

By MILTON PLUMB

PRESIDENT-ELECT Eisenhower's campaign pledge of "fair treatment" for all Americans will be put to the test on the first day of the new 83rd Congress.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), one of the leading Senate advocates of enforceable fair employment legislation, announced last week that he will then carry forward his fight for anti-discrimination and other civil rights bills.

Humphrey said that on Jan. 3, opening day of the new Congress, he will again introduce a bill to prevent discrimination in employment because of race, creed or color.

THE MINNESOTAN is chairman of the Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee which has just published a report detailing discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups.

The measure, Humphrey said, will be the same proposal to create a federal Equality of Opportunity in Employment Commission that was approved this year by the Senate Labor Committee. That bill, sponsored by 17 Democratic and Republican Senators, got nowhere before adjournment because of the threat of a Southern filibuster.

Humphrey's action poses a problem for GOP leaders in the Senate, who have been seeking Dixiecrat support for their program in the new Congress. Such support is essential to the GOP, since the Republicans hold only 48 Senate seats to 47 Democratic and 1 Independent places.

IF THE GOP leaders press for civil rights action, they are certain to lose the Dixiecrat support which has enabled Republicans to actually run the last two Congresses by means of coalition rule.

If they don't, they will no longer be able to place responsibility for their failure to enact civil rights legislation at the door of the Southern Democrats. Since they have a majority, Republicans must take full responsibility for the actions of the 83rd Congress which they will control.

The struggle for the post of Senate GOP Leader, now going on between Sens. Taft (O.), Bridges (N.H.) and Knowland (Calif.) is likely to have a direct bearing upon how this issue is decided. Taft, Vice President-elect Nixon, and Sen. Hill (D. Ala.), were the only members of the Labor Committee to oppose Humphrey's bill this year.

Bridges and Knowland, on the other hand, come from states where sentiment for civil rights is strong. They are more likely to be amendable to pressure for action from other Republicans who think that it is about time for the GOP to stop trying to hide behind the Dixiecrats' coattails on FEPC and similar measures.

THE REPORT of Humphrey's subcommittee (see adjoining story) lent strong support to supporters of civil rights legislation by showing that Negroes are "less well off" than white citizens in terms of income, employment, education, health and length of life.

"The evidence is clear," Humphrey said, "that legislation by Congress is in order to provide equal opportunity in employment, adequate housing, fuller education and improved health facilities for all Americans."

During the campaign, Eisenhower indicated opposition to federal FEPC legislation. Humphrey's bill would provide for enforcement through decrees obtainable from federal courts of appeals. Employers would be subject to contempt of court penalties if they failed to abide by the courts' rulings.

Clarence Mitchell, Washington representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that Humphrey's report is "a challenge to President-elect Eisenhower and the leaders of the 83rd Congress. It shows that civil rights legislation must take an equal place with foreign policy when Congress meets."

UPA Ends Long Strike At Westvaco

APPROXIMATELY 3600 CIO Paperworkers have returned to work at the Luke, Md., and Covington, Va., plants of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. after a strike of more than 12 weeks.

Four hundred UPA members ended their walkout about six weeks ago at the Westvaco plant at Williamsburg, Pa., where conditions were not so repressive as at the two other factories. The Williamsburg workers had gone on strike at the same time as those in the two other plants.

The agreement ending the walkout provides that the workers in the three plants receive a 4c an hour general wage increase, two additional paid holidays and increases in afternoon and night shift differentials.

UPA Pres. Harry Sayre last week expressed the union's appreciation for the strike relief contributions by CIO affiliates.

Negroes Trail On Jobs, Wages

THE NATION'S 15.5 million Negroes are getting short-changed "in almost every significant and social characteristic that we can measure," a staff report by the Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee just released by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) declares.

Compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and incorporating findings of the last census, the study shows that although the well-being of both whites and Negroes improved between 1940 and 1950, "the highest proportion of Negro workers continues to be found in the lower-paying and less-skilled occupations, such as service workers and laborers."

Differences between the two groups have narrowed somewhat, the report shows, but Negro citizens lag far behind whites in many respects. In spite of the fact that more members of Negro families, on the average, must work for their living, the average income per Negro family unit was only $1869 in 1950.

That was just 54% of the $3445 average among white families. In 1945 the Negro families' average was $1538, or 57% of the $2718 average for white families. Thus, despite higher average earnings, Negro families actually fell 3% more behind in the five-year period.

The report gave the following findings in regard to other social and economic measurements:

Life expectancy—Negroes continue to die at a higher rate and their average life expectancy at birth is more than seven years less than that of whites, although, differences have narrowed somewhat. In 1949 the death rate for Negroes was 12.6 per thousand, compared with 8.4 among whites. The life expectancy at birth of Negro girls, in 1949 was more than eight and one-half years less than that of white girls.

Education—In 1950, Negroes aged 25 and over had completed an average of seven years of school, almost three years less than the average for whites. The percentage of Negroes aged 5 to 24 enrolled in school was 59.3% as compared with 61.1% of whites, but at ages 14 to 17 only 75.6% of Negroes were enrolled as compared with 85.7% for whites.

Unemployment — For both Negro men and women the average rate of unemployment, from 1947 to 1951, has been more than 50% above that for whites. This held true in spite of a consistently higher proportion of Negroes than whites working.

Distribution—The highest proportions of Negro workers continue to be found in the lower-paying and less-skilled occupations, such as service workers and laborers. Comparatively low proportions of Negroes are found in the professional, technical, managerial, clerical, sales and craftsmen occupations. More than 55% of Negro women are employed in domestic and personal service—a 2½% increase since 1944.

Individual income—In 1950 the Negro wage and salary worker earned an average of about $1,300, or 52% of the average for white workers. Since 1939, however, the average for Negro workers has increased relatively more than for whites. The average income for Negro wage and salary workers was about $400 in 1939—less than 40% of the average for white workers.

UAW Begins Plant-Gate Drive Against Hiring Bias

THE CIO AUTO Workers last week began a four-pronged attack on discrimination against Negro and women workers at the hiring gates in plants with which it has contracts.

These four immediate steps were taken by UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther:

1. Wrote Dwight R. G. Palmer, chairman of the President's Committee on Contract Compliance, calling for an immediate Detroit hearing to receive evidence of discriminatory practices at plants having government contracts. These discriminatory practices are in violation of the President's Executive Order. The UAW asked the hearing to determine whether or not a full-scale investigation is warranted.

2. Dispatched an administrative letter to all UAW local unions, instructing local union officers to take up all cases of discriminatory hiring at the next regular meeting between the local plant management and the bargaining committee.

Local officers were instructed that if they could not settle the problems at that level, they were to inform appropriate International UAW officals so that all cases could be taken up with top corporation officials. Reuther emphasized that the local unions were to take up cases of discriminatory hiring on both civilian and defense work.

3. Wrote Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan urging that his inaugural message include a recommendation that the new Legislature promptly enact a state FEPC law.

4. Wrote the Detroit Common Council, urging the Council to instruct the Detroit Interracial Committee to investigate discriminatory practices and to exert its influence with employers to change current hiring practices. He also urged the council to take out of the hands of the corporation counsel the proposed FEPC ordinance for Detroit and take favorable action immediately.

While the UAW's first steps were directed toward the problem in the Detroit area and Michigan, Reuther emphasized that the union will take similar steps wherever unfair hiring practices exist.

In his demand for a Detroit hearing by the President's Committee on Contract Compliance, Reuther charged numerous instances of violations of the anti-bias clause contained in all defense contracts. The committee is charged with the duty of enforcing this clause.

Reuther contended, in all four communications, that employers are not utilizing fully the manpower available in Detroit and other industrial communities. He specifically charged that, in order to deny employment to Negroes (both men and women) and to women (both Negro and white), employers have been and still are recruiting and importing workers from other areas.

"This has already resulted and will continue to result in the aggravation of serious housing problems and the overtaxing of other community facilities," he said. "This will also pose for these industrial areas a serious welfare and relief problem when defense employment declines and these in-migrant workers are laid off."

Setting forth the UAW's position, Reuther said:

"We believe that this (the ending of discriminatory hiring practices) is not only a matter of justice, but a matter of grave economic concern at a time when we are trying to mobilize our productive resources to meet the challenge of Communist aggression."

Trenton Two Get New Trial

The New Jersey Supreme Court last week set aside the convictions of two of the famous Trenton Six who were found guilty of the holdup murder of a storekeeper nearly five years ago.

It also ordered a new trial for the duo, Collins English and Ralph Cooper, on the ground they were convicted on the basis of improper evidence.

All six were found guilty at their first trial, a conviction denounced as a miscarriage of justice by liberal and labor groups, including the CIO. The other four were acquitted at a second trial also ordered by the State's high court.

Pontiac Approves Municipal FEPC

The industrial city of Pontiac, Mich., has become the 31st American city and the first in Michigan to enact a municipal FEPC ordinance. Adoption came on a 5-to-2 vote of the City Commission.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, in hailing the action, told the Detroit City Council it "ought to realize that it is later than they think."

"They should move forthwith to take the FEPC ordinance out of the mothballs in the Corporation counsel's office, and give the people of Detroit an atmosphere in which everyone, regardless of race, creed, color, and sex, can secure employment without discrimination," Reuther said.

CIO Leaders Join AFL In Mourning For Green

THE CIO last week joined the American Federation of Labor in mourning the death of William Green, AFL president for 28 years.

Green died Nov. 21 at his Coshocton, O., home of a heart attack. He was 82.

His death came only 12 days after that of CIO Pres. Philip Murray in San Francisco. They had been close associates for many years in the United Mine Workers, where Murray was vice president and Green was secretary-treasurer.

Green's death came only a month before he would have celebrated his 28th anniversary as president of the AFL. He had spent two days in a Coshocton hospital for a "routine checkup" and had returned to his home, where he kept in contact with his Washington office by telephone.

His final illness began the night before his death. His doctor said, "His heart just gave out."

THE AFL Executive Council met in Washington on Nov. 25—the day after Green's funeral in Coshocton—and named AFL Sec.-Treas. George Meany, a member of the Plumbers' Union, as president. He will serve until the 1953 convention.

One of Meany's first acts was to issue a call to the CIO for labor unity. He announced that the AFL will reactivate its Labor Unity Committee with a view to resuming negotiations.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, commented that the CIO "has always been open to suggestions" on labor unity.

WILLIAM GREEN

The "most heartfelt condolences" of the CIO were sent to the AFL by Haywood and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. In a telegram to Meany, they said:

"On behalf of the members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, we express to you our most heartfelt condolences upon the death of the great leader of the American Federation of Labor, William Green.

"Coming as soon as it does after the loss of our own beloved president, Philip Murray, the death of Pres. Green is another tragic blow to the American trade union movement.

"Throughout a lifetime of rich and rewarding service to the cause of labor in America, William Green exemplified the role of servant of the millions of workers who looked to the trade unions of the AFL for protection of their rights and for advancement of their welfare. Pres. Green served well their hopes and aspirations.

"William Green was a great American, who strove at every moment to serve the best interests of his nation, and to bring, at every period of national crisis, the full resources of American labor in support of our democratic institutions and national security.

"To the members and officers of the AFL, in this period of its grief, we extend the heartfelt sympathy of the CIO."

BOTH CAREY and Haywood, who had long, personal relationships with Green, sent individual messages of condolences to his widow. Carey said his loss "both to the American labor movement and to the nation is irreparable." He added:

"My personal association with Pres. Green years ago while I was an AFL organizer gave me many reasons to respect his profound sincerity, his devotion to the cause of working men and women and his abiding wisdom."

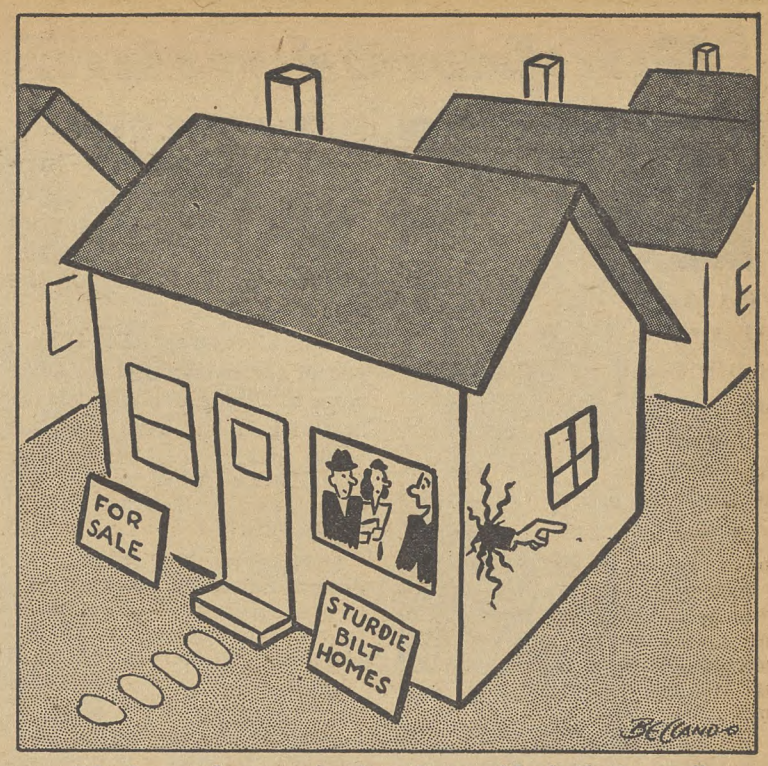
Haywood, noting his "great personal shock," told Mrs. Green, "Your husband was an outstanding American and a great trade union leader. Throughout all the years that have passed all of us have loved and respected Brother Green as a man deeply dedicated to the principles of democracy and honest democratic trade unionism." (See Haywood's column, Page 11.)

MANY CIO leaders joined in mourning Green's death. David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers, who has been assigned the duties of that union's presidency since the death of Murray, said:

"I started as a boy in the United Mine Workers and was assistant to Philip Murray when Mr. Green was the secretary-treasurer. I know his place will be most difficult to fill in the hearts of the members of the AFL."

Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, said: "American labor has just lost another of the grand old warriors who dedicated their lives to the building of the trade union movement."

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers, said: "His loss will be deeply felt by the entire American labor movement regardless of affiliation. His life and works are a monument to the highest and best in the American trade union tradition."



"And your bus service is only one block that way."

NLRB Raps Slowdown But Ruling Favors IUE-CIO

AN EMPLOYER is justified in refusing to bargain with a union which goes on a slowdown during negotiations, according to the National Labor Relations Board.

The ruling was handed down in a case involving Local 441, CIO Electrical Workers, and the Phelps-Dodge Copper Products Corp., Elizabeth, N. J.

The NLRB described the slowdown as "a harassing tactic irreconcilable to the (Taft-Hartley) act's requirement of reasoned discussion in a background of balanced bargaining relations upon which good faith bargaining must rest." It called the slowdown "an absence of fair dealing" which made it impossible to test the employer's good faith. During such a period, it added, the employer's "normal duty to bargain is suspended."

THE BOARD recounted that the firm resumed negotiations after the slowdown and did not discharge anyone, "as it would have had the right to do under established board and court precedent."

However, the board's stand did not prevent it from finding the company guilty of bargaining in good faith. This decision was based on the firm's insistence that the union take fringe benefits in the form of a wage increase, and by refusing to provide information on a group insurance program.

The chairman and the rest of the NLRB split in another IUE-CIO case in which the 4 to 1 majority ruled a union does not have to be consistent about the type of unit it wants to represent.

This involved a dispute over bargaining rights for tool, die, model and model mold makers at the East Springfield, Mass., plant of the Westinghouse Co. Involved were the IUE-CIO, which represents the workers on a plantwide basis, and the United Electrical Workers, which lost the whole plant to the IUE-CIO in 1950.

THE MAJORITY voted to order an election. Chairman Paul M. Herzon dissented not because there was anything wrong with the unit, but because "those who now seek to dismember that unit are the very ones who established it and thought it appropriate so long as they controlled it."

"The petitioner dealt with the employer on an industrial basis for more than a decade, beginning in 1939," he wrote.

"In 1946 it opposed an attempt by a craft union to sever a group of patternmakers . . . I do not believe that the government of the United States should lend a helping hand when so drastic a change of position is for the evident purpose of recouping losses on the installment plan."

CIO Tannery Workers Win Arbitration On 2 Firings

CIO TANNERY WORKERS LIU 1712 last week won two major arbitration awards in cases against the Johnstown Tanning Corp., in Gloversville, N. Y.

One case, involving discharges of Alfred Koerner and Anthony Damiano, found the company being ordered to reinstate both to former jobs and make up lost wages. Both had been discharged for failing to meet production quotas instituted two days earlier.

Arbitrator William Hazell of the New York Mediation Board found the company "acted hastily without affording reasonable safeguards to assure that the discharges were just and merited." Back pay in the two cases totals $300.

THE SECOND case involved piece work rates paid over a two-year period in violation of the contract. The rates paid, the company testified, were arrived at in consultation with unnamed employes. It offered no defense to testimony showing the rates were clearly less than those provided in the contract.

Hazell called attention to the contract rates, noted that CIO Local 1712 was the exclusive bargaining representative, and ruled the company must abide by the contract. It ordered employes reimbursed retroactive to Aug. 1, the date of the grievance, for all money lost because of lower rates.

The union immediately took steps to have the decisions confirmed by the courts.

Meanwhile, union members rejected contract proposals submitted by the Fulton County Tanners' Association and authorized the CIO to take "such steps as may be necessary." Such steps, union officials said, would include calling a special membership meeting for the purpose of taking a strike vote before the contract expires.

Dimes For Queen Go To A Good Cause

WHEN CIO MEMBERS attending the FDR-CIO summer school in Michigan voted for their choice for a 1952 queen they anted up a dime a vote.

Now those dimes have gone to work in Calcutta, contributed to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to help organize and train workers abroad.

The dimes added up to $1400—and one of the first places to get this money was the Asian School for Workers at Calcutta.

Such special contributions augment money set aside by the free world labor organization to pay for the schools and the students' expenses. Part of the money contributed at the Michigan school was used to buy a library at the Calcutta school.

Students at the school included a ricksha worker from Hongkong, a rubber plantation worker from Malaya, chemical and textile workers from India and Pakistan, and a miner from East India.

Similar schools have been conducted in France, Germany, Finland and Puerto Rico, and others are planned in Africa and the Near East. The students will go back to their countries to teach their fellow workers how democratic trade unions will help them get better conditions, freedom and democracy.

Victor Reuther, CIO European Representative, said that money raising campaign like that undertaken at the FDR-CIO summer school, will be begun soon in all CIO unions.

State Dept. Book Poses Red Threat

A concise, clear explanation of the threat to our free institutions which imperialistic communism poses is offered in a new State Dept. publication, Let Freedom Ring, which appeared last week.

The pamphlet gives the history of the conflict between Russian totalitarianism and freedom, explains the nature of the police state and its expansionism, and tells why the free world must become and stay strong so long as Russian communism continues as it does at present. A limited number of copies are available at 50c each from the Div. of Liaison, Dept. of State, Washington 25, D. C.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

WILLIAM GREEN has passed on after a lifetime of service dedicated to the welfare of America's working men and women and their families and the benefit of the nation at large.

Green's parents came to this country from England where his father had been a coal miner. And it was in mining territory that the late AFL president was born 82 years ago—in Coshocton, O.

I first met William Green when I introduced him and the late Van A. Bittner as speakers at a Labor Day celebration in Witt, Ill. in 1909. But I really came to know him well during the time legislation was passed in Ohio requiring payment to miners for all coal they loaded. Before that they were paid only for what passed over screens. The miners in Ohio were on strike for 14 months to get that law enforced. Green was president of the Ohio miners at that time.

Three years later he was appointed secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America. He served in that capacity until the death of Samuel Gompers. When John P. White resigned, Green continued on as secretary-treasurer with Frank Hayes as president; John L. Lewis became vice-president. Upon resignation of Hayes, Lewis became president and our beloved Philip Murray became vice-president of the United Mine Workers. The UMW combination then was Lewis, Murray, Green.

★

UPON THE DEATH of that old warrior, Samuel Gompers, in 1924, Green was elected president of the American Federation of Labor. He remained in that post until his death. He was the third man to serve as AFL president, Gompers was the first, John McBride was president for one year, and then Gompers became president again.

I was with Green at the founding meeting of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions in London and returned with him on the same ship. The CIO and AFL worked hand in hand to launch that movement in the interest of the free way of life and the interest of the common man and woman everywhere.

The labor movement has lost a great champion. It is a great loss to all of us—first the passing of our beloved leader, Philip Murray, and now William Green. It was on the faith of men like Philip Murray and William Green that the Miners' Union was built. They both worked in the depths of the earth and came forward to lead great movements dedicated to the betterment of mankind. The things they stood for will be carried on by those left behind.

William Green was a great union leader and a great American. We extend our heartfelt sympathies to Mrs. Green and family and we join with the American Federation of Labor in mourning this great loss.

★

THE CIO CAME UP with a splendid answer to secession when the Textile Workers smashed through a representation election victory with flying colors over the secessionsts, now a part of the AFL Textile Workers. The election was held at the Bigelow Carpet Co., Amsterdam and Thompsonville, Conn., and the workers expressed their confidence in the CIO Textile Workers by this vote: eligible 4450, votes cast 4123, CIO 2338, AFL 1727. Congratulations to the officers and staff of the TWUA-CIO who displayed great courage and spirit to once again defeat the efforts of the secessionists.

The eyes and ears of the Nation will be watching and listening this week when CIO holds its convention in Atlantic City. I am sure that the delegates that attend this convention will approach the problems that must be decided with the one overshadowing though in mind—to keep CIO strong and solid—so that we can continue as a team to do the work that Philip Murray led us in bringing security and happiness to workers all over this great nation of ours.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election at the National Foods Packing Co., Denver, Colo., the workers favored the CIO Packinghouse Workers by a vote of 32 to AFL 28, with one vote challenged. UPWA Reps. Bruce Nolan and Salvatore Castanom were in charge of the organizing campaign.

Field Rep. Joe Lovas reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a representation election at Lockport Cotton Batting Co., by a vote of 137 to 93 no union.

★

REG. DIR. ROBERT STARNES reports that the CIO Brewery Workers won a representation election at the Red Star Yeast Co., Bellechasse, La., by a vote of 37 to 0. This is a new plant and the unit will, in time, be larger. Intl. Rep. Ernest Munster was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the CIO Steelworkers were victorious in a representation election among workers at four plants of Aircraft Papered Sheets, California. The vote: USA-CIO 106 to AFL 30. Intl. Rep. Edmond Tanski directed the drive.

Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn reports that in a representation election at the General Electric Wire and Cable plant, Oakland, Calif., the workers favored the IUE-CIO over the UE by a vote of 44 to 33. IUE-CIO Rep. Al Fineman was in charge.

Vice Pres. Harold Snell reports that the CIO Transport Service Employes beat off an AFL raid among the dining car employes on the Burlington Railroad by over a 3 to 1 margin. The results: CIO 250, AFL 80, void 3.

ACWA Gains Wage Boosts At Rice-Stix

THE SIX-WEEK strike of 650 CIO Clothing Workers ended last week at two plants of the Rice-Stix Co., with wage increases of from 5c to 15c an hour.

An initial contract was signed covering the cotton garment firm's plants at Water Valley, Miss., and Farmington, Mo. The agreement also was extended to cover 200 ACWA members at the Rice-Stix plant in Blytheville, Ark., where the present contract is about to expire.

The bitter strike was marked by injunction suits and the use of the Mississippi National Guard against the Water Valley strikers.

ALONG WITH wage boosts, the ACWA also won time and half pay for work after eight hours; company-paid life, sick and accident insurance; four-hour guaranteed reporting-in pay.

Other features of the two-year pact are a week's paid vacation after one year employment and two weeks after five years.

As part of the settlement, Rice-Stix agreed to drop all legal action against the strikers and the union, including the pending contempt cases brought for alleged violations of a picketing injunction at Water Valley.

Negotiations were conducted for ACWA by Gladys Dickason and Ralph Brazier, vice presidents.

Phone Grab Callenged In Pennsylvania

THE PENNSYLVANIA CIO Council last week filed a brief with the State Public Utility Commission opposing a Bell Telephone request for a $32 million rate hike.

CIO Pres. Harry Boyer called the action a "moral obligation not only to our 600,000 members in the state, but to the Pennsylvania community at large to prevent this unconscionable grab."

In 1949, the PUC approved an $18 million increase, Boyer noted. The present petition was originally filed on a claim that further increases were necessary because of increased operating expenses.

"Our lawyers tell us, however, that the company has now switched to an entirely different reason for asking that this stupendous additional increase in rates be approved," Boyer said.

"The new reason is a flimsy attempt by the company to re-appraise its investment at a value enormously in excess of the original cost of its plant and equipment, and to ask for a 6% or greater return on this inflated valuation.

"Under these circumstances," Boyer said, "we believe that the PUC owes it to the citizens of Pennsylvania to disapprove the new rate increases which Bell is seeking."

Place Your Order Now!

Big Annual Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS

The CIO News will print an all-important special CIO Convention issue on Dec. 8.

Delayed by the postponement of the 14th Constitutional Convention after the death of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the Convention Issue will be printed shortly after the Atlantic City parley adjourns.

What the convention does in electing CIO's new president and in acting upon important policy issues will be big news and important news for every CIO union and every CIO member. The CIO News Convention Issue will give the complete story—in news reports, pictures, features and important texts.

Now, more than ever, all CIO unions and councils will need The CIO News 1952 Convention issue. Rush your orders now to The CIO News, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Special Rates

• BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for large orders.

In sending lists of addresses for bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each address. To facilitate bookkeeping, please send checks with smaller quantity orders.

• INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged by sending us mailing strips not more than 2½ inches wide.

Regular Rates

Apart from the special rates for the Convention Issue, unions which wish to take this opportunity to begin subscribing regularly to The CIO News may begin their bundle order or group subscription order with the Nov. 24 issue at the regular rates, which will be provided on request.

Just Clip and Mail!

The CIO NEWS
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the special 1952 Convention Issue of The CIO NEWS.

Please ship.....in bundle lots to the enclosed address.

Please have the 1952 Convention Issue individually mailed to membership lists for which we will furnish mailing strips. The total number of names to which we desire the paper sent is.....

☐ Check Inclosed ☐ Bill Us Later

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Organization .....

Big Business In Top Posts As Ike Fills Out Cabinet

By AL ZACK

THE BIG BUSINESS interests which provided much of the cash and the high-powered advertising talent for the successful Republican campaign now have furnished a big majority of President-elect Eisenhower's initial appointments to the cabinet and other top U. S. offices.

By last weekend, Eisenhower had filled all but two cabinet posts—his labor and commerce secretaries — plus several jobs ranking just below the cabinet in importance. By and large, the appointments came from the Dewey wing of the GOP, but Sen. Taft made known his satisfaction. And the joy in the business press was unconcealed.

Three of the Eisenhower appointments had direct connections with General Motors; another with basic steel and coal firms and big banking houses; and still another with malodorous international cartels.

Other Eisenhower appointments, just below cabinet rank, were those of Harold E. Stassen, a perennial GOP presidential hopeful with an anti-labor record, as head of the Mutual Security Administration, and Gov. Sherman Adams of New Hampshire, a lumber businessman, as assistant to the President.

Here's how the Eisenhower cabinet shaped up, as the General continued to make appointments from his Commodore Hotel suite in New York City:

DEFENSE—The powerful post of boss of the Pentagon went to Charles E. Wilson of Detroit, president of General Motors.

The 62-year-old boss of the world's largest corporation, who had been receiving $626,000 a year in salary and bonuses, took a steep pay cut to accept the $22,500 post. But no one expected he would starve.

Wilson had some tough bouts with the CIO Auto Workers but later signed the five-year, escalator-clause contract with the UAW. In recent years, Wilson several times has advocated a 45-hour work week, at 40 hour pay, for workers.

TREASURY—As the nation's chief money man, Eisenhower named George M. Humphrey, Cleveland industrialist and Bob Taft supporter. It was clear, however, that he wasn't a Taft nominee for the post.

Humphrey, a Michigan-born lawyer, is president of M. A. Hanna Co., and is a big-wig in Ernest Weir's National Steel and in other steel and coal firms as well as financial houses. Little known to the public, publicity-shy Humphrey is a big name in the business world and his appointment brought joy to the Chamber of Commerce.

STATE — The nation's diplomatic corps was placed under the command of John Foster Dulles, who had been prepared to move into that job in 1948 when he expected Tom Dewey was going to win the election.

Dulles was senior partner of the law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, reputed to have the largest legal income in the country. The firm represents big corporations almost exclusively, has handled the legal business of some of the world's largest cartels, including those of Nazi Germany, and has business connections with Franco Spain.

It was Dulles who wrote the GOP's ambiguous foreign policy plank at Chicago. Dulles wrote Eisenhower's campaign speeches on foreign policy which aroused widespread distrust in Western Europe by advocating "liberation" of Soviet satellites and later explaining "without a war."

INTERIOR—The nation's vast natural resources, long a target for hungry special interest groups, will be entrusted to a long-time foe of the proposed Columbia Valley Administration.

He is Gov. Douglas McKay of Oregon, an early Eisenhower supporter, and in private life a General Motors dealer.

McKay, who is 59, was a surprise appointment and is little known on the East Coast. His fellow Oregonian, Wayne Morse, who quit the Republican Party in disgust over Eisenhower campaign tactics, says "McKay is a well-recognized stooge of the tideland thieves, the private utility gang, and the selfish interests which place materialistic values above human values."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL—The nation's new No. 1 lawyer is another Dewey man and a big name in the corporation world. Youngest of the cabinet appointees, Herbert Brownell, Jr., is the man who ran Dewey's two unsuccessful campaigns for the presidency, master-minded Eisenhower's campaign, and is now handling patronage for the incoming administration.

The 48-year-old lawyer, who belongs to the wealthy law firm of Lord, Day & Lord, has close ties to the wealthy hotel and restaurant industry and is general counsel of the American Hotel Association.

AGRICULTURE — Eisenhower named a Taft man as Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra T. Benson of Salt Lake City. Benson, 53, has a Washington reputation as an extreme reactionary lobbyist.

He was executive secretary of the National Council of Farmers Cooperatives, a conservative organization, until 1943. Later he became chairman of the board of trustees of the American Institute of Cooperation, known as a big business-front group, dominated by the huge grain, milling and cereal manufacturing concerns. As a lobbyist, Benson's testimony seldom deviated an inch from the standard NAM line.

POSTOFFICE—The traditional spot for an administration's political chieftain went to Arthur E. Summerfield, of Flint, Mich., chairman of the Republican National Committee and owner of the largest General Motors agency in the world.

Summerfield spent most of the pre-convention campaign on the political fence. But at the Chicago convention, he yielded to GM pressure and played a major role in swinging a majority of the Michigan delegates from Taft to Eisenhower.

MUTUAL SECURITY—Harold E. Stassen, the man whom one observer noted had "been running for the presidency ever since his voice changed," will be the new head of the Mutual Security Agency.

After losing the GOP nomination in 1948, he was paid off by the Pew oil interests with the presidency of the Univ. of Pennsylvania, but never let his duties interfere with his politicking or his campaigning for the presidency.

ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT — Gov. Sherman Adams, one of the first Ike men, was not a candidate to succeed himself as New Hampshire's chief executive. Throughout the campaign he was at Eisenhower's elbow, serving as "chief of staff" to the General.

Happiest comment of all on Eisenhower's appointments came from Irenee Dupont, one of the top defendants in the government's three-year-old anti-trust case against the Dupont company which owns a big bloc of General Motors.

Said Dupont: "Very fine."

'The Plunderers Are In Command'

Bluntest comment on big-business domination of the Eisenhower administration came from Oregon's Sen. Morse (Ind. R.). He said:

"Gen. Eisenhower's appointments make it clear that instead of getting government out of business, big business will be placed in control of government."

He described the Eisenhower cabinet appointments "as very good for the reactionary forces that are out to plunder the people."

—Herblock in Washington Post

"Hm—Very Interesting"

UPWA Gains 15.5c For 30,000 Swift Workers

THE CIO PACKINGHOUSE Workers last week won wage and other gains averaging 15.5c an hour for 30,000 workers in 26 plants of Swift & Co., the biggest of the "Big Four" packers.

With the signing of the two-year Swift agreement, UPWA has settled pacts with three of the "Big Four." Contracts similar to the Swift agreement have been signed with Cudahy Packing Co. and Armour & Co. Negotiations have not been completed with Wilson & Co.

At Swift, UPWA won a general 4c hourly wage increase with wage reopeners every six months. The agreement increases minimum pay to $1.45 an hour, and the union estimates that the average pay rate is above $1.72.

A feature of the agreement is a reopening clause to allow negotiations for a hospitalization program, including medical and surgical care for employes and their families.

The pact also provides time and half pay for Saturday work, 4c an hour additional increase for all women workers, and 3.5c an hour additional increase for southern plants in Moultrie and Atlanta, Ga., and Dallas, Tex.

The night premium is boosted from 7c to 9c, adjustments in rate inequalities are made in more than 900 wage brackets, 40 hours is guaranteed in holiday weeks (the regular week has a 36-hour guarantee), and the standard incentive premium is hiked from 75% to 100% of the employe's hourly rate.

All increases, which are retroactive to Oct. 27, are subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval.

The new pact establishes safety committees and provides for furnishing of safety devices and tools. Swift has a pension plan and contributes substantially to group life insurance.

Union Helps When Collecting On Ma Bell's Big Promises

"GO TO WORK for the Telephone Company — they treat you fine," the big ads say. "You'll get pensions and everything."

But it doesn't work out that way in real life—unless you have a strong union fighting for your rights.

That's what H. J. Happs, a cable splicer at Clinton, Ia., and an employe of Northwestern Bell for 34 years, learned. Advised by his doctor to move to a warmer climate, because he was suffering from hypertension and chronic nephritis, Happs continued to work through the winter of 1951 and the spring floods of 1952.

Then he moved to Culver City, Calif., with a Bell official's promise of a job there, only to find, after weeks of running around, that the promise was worthless. He could go back to Clinton, endanger his health, or not work for Bell.

Happs turned to the regional CIO office in Los Angeles and Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler for help. After four months of getting the runaround, DeShetler and the CIO Communications Workers finally cracked the case and Happs received the pension to which 34 years of service entitled him.

But his health had been further undermined, his wife had suffered a nervous breakdown from the strain and uncertainty, and Ma Bell's employment ads had been revealed as soft-soap.

NLRB Challenges Recognition On T-H Oath Issues

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board last week called upon Local 80-A of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, Camden, N. J., to show cause why its bargaining certifications for four Camden plants should not be revoked.

The board action followed the conviction of Anthony Valentine, local business manager, on a charge of filing a false non-Communist affidavit—the first union officer to be found guilty of such a practice under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The order affects 900 members of the local, but does not cover those it represents in other plants where it was not certified by the NLRB. The board told union officers that unless they answer by Dec. 1, the certifications will be cancelled effective Dec. 4.

The local formerly was affiliated with the Food & Tobacco Workers, which was expelled from the CIO because of its Communist domination.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

Convention Issue

The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 8, 1952 82 No. 49

The New CIO 'Team' –

CIO's new "leadership team," headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, greet delegates from platform after spirited campaign and CIO's first roll call election at 14th constitutional convention. The team (from left): Allan S. Haywood, who was defeated by Reuther for president and then unanimously elected executive vice president; Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, also returned to office unanimously; and Reuther, president of the Auto Workers who succeeds the late Philip Murray as CIO president. Delegates from all unions and councils assured the team of united support. (See Pages 2, 3.)

Acceptance Speech—

'CIO Is United,' Reuther Warns Union Foes

The following are highlights from the acceptance address by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther:

On Philip Murray

I am fully conscious, as would be anyone else standing in my place, that in assuming the presidency and the responsibilities that go with that office, I am not in the remotest sense taking Phil Murray's place because no man can take Phil Murray's place.

Phil Murray's death left our movement with an irreplaceable loss. His death robbed our nation of a truly great citizen. It robbed the labor movement of a courageous leader. It robbed each and every one of us who knew him of a good and kind friend . . .

I say to you that the memory of Phil Murray, sleeping peacefully on that Pennsylvania hilltop tonight, is a challenge, a challenge that we cannot fulfill by noble words no matter how noble they may come from your mind and your lips, and no matter how full your heart may be when you commend them to expression.

We have to draw inspiration from the life that he led and the examples that he made for men to follow. And then we have to rededicate ourselves to the basic human principles, to the idealism, to those basic human and social values which Phil Murray understood so well and for which he devoted his life so unselfishly.

Unity Within CIO

Our enemies have been watching the proceedings of this convention from the cocktail bars of the Union League clubs and the millionaires' clubs all over America. Reading the stories in the press of the division in CIO has filled their hearts with hope, filled their minds with designs to take us on if we are divided, drive us back and rob us of our hard won social and economic gains.

I say to the men who sit on the plush cushions in the Union League clubs of America, I say this for you who are delegates, and I say it for the millions of CIO members back home, that the fat men on the plush cushions are wrong. We are not going to go out of here divided; we are going to go out of here united to carry on this struggle until we win.

MULTIPLE HANDSHAKE after roll call is exchanged by TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, CIO and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, USA Acting Pres. David J. McDonald, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Bargaining

In the halls of government we shall speak with one voice. We shall stand together at the collective bargaining tables, doing the practical work of the bread and butter front.

When the reactionary managements are unwilling to give the workers of America through collective bargaining in good faith their just rewards, I say we shall exhaust every means of resolving those issues across the bargaining table through the use of logic and reason.

But, failing to get economic justice through that process, we shall march together on the picket lines of America getting what is rightfully ours.

The Jobs Ahead

There are many practical jobs ahead, jobs that will test the best that is in all of us. There is the job of organizing the unorganized. No union, no movement that rests on past achievements will have the drive and the energy and the power without which we cannot succeed.

We have to recapture some of the crusading spirit we had in the earlier days, and we have to take on some of the areas of the unorganized and begin to do the kind of job I know that we are capable of doing if we pull together in the days ahead.

But the job is more than just organizing the unorganized. I think that if we are going to be realistic we have got to recognize the fact that when you sign up a worker in a union and he pays his dues, his job and his responsibilities do not end there. They just begin. We have a job, not only to organize the unorganized, but we have a job of educating and unionizing the organized.

We have to give our members the sense of participating in a great human crusade. We have to make them conscious of the fact that the free labor movement for the first time in the history of civilization is trying consciously to give direction to the shape of history. We are trying to participate in great social changes that are taking place in the world in which we live.

Peace

The First World War taught us that you cannot have peace in one part of the world with the rest of the world at war. At a great cost we learned that peace is indivisible.

The Second World War taught us that freedom is indivisible, and when Hitler challenged the freedom of one country he also was putting our freedom in jeopardy. But there is still a lesson we have to learn, and if we learn that lesson the prospect of building a lasting peace are greatly improved, and if we fail in learning that lesson then the future may be tragic.

You cannot make peace and freedom secure in the world as long as hundreds of millions of people are denied the necessities of life, as long as millions and millions of people are committed to belong to the have-not nations and they and their children are denied the right to achieve economic and social justice.

Communism will forge that poverty and that hunger and that human desperation into the weapons of political and military aggression. And what is true in the world in a large sense is equally true in America.

Government

And we say to the men who will assume political power in Washington, "If you want to help build industrial and economic stability we will help you, we will work hard at the task at the bargaining tables of America, but remember, if you want to facilitate the achievement of economic and industrial stability, then pass legislation that will make it easier for people in America to realize their hopes and aspirations.

"But if you try to build road blocks like Taft-Hartley, or try to put other obstacles in the way of the right of American labor to move ahead to conquer broader social horizons, then you are not facilitating the achievement of industrial peace but are sowing the seeds out of which will grow greater industrial conflict."

On Labor Unity

We have the question of labor unity. I accept and I share the spirit of the resolution adopted by this convention and the remarks made in support of that resolution. All of us, deep in our hearts, recognize that standing together in a united labor movement we could be stronger than we are divided, but this must be qualified.

For unity, we must stand together in a united labor movement, without compromising the basic principles upon which the CIO is built. We can never get ourselves in a position where we sacrifice principle for expediency. No union, whether large or small, must be sacrificed in working out these problems.

On taking this responsibility you have given me . . . as an individual and officer of this organization, I want to assure you fully and completely that at no time will a question of a vested right in an office be the smallest obstacle in the way of achieving a united labor movement.

I say that the real measurement by which we must judge what is an honorable settlement in working out a formula for labor unity is not to be measured in the terms of the interests of the status of those in position of leadership. There is only one measurement and that is the measurement of what is good for the rank and file back home.

We do not count. You and I are not important, except as we are the symbols, and as we are the joint, collective instrumentality through which the rank and file carries on its work. What is good for the rank and file must be the measurement of judgment.

THE WINNER and CIO's new president, Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, gets a kiss from his wife, May.

CIO Reaffirms Opposition To UMT Program

CIO'S LONG opposition to Universal Military Training as "unsuited to the nation's real needs" and its continued support of Selective Service "as long as it is necessary for national security against aggression," were reaffirmed by the convention.

Pointing out that "two parallel but very different systems would be wasteful in our use of training officers and in conflict with the principle of equality of obligation for military service," the CIO resolution said:

"An effective, democratic reserve training program, with civilian control of recall of reservists, should precede any further consideration of Universal Military Training."

"THEIR TRUTH goes marching on." Giant photos of three past leaders of CIO dominated the convention platform. Photo of Philip Murray, the late CIO president, was flanked by the late Van A. Bittner (left), CIO Steelworkers vice president and Southern organizing drive director, and Sidney Hillman, CIO Clothing Workers president. David J. McDonald, acting president of the Steelworkers, is at the rostrum.

Reuther Is New CIO President

By WILLIAM MILLIS

The hour of 2 p.m. on Dec. 4 came in the jampacked, flag-decked hotel convention hall at Atlantic City—and with it the climactic hour of CIO's 14th convention.

Floodlights from the gallery blinded delegates on the floor and CIO officers on the stage. Batteries of television and newsreel cameras whirred.

The hour was at hand to elect CIO's new president, succeeding the late Philip Murray—a man no one could fully replace.

All week CIO officers and delegates had been engaged in vigorous political campaigning between supporters of the two opposing candidates.

One candidate was Walter P. Reuther—president of the Auto Workers and a vice president of CIO; a veteran of industrial unionism from the auto sitdowns of the middle thirties and of the "Battle of the Overpass" which brought the mighty Ford Motor Co. to recognize the union of its workers; a man of labor known beyond the ranks of labor, in the nation and overseas, wherever men and women hungered for what is their and their children's right . . . "bread with freedom," peace, security and decency.

'Mr. CIO Himself'

The second candidate was a man who was to be nominated as "Mr. CIO himself"—Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and its director of organization and of councils. His life and work covered a half century of daily service and devotion to the cause of building unions, organizing the unorganized, helping to gain better wages and conditions—at the bargaining table if he could—on the picket line if that were necessary. Haywood came from the miners, but all unions and working men and women—in CIO and outside CIO—had benefitted from his work.

It was Haywood who rapped the gavel and called to order the concluding session of the 14th CIO convention.

After a week marked by campaigning between opposing forces which apparently were closely divided, Haywood brought the delegates to their feet in roaring applause with this statement of a union guy:

"Vote your conscience for the good of CIO, and I'm sure there will be no objections from either of the opposing candidates.

"The main thing is, when we do get through voting, let's all be the same gang going down the same road together. As for me, I shall be going down the road with you—always"

Then Haywood turned the gavel over to Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers and, as CIO's senior vice president in length of service, the chairman of convention nominating sessions.

O. A. ("Jack") Knight, the slim president of the Oil Workers, came to the rostrum to nominate Reuther for CIO president.

'Fighting Unionist'

Reuther, he said, is "a fighting unionist, an experienced administrator, a great American, a man who believes in social progress, and a really swell fellow."

The nomination was seconded by Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union and by UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

Then Haywood's nomination—as "Mr. CIO himself, that strong, vigorous dynamo of leadership"—was voiced by David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer and acting president of the Steelworkers since Philip Murray's death a month ago.

After brief seconding addresses by Transport Workers Pres. Michael Quill and Communications Workers Pres. Joseph Beirne, Rieve announced that eight unions, supporters of both candidates, had asked for a roll call vote.

Two Daves

The names of two David McDonalds were called in the roll call election of CIO's president.

First was David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer and acting president of the Steelworkers since the death of Philip Murray, CIO and Steel president. He had nominated Allan S. Haywood and cast the USA-CIO's vote for him.

Near the end of the vote, David H. McDonald, of Local Industrial Union 1308, Flint, Mich., cast his local's vote for Walter P. Reuther, CIO's new president.

After The Battle Was Over

BENEATH PORTRAIT of the late Philip Murray, Allan S. Haywood (left) and Walter P. Reuther wave after Reuther's election as CIO president. In background (from left): USA Acting Pres. David J. McDonald, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight.

Story of Walter P. Reuther and his work in the labor movement: Page 15.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey began calling the roll—the first such convention vote in CIO's history. He began with the Auto Workers, Barbers and Brewery Union and went down the list of 35 CIO internationals and organizing committees, then on to the local industrial unions and finally the state and city CIO councils.

The final vote that elected Walter P. Reuther as CIO's third president was:

Reuther: 3,079,181.
Haywood: 2,613,103.

Quickly the delegates moved on to the election of other officers.

Haywood by acclamation was returned to office as CIO executive vice president, with powers newly-recognized in the constitution.

Carey Reelected

Carey, CIO's secretary-treasurer since its founding, was reelected unanimously.

The vice presidents were returned, with USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes added to the group. Others are: CWA Pres. Beirne, URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, NMU Pres. Curran, OWIU Pres. Knight, TWU Pres. Quill, TWUA Pres. Rieve, and ACWA Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum.

Before the election, delegates approved several constitutional changes designed to improve the day-by-day functioning of CIO.

Constitutional Change

The executive officers and vice presidents were constituted as an Executive Committee, with regular bimonthly meetings. The full Executive Board will meet quarterly.

The office of executive vice president—established on an appointive basis a year ago—was established on an elective basis with constitutionally recognized status and duties.

Members of the Executive Board, named by each of CIO's 35 international unions and organizing committees, were reelected with but one change. In addition to the officers, they are:

Emil Mazey, Auto; Ernest Hebert, Barbers; Karl Feller, Brewery; George Maher, Broadcast Engineers; Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing; John J. Moran, Communications; R. J. Thomas, Department Store; Harry Block, Electrical.

Also Morris Pizer, Furniture; Elwood Swisher, Gas-Coke; Burl W. Phares, Glass; Anthony J. Federoff, Government; Richard Leonard, Insurance; John Blackburn, Lithographers; Herbert L. Daggett, Marine Engineers; John Grogan, Shipbuilders; M. Hedley Stone, Maritime; Harry Martin, Newspaper Guild.

Also T. M. McCormick, Oil; Thomas Andent, Optical; Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse; Harry Sayre, Paperworkers; Alex Bail, Playthings & Jewelry; William Steinberg, Radio Association; John Green, Railroad; Irving Simon, Retail-Wholesale.

And Joseph W. Childs, Rubber; Russ Taylor, Shoe; David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Sam H. Scott, Stone; William Pollock, Textile; Willard S. Townsend, Transport Service; Gustav Faber, Transport; Joseph A. Fisher, Utility; and A. F. Hartung, Woodworkers.

'New Team'

In the final minutes of the convention, confidence and support was voiced in "CIO's new leadership team."

Acting Pres. McDonald of the Steelworkers told CIO Pres. Reuther: "You may be assured that the United Steelworkers of America will lend all its strength for building a stronger CIO, for the membership of CIO and for the United States."

Carey said "we'll work together—this new team."

Haywood, before leading delegates in singing "We'll Roll the Union On," said:

"We're going on from here. We've had our headaches. Some people said we couldn't stand an election. The hell we can't."

Then CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther spoke—humbly in his new responsibilities, reverently of Philip Murray, scorn of "our enemies . . . We are not going to go out of here divided; we are going out of here united."

And Reuther said CIO is going to work with free men everywhere "in building that brave new world we dream of, that world in which men can live at peace as neighbors, that world where people everywhere can enjoy a fuller and better social and economic justice."

"It is," he said, "that world that you and I and men everywhere can shape in the image of freedom and in the image of justice and in the image of brotherhood."

The Roll Call On President

Here's the official tally of the convention roll call vote for CIO president:

Walter P. Reuther 3,079,181
Allan S. Haywood 2,613,103

FOR REUTHER: Auto, Brewery, Clothing, Electrical, Furniture, Maritime, Newspaper Guild, Oil, Radio, Retail-Wholesale, Rubber, Textile, Transport Service, 12 local industrial unions.

FOR HAYWOOD: Barbers, Broadcast Engineers, Communications, Department Store, Gas-Coke, Glass, Government, Insurance, Lithographers, Marine Engineers, Shipbuilding, Optical, Packinghouse, Paperworkers, Playthings-Jewelry, Railroad, Shoe, Steelworkers, Stone, Transport, Utility, Woodworkers, 119 local industrial unions.

Note: Split votes were recorded by delegates representing the Furniture Workers, Newspaper Guild, and Woodworkers.

Dixiegop Wreckers Hit—

'Shelve Wage Controls Now,' CIO Urges

"THERE IS NO justification for maintaining wage stabilization under current conditions," the CIO convention said in a major policy decision on domestic affairs.

The convention urged the administration "to suspend wage controls now" and proposed that the new Congress enact standby legislation "that will make possible effective and comprehensive anti-inflation controls . . . to be put into effect whenever inflationary pressures so require."

Exempted from the proposal that inflation controls be shelved were rent ceilings and price controls on certain defense commodities.

Text of the resolution follows:

The national economy has been in a state of precarious balance during the past year. Despite price reductions in raw materials and wholesale markets, consumer prices have crept up to about 12% above pre-Korean levels.

Although high national levels of employment and production have been maintained, some signs of economic weakness persist. Defense and defense-related sectors of the economy continue to show strength, while consumer goods industries reflect the uneasy trends of consumer spending.

Defense expenditures are now scheduled to level off in the coming months and to decline in 1954 and 1955. But they will remain relatively high for many years. And the outbreak of new hostilities anywhere in the world may necessitate additional government spending for national defense and give rise to renewed inflationary pressures.

The economic scene can shift rapidly in the event of further communist aggression. The crisis that followed the Korean outbreak can be repeated—speculation, business hoarding, scare buying and price gouging. Our post-Korean experience—when we waited over two months for Congress to pass a stabilization law and many additional months for administrative machinery to be established—demonstrated the importance of being prepared to curb inflation as soon as it appears.

Our government is not now prepared for such a development. The Defense Production Act was inadequate when it was enacted in September 1950, more than two months after the Korean war began.

WSB Members Quit

Operations of the Wage Stabilization Board were stalemated late last week after Pres. Truman ordered into effect the full $1.90 a day wage increase agreed to by the United Mine Workers and soft coal operators.

WSB Chairman Archibald Cox, the seven industry members of the national board, and industry members of regional WSB boards in Chicago and Boston quit. Truman had overruled their efforts to cut the mine wage increase by 40c daily.

Labor and other public members of the national WSB were still on the job. But the agency was without a quorum and couldn't act on its backlog of 12,000 cases.

Since then it has been so mutilated by the Republican-Dixiecrat combination in Congress as to render it wholly ineffective for the control of inflation.

It is impossible under the Act to curb speculation on the commodity exchanges where key raw materials are bought and sold. No effective control of food prices is possible under this law. Federal rent control has been abandoned except in some critical defense housing areas or in localities that have requested continued controls. The Capehart and Herlong amendments provide not for price controls but for price escalation.

Less than half of the cost of living is now under effective controls, as a result of the Act's exemptions and OPS suspensions. Completion of the planned suspension program will leave about one-third of the cost of living under effective control. Cuts in Congressional appropriations of funds have resulted in considerable reductions in the OPS staff.

No genuine effort has been made by the Federal Reserve Board to check the expansion of bank loans to business, although the rapid extension of credit for inventory-accumulation and speculation fired the engines of post-Korean inflation. Consumer and housing credit, on the other hand, was controlled by the Board without much flexibility or concern for the needs of low and middle income families. Now, under the terms of the Act's 1952 amendments, those controls have been removed.

While price controls are in the process of liquidation and controls of materials are being eased, wages and working conditions are still controlled by the Wage Stabilization Board. About one-sixth of the wage increases ruled upon by the Board have been modified or denied. There is a backlog of some 12,000 cases—many of them as much as a year old. Even workers in industries whose prices are exempt or suspended from price control find their wages and working conditions subject to control by the Wage Stabilization Board.

There is no justification for maintaining wage stabilization under current conditions. When organized labor accepted wage stabilization, it made emphatically clear that wage stabilization can be tolerated only as part of a comprehensive over-all stabilization program. Such a program does not exist today.

The government must, however, be prepared to protect the economy against the possibility of new inflationary pressures. We must not permit another wave of inflation to engulf us. The government must be prepared to act whenever inflationary pressures arise—without a repetition of the legislative and administrative delays that occurred after the Korean outbreak. Yet such feeble price controls as now exist are scheduled to terminate, under the present law, on April 30, 1953; and production controls are due to end on June 30.

The next Congress should enact legislation to provide for a comprehensive economic stabilization program—direct and indirect controls—to be retained on a standby basis and to be put into effect whenever inflationary pressures so require.

Now therefore be it resolved:

The CIO calls upon the administration to suspend wage controls.

The CIO urges the new Congress to enact legislation that will make possible effective and comprehensive anti-inflation controls—to be retained on a standby basis and to be put into effect whenever inflationary pressures so require. We urge that, in the meantime, rent control and selective controls on the prices of those raw materials still affected by defense production pressures be maintained until those pressures subside.

The CIO urges the government to maintain priority and allocation controls over raw materials so long as they are in short supply, and calls upon the Congress to renew the legislative authority for production controls.

More Recognition Urged For Women As Union Leaders

THE CIO'S stand in support of equal job rights and opportunities for working women together with effective federal and state legislation to safeguard the principle of equal pay for equal work and other special needs, was reaffirmed by the CIO convention.

The resolution on women workers passed unanimously by the delegates, rejected the misleading "Equal Rights Amendment." It expressed continued CIO support for the Women's Status Bill as a far more reasonable move toward advancing women's rights.

Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, who said that about 60% of the membership of his union is composed of women, spoke in support of the resolution.

Beirne especially supported the resolution's section urging CIO unions to renew their efforts to draw women into active participation in the union. He said that CWA now has 125 women local presidents.

The resolution called upon the National CIO and all affiliates "to renew their efforts to draw women into active participation in our unions as officers as well as members," and urged that they be "encouraged to play an important role in our community and political activities that our goals may be achieved."

SERIOUS was the word when Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers and Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers got together between sessions.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes.

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV December 8, 1952 No. 49

'Stamp Out Racketeers, Corruption,' Says CIO

CORRUPTION in American life, and particularly "racketeers who prey upon the labor movement," was roundly condemned by the CIO convention.

Reaffirming a "statement on ethical practices" adopted a year ago, the convention underscored as basic CIO policy "that every affiliate shall always act with dispatch to stamp out any infiltration by criminal or racketeering elements anxious to prey upon our members.

"Corruption in all forms and wherever it may occur, whether it be in government, in industry or in the labor movement itself" was condemned. The resolution said in part:

"Public officials who betray their trust and business men who use corrupt methods and bribery to gain their ends are both equally guilty of wrong-doing; they can no more, and no less, escape blame for their actions than the racketeers who prey upon the labor movement, seeking to use its respected organizations as a front for nefarious personal gains.

"The past year has again witnessed too many and too frequent departures from the standards of honesty we consider essential. The CIO joins all decent Americans concerned for the future welfare of our nation in expressing our unqualified opposition to such practices by individuals, corporations, special interests and organizations.

"We in the CIO are determined to continue those policies which have made our organization clean, decent and honest, and to keep it so.

"We are determined that our members shall not be denied their right to an honest, decent, democratic trade unionism singlemindedly devoted to the advancement of the interests of American workers."

Citing CIO's "forthright action" in expelling 11 Communist-controlled unions three years ago, the resolution concluded:

"We call upon other elements of our society—particularly all branches of government and industry—to act with equal vigor against dishonesty and unethical practices wherever they may be found within their ranks. We ask them to join with us in attacking and stamping out racketeering and immoral elements in American life."

Otis' Release Asked

The CIO convention called on the U. S. Government to use "economic pressures" upon Czechoslovakia or "other peaceful means" to obtain the release of William Otis, AP correspondent and CIO Newspaper Guild member, who has been in jail almost three years.

Secy. Tobin Says—

'The Important Thing Was Murray Himself'

MAURICE J. TOBIN, an old friend of organized labor, made his last official appearance as Secretary of Labor by making his seventh address before a National CIO convention.

He had spoken as Mayor of Boston, as a private citizen, as Governor of Massachusetts and three previous times as Secretary of Labor.

"Today I come to you in no official capacity," he said. "Although I am proud of the position I hold and the administration I have served, I prefer to speak to you today simply as a friend. I have shared in your joys and your triumphs. I come to you today to share in your grief.

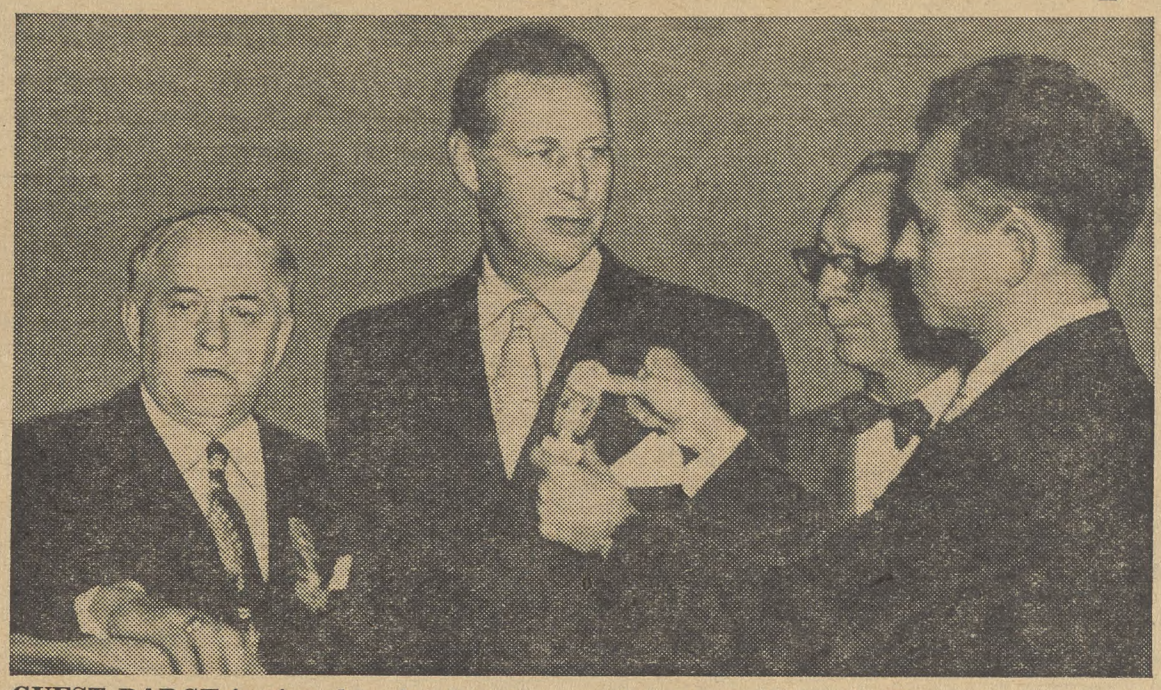
"There have been many tributes to Philip Murray. They have been well-intended; and they have come, in many cases, from the heart. Some of them have penetrated with deep insight into the sources of his greatness.

"Yet, for those of us who knew him intimately, there can be no adequate tribute. Phil Murray was not a man who could be measured or summarized. It is not enough to catalogue his achievements. It is not enough to recount his deeds. These things are important, but they are things separate and apart from the man himself.

"The important thing about Phil Murray was not only what he did, but what he was. The important thing is Phil Murray himself—his smile, his kindliness, his patience, his humor, his tolerance, his understanding, his humanity, his wisdom.

"His deeds, which are his monuments, will live on after him; but they are small consolation to those of us who knew the warmth of his personality and the beauty of his spirit.

"The student, a 100 years from now, will read of the coal miner's son who rose to greatness in a dark and turbulent hour in our nation's history; but he will never hear his voice, never see his smile, never really know the man we loved.



GUEST BADGE is pinned on lapel of Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, one of the principal convention speakers, by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey as CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood (left) and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers looks on. Tobin paid tribute to Phil Murray and urged labor unity.

"THERE ARE no words to keep these things alive; and I will not attempt a tribute here this afternoon. All I can say is 'God bless you, Phil—and may we be worthy of your example.'"

The retiring Secretary called on the delegates to continue, despite the election results, "the goals we shared, the ideals we cherished, the great work we carried on together."

"We are not going to abandon our cause," he declared. "We are not going to abandon the ideal of American liberalism."

Some things about the election must be set straight, he asserted. The first is unity behind President-elect Eisenhower and support of him as the leader of our country, he said.

"Let us look forward to his administration hopefully and with open minds," he urged.

"We must judge him not by our apprehensions, but by his own deeds. There is no more patriotic group in America than the men and women of the American labor movement. I know they will continue to cooperate with our government in time of peril, just as they have always done in the past.

"Many people have attempted to analyze what the Eisenhower victory means.

"It's important to know that; but it's just as important to be clear on what victory does not mean.

"It does not mean a mandate to tear down the great edifice of social reform that was built under the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

"It does not mean to abandon our policy of standing up to the Communists and building the strength of the free world to keep them from advancing.

"IT DOES NOT mean that farmers want an end of price supports or that workers and their employers want an end to collective bargaining.

"It does not mean that the aged and the unemployed and the sick are to be neglected.

"It does not mean that the American people want to change their direction and go back to 1929."

Tobin pointed out that the election was no avalanche for the Republican Party, nor a repudiation of the New Deal and Fair Deal. It was, he said, an avalanche for a military hero "who promised not to destroy, but to carry on the accomplishments of the last 20 years."

"It is the responsibility of all of us," he said, "who have shared in and supported the achievements of the last 20 years to see to it that the structure we have built is not weakened or destroyed.

"WE MUST guard our gains. And if there is any attempt by anyone to weaken social security or minimum wages or rural electrification or free collective bargaining, we must rise and resist with all the power at our command.

"We must be equally vigilant in the field of foreign policy. Our policy is strong and positive. It is a policy that the CIO has supported every step of the way . It is a policy of building strength, both military and economic, and using it to stop the expansion of communism.

"We have not come this far in our struggle against communism only to turn back because some Americans think the cost is too high. We who believe in this policy of strength must not stand by and see that strength dissipated in the interest of short-sighted economy.

"Economy is important, but it is not as important as freedom. I do not believe that the election of Gen. Eisenhower is a signal from the American people to abandon our strength. We must not allow it to be so interpreted. We must never let down in our determination to preserve the strength that keeps us free."

Tobin concluded with a plea for labor unity. The attitude of the new administration, despite Eisenhower, will be a "lot more hostile," he warned.

"The past gains of the American working men and women are in jeopardy," he declared.

"Their future progress is in doubt. This is a time to close ranks and present a united front against labor's enemies. This is a time, more than any other, for unity in the American labor movement."

Civil Defense Asks Labor's Aid

AMERICA'S top civil defense leader appealed to CIO convention delegates to become civil defense "salesmen."

"You have helped sell the democratic way of life around the globe as the best hope of human freedom and a universal rising standard of living," James J. Wadsworth, acting civilian defense adminstrator, told the convention.

"Now it is certainly to your advantage to get even more solidly behind civilian defense and sell it throughout the country as a program we must have for the security of the whole nation, and something you must have right away in your own city, home and place of employment.

"Your life and our democracy may depend upon it.

"CIO leadership is aware of the necessity of civilian defense. Five CIO men are members of the labor advisory committee of the Federal Civil Defense Administration. In the states and cities, many CIO unions, their leaders and their members, have worked hard to make civil defense programs effective.

"It is my duty to inform you quietly and calmly that you and your wives and your children would be Target No. 1 for any aggressor in a future war," declared Wadsworth.

"The aggressor's only road to triumph in the next war would lead past the factory ruins of cities like Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit. And the bald, blunt fact is that your city, your neighborhood, your plant are not ready to meet such an attack.

"Machines can be repaired or brought in from other areas. But how long does it take to replace a skilled man like yourself? Your training and experience took years to acquire. That time and your skills this country could not afford to lose if an enemy struck tomorrow . . .

"Modern weapons and warfare cannot and do not alter the fact that each of you have grave responsibilities to your country in case of an enemy attack. The first of these responsibilities is to survive.

"The second is to get back to work as soon as possible. The third is to do your best to help your community and your state get up from their knees and fight back in case they are hit."

Wadsworth said the public must be made aware of its responsibility to organize for civilian defense.

"That is not the case today." he continued,"and will not be the case until we forget our national fascination with the things that we can produce, and concentrate a mighty effort to alert and prepare the people who produce them.

"When the public believes in its own vital part in the security of our country—then fear, apathy, cynicism, and fatalism will disappear overnight."

Co-ops Backed As Vital Agencies

The CIO convention reaffirmed organized labor's support of all legitimate consumer cooperatives as "vital agencies which serve to advance the interests of all consumers in our national economy."

'New Policy' Proposed To Ease Alien Quotas

"A NEW POLICY on immigration and naturalization which will be consistent with 20th century conditions and ideals," was urged by the CIO convention.

The convention adopted a resolution containing a blistering attack on the McCarran-Walter Act.

The act was described as violating "two great principles—that our government shall not discriminate on the basis of race, religion, or color, and that it shall deal fairly and justly with all."

"The national origin quota system established by the 1924 Act is continued (by the McCarran-Walter Act), together with its discrimination in favor of immigrants from Northern Europe," the resolution said.

"Asiatics are given a token quota and are, with belated justice, accorded the privilege of naturalization. This nod toward racial equality is offset, however, by an offensive new concept of racial origin, as distinguished from national origin, which is applicable to Asians, and by new discrimination against Negroes." Other defects in the McCarran-Walter Act were listed:

- Barring persons "who were once totalitarian adherents, no matter how long ago, or in what circumstances, and without regard to what their proven opinions may be now."
- Exclusion for "criminal convictions by foreign courts, even those from totalitarian countries which resort to framing political opponents."
- Making "second class citizens out of all naturalized citizens by subjecting them to denaturalization on various grounds such as contempt of Congress."

The new immigration and naturalization policy, the resolution said, should enable this country to do its share toward providing permanent homes for refugees displaced by World War II and to refugees who have fled to Western Europe from iron curtain countries.

'Free World Can't Relax'—

Red Aggression Called Main Peril To Peace

THE CIO AFFIRMED its determination to continue the fight for peace and democracy in a strongly-worded resolution that covered a wide range of international problems.

"Today peace and freedom in the world are threatened by an international conspiracy controlled by one imperialist power," read the resolution, which was passed unanimously.

"Soviet Communist aggression has fully revealed its worldwide scope, and we believe that the United States must take the lead in organizing the mutual defense, both military and economic, of the free world.

"Soviet Communist aggression proceeds by fifth-column subversion, economic coercion, threats and deception and, when it dares, by open warfare against the free world.

"There are signs that Soviet aggressive imperialism has been restrained by the progress of economic recovery and military rearmament in the free world stimulated by cooperation between our government and other free countries.

"The free world, however, cannot relax. Whatever the zigzags of the Soviet line, there is no reason to believe yet that there has been any change in their drive for a totalitarian world."

THE RESOLUTION stressed that military strength is only part of the answer to Russian aggression. It said:

"We must understand and guide along democratic paths the revolutionary and progressive ferment which is stirring two-thirds of the world's population—the underprivileged two-thirds who are hungry, ill and oppressed.

"The social ferment and the nationalist strivings against foreign domination do not originate with Soviet communism, and the peoples of the world have nothing to hope for from Soviet aggression.

"Instead of denouncing these movements as Communist, however, we should recognize that even when misguided they spring from a wholesome desire for individual betterment, national independence and the attainment of human dignity.

"In addition to repelling Soviet aggression, the free world must demonstrate in practice that it can deal with the problem of self-government, land reform, racial differences, labor standards, and living conditions. We must declare a total war against poverty and social injustice."

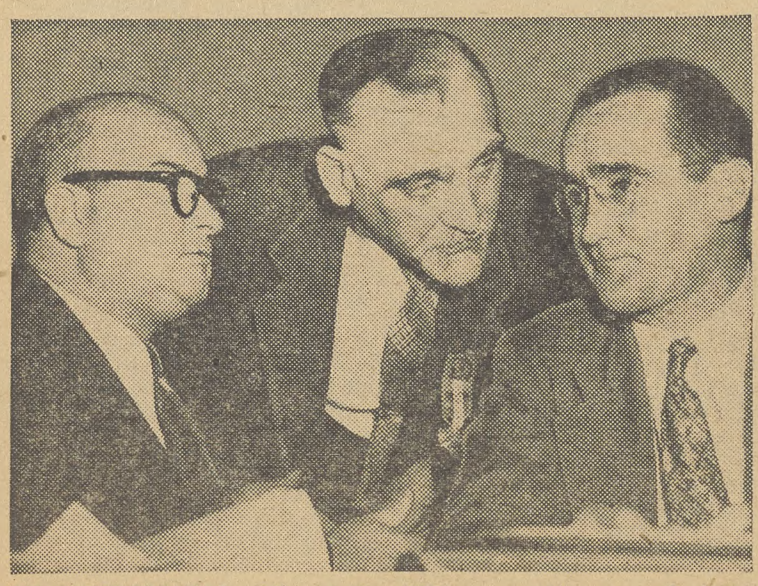
The resolution warned that in 35 years of dictatorship, Russia has become a "society where the citizen is oppressed in the name of freedom, where the workers are exploited in the name of socialism, where poverty is rampant while the ruling bureaucracy becomes even more enriched, where peace means war, and democracy means tyranny."

Flag-Waving UNESCO Foes Rapped

THE CIO CONVENTION in no uncertain terms condemned isolationist reactionaries who in the guise of super-patriots have been attempting to undermine U. S. support for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The resolution pointed out that the purpose of UNESCO is merely to develop international cooperation and understanding through the free exchange of information, ideas, material and persons.

Those attacking UNESCO—many with long anti-labor records—are trying to create a situation in which "a citizen who thinks in international as well as national terms will be branded as disloyal," the resolution said.



IN A SERIOUS huddle at the CIO convention are: Left to right, TWU Pres. Michael Quill, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne.

Basic CIO Policy—

Guard Rights Of Individual Union Members, Convention Says

THE DEMOCRATIC rights of each CIO member in the union to which he belongs were reaffirmed in a convention resolution that again laid down the principles to which all affiliates are dedicated.

The statement once more made it clear that the CIO and its constituent bodies are the creatures of the individual members acting collectively for their own mutual aid and protection, and that the rights of individuals must be jealously safeguarded.

The text of the resolution follows:

The CIO is a federation of autonomous, independent trade unions. Each international union affiliated with the CIO exercises a final and unreviewable right to determine for itself its own internal organization and policy. Yet each of the international unions affiliated with the CIO subscribes to certain basic principles, principles upon which the CIO was founded and which have made the CIO and its affiliated unions strong.

One of these principles, common to all CIO affiliates, is the principle that the ultimate responsibility in every union is to the individuals who constitute its membership. We are voluntary associations of individuals. We believe in united action for mutual aid and protection of our members, and we believe that it is necessary to build strong collective bargaining organizations in order that such united action may be achieved.

But we never forget that organization is not an end in itself but a means to an end. Our CIO unions were organized in order to secure benefits for the individual members of those unions, and they exist only for the advancement and protection of their members. Each CIO union has, independently, formulated its own constitution, its laws, and its rules. But the governing law of each of these organizations, whatever its form, has embodied the provisions necessary to implement and effectuate the basic principles here set forth.

The most fundamental of the rules flowing from the basic democratic principles to which all CIO unions adhere are these:

(1) The power of the organization derives ultimately from its membership whose will, democratically expressed through established rules of the organization, is the final union authority.

(2) The right to join the organization and the right to receive the benefits provided by the organization is not denied to any eligible worker because of race, creed or color.

(3) Each member of the organization has not only the right, but the duty, to participate in the process of democratic self-government by which the will of the membership is formulated and expressed.

(4) No worker who becomes a member of the organization in accordance with its laws can be expelled, suspended, or denied the right to participate in its internal affairs except for violation of the established constitution, rules, laws, or by-laws of the organization.

(5) Any member of the organization who is charged with a violation of its constitution, rules, laws or by-laws is entitled to a fair hearing and trial of the charges against him. Union proceedings, of course, are not court proceedings. Formal representation by attorneys is neither necessary nor desirable, but the basic substance of fair procedure must be preserved.

Every member charged with violation of his organization's constitution, rules, laws, or by-laws must be informed of the charge against him. He must be permitted to hear the evidence against him, and to present evidence of his own. The decision must be based upon the facts determined by the body designated to investigate and hear the charges.

(6) Every member found guilty of an offense against his organization by a local trial committee or a local union has the right to appeal to some higher body within the union having the power to correct any abuses of disciplinary power which may occur.

These, we believe, are fundamental principles of fair play and fair democratic trade unionism. Form is unimportant. The manner in which these principles are carried into operation necessarily will vary in each organization affiliated with the CIO. But each such affiliate has by its own independent democratic process formulated detailed laws and rules designed to assure that the foregoing principles will in fact be honored in the day to day conduct of the affairs of the organization.

The CIO, too, has a role to play in this field. It cannot dictate policies to its affiliated organizations. It need not—for they are all firmly dedicated to the principles herein set forth.

Recognizing fully the democratic right of each affiliated national union to determine and control its internal procedures, this 14th Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations at the same time reiterates its belief in, and concern for, the democratic rights of the individual members of our trade unions.

In expressing this belief and concern, we voice confidence that each affiliated international union subscribes fully, and will continue so to do in the future, to the basic principles of democratic trade unionism set forth in this statement of CIO policy. Through ever-vigilant protection of individual human rights, the unions affiliated with the CIO can best implement and strengthen our heritage of trust.

Loyal to our ideals of an always-improving labor movement in America, we re-dedicate ourselves to the essential task of furthering economic opportunity, religious freedom, civil rights and democratic political participation in the affairs of our unions, the community, state and nation.

Steel Locals Present Concerts By Symphony

THE CIO STEELWORKERS will take symphony concerts to steel towns in response to members' request for this enrichment of their cultural life.

USA-CIO will present the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra this month in five communities, under a plan whereby the steel locals will underwrite the full guarantee. The first concert will be at North Braddock, Pa.

It also is planned to present the orchestra in a memorial program for the late Philip Murray, CIO and Steelworkers president, in one of the largest halls in Pittsburgh.

The idea for the concert series was first developed at a seminar for USA leaders at Pennsylvania State College last July. On their return home, the leaders tested reaction to the proposal and met with a very favorable response.

Labor Wants Better Break For School Youngsters

A GRIM PICTURE of American primary and secondary schools was painted in a CIO convention resolution offering a nine-point program to assure the next generation the education it will need to solve its problems.

The country needs more schools, more teachers and better-paid teachers, it said. And by 1960, the public school system will have to serve six million more children for whom adequate classrooms alone will cost $16.5 billion.

The resolution called on Congress to enact a federal aid to education bill assuring adequate buildings and competent teachers paid good salaries; a comprehensive school construction program; the proposal of Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) to use royalties from tidelands oil to finance improved education; and a college scholarship bill offering grants through the states.

Also, an adequate school lunch program; a labor extension service in the U. S. Dept. of Labor; federal grants to help states develop health services for school children; demonstrations of free library service where it is not available, and provisions in all of this legislation safeguarding against racial discrimination and segregation.

Another resolution, on children and youth, proposed a nine-point program to assure the country's youngest citizens of their right to grow through childhood in good physical, emotional and social health and security.

'All-Important Issue'—

Morse Urges U.S. To Start Acting For Peace

A PLEA to the American people that they rededicate themselves to the "cause of peace" was made by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) to the CIO convention.

Terming peace "the all-important issue of this generation," Morse warned that the American people as a nation are not giving enough consideration to the prevention of war. He told of his recent inspection tour of American military bases abroad and said:

"I do not scare easily, but I have come home a frightened man, frightened about this issue of peace, frightened because I believe that too many in the American military establishment have accepted the assumption—and it is an assumption—that World War III is inevitable."

MORSE, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said that at a briefing on his 30,000-mile trip, he had asked if there was even one military man present who believed that World War III can be avoided.

"I saw no hands," he reported.

The Oregon Senator warned that it is time that military men looked at what the cost of that war would be. He said they also should face the fact that after they had won it, they would still be confronted with the same job of winning the peace that confronts us now.

"And so I say to you in labor that I think there is a need not only for reorientation of American public opinion on this issue of peace, but I think there is a need for a rededication on the part of the American people to the cause of peace," Morse declared.

In introducing Morse, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood called him a man who "stands on principle" and added:

OUTSPOKEN Oregon Sen. Morse got enthusiastic greetings after his address. From left: CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sen. Morse, and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"He has always been behind every piece of liberal legislation intended to benefit all of the people and he has opposed all legislation on behalf of the special interests."

The Oregon Senator, who resigned from the Republican Party to become the Senate's lone independent member after supporting Gov. Stevenson in the recent presidential campaign, was given a rousing welcome by CIO delegates. His address was often interrupted by deafening applause, particularly when he:

1. Paid joint tribute to the late Philip Murray and William Green as "symbols of abiding faith in human values."

2. Declared "there is one traditional American principle that in the years ahead all of us as free citizens should guard and guard zealously, and that is the principle that the American military must always be kept under strict civilian control."

3. Emphasized that "the place the Korean war is going to be settled is not going to be in Korea; it is going to be in the United Nations Building in New York City, and not by way of a sightseeing tour, either."

Morse said that the nation has already gone too far in permitting policy questions to be determined by Pentagon brass rather than by civilian officials.

"I don't accept the notion," he said, "that there are only two alternatives for the settling of the Korean war; one to expand it, because in my judgment the expansion of the Korean war will be the sounding of an alarm for an expanded Third World War.

"Nor do I accept the notion that the other alternative we should resort to is a withdrawal from Korea, because I think that is the surrender of Asia to communism."

A third approach, he suggested, would be "a getting-together with our Allies on a united front on Asiatic policy." This would include steps to stop shipping of any kinds of goods into Communist China.

Morse said that the major problem of peace is to make our generation recognize that a major revolution, which will last for decades, is going on in the world.

"It is not a political revolution," he said, "although if we play a stupid role, we can permit Russia to turn it into a political revolution. It is basically an economic revolution, in the backward areas of the world by masses of people who are fighting for a better way of economic life."

They are going to get it, he continued.

"IT IS AN inevitable evolution of mankind itself for a better way of living. You cannot stop it," he said. "Our country will not help the cause of freedom any nor promote the advancement of peace by supporting reactionary regimes based upon exploiting economic groups."

Morse made clear that he was referring to the Chinese nationalist government, although he did not mention it by name. He spoke rather of a "repudiated" regime which "never at any time during the war or immediately after the war came anywhere near controlling North China."

"Yet there are reactionary forces in this country," he warned, "who in my judgment, had they been in power during the last 18 months, would have had us expanding the war in Asia in an attempt to bring back into power the repudiated regime which was driven off the mainland of China because it didn't have the will to fight."

Morse called for emphasis on "a mutual security program on the economic front" and said that the building of factories is more important to peace than the building of air bases, because the ultimate outcome depends on the economic status of our allies.

CIO Backs Fight On Bias By Canal Zone Workers

CONTINUED action to achieve full economic and social rights for workers in the Canal Zone who suffer job and wage discrimination because of race or national origin was pledged by the CIO convention.

Although major gains have been made during the past 2.5 years since Local 900 of the CIO's Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee was chartered in the Zone, much remains to be done.

Noteworthy among the gains is the new labor-management relationship that has been instituted by recently appointed Canal Zone Gov. John S. Seybold, in dealing with Local 900 representatives.

Opportunities for promotion have been expanded, bars against job in higher brackets based upon race have been lowered in some instances, and wages have been increased, although they are still far below a decent standard.

The CIO pledged in its Panama Canal Zone resolution to continue to strive toward complete abolition of all segregation and discrimination throughout the Zone, and urged that Congress and U. S. administrative officers "give full recognition to the just demands of Canal Zone employees."

SUPPLEMENTAL report of National CIO officers, prepared after death of late Pres. Philip Murray, was read to delegates by David J. McDonald, acting president of the Steelworkers.

Keep U.S. Economy Healthy And Free World Strong, Harriman Says

A TOP Democratic leader told the CIO convention the "constructive Democratic opposition" should press in the GOP Administration for keeping the free world strong abroad and at home.

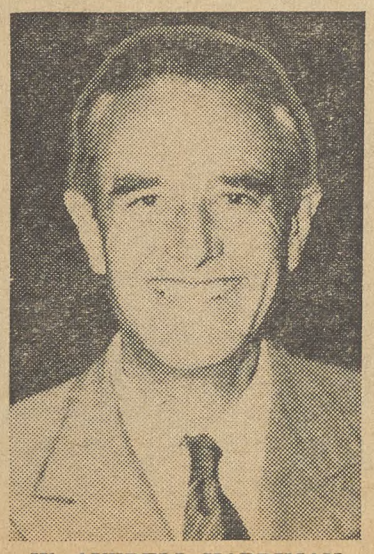
The role of the Democrats was outlined by W. Averell Harriman, Mutual Security Administrator. He also praised the CIO for its support of, and its participation in, U. S. foreign aid programs and in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

He said the "tests" the opposition should apply to the Republican policies "are, in principle, already clear."

"The first will come when we see how the new administration will go about the task of creating a durable world peace, for which we have already laid the foundation," Harriman pointed out.

"What, in our view, are the main elements of a policy for ultimate victory against communism and for a peace that is more than easy truce?" he asked. "One essential is to continue to develop our military strength and to help our allies develop theirs, so that free men can live without fear.

"I know something about the way Kremlin leaders think," said Harriman, who once was Ambassador to Russia. "They will not modify their conduct until the free nations, working together, have built effective combined military strength . . ."



W. AVERELL HARRIMAN

"But I do not have to tell you military strength is not enough . . . The Mutual Security Program has more work to do and must be continued until its objectives (a more orderly and better-balanced pattern of world production and world trade) are achieved."

"Perhaps the most important task of the new administration, or any administration, is to keep our economy here at home healthy, growing, and on an even keel." Harriman continued:

"What has upset Soviet calculations so far is that our economy has not collapsed but has grown stronger . . . We must, therefore, be alert to trends within our economy and demand that the new administration take action to deal with the damaging forces of inflation or those of recession . . .

"We must continue to press forward for further progress in social security and collective bargaining, in housing and health and education, in civil rights, in farm programs, in conservation, in expanding opportunity for business, particularly small business, and against monopoly."

Murray Memorial—

'CIO Is A Monument To Murray —No Man Shall Tear It Down'

By FRED ROSS

COURAGE and humility — those were the words that occurred most frequently at the memorial service for Philip Murray which was the dramatic highlight of the CIO convention at Atlantic City.

Those were the words which brought tears to the eyes of many delegates on the floor, visitors in the balcony, and CIO leaders on the stage.

They were the words that reached out time and again to the ears of the overflow audience of 1500 in the convention hall.

It was just a few short weeks since the death of Murray, president of CIO through 12 of its growing years and founding president of the million-member Steelworkers.

In the midst of the convention week, an afternoon was set aside . . . in memory to Philip Murray.

Men who knew him well and men who knew well what his life's work had brought to millions of Americans—"the picture on the wall, the carpet on the floor and music in the home"—joined in the tribute.

There was a man of the cloth, who knew what faith meant to Phil Murray. There were unionists of CIO and from other lands. And there was a man of politics and government, a man backed by CIO for the nation's highest office.

IT WAS an audience that leaned forward to catch every word. It was an audience that rose from the seats, cheered and applauded for five minutes when Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson arrived to pay tribute to Phil Murray.

"Rank and power expose humility to the rust of pride, and we know those who, in telling of their having 'come up the hard way,' acknowledge in the telling that they have lost the lesson of their experience," Stevenson said.

"It was often remarked, and to some it seemed strange, that the President of the CIO was moved easily to laughter and not infrequently to tears. Perhaps his greatness found its sustenance there, or at least its relection—for it is emotions that link us closest with each other.

"No democratic organization can afford the risk of leadership which lacks humility. It is that element which gives men—which gave Philip Murray—the ability to lead people who distrust the power to command."

The words "courage and humanity" were frequently on the lips of the Rev. Charles Owen Rice, St. Brigid's Parish, Pittsburgh. He was introduced by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, as a close friend of Murray.

"Murray served the labor movement because of his courage," said Father Rice, who is known as the labor priest. "He was not afraid to make decisions and to launch new projects."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey presents delegate's gold badge to Phil Murray's widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Murray.

Father Rice also paid tribute to Murray's ability to reconcile conflicting forces and his leadership of the CIO that made it strong and purged it of Communist-led unions.

"He was humble as he held power in his hands," Father Rice continued . . . I have never found a single instance in which he abused his power. He was one of the friendliest men who ever lived. He enjoyed people and their foibles . . . He had a sense of humor that constantly bubbled over. He enjoyed the kitchens of the poor rather than the drawing rooms of the rich."

Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Congress of Labor said:

"Many of you have been associated with him for a long time, and you knew him as a quiet, soft-spoken man, who had nevertheless such unusual gifts of mind and character that they impressed all who came in contact with him, and made him the great leader and statesman whose memory we cherish and revere."

ALFONSO Sanchez Madariaga, assistant secretary-general of the Mexican Conference of Labor, spoke in Spanish. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey read a translation of his speech in which he said that Murray served as a "stimulant to all democratic forces."

It remained for Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky to spell out what Murray's courage and ability meant to the CIO.

"We shall honor his memory best if we put the continuing unity of CIO before all else," Potofsky said.

"CIO is the birthright of all men and women who made the dream come true," continued Potofsky. "Philip Murray handed it to the untold millions in the mass production and related industries, who aspire to human dignity, democracy in industry and the rights of free men.

"CIO is the monument to Philip Murray, and no man shall lay his hands on it, no man shall weaken it, no man shall pervert it. No man shall tear it down.

"I know that no man will. I know that no man can. I know that all of us in the years ahead will strive to build, to extend the strength and influence of our unions.

"Philip Murray's memory shall live forever wherever free men foregather, and in the hearts of plain men and women—yea, hundreds of millions—everywhere."

Truman's Message—

'Philip Murray Knew The Real Meaning Of America'

Here is the message from Pres. Truman to the Philip Murray memorial service:

I WISH that I could be with you in person to honor the memory of Philip Murray, but since I cannot come, I will try to make my words carry the message of my heart.

Philip Murray's life was dedicated to the dignity of man. He fought for the freedom and welfare of the individual. While he represented millions of workers, he always was able to think in terms of each worker.

Philip Murray came to us from another country—a country with a tradition of freedom. He was a gentle, religious man, but he was firm in his convictions and fierce in his love for the form of government he found in the United States. He fought communism at home and abroad, in the labor movement and in society, because he knew so well the real meaning of America.

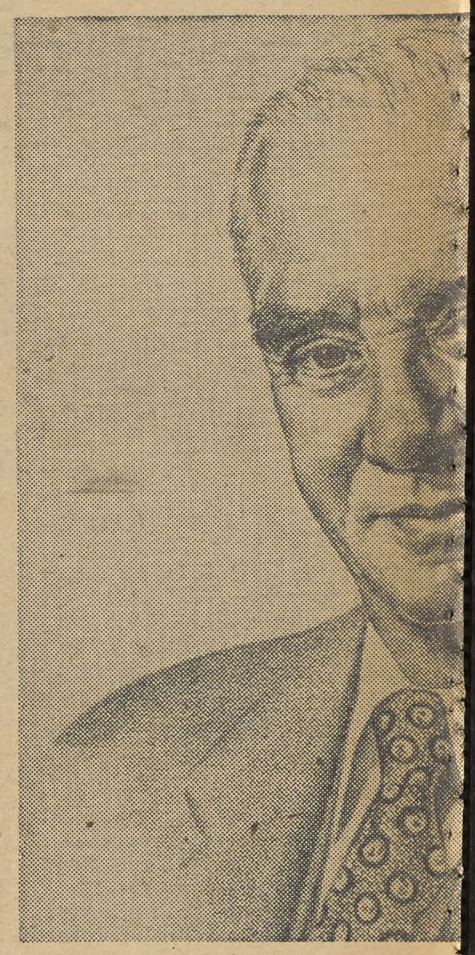
He gave inspiration to the great organizing movement of the CIO, and through his wise counsel, deep integrity and vigorous determination he made the CIO a stable structure for the lasting good of all labor.

He did not strive for personal power. He always thought of labor as part of our great national community. He worked for the cause of labor so that every working man might have better food and clothing, a better home and a place of honor and respect in his own community. He regarded unions not as ends in themselves but as means in which union members could achieve their rights and fulfill their responsibilities as citizens.

He had deep faith in democracy. He believed the labor movement should be the servant of its individual members just as I believe the Government should be the servant and not the master of our people. I felt great kinship for Philip Murray. I shall miss him as you will miss him. May we all continue valiantly in his spirit.

TRIBUTE is paid to Phil Murray by his friend, the Rev. Charles Owen Rice, St. Brigid's Parish, Pittsburgh, at Murray memorial service.

In Me



PHILI

"The CIO and its achievements are in fact a monument" to Philip Murray, the convention declared in a memorial resolution to the late CIO president. Delegates pledged "to carry on his noble tradition."

The text of the resolution on Philip Murray follows:

Philip Murray, our leader, is gone.

His death has left a void in our ranks that we can never fill. During all the years ahead, we will remember that man, with his simple dignity, his warm heart, his penetrating intelligence.

Ours was a great privilege — to have been associated with Philip Murray during nearly two decades in the development of modern trade unionism in America. The CIO will always bear the imprint of Philip Murray, for his principles, his belief in man and God, are woven deep into the fabric of our unions and our lives.

Without his leadership and guidance, his patience and tolerance, the CIO could never have survived these dozen years of stress and turbulence, of war and peace.

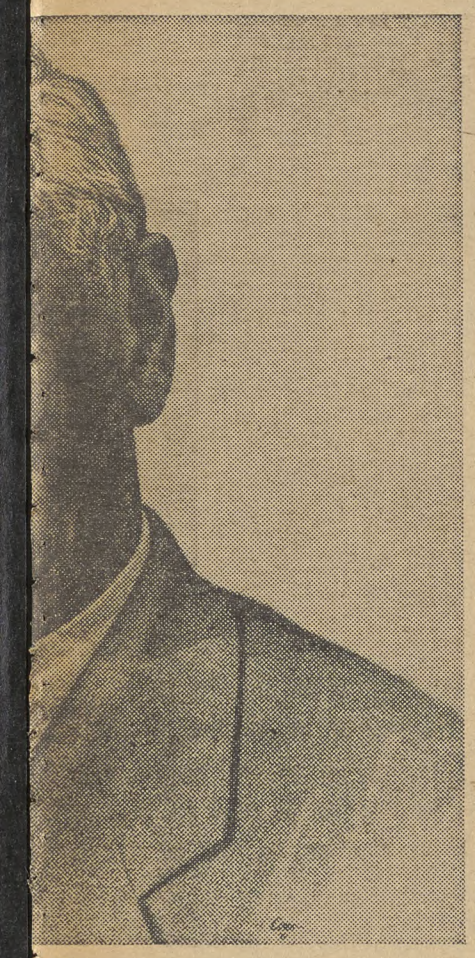
We loved this great man. We worked with him, in a common cause—for the advance of labor, for the advance of democracy in our America, for peace throughout the world.

It is not for us to appraise his place in the history of our nation. That task we leave to the historians and the social scientists—yet, we can predict their decision in the years ahead.

But we bear witness to his abiding faith in his fellow men and women, to his concern for their welfare, to his constant endeavor to insure that their unions and their government should be their servants, not their masters.

The working people of America knew him as their friend. In great industries and tiny shops, in big cities and small towns, in offices and on the high seas, the people instinctively recognized in Philip Murray a

...oriam



...RAY

...an who expressed their hopes and aspi-...tions, their angers and fears, their belief ...at what had gone before was a prelude ... brighter years ahead.

Philip Murray fought their battles — on ...e picket line, at the collective bargaining ...ble, and in the halls of government. Yet, ...e was as respected by his adversaries as ...e was loved by his people, because ...hilip Murray believed in fairness. He be-...eved in the sanctity of contracts not ...erely between employer and union, but ...etween men. His code was strict, but ...ecause he lived by it, he inspired the ...st in other men.

Philip Murray was a leader, and he ...garded leadership not as a privilege but ... a responsibility, a sacred trust.

As we of the Congress of Industrial ...rganizations grope for a return to our ...ily work, the inspiration of Philip Murray ...ill always be with us. For us, for all ...mericans, he placed in clear focus the ...espective of a better, more prosperous, ...ore dignified life. But while he looked ... the future with insight and clear vision, ...hilip Murray lived in the present — con-...ious of our daily problems, concerned ...s about theories than about the prob-...ns of humanity. The rug on the parlor ...or, the picture on the wall, the music ... the home — these he knew the people ...anted and he spent a lifetime helping ...em achieve.

America can be thankful that it opened ... arms to this young Scot coal miner, ...t it gave him inspiration, and that its ...mocracy proved fertile soil for his ideals, ...s courage and his belief in its working ...en and women.

The Executive Board of the CIO has ...thorized the establishment of a Philip ...rray Memorial Foundation. This con-...ntion commends and approves this ac-... of the Executive Board.

Yet this will not be the only ...emorial to Philip Murray. The CIO ...d its achievements are in fact a ...onument to his life's work. We dedicate ourselves to carry on ... his noble tradition.

Adlai Stevenson Says—

'Phil Murray Helped Millions To Stand On Their Own Feet'

Highlights from the speech of Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson at the Philip Murray memorial service follow:

THOSE OF YOU, among the thousands who called him "friend," knew him as a beloved companion, a thoughtful adviser, a generous man with a boundless sense of humor and kindness. As time softens the first sadness of his death, I think we can better see Phil Murray in perspective, and describe him properly in terms that would have embarrassed this unassuming man in his lifetime.

In the truest sense of the words that we often abuse, Phil Murray's life was a success story. The world is better off because he lived in it.

Too often, in judging what man is a success, we think in terms of the market place, and measure him a success who has moved into the big house on top of the hill. Too often we count him a success because he moved into the big house. But the test is rather "how and why." And Phil Murray's success in life cannot be measured in a probate court.

MILLIONS of workers have a personal dignity their fathers never knew because Phil Murray and others like him helped these workers to stand on their own feet.

My acquaintance with Mr. Murray was not intimate and my contacts were few. Perhaps that qualifies me all the better to comment on what to me was his most conspicuous quality. Humbly born, after a story life of democratic leadership and great achievement he humbly died.

Yet it has been too often true that the very humbleness, even the disadvantages, of a man's beginnings have led him to abuse authority subsequently attained. Rank and power expose humility to the rust of pride, and we know those who, in telling of their having "come up the hard way," acknowledge in the telling that they have lost the lesson of their experience.

It was often remarked, and to some it seemed strange, that the President of the CIO was moved easily to laughter and not infrequently to tears. Perhaps his greatness found its sustenance there, or at least its reflection—for it is emotions that link us closest with each other.

So much of democratic leadership is just the understanding of the people's needs and hopes, the looking to them rather than to one's own ideas for guidance and for strength, the maintaining of a oneness between leadership and following.

No democratic organization can afford the risk of leadership which lacks humility. It is that element which gives men—which gave Philip Murray—the ability to lead a people who distrust the power to command.

His was not an easy career. The path of the man who chose a career in organized labor in Murray's youth was not strewn with NLRB orders directing an employer to bargain. Too often the life of the labor organizer was more akin to the career of an underground leader, in terms of frustration, even terror.

WHAT motivated and sustained him in the long struggle? What was the guiding purpose that drove him on with a disregard for self that resulted finally in death? I suspect it was to bring dignity and meaning into lives which had lost these qualities.

It was plainer to those in the coal mines of Pennsylvania in 1902 in his boyhood than it was to a good many other people in America what a price we had paid, in human values, for the fruits of the industrial revolution. The coal dust and the sweat and smoke of factories had settled not only on men's faces and in women's kitchens but on their lives.

Work had become, for millions, something less—much meaner—than it had been when men were carving homes and farms out of forests and working as craftsmen in small shops. In too many minds the men and women beside the assembly lines became indistinguishable from the machines.

GOV. STEVENSON got a warm greeting from Catherine Clarke, of National CIO staff, George L-P Weaver and (right) Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employees at the Atlantic City railroad station.

I know no purpose more sustaining than that of helping people live fuller lives. It gave to Philip Murray the guidance, probably the inspiration, which left for him hard questions of the immediate course to follow but none as to the direction. He must have had that vision of true horizons which gives assurance against beckoning mirages in the often lonely deserts of decision.

WE WOULD honor him well not to take too much for granted those rights he devoted a restless life to securing, but to remember vividly that they were won the hard way. You, his constituents, have inherited a precious trust, which can be executed faithfully only by imitating his own devotion to God, his fellow man, and his country.

While it may be no surprise to you that I had certain preferences in the recent election, I like to think of myself as an American first and a political partisan second. And I think of you as Americans first and labor leaders second.

And your largest task now, as I see it, is the conduct of your relations with industry, always in the larger framework of the national interest on which labor and business and all the rest of us are dependent.

I'll say nothing poetic about the twilight of the era of your great gains. Rather it is for us to make this interval of labor's transition from "far off things, and battles long ago" the dawn of a better era for all of us—for America.

Potofsky Says—

'We Shall Build On Murray's Strong, Solid Foundation'

Here is the text in large part of an address given by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers at the Philip Murray memorial service:

IT IS MY sad duty to address the CIO family on the great and untimely loss of our beloved leader, Philip Murray.

It has been my honor and privilege, in happier times, to put his name before you in nomination for President of this great organization. I had looked forward to doing it again this time, but God has decreed otherwise.

There is not a trade-unionist in America today who has not gained because Philip Murray lived, whose life is not brighter, whose family has not been enriched because Philip Murray guided and led the mighty hosts of CIO. His influence extended into the chancelleries of the world as well as into the homes of the plain people of this great country of ours.

We shall honor his memory best if we put the continuing unity of CIO before all else. Philip Murray helped found CIO. He is gone now, but there are many on this platform and in this assembly who fought side by side with him to make the CIO possible, to make it the power——spiritual, moral and economic—that it is today.

CIO is the birthright of all men and women who made the dream come true. Philip Murray handed this legacy to the untold millions in the mass production and related industries who aspire to human dignity, democracy in industry and the rights of free men.

CIO is the monument to Philip Murray, and no man shall lay his hands on it, no man shall weaken it, no man shall pervert it, no man shall tear it down. I know that no man will. I know that no man can.

I know that all of us in the years ahead will strive to build, to extend the strength and influence of our unions. And we have the strong and solid foundation which we are fortunate enough to inherit from Philip Murray. Philip Murray's memory shall always live wherever free men foregather, and in the hearts of plain men and women everywhere.

'A True Son Of Scotland'

Among the many messages received by the CIO convention was one from the Scottish Trades Union Congress, in the country where the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray was born.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, read this cablegram from STUC Gen. Sec. Middleton:

"Scottish Trades Union Congress conveys the deepest sympathy on the death of your revered national Pres. Philip Murray, a true son of Scotland."

Carey Denounces Jew-Baiting In Russ Satellite Purge Trials

THE RECENT Communist "purge trials" and Soviet anti-semitism are being used "to cover up economic and political oppression in eastern Europe."

That's what James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, said in a short convention address. He spoke before delegates adopted a resolution strongly condemning Soviet anti-semitism.

Carey pointed out that "to their already-long list of crimes against human rights and decency, Communist leaders have now boldly added political anti-Semitism. He went on:

"Not since the days of Adolph Hitler has Europe witnessed such a blatant effort to inflame religious prejudice as was shown in the recent Czechoslovak purge trial. While Stalin has in the recent past often employed anti-Semitism, he has never before used it in such open and flagrant fashion."

Carey said that for anyone who may still be deceived that Stalin's totalitarianism is any less criminal than the Nazi variety, the recent Czech trials should be the final answer.

"The cynical dictator of the Kremlin, who has often sought to convey concern about the rights of minorities, who has tried, on occasions, to pose as the defender of racial equality, once again demonstrated his true colors in Czechoslovakia.

"We hold no brief for Rudolph Slansky and others of Stalin's bloody lieutenants who have fallen into disfavor," Carey continued, "but we do condemn and denounce Stalin's despicable effort to inject anti-Semitism into this latest example of Soviet 'justice.'

"The trial in Czechoslovakia again proves that violence begets violence; the Communist rulers must periodically stage purge trials to distract the attention of the subjugated people in the Soviet world from their real and just grievances.

"This latest example of Soviet gangsterism shall not go unchallenged. The CIO pledges itself to join other democratic forces to rally free world opinion against this moral outrage."

GOOD GOODS—All that was needed was a union label on your suit to get a free chance on a suit at the CIO Clothing Workers' booth. Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO education and research director (right), takes a chance.

Communist 'Purge Trial' Of Jews Rapped

THE LATEST Communist purge trials — with their strong note of anti-semitism —were condemned in sharpest language by the CIO convention.

"Stalin now carries forward the work that Hitler could not conclude," CIO said of the recent Prague trial.

"Seven years after the destruction of the Nazi program for the conquest and enslavement of the world, the Hitlerite pattern of anti-semitism is being copied literally, word for word, by the Russian Communist dictatorship.

"The economic distress of the Czechoslovak nation, the loss of personal freedom, the destruction of the free trade union movement, and the catastrophic decline in living standards have impelled the frightened dictators in the Kremlin to seek a means of diverting the hatred of the people away from the oppressive regime imposed upon them from Moscow."

CIO said the Czech Communist prosecution's charges of a mythical international Jewish "conspiracy"—an invention of the Czar passed on by the Nazis—"is but a continuation and enlargement of Stalin's cynical use of innocent scapegoats." It likened the Prague trial to the imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty in Hungary and of William Otis, American correspondent and CIO Newspaper Guild member, in Czechoslovakia.

CIO urged all free peoples "to condemn this latest demonstration of Communist contempt for human decency" and urged the U. S. government to press for action in the United Nations.

The Convention also reaffirmed CIO's traditionally warm support for the free Jewish state of Israel and of Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation.

POINTING to the "tremendous economic problems" of the fast growing nation, CIO urged (1.) popular subscription to the $500 million Israel bond issue, (2.) "generous Point Four aid" and other economic assistance by the U. S. government for Israel, and (3.) renewed efforts by the U. S. to seek through the United Nations a final peace between Israel and Middle East Arab states.

CIO also praised Histadrut, with 500,000 members in a nation of 1.5 million, for its "leading role" in the Israel economy.

"Two-thirds of the nation directly benefits from the programs of Histadrut," the resolution said, "and the entire country has attained a great measure of stability, democracy and progress due to the vision and courage of organized labor."

TALKING things over at the CIO convention are: Left to right, John Brophy, veteran CIO official; ACWA Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Union Label Drive Needs More Steam

THE UNION LABEL campaigns of several CIO affiliates were pledged fullest continuing support by the convention as a means of helping to organize the unorganized.

A series of resolutions urged an intensified effort to promote the union labels of the CIO Clothing Workers, Brewery Workers and Lithographers and the union water mark of the Paperworkers.

"The union label is a guarantee of quality" on goods produced under union conditions rather than in a sweat-shop, the convention said.

"Consumer cooperation in union label campaigns will not only strengthen the labor movement in plants already organized," it was pointed out, "but can aid in securing union recognition from recalcitrant employers otherwise disposed to deny to their workers the rights of self-organization and collective bargaining.

"While great strides have been made in educating the American public as to the significance and value of the union label or union water mark, much remains to be done to make this campaign fully and continuously effective."

The resolution also asked the CIO Executive Board to study the possibility of setting up a CIO Union Label Dept. as a "practical means for carrying forward an effective union label campaign."

CIO Chiefs Guests Of Labor Israel

Several CIO officials were guests during the convention week of the National Committee for Labor Israel at a dinner honoring Moshe Bitan, representative in the U. S. of Histadrut, the Israel labor federation.

Participants were CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and Mrs. Reuther, Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers.

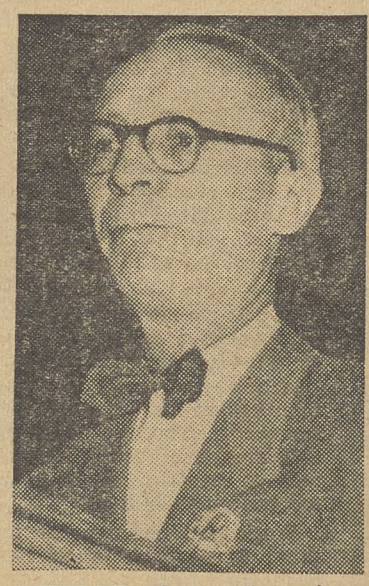
'Manpower Waste' In Defense Program Hit

DEFENSE DEPT. procurement officials have failed to adopt their program to the needs of large sections of the country's economy, the CIO convention charged in one of a series of resolutions touching on various phases of the defense program.

The result, it added, has been "a continued waste of manpower and facilities" in areas with large numbers of unemployed workers.

THE RESOLUTION also condemned the "heavy price" that has been paid for the expansion of the mobilization base by virtue of "large tax write-offs, guaranteed purchase contracts and subsidized prices" to great corporations.

It demanded that the government pursue policies which will permit effective mobilization within the framework of an expanding and stable economy, and that it implement the Employment Act of 1946—to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power—so that both civilian and defense requirements may be met.



REPORT of the Committee on Officers' Report was made to the convention by OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight.

In a companion resolution, the convention warned of the need for "constant vigilance and effort to prevent the undue encroachment of military power" in U. S. life.

"There must be no abdicating of civilian and diplomatic decisions to military officials," it declared. "Government mobilization policies . . . must be under the firm leadership of civilian agencies."

A third resolution sounded the additional warning that any sudden acceleration of war activities would confront the nation with a manpower problem "for which present preparations are hardly adequate."

Jurisdictional Peace Plan Gains Hailed

CIO'S "family peace plan" is "working and working well," just a year after its inauguration, the convention said.

A resolution praised Dr. George W. Taylor, labor arbitrator who is administrator of the jurisdictional disputes program, and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and his staff for their work "in promoting the successful operation" of the program.

"The program for eliminating jurisdictional disputes has worked most successfully," the resolution said. Of 42 disputes, 20 were settled by agreement of the unions involved. Dr. Taylor has ruled on seven cases, and 15 cases are still pending.

"The record speaks for itself," the resolution continued. "Instead of competing with each other for the workers' votes in NLRB elections, CIO unions now cooperate with each other in bringing to unorganized workers the benefits of unionization.

"In the years to come this agreement will continue to promote cooperation and good feeling among CIO affiliates."

PAC Sets Sights Ahead—

'Labor Can Be Proud Of '52 Election Role'

"AMERICAN LABOR can be proud of its performance in the 1952 campaign," the CIO convention said in a resolution reviewing the past and facing the future confidently.

"Where our political activities met with defeat, we lost only after a determined fight for the principles we believe to be right," said the resolution. It called for extended PAC activities and set forth the CIO's legislative program.

"The victories we helped to win prevented many reactionaries from taking office. We can be proud of the fact that our extensive educational efforts and organization resulted in more participation by our members in the democratic exercise of their franchise than ever before."

The resolution said President-elect Eisenhower "had endorsed many of the major reforms enacted during the past 20 years over the bitter opposition of leaders of his own party.

"The narrow Republican majorities in both houses of Congress which resulted from the sweeping Eisenhower triumph indicate a rejection by the people of the reactionaries of the Republican Old Guard," the resolution continued.

It was pointed out that such Republican reactionaries as Sens. Jenner (Ind.) and McCarthy (Wis.) were reelected on Eisenhower's coattails, trailing him by "hundreds of thousands of votes." Also listed was the defeat of other GOP rightists such as Kem (Mo.), Cain (Wash.) and Ecton (Mont.).

"The purposes of the reactionary coalition in Congress must be exposed and fought every step of the way," the convention decided in the resolution which instructed republication of the legislative program adopted by the 1951 convention as modified by the 1952 convention.

"We must be prepared also to support recommendations that may be sent to Congress by the new President in fulfillment of his campaign pledges to preserve and extend the gains of the last 20 years." the resolution said.

A five point program was adopted:

- Rally maximum strength behind the true liberals in Congress, in state legislatures and local governing bodies.
- Keep before the American people the record of the reactionary coalition and of the liberal opposition in the 83rd Congress.
- Continue, extend and intensify the education of the people as to their stake in political action . . . every month of the year.
- Enlist more and more people in politics.
- Raise the necessary funds for PAC work.

Applause greeted PAC Dir. Jack Kroll who spoke for the resolution when he declared:

"I hope and I am sure you hope Gov. Stevenson will continue to serve liberal democracy as the spokesman of the 27 million people in this country who liked his brand of politics. I hope and I am sure you hope he will continue to talk sense to the American people."

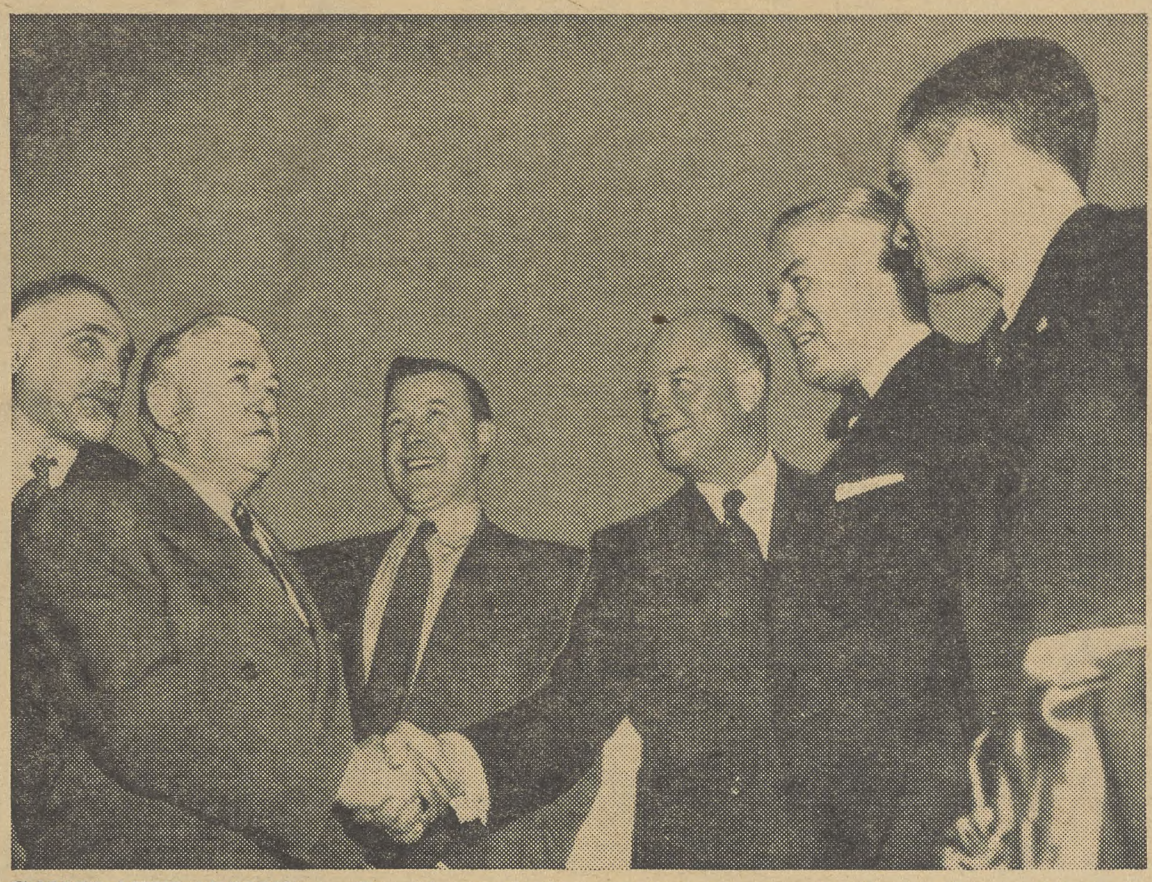
Kroll pointed out that political action is a year round job. He stressed the importance of the 1953 state, county and municipal elections, and of the congressional elections in 1954, when the entire House and a third of the Senate will be elected.

Kroll said the Democratic Senators who will stand for reelection "include many of the staunchest friends of the American people, men like Douglas (Ill.), Humphrey (Minn.), Murray (Mont.), Green (R. I.), Neely (W. Va.) and Kefauver (Tenn.).

He said the future role of PAC will continue to be publication of voting records and information on issues and education of registered voters. He also stressed organization of precinct and ward workers and canvassers, and fund raising for printing, radio, television and other campaign purposes.

Sec. Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers, a CIO vice president, said the 1952 election showed that techniques must be developed to get the wives of union members and young union members acquainted with the issues. It also showed, he said, that labor's relations with farmers and with residents of small towns must be strengthened.

"We have to do a better job of communication with our own members," Mazey said. "Eighty-five per cent of the newspapers of the nation opposed Stevenson. Radio, television and other means of communication were all stacked against us."



CONGRATULATIONS to President-elect Eisenhower, shaking hands with CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, were offered by CIO leaders in pre-convention meeting with Ike in New York. They offered the new President CIO support for "constructive endeavors" but warned against congressional attacks on labor. In group (from left) were ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Haywood, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Eisenhower, USA Acting Pres. David J. McDonald, and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. The meeting came the day before Ike went to Korea.

Cole Urges Labor, Industry To Make Bargaining Work

THE CHIEF U. S. conciliator last week warned labor and management the heat generated by the political campaign confronts them with a "challenge" to make collective bargaining work.

"The adoption of a suspicious and antagonistic attitude will impair this process (of collective bargaining) and in doing so will weaken our entire national labor policy," David L. Cole, head of the U. S. Conciliation & Mediation Service, told the CIO convention.

"This in turn will lead to a search through political channels for some substitute, and it is the substitute I fear. You men of labor, as well as your counterparts in industry, therefore, face a challenge.

"You can meet your direct responsibility to make collective bargaining effective and workable, or you can adopt hostile attitudes and lend support to the critics of this process in the contention that something else is needed," Cole said.

"There are probably some industrialists who feel that now it is their inning and they intend to make the most of the opportunities which they hope are now theirs," he continued.

"The bitterness and harshness of the political campaign may have led labor to assume that hard days lie ahead. I have no direct information and certainly no authority to speak for the administration. I do know, however, that the country cannot and historically has not been run in the spirit of election campaigns once they have ended."

HUDDLES, AS USUAL, were numerous. Here in the midst of one are (left to right) Pres. William Steinberg of the ARA; Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO and the Steelworkers, and Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the NMU.

Kroll Says Ike's Victory Is No Repudiation Of Fair Deal Goals

IN ITS FIRST post-election analysis, the CIO Political Action Committee last week reported to the CIO Executive Board that:

1. CIO members, to a very large extent, followed the recommendations of the CIO leadership and voted for Gov. Stevenson and a liberal Congress.

2. Gen. Eisenhower's victory was a personal one in every sense of the word. It in no way constituted a victory for the Republican party or the ideas associated with the Republican party.

3. Many of those who voted for Eisenhower did so in the belief that they wouldn't lose their present gains.

4. There was no significant realignment of parties in the southern states.

The detailed report, by PAC Jack Kroll, showed that 79% of the registered vote and 61% of the potential vote went to the polls, with the popular vote setting an all time high.

Analyzing the "new" vote this year, PAC observed the largest single bloc was women, who had not previously voted, while the second largest bloc was composed of those just reaching voting age.

The report shows the sharpest shift in the presidential vote came in rural area, with Stevenson showing an increase over the the 1948 Democratic vote in 12 of the 14 industrial states. In contrast, Stevenson's vote was less than the 1948 Democratic vote in 19 of the 23 farm states.

Kroll's report emphasized that there was no precise way of judging how CIO members voted, since they are integrated into the communities in which they live. Using as a yardstick certain political polls, plus ward and precinct figures in areas where CIO members are known to live in large numbers, PAC concluded:

"A reasonable estimate of CIO members who agreed with the political recommendations of their leadership is 70 to 75%."

Pointing out that the Republicans held only knife-edge control of Congress and that Eisenhower ran far ahead of the ticket generally, PAC called his victory a triumph for "a popular hero, constantly before the public in a heroic role since 1942." The election, it said, "cannot be construed as a repudiation of the principles of the New Deal and Fair Deal."

It was, PAC said quoting one columnist, a case of people who "wanted to eat their cake and have it too."

T-H Repeal Set As Major Legislative Goal For CIO

THE NATIONAL CIO convention again repeated its demand for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and once more urged labor relations legislation based on "the enlightened policies of the Wagner Act."

"The fundamental policy which underlies Taft-Hartley is to weaken unions, to block union organization and to frustrate collective bargaining," it said in a resolution. "We cannot and will not compromise our opposition to such a policy.

"Economic stability and industrial peace in a free society are possible only if workers are permitted to achieve an ever-increasing measure of economic and social justice. . . .

"We have supported and will continue to support legislation which will provide this country with a sound and fair national labor relations policy. We would be false to the high trust reposed in us by those whom we are privileged to represent if we adopted any other course."

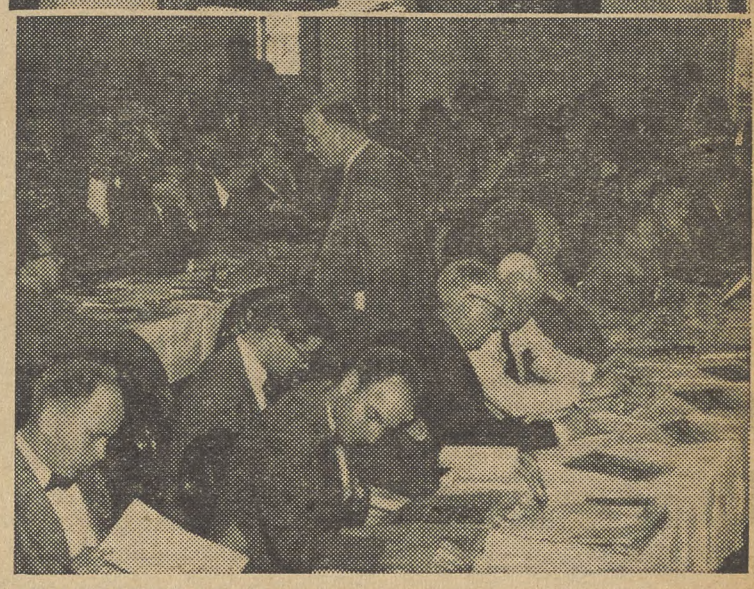
In a companion resolution, the convention declared that "the time has come to abolish this evil device"—the labor injunction —"once and for all."

The resolution recounted the evils visited upon organized labor when T-H undid the good work of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which virtually barred use of injunctions in labor disputes, and the Wagner Act.

"We reiterate our conviction that this use of injunctions can only result in injustice to the workers and discredit to the courts," it said.

"The unfair and one-sided injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act must be repealed. The Norris-LaGuardia Act must be restored to its original strength and scope. . . .

"The labor injunction must likewise be eliminated from the state courts. In those states not now having laws restricting the use of injunctions in labor disputes, we will fight for the enactment of such laws."



PRESS COVERAGE of the convention was record-breaking, with reporters for daily newspapers, news magazines and radio services vieing for news with press, newsreel and television cameramen. At top, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey poses for an assortment of photographers; below, part of the press tables.

High Points Of Legislative Goals

THE CIO will not abandon its legislative program for the welfare and security of the people, the convention decided.

"Although we shall be heavily engaged in blocking reaction," it said, "we shall continue to press our program attacking poverty, disease, discrimination, insecurity and social, economic and political injustice."

The legislative program approved by convention delegates ranges over a broad field. Among the subjects were:

HEALTH: Support was reaffirmed for a national health program giving the people the medical services, facilities and personnel they need, including national health insurance geared in with old age and survivors' insurance.

Also approved were continued improvement of union health programs, the efforts of CIO affiliates to secure local and state legislation to improve health services and to remove restrictions against consumer-controlled medical cooperatives, and more effective labor representation on the governing boards of health insurance plans, hospitals and similar bodies.

SOCIAL SECURITY: The convention reaffirmed its backing of social security, and pledged an intensified information and education program to win support for their improvement to provide adequate protection to all against the hazards of old age, survivorship, permanent and total disability, temporary sickness and injury, unemployment, and the cost of medical care.

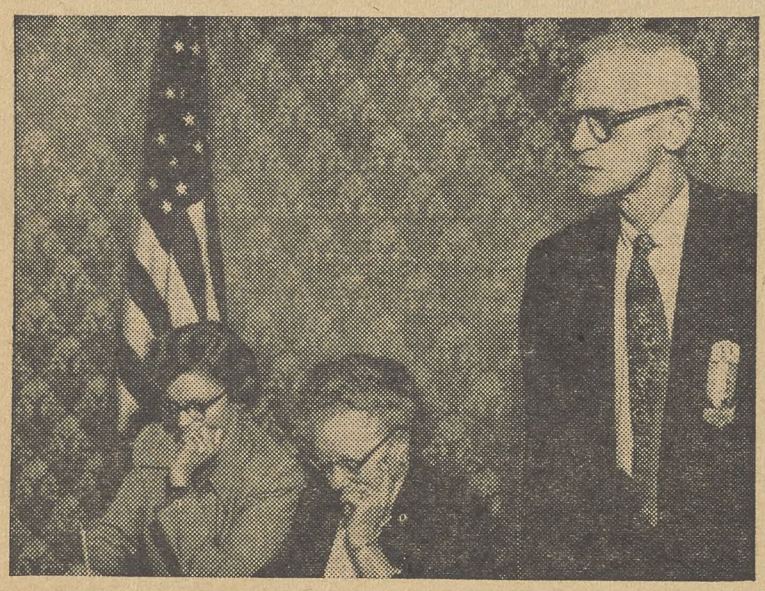
Also supported were proposed amendments to the social security laws to improve the public assistance program, extend rehabilitation services and improve maternal and child welfare services, and at the state level, to win better laws on unemployment insurance, public assistance and other social security programs.

TAXES: The convention recalled that a number of federal tax measures, enacted during the last few years, will expire in 1953, and warned that reactionaries will again attempt to push some of their share of the burden on to the great mass of wage earners.

Approval was given a federal tax program calling for continuance and improvement of the excess profits tax, retention of the present corporate tax rate, an increase in the capital gains tax rate, elimination of the 1951 increase in individual income tax rates on incomes of less than $4000, and placing of the taxes generally on a genuinely progressive basis.

It also proposed higher income tax exemptions and elimination of "the disgraceful loopholes and tax inequities that are prevalent in our tax structure."

HOUSING AND RENT CONTROL: The convention approved a program calling on the Critical Areas Advisory Committee to designate as "critical" all defense production areas where the vacancy rate is less than 2%; strengthening of the Defense Housing Act to provide additional housing in such areas; extension and strengthening of rent control so long as the housing shortage prevents "normal bargaining between landlord and tenant;" congressional action to expand home construction to two million units a year and public housing to 200,000 units, and enactment of legislation to provide loans for middle income families.



HARRY READ, executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, addresses the National CIO Auxiliaries convention. Sec.-Treas. Bertha Perrin is in center, Vice Pres. Evalyn Smith takes notes.

Mrs. CIO Housewife Talks It Over

WHAT MRS. CIO Housewife can do to help advance the unions of their men folk was the main business taken up at the convention of the National CIO Auxiliaries held last week in Atlantic City.

The women met for three days concurrently with the main CIO convention at a nearby hotel, then after election of officers, adjourned to attend the memorial ceremonies for the CIO's late president, Philip Murray.

Pres. Lillian Sherwood from the Kent County CIO Council Auxiliary, Grand Rapids, Mich.; and Sec.-Treas. Bertha Perrin, auxiliary of the Republic Steel local, Warren, O., were both re-elected. Eight incumbent vice-presidents also were returned to office. Harry Read of the National CIO installed the newly-elected officers.

The CIO women's group, formerly called the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries, voted at this convention to change its name to the National CIO Auxiliaries. Their reason was to avoid confusion caused by having the same CWA initials as the CIO Communications Workers.

Delegates representing some 20,000 members of local and council auxiliaries in a dozen or so states attended the CIO women's convention. They are the wives, mothers and sisters of CIO men who belong to locals of national unions in various industries organized by the CIO.

The Oil Workers leads the list with 54 auxiliaries. Other unions with women's auxiliaries affiliated to the national group include Steel, Auto, Rubber, Transport Service; Gas, Coke & Chemical, and Packinghouse. A number of state, local and county CIO councils also have auxiliaries.

Seven state CIO Councils now have auxiliaries. They are Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Utah and Wisconsin.

During the last year, Sec.-Treas. Perrin reported 13 new auxiliaries affiliated with the national council. Two of them are in the South.

An organizational drive to build new auxiliaries, which will help spread CIO's educational, legislative and political action programs, tops the planned activities for the coming year.

Reports of committee chairmen revealed the wide range of activity by women's auxiliaries in union and community affairs. They helped raise funds for strike relief and PAC, for hospitals, disaster victims and the Red Cross, for the physically handicapped and agencies like the Negro College Fund.

MRS. LILLIAN SHERWOOD

Speakers heard by auxiliaries delegates included Father George Sharkey, director of the Catholic Institute of Industrial Relations of the diocese of Camden, N. J.; Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee; Alice Mills, director, women's division, National Safety Council, and Read.

The eight vice-presidents re-elected were Camilla Persohn, UAW Auxiliary, Evansville, Ind.; Rosalie Manns, Transport Service, Cincinnati, Ohio; Evalyn Smith, Steel, Warren, Ohio; Thelma Lacey, Kent County Council, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Esther Briggeler, Indiana CIO Council, Evansville, Ind.; Viola Friedman, Ohio CIO Council, Youngstown; Pauline Roberts, Michigan Council, Detroit; and Gwen Everhart, Iowa Council, Des Moines.

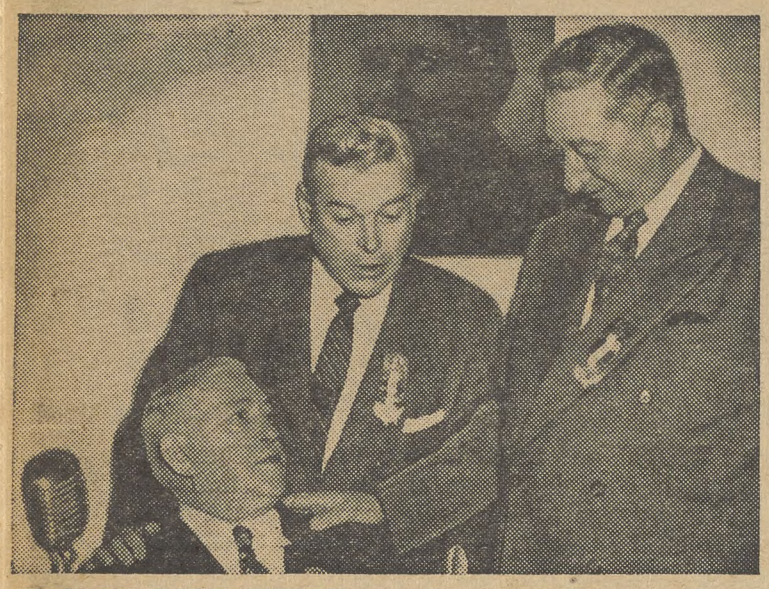
City Of Hope Is Hailed For Work

High praise was voiced by the CIO convention for the "outstanding free and non-sectarian program of specialized medical service" provided by the City of Hope.

CIO affiliates were urged to support financially the cancer and tuberculosis hospital at Duarte, Calif.

Dixiegops Condemned—

'Human Rights Are Biggest Issue Of The Day'



THE CIO CONVENTION was the scene of many discussions such as this one: Left to right, Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president; David J. McDonald, acting USA president, and James G. Thimmes, USA vice president.

THE PLAIN and simple principle of the brotherhood of man was re-enunciated by the CIO convention with the declaration that "human rights are the biggest issue of the day."

The United States, said a comprehensive civil rights resolution, has demonstrated that men can have both freedom and bread through entrusting decisions to the people.

"Racial supremacy," it continued, "is a doctrine discarded by all sound spiritual and moral philosophers, and disproved by all the findings of true science . . . Opponents of full civil rights are motivated by greed for gain and thirst for political power, and to gain them they would apply to human relationships the blind laws that govern brute force in the jungle.

"America itself is not free from this type of thinking. We still see false doctrines of political or economic dictatorship urged by some who call themselves Americans but glibly misquote and distort our philosophy of government to prove their contentions . . .

"Catch phrases and false slogans are used to cloak the objectives of would-be dictators who fear the decisions of a free people. Nowhere is this so apparent as in the Congress of the United States, where both senators and representatives join in nefarious political coalitions to use civil rights as political footballs.

"These practices . . . reveal a bankruptcy in reasoning power and in human decency."

However, there were bright spots in the struggle for human rights since the 1951 CIO convention, the resolution recounted. One was the action of Pres. Truman, "acting with his usual fearlessness," in ordering all government agencies to forbid discrimination because of race, creed, color or national orgin in filling procurement contracts.

The resolution also approved "continuing improvement" in utilizing all citizens in the armed forces.

IT ALSO restated the CIO's stand against discrimination in hiring and promotions, and urged all affiliates to fight for equality of treatment for all workers.

In addition, it recalled the expanding role of the CIO at all levels in the fight for human rights, and called on city, country and state CIO councils to establish human rights committees where they have not done so.

It also pledged support for President - elect Eisenhower's plan to end segregation in the District and to stop discrimination under defense contracts, while disagreeing with his refusal to support a Fair Employment Practices Act.

A separate resolution on filibustering, which has often been used to block votes on questions of human or civil rights, bitterly condemned rejection of the principle of majority rule by the Senate.

A PROPOSAL to kill Senate Rule 22, which lets a minority block a vote by filibustering, was part of the convention-approved legislative program. The rule was enacted in 1949 by a coalition of reactionary Republicans and Southern Democrats.

"The inspiration of Rule 22," said the resolution, "came from those forces that have long and steadily opposed legislation to implement our national concept of equality, and to protect the civil rights of all Americans, regardless of race, religion, color or national origin. . .

"Rule 22 is unconstitutional because it violates the principle of majority rule that is embodied in the Constitution of the United States and is a fundamental of democratic government . . . There must be an end to minority rule masquerading as free speech."

'Riders Of The Headlines'—

McCarthyism Rapped For Weakening Nation

THE "HALF TRUTH and the big lie" of McCarthyite "riders of the headlines" are weakening the "substance of democracy" while hampering the nation's fight against Communist totalitarianism, the CIO convention said.

In a strongly-worded policy declaration on civil liberties and internal security, CIO said "the methods used by (Sens.) McCarthy, McCarran and their fellows help rather to conceal the fifth columnists than to expose them."

"The McCarthys," CIO said, "try to convince the world that they have caught enemies in our midst and are therefore our only protection against treason. Nothing could be further from the truth."

The resolution termed McCarthyism "a most grave danger in our nation's present fight to preserve democracy against Communist totalitarianism."

It condemned as basically alarming those "unscrupulous persons who consciously and deliberately seek to exploit for their own ends the fear which is pervading our land. They join in the great hue and cry against communism, seeking not truth but sensation, and not the apprehension of the real culprits but the augmentation of their own notoriety."

"The CIO has earned the right to speak with authority on how to fight Communist penetration," the resolution pointed out.

"WE HAVE cleaned our own house, and we have done it democratically. We have proven that it is not necessary to harry the innocent in order to ferret out the guilty.

The resolution on civil liberties:

- Urged Congress to review and revise the Smith Act and the McCarran Subversive Activities Control Act "so that the security of the nation shall be safeguarded against acts of sabotage and espionage without subjecting individuals to persecution on the basis of speech and advocacy alone."
- Urged adoption by Congress of a code of fair procedures for investigations.
- Commended Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) "for his courageous fight against McCarthyism."
- Condemned any legislation to restrict the Bill of Rights "or impose conformity of thought and deed."
- And rejected "the hysterical procedures and the denial of basic individual rights that have been foisted upon us in the name of 'internal security.' We insist that all individuals be afforded the personal freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights."

CIO Group On Way To ORIT Meet

A THREE-MAN CIO delegation left immediately after the convention for Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, for a meeting of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), the arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in the western hemisphere.

The CIO representatives are Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers; R. J. Thomas assistant CIO director of organization, and Dr. Ernst Schwarz, executive secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee.

The ORIT executive board will meet Dec. 11. Sessions of the main body, which represents the free trade union movements in Central and South America and the Caribbean area, will be held Dec. 12 to 17.

En route home, Thomas will visit the Panama Canal Zone, where Local 900 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee has some 5000 members.

CIO Offers 'Bill Of Rights For Negro Labor,' Marshall Says

"THE PROGRAM of the CIO has become the Bill of Rights for Negro labor in America," Thurgood Marshall, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the CIO convention.

"The Number One issue in American life today is civil rights," the NAACP special counsel said.

"Throughout the entire country, in the North as well as in the South, and in the East as well as in the West, civil rights has become the major social and political issue in the national life of this country.

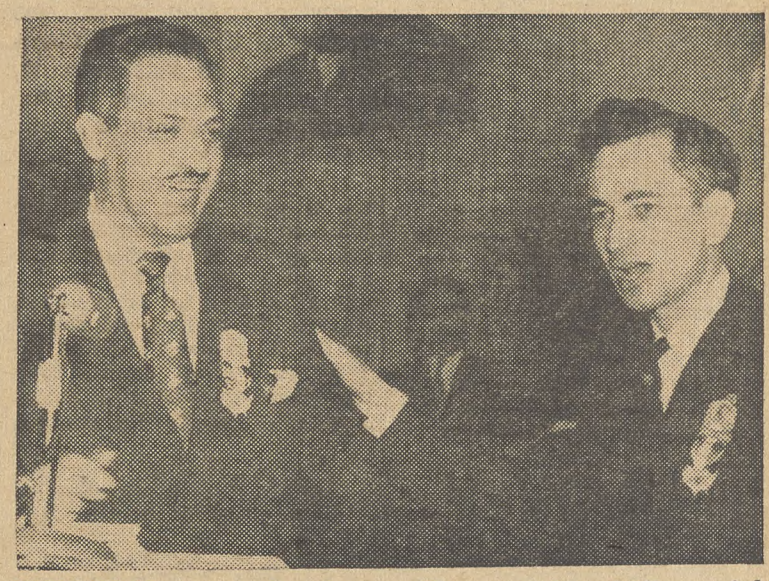
"Fifteen million Negro citizens of the U. S. still suffer the horrors of Jim-Crow segregation and discrimination. Not since the days of Reconstruction, not since the end of the Civil War, has this issue assumed the crucial importance for all the American people, both white and colored that it has today."

Marshall said U. S. criticisms of forced labor in Russia and of undemocratic practices in satellite countries boomerang at the United Nations because of discrimination against Negroes.

"It is evident," he said, "that the continued existence of racial discrimination at home seriously negates and jeopardizes the entire meaning of foreign policy throughout the world . . .

"All progress that we have made is nothing as long as the Negro worker cannot compete on a fair and equal basis for a decent job at decent wages, working at his highest skills—this, I repeat, is the fundamental question.

"Many great and powerful corporations of this country are maintaining a tradition, a rotten tradition, of condemning the Negro worker to do the hardest work, and the dirtiest work, at the lowest pay.



ENJOYING hearty laughs are Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (left), and James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer.

"THROUGHOUT this country at the present moment, there are still too many educated Negroes sweeping floors or running elevators, there are too many colored women who are scrubbing toilets, and you had better put an end to this.

"For these are not questions of abstract morality, but burning life and death problems, and it is precisely in this field that the CIO can make its greatest contribution, in eradicating traditional Jim Crow practices in industrial employment. Your contribution in this field have been tremendous, but much remains to be done . . .

"We believe that the CIO union contract is the most effective vehicle in opening new job opportunities for Negro workers, in integrating Negroes into more skilled positions. Vigorous enforcement of the anti-discrimination clauses in your contracts, and intelligent use of open bidding and seniority procedures have destroyed the traditionally limitations on Negro promotion and advancement, but occassionally a local union forgets that seniority applies to its Negro members also."

Marshall lauded the work of the CIO Auto Workers, the CIO Steelworkers and other CIO unions in protecting the job rights of Negroes.

ICFTU Board Maps Plans At N. Y. Meeting

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A HANDFUL of men from the four corners of the earth met in New York last week to chart the next steps of the international free labor movement.

Men who rose from the ranks of textile workers and auto workers, dockers and clerks, fishermen and seamen and other trades, they now constitute the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions —the general staff of the world march of working men and women to bread, peace and freedom.

The meeting was historic. It was the first session a top ICFTU body has held in the Western Hemisphere since it came into being three years ago in London.

At that time the workers of more than two-score nations banded together, through their democratically elected representatives, to form their own organization to combat communism and every other form of totalitarianism, and to fight poverty, hunger, ignorance, oppression and all other affronts to economic and social justice.

On the basis of this sound program and its slow but steady march toward its goals, the ICFTU now represents nearly 54 million members in some 70 nations on every continent.

Four of the continents were represented at the meeting. The fifth—Africa—would also have been represented had not the French government denied permission for Farhat Hached, general secretary of the General Federation of Tunisian Workers, to attend.

Because of this refusal he had to stay in Tunisia—and even while the board was meeting in New York, he was brutally slain by assassins.

The meeting was pretty much like sessions of the executive board of a CIO international union. The members or their alternates sat at the long sides of a U-shaped table. At its head was the presiding officer, Sir Vincent Tewson, president of the ICFTU and general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress. Flanking him was Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, a Hollander who speaks 12 languages.

Between the two tables sat Herman Patteet, a Belgian, the interpreter, who with scarcely a second's hesitation translated speeches from English into French, or vice versa. Spanish and Italian translators were also available, and throughout the meeting a special interpreter sat with Toshio Nishimaki, board member from Japan and president of the All-Japan Seamen's Union.

The meetings were held in New York's Freedom House, the liberal-sponsored monument to the late Wendell Willkie's concept of one world. They were held in this country on the joint invitation of the CIO, AFL and Mine Workers, three of the original member bodies.

The discussions began after a welcome sent by Pres. Truman.

They included discussion of the ousted Communist leaders' trials in Prague and the issuing of a statement denouncing them as "a clumsy maneuver to stir the reactionary elements in the Arab world" by their "fantastic and fraudulent accusations" of a Jewish "plot" against Czechoslovakia.

The members heard a report by Pres. Willard Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employes, who had just returned from investigating the situation in Japan for the ICFTU.

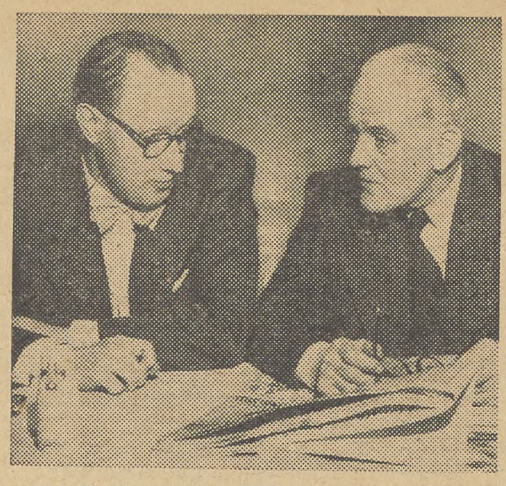
The Communists, he regretfully reported, are making greater strides in the Japanese labor movement than the democratic forces. They virtually control Sohyo, the major national center, through party liners, although most of the unions which make it up are non-Communist—and are affiliated with the ICFTU.

On his recommendation, they voted to open an office in Tokio to give the democratic unions guidance and help in their fight against the Communists and the reactionary government.

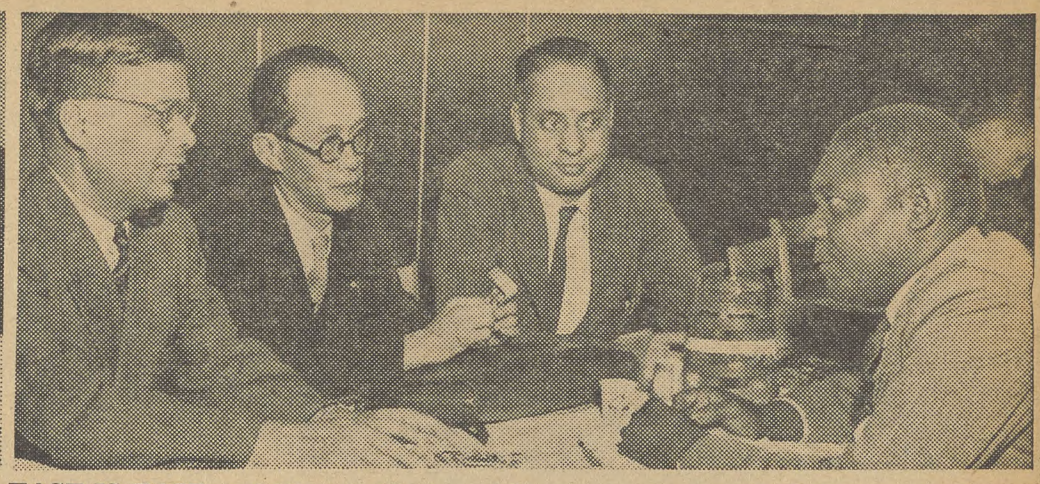
The board voted to expand the work of its trade union training school in Calcutta and to proceed with plans for others in the Middle East and Africa.

And so it went. Not all was work, however. The delegates met with Gen. Sec. Trygve Lie during a visit to the United Nations, attended a Broadway musical comedy, and were honored by the three sponsoring bodies at a farewell banquet after concluding their sessions.

Speakers at the dinner were Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Vice Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO; Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Matthew Woll of the AFL; Sec. Treas. John Owens of the Mine Workers; Tewson, Oldenbroek, and C. P. Alexander, board member from the Caribbean area and an official of the Trinidad & Tobago Transport Workers' Council.



SERVING as alternate to late CIO Pres. Philip Murray at ICFTU executive board meeting was Victor Reuther (left), CIO European representative, shown with Lincoln Evans of the British Trades Union Congress.



EAST IS EAST and West is West, and the twain meet at ICFTU executive board sessions. From left to right, in deep discussion, are H. Shastri, the Indian Trades Union Council; Toshio Nishimaki, the All-Japan Seamen's Union; Dhyan Mungat, regional secretary of the ICFTU Regional Organization, and Cecil P. Alexander, of the Trinidad and Tobago Transport Workers Council in the West Indies. Board met in New York's Freedom House at joint invitation of CIO, AFL and UMW.

World Labor Mourns Assassination

THE ICFTU executive board, already mourning the deaths of three of its members since its last meeting, was deeply shocked by the brutal assassination of a fourth, Farhat Hached.

Hached, general secretary of the General Union of Tunisian Workers (UGTT) and the outstanding leader of the moderate nationalist movement in his country and all the Middle East, was machine-gunned and clubbed to death a few miles outside Tunis as he was driving to a union meeting.

If the French government, which rules Tunisia, had not refused to permit him to leave the country, he would have been in New York for the ICFTU board sessions.

Hached, 39, was the most effective leader of the moderate nationalist forces in Tunisia which are attempting both to throw off repressive French colonial rule and to block Communist efforts to seize the government. He last visited the United States about seven months ago, when the CIO and AFL jointly sponsored a luncheon in Washington at which he spoke.

In a statement released in New York and cabled to UGTT headquarters in Tunis, Pres. Walter P. Reuther expressed the CIO's "regret and horror" at the assassination.

He paid tribute to Hached as "an outstanding personage whose leadership extended far beyond the field of labor" and "was given to all the people of his own nation who are striving for independence, for social and economic justice, and for recognition of the dignity of man."

"No one knows at present who is to blame," he added. "But in the deepest sense, it is the French government which must bear a large share of the responsibility.

"For by its refusal to understand the nature of the popular and social movements now in ferment throughout the Middle East; by its adamant stand against any sincere negotiations with moderate nationalist groups in Tunisia; by its deliberate measures to intimidate and obstruct the activities of the UGTT —by all these things, the French made it impossible for a moderate like Hached to function.

"The CIO extends its most sincere and deepest sympathy to his family and to his fellow workers and fighters for Tunisian freedom."

The ICFTU board said it was "profoundly shocked by the sudden and tragic blow." It described his death as "an irreparable loss to the free trade union movement of his country, to the Tunisian people as a whole, and, above all, to the cause of freedom throughout the world."

Other ICFTU board members dead since the last meeting, in Berlin in July, were CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Pres. William Green, and Pres. A. W. Croskery of the New Zealand Federation of Labor.

'Public Welfare Is Big Part Of Defense,' Mosher Says

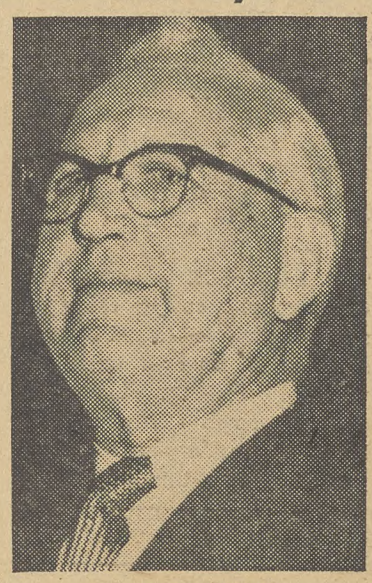
FRATERNAL greetings of organized labor in Canada were voiced to the CIO convention by Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

He reported the sincere condolences of the CCL—with which CIO unions in Canada are affiliated—on the death of the late Philip Murray, CIO and Steelworkers president.

Mosher reported the CCL is "on its toes in both the economic and political spheres" and "we are thinking more and more of social security on a national scale, in spite of those who object very strongly to the welfare state."

"If human welfare is not the most important business of the state," the CCL president said, "I am at a loss to know just what is more important.

"It does not appear that our governments are yet fully aware of the fact that public welfare is one of the most important measures of national defense."



A. R. MOSHER

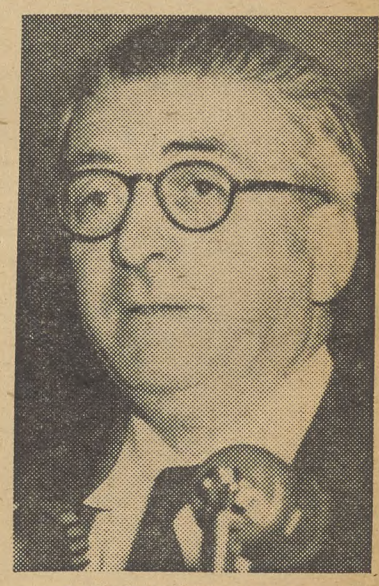
'Democracy By Deed' Is Proposed By ICFTU Aide

A LEADER of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions last week said the peoples of under-developed countries "must be shown by deeds that democracy is something more than a noble phrase."

Hans Gottfurcht, assistant general secretary of ICFTU, told the CIO convention that living standards are appallingly low in Asia, Africa, the Middle East, Latin America and the Caribbean countries.

"If these people are not to become the victims of machinations of totalitarian dictators, they must be shown by deeds that democracy is something more than a noble phrase," Gottfurcht said.

He said that the United Nations Economic and Social Council is beginning "to move in the right direction" in regard to faulty conditions in those countries, but, meanwhile, ICFTU is assisting trade unions in those areas.



HANS GOTTFURCHT

Truman's Message—

'Labor Plays Leading Role For The Common Good'

PRAISE FOR FREE American labor for its "strong, enlightened and patriotic influence" in the nation's interest was voiced by Pres. Truman in his final message to a CIO convention.

Truman's message to the convention was read by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. It was written to the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray on Nov. 8, the day before Murray died.

Text of the message follows:

"Please extend my cordial greetings to the officers, delegates and members attending the 14th annual convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. They have my sincere good wishes for a successful meeting in the best interest of their unions, their fellow Americans and the communities they serve all over the Nation.

"We in this country have made great economic strides since your organization was founded. Wage earners have gained an ever-increasing standard of living with better wages and hours of work, employment for those who want it and broad social benefits for all our people. This has brought prosperity to farmers and been of prime importance in building up the resources of industry. Labor has played a leading part in the programs carried on for the common good and will continue to wield a strong, enlightened and patriotic influence.

"We Americans have met and solved many perplexing problems in recent years. In the years ahead, we will be called upon to persist in our efforts to preserve peace and freedom against Communist imperialism. This will mean a continuation of high production, in cooperation with our allies, for our own safety and that of the free world.

"American workers can be depended upon to do their full share in the difficult days that lie ahead. They will join all other groups of our country in giving wholehearted support to those measures which are essential in the national interest. Thus, we will show the enemies of freedom that Americans are as one in a common cause against totalitarian ideologies."

Story Of Walter Reuther, CIO's New President

By MILTON PLUMB

WALTER P. REUTHER, new CIO president, has lived a life dedicated to the highest ideals of the American labor movement.

Born in Wheeling, W. Va., on Sept. 1, 1907, Reuther grew up in a home where unionism was a part of the family life. He left high school at 15 to become an apprentice tool and die maker, but was soon fired for organizing the workers in protest against Sunday and holiday work.

In 1926 he went to Detroit, where the unsteady and seasonal employment of those non-union days led him into several jobs in the auto industry. He was employed by Briggs, General Motors, Coleman Tool and Die and finally Ford, where he worked in the tool and die room for six years.

Reuther completed his high school education at night and spent three years at Wayne Univ., where he formed the Social Problems Club and gave its members first-hand experience by taking them to picket lines when strikes were in progress.

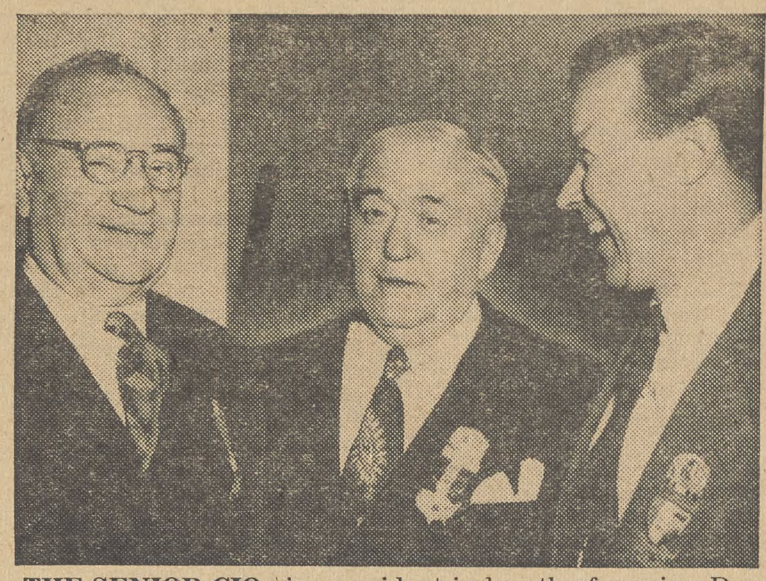
AFTER BEING fired for union activity in 1933, Reuther set out on a world tour with his brother Victor, now CIO representative in Europe. They visited 11 countries and studied the labor movement, getting a first hand knowledge of conditions and working in factories to help pay their way.

Returning to Detroit in 1935, Reuther went to work in a shop and plunged into the work of organizing auto workers.

This was the time of the tremendous growth of industrial unionism and the birth of the CIO. Under Reuther's leadership, West Side Local 174 of the CIO Auto Workers rose from a membership of 78 in 1936 to 30,000 in 1937.

Reuther was elected to the UAW-CIO executive board in May 1936, and was reelected every year following.

In 1942 he was elected vice president, and he was chosen to head the UAW at the Auto Workers' 10th convention in Atlantic City in 1946. A few months later he was elected a CIO vice president.



THE SENIOR CIO vice president in length of service, Pres. Emil Rieve (left) of the Textile Workers, talks things over with Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther before the election.

Reuther was active in the Detroit and Flint sitdowns, including the important Kelsey-Hayes Wheel strike in December 1936, one of the early sitdown strikes in the drive that organized the auto industry. During the Ford organizing drive the following year, he and other UAW leaders were assaulted by Ford cops and brutally beaten in the "Battle of the Overpass."

Before Pearl Harbor, Reuther opposed the isolationists of the right and left by proposing a program for converting the auto industry for mass production of military planes. He served as labor representative with the Office of Production Management and the War Manpower Commission, but refused other appointments because he objected to the failure to use labor in more than an advisory capacity.

From 1939 to 1948, as head of the UAW's GM Dept., Reuther led the General Motors workers to new gains. The aggressive campaign in 1945 for higher wages without higher prices was the major factor outside of Washington in upholding those who sought to save price control from the assault of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Early in 1948, while talking to his wife shortly after returning home from a meeting of the UAW Executive Board, Reuther was felled by a shotgun blast fired by an unknown assailant through a window. His right arm was almost severed and he also suffered chest wounds.

UNDER Reuther's leadership, after the 1949 UAW-CIO convention in Milwaukee, the union launched a campaign to win employer-financed pensions and health insurance for its members.

The first such program was achieved at the Ford Motor Co. in September 1949. More than a million UAW members now are covered by pensions wholly financed by employers, and by health insurance plans in which the employer pays at least half the cost.

Reuther attended the founding session of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in 1949 in London, serving as chairman of the CIO delegation. At an earlier meeting that year in Zurich, Switzerland, he was elected president of the Automobile Div. of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation.

Reuther is chairman of the National CIO Housing Committee, and in 1949 he drew up a program for mass produced housing. The plan was called "Homes for People—Planes for Peace—Jobs for Prosperity." Reuther was a member of the United Labor Policy Committee which was set up in 1951 by the CIO, AFL and the railway brotherhoods.

In addition to his other union duties, Reuther serves as co-director with William Oliver of UAW-CIO Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept. The UAW has pioneered in efforts to eliminate discrimination and is a leading fighter for civil rights.

Reuther also is a member of the executive boards of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Religion and Labor Foundation.

He is married, has two young daughters, and lives in Detroit.

Unionists From 12 Lands Visit And Meet With CIO

SOME 50 TRADE unionists from a dozen foreign countries visited the National CIO convention and showed a deep interest in the proceedings.

They met with a group of national officers, chatted with rank and file delegates, and heard speeches and discussions translated into their own tongues over a monitor system in the meeting hall.

Some were members of Mutual Security Agency industry teams visiting the United States, while others were in this country under Smith-Mundt Act or Point Four grants administered jointly by the State and Labor Depts. A group of German workers are present under the State Dept. German program.

MOST OF the visitors met on Dec. 1 with CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, and Acting Pres. David J. McDonald and Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the Steelworkers.

A group of Norwegians which has been touring the country under the guidance of CIO National Rep. Adolph Germer met with the Woodworkers' delegation.

On Dec. 2, many of the foreign visitors were presented to the delegates from the convention stage. After Haywood, who was presiding, introduced each national delegation, Gen. Sec. Alf Henry, of the Norwegian Federation of Trade Unions, responded in Norwegian. His remarks were translated into English by Josef Berg, the federation's education and press officer.

Henry extended fraternal greetings to the convention, and expressed the shock and regret of Norwegian workers at the death of Philip Murray.

He assured the convention that the goals of the CIO are watched keenly by workers in Europe, and declared the convention itself was of "worldwide importance." He warned that all workers must continue their fight for similar goals, adding the injunction that "trade unionists never get anything free."

The individuals and groups present came from Norway, Germany, Israel, France, Greece, Italy, Egypt, Austria, Lebanon, the Philippines and Switzerland.

THREE-SCORE trade unionists from more than a dozen foreign countries visited the convention and listened avidly during speeches and discussion. Many of them were introduced to the delegates from the stage at the Tuesday afternoon session. Here a group composed mostly of Norwegians listens to a speech being translated over the monitor system. Translations also were made for guests from other nations.

'White Collar' Drive Pledged

THE CIO convention set its organizing sights on the field of "white collar" office and professional workers and pledged continued support to the Southern organizing campaign and efforts to bring back into the CIO members of unions expelled because of Communist-domination.

"So long as any group of American workers is unorganized, just so long will the status of the unionized part be endangered," the resolution said.

"Organizing is a job we must do ourselves—even after the worker has signed a union card. We must constantly promote the idea of democratic collective achievement among our membership, among new workers in union shops, and among workers in as yet unorganized groups."

The resolution then called attention to the thousands of office workers who joined unions in plants where the CIO had organized the production workers.

"Now we must bring the same lesson home to office and professional workers generally," the resolution continued.

The progress of the Southern drive "in spite of Taft-Hartley, the KKK and reactionary state and local officials," was hailed. A new impetus has been given the drive, the resolution pointed out, by the Steelworkers' new contract which cut the differential against the workers in the Southern steel mills in half.

Most members of the expelled unions "remained in the CIO; a part, however, have gone with their Communist leaders," the resolution declared.

"The workers are, of course, not Communist," it said. "But they have been mislead. It is our duty to bring them back to democratic labor unionism."

The resolution praised Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president, "for his vigorous, tireless and successful efforts" as director of organization; the Southern Organizing Committee, its director, John Riffe, and his staff; and the CIO Electrical Workers and other CIO unions for their efforts to bring back to CIO members of Communist-dominated unions.

LPA Praised

Labor Press Association, cooperative union news service, was praised by the CIO convention as "an important and valuable adjunct to the labor press." All CIO affiliates with publications were urged to support LPA.

BOARDWALK strolling was in order even for convention delegates and guests who wouldn't think of walking to the corner drug store back home. Many health-giving miles were pounded away despite a breeze that was sometimes sharp and cold.

'Let's Work Together While We Talk Unity,' CIO Tells AFL

CIO'S LONG-standing position in favor of immediate joint action by all democratic trade unions and negotiations toward organic unity in the future was reaffirmed by the Atlantic City convention.

Delegates also authorized the new CIO officers to name a new committee to meet with the AFL to "seek honorable labor unity that will advance the welfare of all of labor."

The AFL, through George Meany, its recently-named president after the death of William Green, had proposed revival of the CIO-AFL discussions on labor unity which last were held some two years ago.

In a resolution replying, indirectly, to that proposal, CIO said that "united action" on immediate issues should be sought, pending discussion on final agreement on organic unity. The resolution said in part:

"The CIO has always looked with favor on the development of unity in the ranks of the free democratic labor movement of the U. S.

"Labor unity has long been a cherished goal of the CIO and its members, because they have recognized that a more secure, more abundant life for the working people of America will be hastened by the achievement of a united labor movement.

"The CIO has repeatedly sought the unification of all bona fide labor organizations. In our efforts to attain this goal, we in the CIO have recognized that united action on social and economic, legislation and political issues could not wait for final agreement on the countless important organizational problems involved in the final attainment of organic unity. This is particularly true today in the situation which confronts all of labor.

"This Convention of the CIO reaffirms our traditional devotion to the ideal of organic unity in the American labor movement, and our hope and belief that organic unity will be achieved through a spirit of cooperation, responsibility, and sincerity in the relationship of all democratic free American trade union organizations."

More To Come

More pictures and news reports on the CIO convention, crowded out of this week's issue because of lack of space, will appear in the next issue of The CIO News.

CIO Offers Aid To Durkin, New Secretary Of Labor

CIO OFFERED its warm congratulations to Martin P. Durkin, president of the AFL Plumbers Union, who last week was named Secretary of Labor.

Durkin's appointment by President-elect Eisenhower filled out the cabinet of the incoming Republican administration. Sinclair Weeks, wealthy Boston manufacturer and GOP fund raiser, was named Commerce Dept. head.

Durkin, 58, of Chicago, is a Democrat, a supporter of Gov. Adlai Stevenson against Eisenhower in the recent campaign, and an opponent of the Taft-Hartley Act.

STEEL AND AUTO chiefs confer on platform: Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of USA (left) and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW.

While CIO's officers wired Durkin a pledge of support and cooperation, Sen. Taft (R. O.) cried howls of rage over the appointment.

In his first blast at Eisenhower since election day, Taft called the naming of Durkin "an incredible appointment." Taft even claimed the naming of a union man as Secretary of Labor was "an affront to millions of union members and officers."

This brought the comment, at the CIO convention, from Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood that "what is not good for Taft is usually good for us." Thomas Jones, CIO Communications Workers vice president, said that "if there is any affront involved in this appointment, the most raw piece of effrontery is the continued insistence of Sen. Taft in attempting to dictate to and about organized labor and everything relating to it in this country."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Haywood and the eight CIO vice presidents joined in this telegram to Durkin:

"The executive officers and vice presidents of the CIO organizations, speaking for our 14th Constitutional Convention, warmly congratulate you upon your appointment as Secretary of Labor.

"We fell certain that you, with a long and honorable record of experience in the trade union movement, will fill a great and constructive role in the new administration. You may feel confident of the complete and wholehearted cooperation and support of the CIO in these tasks."

Place Your Order Now!

You Need The CIO NEWS Every Week Of The Year

Now more than ever, you need The CIO News every week of the year.

With Pres. Walter P. Reuther and the "new CIO leadership team" just elected, with the Republican administration taking over in Washington in a few weeks, events will be moving fast for all of labor on the legislative, political, organizational and collective bargaining fronts.

You can't afford to miss the first-hand reports in The CIO News on Washington developments and union news from throughout the nation.

For the tops in labor news, pictures, features, cartoons and comment, subscribe today. Do it now—clip, sign and mail this coupon.

The CIO NEWS
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

☐ Send me The CIO News for a year at $1.

☐ Send me a bundle order of ..... copies of this Convention Issue. Rates 2c per copy for orders up to 1000.

☐ Send me rates for larger bundle orders of the Convention Issue.

☐ Send me rates for regular group and bundle subscriptions.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Organization .....

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

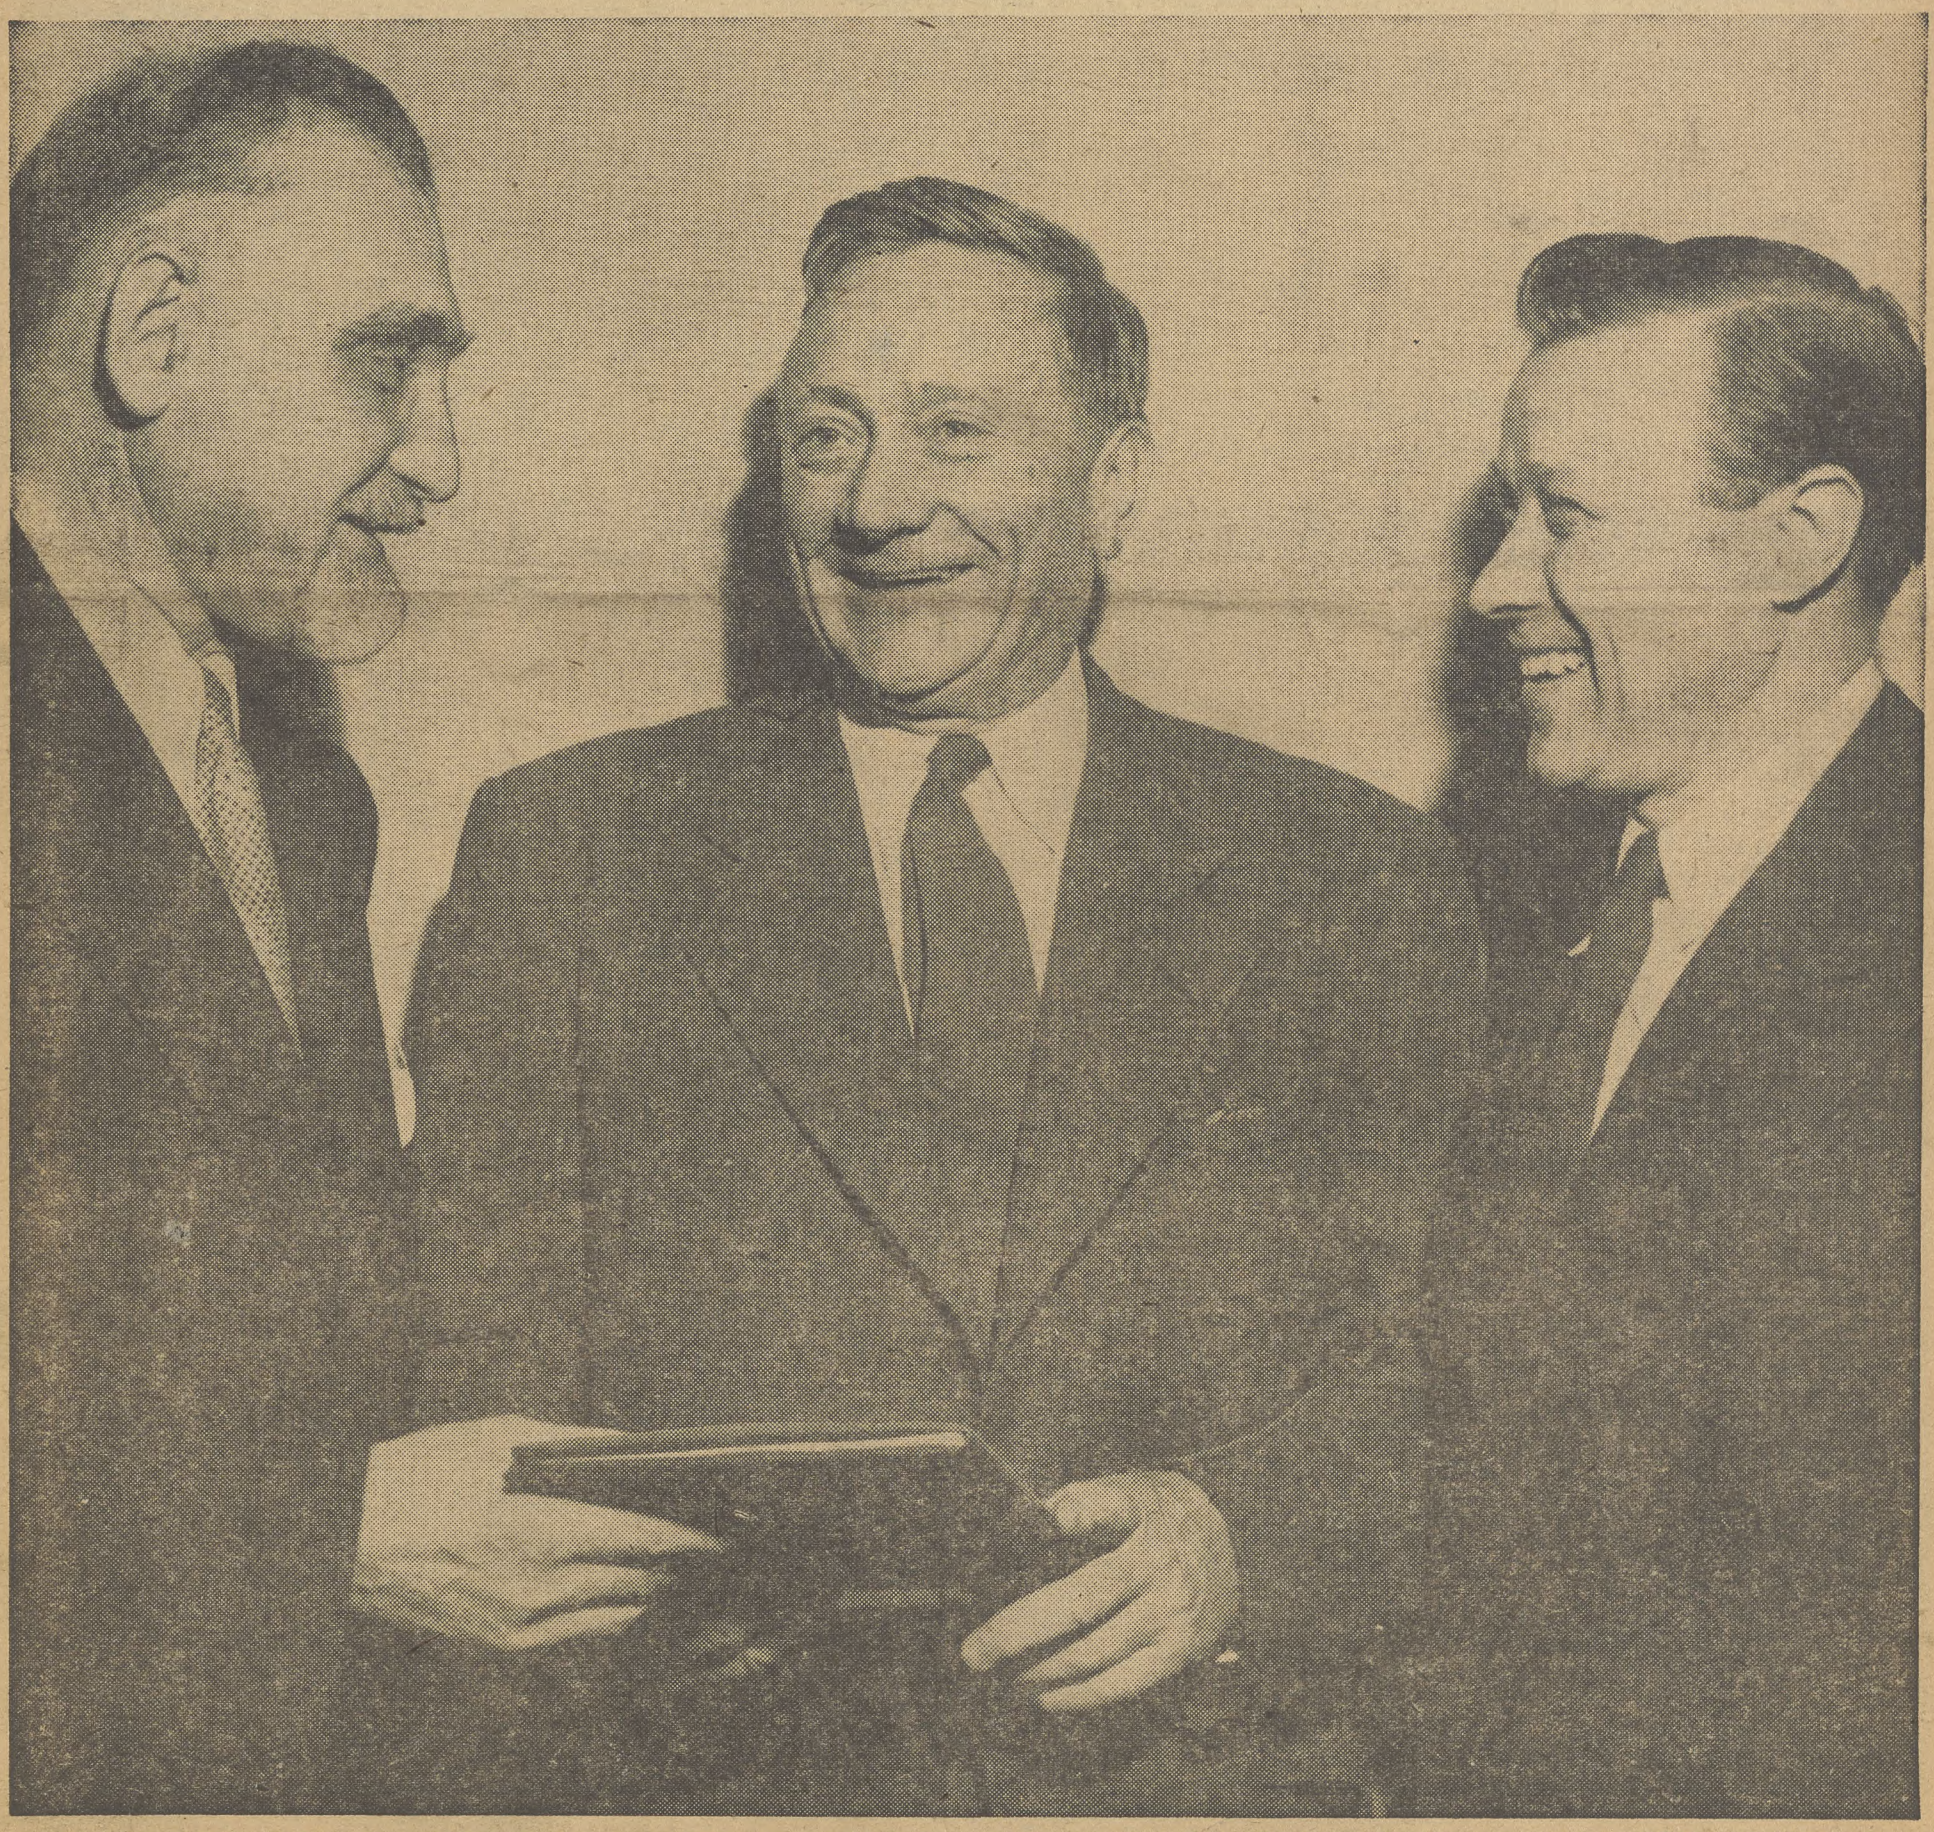
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 15, 1952 82 No. 50

End Wage Curbs Now, Reuther Tells HST And Controls Chief

—See Page 3



"A GREAT AMERICAN and a citizen of the world," Justice William O. Douglas (center), was honored by the Sidney Hillman Foundation. The Supreme Court jurist was granted the foundation's $1000 award for public service at a Washington dinner by Jacob S. Potofsky (left), foundation chairman and CIO Clothing Workers president. CIO and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther praised Douglas as "one of the truly great people of America, who always draw their hope and inspiration from the little people." Four other jurists were guests at the dinner. (See Page 2.)

Hillman Foundation—

Douglas Gets Award As 'Citizen Of World'

"A CITIZEN of the world" who is a friend of man and an apostle of freedom was honored by labor last week.

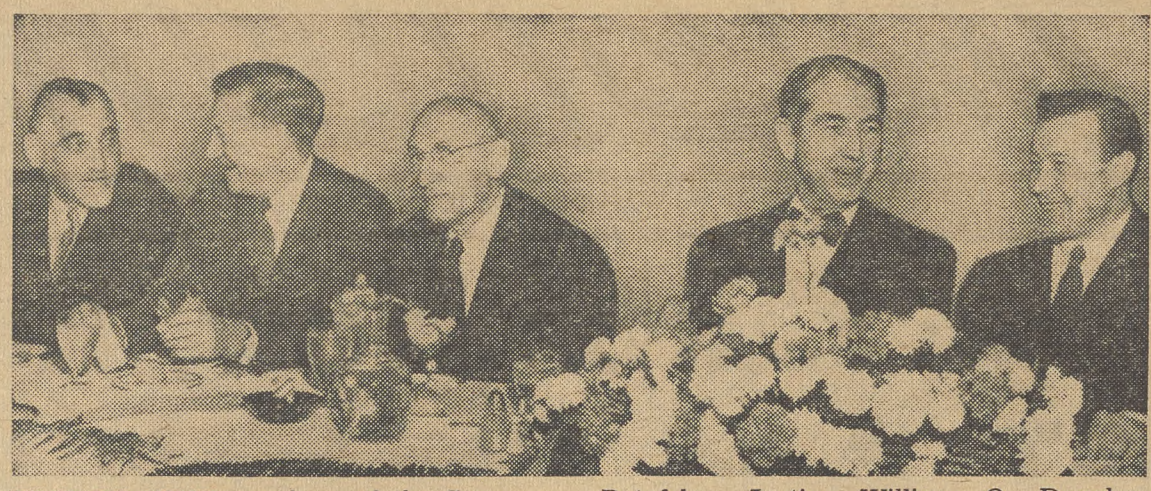
He is Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court, the nation's "one-man Point Four program" just returned from the strange lands and friendly peoples of Asia and the Pacific.

For his services at home and abroad, Justice Douglas last week was granted the $1000 Sidney Hillman Foundation 1952 award for public service.

Presentation of the award was made by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, also foundation chairman, at a dinner in Washington's Statler Hotel. CIO's new Pres. Walter P. Reuther, also head of the Auto Workers, was among the speakers, and five Supreme Court justices and several government officials were present.

REUTHER, in a brief introductory address, likened Justice Douglas to the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the late Sidney Hillman—first president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, for whom awards are made each year in a number of fields.

He also praised Douglas as an outstanding "democratic leader"—a world spokesman for America who understands that "bread, freedom, peace, social justice are basic, and that unless these basic values are universal, they are insecure."



FIVE OF NINE members of the Supreme Court were head table guests at the Sidney Hillman Foundation award dinner. In this group (from left): ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Justice William O. Douglas, ACWA Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, Justice Tom Clark, and CIO and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The Hillman Award praised Justice Douglas as a "jurist, public servant, patriot and humanitarian" who "has been in the forefront of the struggle to uphold our most precious rights and liberties."

"Justice Douglas has struck out against poverty, exploitation, hunger and disease," the citation said. "Guided by a firm belief in the brotherhood of man, he has made himself an apostle of freedom throughout the world.

"The Sidney Hillman Foundation salutes a great American and a citizen of the world."

In presenting the award, Potofsky praised Douglas' steadfast support of constitutional civil liberties "in an era of war and crisis when many people in high places considered liberty expendable."

IN RESPONSE, Justice Douglas said the lessons learned by American labor—of gaining social justice and human welfare in a democratic society—now are aiding in the building up of free trade unions in Malaya, Burma and other nations of the East.

Douglas voiced high praise for Sidney Hillman, saying "he was as responsible as any leader for the success American labor has had in reaching maturity."

"When civil liberties have been threatened," he said, "labor has been among the first to protest. When social injustices have appeared labor has been increasingly alert to speak out.

"There is another way, too, in which American labor has shown maturity. It has adopted Sidney Hillman's main precepts —that class warfare is not man's manifest destiny, that labor and management can be partners in vast undertakings, that Karl Marx did not offer the solutions to our problems."

"I believe," Douglas continued, "that most of American labor today is convinced that peace and prosperity on this earth are realizable objectives, that a human welfare state is wholly compatible with a capitalistic system of free enterprise."

Then the Supreme Court member turned to what he called the infant labor movement of Asia, saying that "much more could profitably be done" there by "labor leadership with experience in the American tradition."

In Malaya—now a battlefield against Chinese Communism, like Korea—he found that a British unionist, John Brazier, a locomotive engineer, within a few months had built a union federation of 120,000 workers in an area where virtually all unions previously had been under Communist Control. He said:

"LIKE Sidney Hillman, he knows how to inspire men, unite them, and fill them with zeal. Like Hillman, his methods are open, not conspiratorial; he has rejected the techniques taught by Lenin and Stalin."

"Brazier had to start from scratch but he worked wonders," the jurist said, in the face both of Communist terrorists (this year 13 union officers, mostly of the rubber plantation workers, have been killed) and of opposition by both British and Chinese rubber estate and tin managers who "denounce all labor leaders as Communists."

In Burma and Malaya, Douglas concluded, "the philosophy which Sidney Hillman espoused is shaping the destiny of peoples . . . who never heard his name. American labor traditions are beginning to be honored in the miserable labor lines of Asia. The effect on feudal Asia promises to be revolutionary."

Auto Union Warns Ford On Contract Problems

THE CIO AUTO Workers have warned the Ford Motor Co. "good labor relations are impossible" if the company continues to ignore practical problems arising under the long-term contract.

In a letter sent by the UAW Ford National Negotiating Committee to company officials, the union said:

"It is unfortunate that the company considers the long-term agreement a legalistic, static document and is failing to deal with the practical problems as they develop."

More than two months ago, Kenneth Bannon, UAW Ford Dept. director, said, the union asked the company to discuss certain problems arising out of the five-year agreement which runs until 1956. Prominent among these is that of Ford pensioners, and the union urged that the contract be reopened by mutual agreement.

When the company finally met with the union, the UAW reported, it "failed to react favorably to the basic issues, despite the acknowledged hardship to employes and particularly to pensioners." The UAW continued:

"Ford Motor Co. is constantly reminding the union of its desire to outsell its major competition and asking the cooperation of the Ford workers to achieve this goal. Wherever possible, our membership has responded favorably to these requests. Yet, when the union committee requested that the company at least bring our pension program up to that of its competitors, the committee received a very flat, 'No.'"

"Surely, the cooperation of labor and management is necessary if the company is to continue to prosper. However, your answers," the UAW said in its letter to management, "make it quite evident that Ford Motor Co. does not intend to cooperate with the Union in giving recognition to the problems of the pensioners and those persons presently employed with Ford."

AMONG POINTS stressed by the union were compulsory retirement and reduced incomes in purchasing power caused by inflationary trends and the lack of hospital-medical protection for retired workers.

Concerning the increase in Social Security payments of approximately $5 in 1952, the UAW said: "Here was an opportunity for Ford to show some common humanity and give the retired workers at least partial relief."

The letter also noted the need for increasing the annual improvement factor from 4 to 5c and cited the necessity of incorporating the major portion of the 25c-per-hour cost-of-living increase into the basic wage structure. Rate inequities for skilled workers were also cited, with the union pointing out the necessity for adjustment to assure Ford of securing sufficient skilled workers.

How To Smile When Bills Come Rolling In

BEFORE YOU jump off the deep end, purchasing Christmas presents on the "easy-payment" plan, take a word of advice from an expert in the field.

The advice: "Choose your store with the same care that you pick friends."

The expert is William J. Cheyney, executive vice president of the National Foundation for Consumer Credit. It is a non-profit research organization which believes in installment credit wisely used.

Cheyney says the smart customer insists on knowing the following 11 items in his installment credit contract:

- The cash price of the product.
- The exact down payment.
- All trade-in allowance credited him.
- The remaining unpaid balance.
- The cost of any insurance or other extra service; with specific data as to what is covered, who benefits and how much.
- The resulting total unpaid balance.
- Any credit service charges.
- The total "time balance" which he finally owes—everything included.
- A clearly defined date for each payment.
- The amount of each payment.
- The number of payments.

Just remember those points and the "morning after" when Christmas bills start pouring in won't be so black.

Racketeering Condemned By Haywood

INVESTIGATION by the New York State Crime Commission of racketeering and payoffs of the New York waterfront last week brought this comment by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president:

"The CIO feels the same way about racketeering as it does about the Communists. We have made that clear in the past.

"This is not to judge the present situation in New York, for we do not have all the facts on which to base a judgment; but if we were ever confronted with a similar situation—which we have not—in the CIO, we as an organization would, I am sure, get the facts and make sure that the racketeers were thrown out of our organization.

"Our statement on ethical practices, adopted at our last two conventions, is intended to protect our members in just such circumstances."

The statement on ethical practices adopted at the recent CIO convention struck particularly at "racketeers who prey upon the labor movement."

Testimony before the New York Crime Commission by officials of various shipping firms and stevedore concerns has named officials of the AFL Intl. Longshoremen's Association as receiving payoffs totaling more than $500,000. A witness said $70,000 was paid to end a 1950 boycott of Russian goods.

Reuther Urges U.S. End Wage Curbs

THE OLD AND THE NEW—Maurice J. Tobin (right), outgoing Labor Dept. chief, briefs Martin P. Durkin, president of the AFL Plumbers Union, who has been named Secretary of Labor by President-elect Eisenhower.

Durkin, New Labor Dept. Head, Meets With Tobin

MARTIN P. DURKIN, who will take over as Secretary of Labor next month, got together with Sec. Maurice J. Tobin, outgoing head of the Labor Dept., last week for a briefing on his new duties and the department's organization and functions.

"I found him a very well-versed man," Tobin told reporters later at a joint press conference. He pointed out that Durkin, as director of labor in Illinois from 1933 to 1941, has already had experience similar to "nearly every program of the department."

Durkin, 58-year-old-head of the AFL Plumbers Union, said that he would "try to bring the parties together so they can come to an agreement" on amending the Taft-Hartley Act.

The incoming Secretary, a Democrat who voted for Adlai Stevenson, said that he's still a Democrat and will remain one.

He predicted that "labor will give Eisenhower full and complete support to make his administration a success."

Taft, who will head the Senate Labor Committee in the 83rd Congress, has denounced Durkin's appointment as "incredible." Durkin said, however, that he is sure Taft will "cooperate" on Taft-Hartley amendments.

ASKED IF HE would follow the practice of appointing assistant secretaries representing both the CIO and AFL, Durkin pointed out that such appointments originated with the President, by statute, and not with the Secretary of Labor.

"I'm in favor of seeing that labor is properly represented in the Dept. of Labor," he added.

When a reporter asked him to comment on the CIO's statement to Eisenhower, when he met recently with CIO officials in New York, that there are now many functions properly those of the Labor Dept. being performed in other agencies of government, Durkin replied:

"I've not discussed the matter with the CIO, and the CIO hasn't made known its views to me. After that, I'd have to study the recommendation before commenting."

End Controls, Ship, Brewery Unions Say

A PLEA to Pres. Truman to end wage controls immediately was voiced last week by the CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

The IUMSWA told the President that its wage increase contracts with Bethlehem, Todd and other East Coast shipbuilders had been tied up by the Wage Stabilization Board without action since last September. A telegram to Truman said:

"We believe it is only fair to U. S. shipyard workers, who have the necessity of continuous operation of this industry in the interests of national defense, that they obtain their wage increases before this Christmas."

Pres. Karl F. Feller of the CIO Brewery Workers also asked Truman to lift wage controls. In a wire, he described their continuation as "unfair and discriminatory" in view of the fact that prices and rents have been "largely decontrolled." In the circumstances, he maintained, "free collective bargaining should be permitted to operate."

PRES. WALTER P. REUTHER carried the CIO's campaign for lifting of wage controls into Washington last week at meetings with Pres. Truman and Roger Putnam, the government's retiring economic stabilizer.

An eight-man CIO group conferred Dec. 11 with Putnam. After the session, Reuther told reporters "there is no sound economic reason or moral justification for wage controls, in face of the weakening price control mechanism."

The CIO leaders talked with Putnam while the Wage Stabilization Board remained in a state of suspended animation. After industry members resigned from the WSB—in protest against Pres. Truman's clearance of the recent coal wage increase—the Board was unable to function. The law provides that all three groups—labor, industry and management — must be represented in its decisions.

Reuther was accompanied on the visit to Putnam by Exec. Vice-Pres. Haywood, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Jack Conway, UAW administrative assistant to Reuther, and four CIO members of the Wage Board: John Brophy, Joseph Childs, Ben Sigal and Del Garst, alternate.

White House Talks

Next day the new CIO president had a 20-minute session with Truman at the White House. Describing their discussion as "very pleasant," Reuther told reporters afterwards:

"The President has given us assurance that he will try to do everything possible to expedite the handling of the 12,000 cases now before the WSB."

Reuther explained to Truman the CIO position on wage controls—that, as the recent convention said, they should be removed as unfair since so many price ceilings have been lifted. He said Truman's assurances were in line with those voiced in the earlier meeting with Putnam.

Reporters also questioned Reuther about the incoming Eisenhower Republican Administration.

The CIO president said the organization will support the Eisenhower Administration when it acts for the people in line with the General's end-of-the-campaign 10-point program. He added that CIO will make its voice heard in protest if the new administration acts in behalf of special interests.

Reuther made clear that CIO believes in the principle of stabilizing the economy during the emergency period. But he charged that Congress had so weakened the price control set-up that it is no longer effective.

Voicing hope that the Administration will lift wage controls altogether, Reuther added that "if not, every effort will be made to expedite those cases now before the board."

Reuther suggested that if quick and sensible decisions could be made on cases involving productivity factors, fringe benefits and severance pay, a great part of the back-log could be hacked away.

Industry 'Hiding'

Putnam voiced hope that new industry members would be appointed to the WSB in a matter of hours. Although the Chamber of Commerce and NAM have urged members to boycott invitations to serve as industry members, Putnam said he had had "many offers" from businessmen to accept such posts.

Reuther indicated a belief that the industry members of WSB were hiding from reality when they resigned in protest against Pres. Truman's approval of the coal contract. The CIO president suggested that if the industry members ever had to work in a mine for a week, they would change their minds.

"Anybody who's ever been in a coal mine knows that the work is worth a dollar a shovel-full," Reuther said, referring to the dirty and dangerous work in the mines.

Reuther's meetings with Truman and Putnam came at a time when controls of all sorts and the wage board were under heavy fire from industry. The attack grew out of the President's overriding of the WSB and Putnam, his granting the Mine Workers a pay boost of $1.90 a day instead of the $1.50 the board had ordered and Putnam approved.

The seven industry members of the WSB and Chairman Archibald Cox resigned soon after the President acted, the former with an angry blast at the President.

Reuther said CIO representatives will continue to serve on the WSB so long as it is in existence.

UPWA Local Hits Armour Pact Delay

Members of CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 347 in Chicago last week demanded that Armour & Co. immediately make effective a new contract upon which the Wage Stabilization Board has not acted.

A resolution adopted at a membership meeting blamed industry members of the board, who walked out earlier last week, for the inability of the WSB to take action on the agreement.

Tobin Proposes Hike In Textile Minimum To $1

A 13c BOOST in minimum wages paid by cotton textile manufacturers with government contracts was postponed last week by Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin. It would increase minimums to $1 an hour.

Tobin's move would affect 75,000 workers, mostly in the South. It followed a plea by the CIO Textile Workers that the minimum wage be lifted from the 1948 level of 87c to $1.135. It would bring southern rates substantially in line with rates paid in northern mills.

Hailing Tobin's action, Executive Vice Pres. Mariano Bishop of the TWUA said it "represents a realistic modernization" of the now obsolete 1948 level. Bishop said the TWUA was "gratified" at the action taken by Tobin under authority of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, permitting him to set minimum wages for employes working on government contracts.

Bishop noted the proposed minimum would realize the purposes of the act, "which are to prevent the less responsible, low-wage type of employer from undermining wage rates in the industry by undercutting in bidding for government contracts."

UNDER the law, employers have until Dec. 26 to protest the increase and, following a final ruling, may take their case to the federal courts. Southern manufacturers, who bitterly protested the CIO proposal when hearings were held earlier, indicated they would fight the increase through the courts.

Bishop said the TWUA could testify to the contributions the Walsh-Healey Act had made in that industry and expressed confidence "that the current determination will serve to check, at least partially, harmful tendencies which have recently become apparent."

"If the industry will quickly accept the determination and cooperate in its application and enforcement, it is certain that some beneficial effects will be felt almost immediately," he said.

NEW CIO OFFICERS and Executive Board members held a brief post-convention meeting in Atlantic City. At front right are Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. (More pictures and stories on resolutions adopted at 14th CIO convention are on Pages 6-7-8.)

The CIO Convention

Like Mark Twain, the CIO can rather proudly say that the reports of its imminent death were greatly exaggerated.

There was a contest for the presidency—a contest conducted in animated fashion but cleanly. There was a roll-call election vote, and Walter Reuther won by some half-million ballots. The new president took over the convention gavel, spoke the thoughts that were uppermost in his mind, and was acclaimed by the delegates.

It is clear that the CIO is still in business, and that the organizations which make up the CIO are, in the American tradition, closing ranks to meet the great problems that lie ahead.

This democratic process is as obviously pleasing to American trade union members as it is irritating to the foes of the democratic process.

"Trud," the paper of the Soviet government-controlled labor organization, was quick to react. To the Russians, the new president of the CIO is a "traitor," a "strikebreaker," a "favorite . . . of big business." Further, says Trud, "the CIO convention has shown millions of trade union members that they need expect nothing from the present CIO leaders."

The position taken by some American reactionary commentators has not been much different. Their balderdash, like that of the captive Soviet press, is another indication of the close relationship between the ideas of the reactionaries of the right and of the left. Few people who believe in democracy will accept their nonsense about the CIO.

This may make some sense to the readers of the Soviet press, who can read only what the Kremlin permits.

To American workers, inside the CIO and out of it, the CIO convention demonstrated the maturity and essential strengths of this organization. The CIO remains loyal to its ideals, and under the leadership of President Reuther, it will carry on its great tradition.

The Member's Rights

Newspaper stories on the CIO convention, concentrating on the more dramatic contest for the presidency, gave little attention to the important policy decisions reached by the delegates.

Worthy of particular study is the CIO's statement on the rights of the individual union member in relation to his own organization.

In its expression of belief and concern for those individual rights, the CIO voiced the prediction that "through ever-vigilant protection of individual human rights, the unions affiliated with the CIO can best implement and strengthen our heritage of trust."

Union membership is both a right and a privilege. In a democratic union, the member is a citizen who should participate in its process of self-government. He should not be denied membership because of race, creed or color. And if he is charged with violation of its constitution, rules, by-laws or regulations, he is entitled to fair hearing and the right of appeal.

These democratic rights are recognized in the unions of the CIO. In adopting this strong statement of principle, the CIO convention gave the democratic process within our unions a new strength and re-enforced spirit.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes.

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack
Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV December 15, 1952 No. 50

At The Helm

In Other Words—

The Danger Of Neutralism

The article below consists of excerpts from a speech by Harry Martin, president of the CIO Newspaper Guild and chief of labor information in the Mutual Security Agency office in Paris, during discussion of the foreign policy resolution at the CIO convention. The "neutralism" he refers to is the belief of some Europeans that their countries can remain neutral in what they see as a conflict between the U. S. and Russia.

By HARRY MARTIN

A GREAT DEAL is said these days about the dangers of communism, and this continues to be a foremost danger in the world. But there is another danger, equally great and equally vicious, and that is the danger of the new spirit of neutralism which is sweeping throughout the world.

Neutralism is a danger almost as acute as communism in Western Europe. Some might consider it more insidious because it is a cancer which grows unperceived and eats into the morale of well-intentioned people.

The survival of western civilization depends, in the first instance, upon the West's intention to resist aggression. That determination may be sufficient to deter aggression and preserve peace. But if that determination is undermined or corrupted by the elusive germ of neutralism, the prospects for lasting peace will be greatly diminished.

Neutralism, therefore, must be combated as vigorously as communism.

The main inspiration for neutralism is, naturally, the desire to live in peace. A country like France, which three times in 70 years has suffered through German occupation, lives in a constant state of apprehension, with occasional outbursts of national defeatism.

Though a majority of enlightened Europeans know that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, there are many others who, because of fear and despair, consider even the manufacture of armaments for defense a warlike act to be avoided at all costs.

One of the difficulties we face, after recognizing the reasons for the existence of this dangerous neutralism, is that the seeds of this concept find fertile ground in the minds of people of many diverse interests and motives.

SOME ARE dedicated to pacifism at all costs and subscribe, without reservation, to the "turn-the-other-cheek" school of thought. These are likely to be more dismayed by one atom bomb test in the U. S. than by the deportation of millions of workers to slave labor camps in Siberia. This attitude of mind is especially difficult to combat because of the obvious sincerity of those who hold this view.

Others fear that any defense program in the West will provoke the Soviet Union into waging preventative war. They have not forgotten the bitterness and the devastation of war on their home soil and would seek to avoid a repetition of these disasters even at the risk of losing their liberties.

Still others are—either deliberately or ignorantly—blind to the obvious differences between democracy and totalitarianism. They claim there is nothing to choose between Russian Communist materialism and what they call American capitalist materialism.

IT WOULD BE a grave error to imagine that most of the people in the above categories are pro-Communist. They are not. But the net effect of their feet-dragging is aid and comfort to a fourth category of neutralists with strong pro-Communist attitudes. In fact, some of the extreme manifestations of pro-Communist neutralism tend to merge with the subversive point of view of those active Communist leaders who are trying to fasten the yoke of totalitarian tyranny on the free peoples of the West.

West Europe's Communist leadership feeds the neutralist inclinations of many people with two main propaganda themes. The first is that the U. S. is "occupying" Europe. The second is that the U. S. has been buying economic and military domination of the continent through the Marshall Plan and the Mutual Security Program.

To successfully combat this trend, it is essential that America, in its international relations, remain a constant advocate of the great humanitarian principles which dictated its unselfish efforts to hasten Eurpoean recovery, and forego indulgence in restrictionism in international trade and commerce.

Book Review—

How Joe Got That Way - A Warning For Ike

By WILLIAM MILLIS

THERE WAS A THEORY a few weeks ago—about the time that a worried junior Senator from Wisconsin came down to Peoria to join the Eisenhower campaign train that was heading for the Badger State—that "the answer to McCarthyism" lay in a Republican victory in the White House and in Congress.

Such was the argument voiced, presumably in all sincerity, by a number of GOP columnists and editorialists.

Within the next few months, that theory will be tested and—as the "honeymoon" of President-elect Eisenhower fades—found wanting.

For the election results of Nov. 4, 1952 brought Sen. Joe McCarthy (R. Wisc.) to a new peak of power and influence.

Now, more than ever, it is harder to draw a dividing line between McCarthy and his Nazi-Communist type of political warfare and the "respectable" Republicans. His arguments had been taken over, body, boots and britches by the GOP high command, and they helped bring victory.

IN MANY states, the tactics of McCarthyism helped elect the sleek, smooth champions of the Old Guard. The GOP national chairman, Arthur Summerfield, sat hard enough on Ike's conscience to produce the President-elect's Milwaukee endorsement of McCarthy—agreement upon "ends," despite differences upon "methods."

Joe had played a hand, too, in the defeat of Connecticut's William Benton, one of the few men in the Senate with enough courage, intelligence and faith in American democracy to stand up to and challenge McCarthy's rule by terror.

He failed to save the scalp of Washington's Sen. Cain, another of the "meat-ax class" in the Senate. In Wisconsin, Joe handily won re-election, although his vote was far behind Eisenhower's and Gov. Kohler. And in the new Republican Congress McCarthy will be chairman of the Senate Committee on Government Expenditures, with wide-range powers over the non-McCarthyites he has talked about "clubbing" into jail.

President-elect Eisenhower and his Republican supporters now might properly concern themselves with the question of when the means they used to win the election will be turned against them—of when McCarthy will start popping off at them?

For the record, as contained in the recently-published "McCarthy: The Man, The Senator, The 'Ism'" by Jack Anderson and Ronald W. May, shows that McCarthy holds Ike in just about the same class as Gen.. Marshall. And when McCarthy, in his fulminations against Marshall, voiced his "traitorous" charges against the World War II American chief of staff, he added "in all these attitudes, Eisenhower . . . was Marshall's firm supporter."

PRESIDENT-ELECT Eisenhower might well take note of McCarthy's GOP friends and supporters: Sen. Taft, with his advice to Joe that if he couldn't prove one charge to speed on to another; Col. Bertie McCormick of the Chicago Tribune, one of Joe's earliest backers; the America First isolationist crowd, which financed Joe's GOP campaign telecast; all but a few GOP senators (Maine's Sen. Smith was quickly disciplined for the "declaration of conscience"); and—just under cover, but emerging from time to time—Gerald L. K. Smith, Joe Kamp and all the anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish and pro-Fascist rabble-rousers.

As the honeymoon ends, Eisenhower will be hearing more from them—and from the junior senator who doesn't conceal his dream of becoming President himself.

How Joe McCarthy got that way is detailed in Anderson and May's book, which was published a fortnight before election day. It goes back to the beginnings, on a scrubby farm in northern Wisconsin, and then into politics. Legendary is the war record of "Tail Gunner Joe" which McCarthy fabricated out of non-combatant service in the Pacific in order to help move up from county judge to senator. Unsavory are the facts on McCarthy's "quickie divorces" and tax troubles, his fronting for lobbyists and five per centers, and the $10,000 Lustron housing payoff.

"McCarthy: The Man, The Senator, The 'Ism'" is primarily the story of how McCarthy's self-proclaimed war against Communism has weakened America's efforts to halt Communist advance and build up democratic strength.

CIO LEADERS were fighting communism at a time when McCarthy was proclaiming "Stalin's proposal for world disarmament is a great thing" and at a time when Joe was willing to accept support of a few CP-dominated union officials (from the organizations since expelled from CIO) who cared little about McCarthyism if they could defeat an American progressive like Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, Jr.

In detail Anderson and May record the story of McCarthy's "Communist-in-government" charges. In substance, McCarthy's methods are those of a Communist with his "end justifies the means" theory or a Nazi Goebbels with the contemptuous belief that the bigger the lie, the more people you can fool more of the time.

The falsity of McCarthy's self-crowned title as a "fighter for America" is exposed by his voting record. That record—on all of the international issues involving strengthening America and her friends abroad—is one of opposition to measures aimed at halting Soviet imperialism: the Marshall Plan, NATO, Point Four, and economic and military appropriations for strengthening the free world.

The authors tell how McCarthy—and the whole crew of New Isolationists who are so powerful in the victorious Republican party—would weaken America in the world. But they failed (and this is one gap in their comprehensive report) to tell in detail how McCarthy would cut down America at home.

Ever since Joe arrived in the Capitol and proclaimed that striking members of the United Mine Workers should be drafted into the Army and court-martialed if they didn't mine coal, McCarthy has accumulated a record against labor and welfare measures which gladdens the hardest bitten member of the NAM. Sure, he voted for Taft-Hartley, against decent housing, against good bills and for bad bills all the way through his first six years in the Senate.

IN THE LAST session, for example, McCarthy had 13 wrong votes out of 17 issues on The CIO News Voting Record (ranging from a vote to bust the CIO Steelworkers' strike with a T-H injunction to cutting economic and military funds under the Mutual Security program). He was absent on two key roll calls, and he had only one out-and-out right vote, on the St. Lawrence Seaway—an issue of importance in Wisconsin.

At year's end in 1952, with the approach of a Republican administration, the flood tide of McCarthyism is the latest and strongest current in the dark side of our America—the shameful chapters from history of the Know-Nothings, anti-Catholics and anti-Masons of pre-Civil War . . . the later APAs and some of the Populists . . . the Klan after World War I . . . Huey Long, Fritz Kuhn, the Nazi Bund, Christian Fronters, Coughlin and Gerald L. K. Smith . . . and now Joe McCarthy.

There is another and stronger and cleaner current in American history . . . from Jefferson to Lincoln to F.D.R. The authors of "McCarthy: The Man, The Senator, The 'Ism'" have provided some of the facts that are weapons for Americans in that tradition.

McCarthy: The Man, The Senator, The 'Ism,' by Jack Anderson and Ronald W. May. The Beacon Press, Boston; $3.75.

How To Raise Roses And Your Blood Pressure Via GM Books

GENERAL MOTORS' cafeteria education plan for its employes has grown into one of the country's largest booklet distribution operations, according to a recent article in the New York World-Telegram & Sun.

The article quoted Bill Lane of GM as saying that in less than three years, the firm has made 47 million copies of 280 publications available — free — to the people who work in its factories and offices.

Lane was also quoted as saying that a survey showed "a genuine hunger for more information."

What Bill Lane didn't say was that GM stuffs its book with an alluring combination of booklets on how to grow better roses or raise your bowling score with others preaching the ultra-reactionary line that "socialism" is around the corner, that the bosses have made the United States great, and that Adam Smith's brand of capitalism is Americanism and comes straight from Heaven.

Typical are two additions recently offered employes in one GM plant and, presumably, in others.

One is entitled "Your Right To Own." This one was written by Harley L. Lutz, professor emeritus of public finance at Princeton Univ. and author of "A Platform for the American Way," which a foreword describes as a "challenging book."

The booklet describes the right to own as the "keystone in the arch of freedom," a view too radical and too materialistic for the average union member or officer. The author holds that "of all human rights, the most important is the right to own property . . . it is our badge of freedom."

PEOPLE without the right to own, he explains, are slaves, such as the people in Communist-dominated countries. And if the "drifting" socialism he claims to see in this country continues to drift, he warns, the government is going to need so much money to do things "for" the people that it will have to do something "to" them, such as to take over all property through socialization. So there!

The other? Oh—that's a once-in-a-while-cookbook by Gertrude Blair for those times when a fellow has to cook it himself or go without. Something, doubtless, no home should be without.

CIO-CSC Urges Labor To Combat Moves By Doctors' Lobby To Rule Health Plans

THE NATIONAL CIO Community Services Committee has called on state and local CIO affiliates to fight control of voluntary health insurance plans by a "bold-faced monopoly of organized medicine."

CIO-CSC Chairman Irving Abramson declared that voluntary prepaid medical and hospital plans which deserve community-wide support and participation should have governing boards which broadly represent those participating.

"The CIO disapproves the attempt by any group—including labor—to secure control and domination of community enterprises, particularly in the field of health and welfare," the committee said. "No one participating group should have control of a community organization."

Pointing out that labor constitutes the bulk of consumer participation in prepaid medical plans, the CIO-CSC said that labor has not, and will not, insist on majority control of any of these voluntary community programs.

The resolution charged that organized medicine, on the other hand, has demanded "51%" control of such plans.

"Legislative bodies throughout the country have given unwritten assistance to this bold-faced monopoly by organized medicine," the committee said. "State medical societies, with the help of the American Medical Association, have been able to secure legislation in 28 states, by which the states have permitted only the medical profession to operate or control prepaid medical plans."

"Stop worrying! I'm positive Santa's strike will be over by Christmas!"

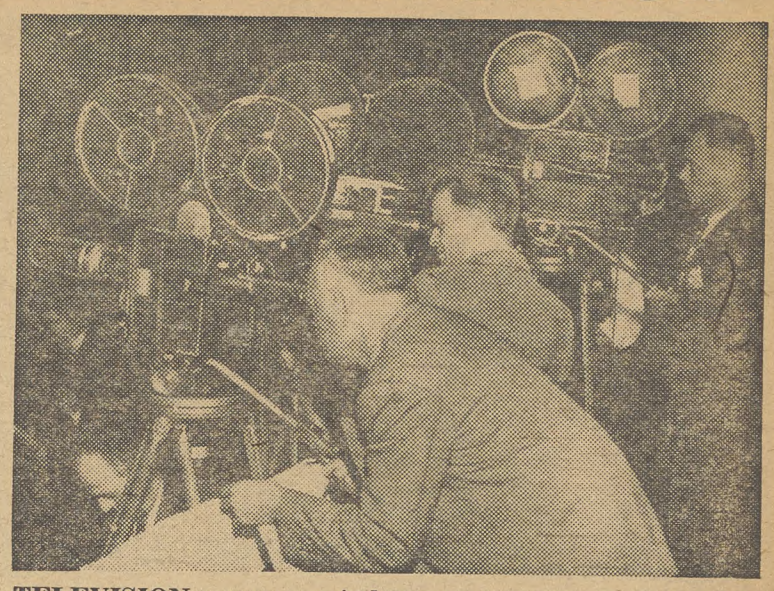
In states where they have not been able to secure legislation, the committee continued, organized medicine has accomplished the same thing by refusing to approve voluntary group health plans unless 51% or more of the physicians on the governing boards are recommended or acceptable to the county and state medical societies.

ALL CIO state and city bodies were called upon by CIO-CSC to "seek adequate representation on the governing bodies of the Blue Cross, Blue Shield, and other voluntary group health plans, and to fight against their domination by any one segment of the community."

Meanwhile, the Health Information Foundation, supported by the drug, pharmaceutical, chemical and allied industries, has announced a national survey to determine how these plans are working. Lobbies for the interests supporting the Foundation have, gone down the line with AMA in opposing a national health program, which the CIO favors.

The Cameraman Records CIO's Convention

HEARTY CONGRATULATIONS from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, as 14th convention names "new leadership team." Gen. Counsel Arthur Goldberg, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky applaud, while Textile Pres. Emil Rieve, presiding officer during elections, grins broadly.



TELEVISION cameras grind away, recording eventful CIO convention in Atlantic City. Eight television and newsreel crews covered the proceedings, along with a big corps of newspaper, radio and magazine reporters.

'Integrated' Regional Water Power Plans Supported By CIO

THE CIO convention adopted a comprehensive regional development and conservation program based "on the foundation of integrated plans for entire regions."

"Such plans must be developed with due respect for all the resources in the region and for all human groups involved, majority and minority alike," the resolution said.

Three steps necessary for the program were listed as:

1. "Immediate and rapid restoration and rehabilitation of our watersheds.

"We need rapid action on a program such as that which was developed by the Dept. of Agriculture for the construction of great numbers of farm ponds, check dams, grassed waterways, and terraces, and for strip cropping, contour planning, soil conservation, reforestation, and afforestation."

2. The selection "of a series of advantageous sites for the development of hydro-electric power . . .

"The choice of such sites for hydro-electric power installations should be made against the background of the general regional plan comprising all interests and all people which we insist is fundamental to all sound development."

The hydro-electric program would require federal construction of dams and federal transmission of the power, the right of workers on such projects to collective bargaining and the use of such federally produced power as a yardstick to hold down the prices charged by private utilities, it was explained.

3. "A vigorous watershed policy coupled with supplemental flood storage space in our hydro-electric dams."

"Prompt establishment" of a National Watershed Review Board was recommended. Such a board would have authority over the Corps of Engineers, the Bureau of Reclamation and the Federal Power Commission and would be responsible for replanning the development work of the federal government in line with the three steps.

The resolution also called for:

- Development of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.
- Retention of title over tidelands oil lands by the federal government, with the revenue to be used for educational purposes.
- Federal operation and ownership of atomic energy production.
- Federal regulation of timberlands and commendation of the leadership of the CIO Woodworkers in timber management policy.
- Allocation of more federal funds for conservation.
- A coalition of public power, farm and labor groups to seek better conservation legislation.

Irish Freedom Vote Is Urged

The CIO convention passed a resolution requesting Pres. Truman "to use his good offices to the end that the people of all Ireland be permitted a free plebiscite to determine their own form of government."

The resolution was amended to provide that a committee be named to present the resolution to Pres. Truman. The amendment was made by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, at the suggestion of Vice Pres. Philip O'Rourke of the CIO Radio Association.

THERE IS NO DOUBT about which union these delegates represent. Among those in the photo are from the left: Pres. Burl Phares and Vice Pres. Leland Beard, who himself is a handy man with a camera.

THREE WOMEN delegates renew old acquaintances in the Chelsea hotel lobby.

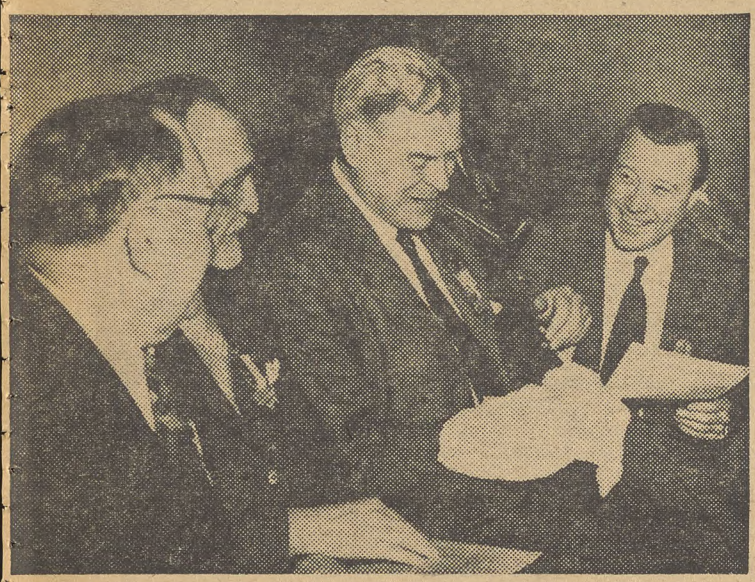
A VISITOR'S BADGE is presented to Alfonso Sanchez Madariaga, assistant secretary-general of the Mexican Confederation of Workers, by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin Affairs Committee, approves. The visitor spoke at the memorial service.

A HEARTY GREETING for an old friend of labor. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther congratulates Mutual Security Administrator W. Averill Harriman as Acting Pres. David J. McDonald, USA; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, ACWA, and David Cole, Conciliation chief, look on.

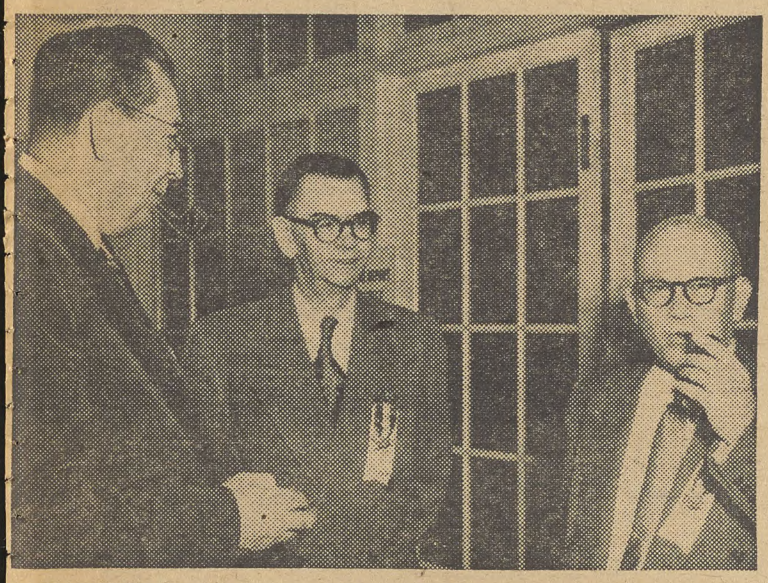
More Photo Highlights From Atlantic City

CIO'S NEW PRESIDENT and his wife, May, listen intently as the name of Walter P. Reuther is placed before 14th convention. Reuther, at 45, became the CIO's third president.

READ ALL ABOUT IT! Leaders of the National CIO Auxiliaries turn to The CIO News to learn what's going on. From left: Mrs. Thelma Lacey, vice president; Mrs. Sherwood, president; Mrs. Pauline Roberts, vice president, and Mrs. Camilla Persohn, vice president.



ONE OF THE lighter moments at the CIO convention is enjoyed by (left to right) TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Acting USA Pres. David J. McDonald and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther.



HOMESICK perhaps were these CIO regional directors from the West "sentenced" to the East Coast for the duration of the convention. They are (left to right) A. R. Kinstley, Kansas City; Roy Atkinson, Seattle, and Chester Dusten, Portland, Ore.

Drive For Job Safety Backed

RECITING the toll of death, suffering and monetary losses incurred each year because of unsafe working conditions and health hazards, the CIO convention pledged itself to work with all groups dedicated to improving safety on the job.

In a resolution, the convention urged a stepped-up program of educating the public to the price paid in blood, suffering, lives and reduced productive power because of industrial hazards.

It also urged the 83rd Congress to enact, without further delay, legislation requiring high standards of industrial safety and health conditions.

CIO Renews Support Of UN, Says Point Four Needs Speeding Up

Details of the CIO convention foreign policy resolution on specific international problems follow:

KOREA: The CIO, as it has since the invasion by the North Korean Communists, wholeheartedly restated support for the stand of the U. S. and the United Nations "against this Soviet-inspired aggressive imperialism." The resolution supported and paid tribute to UN peace negotiators for "patiently and persistently" seeking an honorable settlement, and blamed the Kremlin and its agents for failure to achieve a cease-fire.

UNITED NATIONS: The resolution reaffirmed support of the UN, called for steps to strengthen its powers to take collective action for collective security, and commended the regional and bilateral defense arrangements negotiated by the U. S.

It called on the U. S. to continue to lead in developing a "workable" disarmament plan, including international atomic control, supported UN efforts to draft a sound human rights covenant with economic, political, social and cultural rights stated, and welcomed with a pledge of support the constructive activities of the various specialized agencies.

It particularly commended the Intl. Labor Organization, and opposed any move to lessen participation of free labor in the UN through the consultative status of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

MILITARY SECURITY PROGRAMS: The principle that the security of the free world must be a mutual effort was endorsed, along with aid in the economic, social and military development of our allies. The resolution pointed out that in the last year there has been a shift in emphasis from the social and economic aspects of European defense support to the military.

It said that the need of adequate military defense is obvious, but cautioned the Mutual Security Agency against regarding production increases as indicative of ability to meet military requirements and at the same time "maintain internal economic conditions adequate to safeguard against the political consequences of serious economic deterioration."

POINT FOUR: While expressing admiration for Point Four projects for better crops, health and sanitation, the resolution also expressed disappointment that the scope of the over-all program has fallen "far short of the hopes originally aroused." It urged the extension and speeding up of the program, and the addition to it of technical aid in developing free, democratic institutions.

EUROPE: The CIO commended various moves towards the economic integration of Europe, including the idea behind the Schuman Plan, the European Coal and Steel Community, the Pleven Plan and the European Army.

ASIA: The resolution welcomed the return of Japan to the community of free nations and offered CIO support to its struggling trade unions. It also welcomed the beginnings of a mutual defense arangement for Southeast Asia and pointed out that it is a prime responsibility of the U. S. to convince the Asians that 19th Century imperialism is dead.

LABOR PARTICIPATION: The resolution again stressed CIO belief that the country will benefit by the appointment of people trained in the ranks of labor to top posts in the planning, policy and operational divisions of the State Dept. It expressed regret that the status of the labor advisers, who contributed so much to the success of the Economic Cooperation Administration, has been changed for the worse in its successor, the Mutual Security Agency.

ICFTU: The convention endorsed a campaign among international unions by the ICFTU for a $700,000 fund—to which the CIO itself has already made a contribution—to assist the growth of free unions where they do not exist or where they have been subverted from original goals. The CIO International Committee and the National Community Services Committee were instructed to work with all CIO bodies to make the drive a success.

Murray's Name Given To Project

A $5 million low-rent housing project in Chicago has been named the Philip Murray Homes, in honor of the late CIO president.

The action was taken by the Chicago Housing Authority commissioners.

Philip Murray Homes will open early in the new year. It will consist of 500 two-story brick apartments, adjoining the existing Altgeld Gardens housing project.

VICTORY wave as Pres. Reuther greets cheering supporters.

'Forgotten Men'—

Union Organizing Push Urged To Aid Farm Migrant Workers

THE "FORGOTTEN men" of 1952—the thousands of men, women, and children working on big farms and in food processing plants — were remembered by the CIO convention.

The convention supported continued legislative efforts and a stepped up union organizational program to help migrant workers—citizens and non-citizens alike—gain a better life.

Now "they suffer greatly from substandard living, working and community conditions," a resolution said. "In the name of the year-around hired man on the family farm, the protection of labor and social legislation has been denied to employes of large-scale agricultural corporations and to migratory farm workers."

The resolution pointed out that the wage and working standards of organized workers in basic industries are undercut by sweatshops on the farms and illegal importation of migrant workers.

"The CIO has been concerned about the conditions of these people for reasons of self-interest as well as of common brotherhood," the resolution said.

"Substandard conditions among workers on large-scale farms drag down standards in surrounding areas and related industries, and these in turn affect more remote industries and cities.

PROGRESS for processing workers is more difficult if field workers are badly treated or unemployed. Disease spreads from rural slum to model homes.

"The same forces that now insist on bringing in cheap foreign labor for such operations may some day force extension of the practice to industry."

Despite "bitter opposition" from growers and local governments they control, "some measure of success" was reported in union organization of both field and processing workers.

In detail the resolution reviewed the evidence on exploitation of migrant workers as presented to the Senate Labor subcommittee, headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), and earlier to Pres. Truman's Commission on Migratory Labor.

OVERWHELMING proof of the need for additional legislation and better administration is contained in the records" of both hearings the resolution said, but Congress failed to act. Likewise, the U. S. Labor Dept. has been "severely handicapped" in funds, manpower and machinery to enforce even the inadequate existing legislation.

The comprehensive resolution on farm labor made these recommendations:

- Endorsement of CIO organizing efforts to bring unionism to farm workers.
- Cooperation and support for the National Council on Agricultural Life and Labor.
- Enactment by Congress and the states of major recommendations of the President's Commission on Agricultural Labor.
- Extension to farm workers of coverage under social security, minimum wage and workmen's compensation laws.
- Enactment of federal and state legislation "to protect the right of these workers to organize and bargain collectively."
- Strengthening of laws governing imported Mexican and West Indian workers "so as to eliminate abuses."

CIO emphasized that its effort to aid farm workers is in the interest of family farmers, citing the declaration of the National Farmers Union that cheap labor on huge corporation farms undercuts prices and living conditions for the family farmer.

U. S. Inquiry Proposed On Compensation

THE CIO convention urged President-elect Eisenhower to order an immediate and complete investigation of workmen's compensation.

A resolution predicted such an investigation would disclose "the desirability of national workmen's compensation legislation."

The convention based its prediction on an analysis of present inequalities, injustices and "inconsistent and overlapping laws" and the urgent need for far-reaching reforms.

These reforms, the convention said, included broadening of coverage to protect workers in small establishments and those now labeled as non-hazardous; a statutory benefit level to assure injured workers of at least 80% of their lost wages; elimination of waiting periods and provision for additional payments to workers with dependent children.

Fight Pledged For Wage Improvements

"THE CIO will continue to fight for higher wages," the convention said in separate resolutions on collective bargaining and labor solidarity and support of strikes.

Pointing to the "vast improvements" in wages, hours, seniority, shift differentials, pension and social insurance won by American unions over past years, the resolution said CIO affiliates will seek "continual improvement" of wages and conditions.

For unions forced by adamant employers to strike to gain a "just settlement," the strike support resolution said:

"The CIO calls upon all its affiliates, in keeping with the great tradition of the American labor movement, to extend all possible moral, organizational and financial assistance and that of their members to CIO unions engaged in legitimate strikes as their first obligation, and to labor generally within the limits of their resources."

TRANSPORT SERVICE Employes Pres. Willard S. Townsend (left), recently returned from a trip to Japan, chats with George L-P Weaver (center) and James Gildea, administrative assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

GOOD WISHES are being extended by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (left) to Leo F. Tearney, retiring comptroller of the CIO who has moved to California.

Leo Tearney Retires After 15 Years Service With CIO

LEO TEARNEY, the National CIO's comptroller since 1944, retired from office last week to take up residence with his wife in California. Born in Kansas 71 years ago, Tearney has been with the CIO since March, 1937.

He planned to retire at the close of the CIO convention scheduled to be held in Los Angeles in late November. After the death of Pres. Philip Murray caused postponement of the meeting, Tearney returned to Washington and delayed his retirement until after the Atlantic City convention.

Mr. and Mrs. Tearney will make their home temporarily with their married daughter, Mrs. Bernice Schneider, in La Jolla, a town on the edge of San Diego near the Mexican boarder, until they can find a home of their own. The Tearneys have another married daughter, Mrs. Frances Deem, in Indianapolis, Ind., and a married son, John, in Paducah, Ky.

Before he joined the CIO staff in 1937, Leo Tearney was employed for eight years at the Columbia Conserve Co., a cooperative cannery in Indianapolis, where he was associated with John Brophy. Later, when Brophy became director of the newly-formed Committee for Industrial Organization, he asked Tearney to join the staff of the CIO's bookkeeping department.

Looking back on his 15 years with the CIO, Leo said they make up the best portion of his whole working life.

"I feel I've seen important history in the making and have witnessed many accomplishments for the good of labor that I never dreamed would have been possible," he said.

Consumers Get A Hand At Rhode Island CIO Parley

A CALL for state legislative protection of consumers against chiseling by public utility firms, landlords and the dairy industry was sounded by the Rhode Island State CIO Council at its 15th annual convention last week in Providence.

The council also urged a consumers' council and counsel to investigate "unwarranted increases in the cost of living" within Rhode Island, demanded a $1 an hour minimum wage for all workers, and threatened to picket the State House if the Senate kills in committee—as it has in the past—a bill establishing a state workmen's compensation fund.

The convention in addition asked a tightening of administrative procedures and unlimited medical benefits in the Workmen's Compensation Act, and repeated previous demands for federal reinsurance of the unemployment compensation fund.

Pres. Frank J. Benti pleaded with other labor organizations to join the CIO in pushing for the State fund and in forming a statewide federation of labor, civic and consumer groups to fight on the consumer front.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, the principal speaker, asked the delegates for continued support of the United Nations. Without the UN, she said, the United States might well be in World War III today.

"Then we wouldn't be sitting here today," she said. "Few cities would be standing, and what Europe and other nations went through would be happening to us."

EXECUTIVE Vice Pres. Mariano S. Bishop, of the CIO Textile Workers, called on the owners of northern textile mills to install in their southern operations "the same wages, working conditions and other benefits we have won in the north." Northern interests control more than two-thirds of the South's textile industry, he said.

A fight by opponents of Benti to change several articles in the constitution was beaten back on the floor. Benti was reelected without opposition, as were executive Vice Pres. Thomas F. Policastro and Sec.-Treas. John A. Doyle.

Annual Wage Plans Set As Major Goal

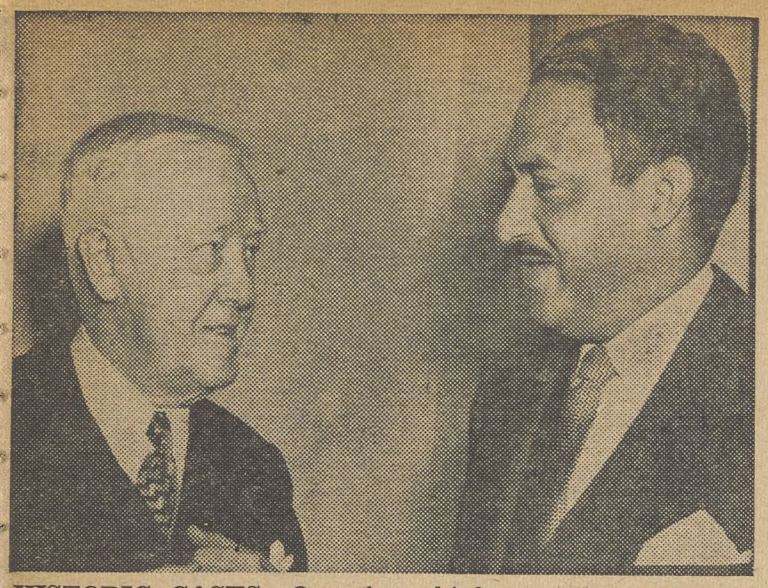
THE CIO convention called on management "to enter into concrete plans" for the guaranteed annual wage.

A convention resolution called the guaranteed annual wage "one of major objectives of our organization."

"The battle for pensions and insurance was not easily won," the resolution said. "Victory in that field represents a forward step in the march toward security.

"Until such continuity of employment or income as is provided by the guaranteed annual wage is achieved, such security as we do have may well be illusory."

The convention pledged the CIO to fight for improvement of federal and state unemployment insurance laws as a means of promoting continuous employment.



HISTORIC CASES—Opposing chief counsels as the Supreme Court hears school segregation cases are (right) Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and John W. Davis. Davis represents South Carolina.

Vigilante Era Ends—

Dates With Union Touch Now Packed By CIO

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

TASTY DATES with a dash of history were munched by delegates to the CIO convention in Atlantic City.

They came from the first date-packing plant ever to be organized—Valley Date Gardens at Indio, Calif.

Some 200 workers in the Coachella Valley plant made union history recently when the union of their choice, CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, LIU 78, reached an agreement bringing job protection, a boost in wages, and a union shop.

The plant was organized after workers approached the CIO with pleas for help. CIO Field Rep. Ken Gillie, with Local 78 Organizers Lum Moorhead and Russell Parker, moved into town to size things up.

Some weeks later they had Labor Board election victories at Valley Date, and Cal-Date shed with some 350 workers, tucked safely in their pockets. Contract negotiations with Valley Date were settled first, thus to them went the honor of becoming the first date-packing shed in history to sign up.

Significance of the CIO victory in Coachella Valley gains with the recognition that it was here that a vicious anti-union "vigilante" program once ruled supreme.

For some 75 years, workers in the date and other agricultural industries which dominate the Valley were without union protection. Infrequent attempts through the years to unionize were repelled—sometimes brutally.

With the first dent made, CIO Local 78 now plans moves to organize the rest of the date industry, and also bring unionization to workers in other agricultural industries which dominate the below-sea-level Coachella Valley.

E. E. Smith, plant manager, said that Valley Date Gardens shipped 75 cases of 24/8-ounce packages of their top brand, "Good-as-Gold" to the CIO convention.

So, if you like dates—look for the CIO kind.

They're the first union dates in history.

Full Union Rights Urged By CIO For Civic Employes

REMOVAL of all existing restrictions on union organization rights of government workers was demanded by the CIO convention in a resolution supporting the Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

"The degraded standards imposed upon public employes stand as a threat to the gains won by industrial workers and a shame to the political forces maintaining them," the resolution said.

"Employes in the public service are still denied—with rare exceptions—the basic right to bargain for improvement of their wages and working conditions and in many cases are denied even the right to organize."

The resolution said federal, state, county and city workers should have full right of union organization and bargaining rights, including mediation and arbitration provisions. It also urged a true merit system, equitable tenure and social security coverage.

High Court Hears Pleas To End School Segregation

ARGUMENTS began last week in the U. S. Supreme Court on the first direct legal challenge to segregated schools. Involved are four states and the District of Columbia which compel Negro children to attend separate schools.

While the Supreme Court set aside three days for oral arguments, observers familiar with court procedure said a decision could not be expected until spring, at the earliest.

The five school cases directly involve Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas, Delaware, and the District of Columbia. But the outcome will affect all 17 states that maintain separate elementary and secondary schools for white and Negro pupils.

CIO filed a friend-of-the-court brief contending that segregated schools were by their very nature unconstitutional and a direct denial of the 14th amendment, which guarantees equal protection of the law. While the burden of the cases was being carried by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, other liberal organizations took positions similar to that of CIO.

CHIEF COUNSEL for those opposing segregated schools was Thurgood Marshall, special counsel to the NAACP, and one of the principal speakers at the recent CIO convention. Marshall has a long and impressive record of victories in important civil rights cases decided in recent years by the Supreme Court.

Heading the legal battery employed by the states practicing segregation was the one-time Democratic presidential candidate, John W. Davis. Davis, at 79, is a noted constitutional lawyer and an extreme conservative. He headed the steel company's legal staff in the steel seizure case earlier this year.

As the nine justices began hearing the arguments in this historic cases, with far-reaching social, political and economic considerations, they had a clear threat from the governor of South Carolina, Klan-supported James F. Byrnes.

Byrnes, a one-time justice of the nation's highest court, has publicly promised abolition of South Carolina's public school system, if the court abolishes segregation.

In a nutshell, here's how the arguments shaped up:

Against Segregation — Opponents of segregation centered their arguments on the contention that segregation statutes violated the 14th Amendment that no state "shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

For Segregation — Proponents of segregation, on the other hand, contended no constitutional rights of Negro citizens were impaired by state segregation laws.

Thus the issue of segregated schools, one of the most explosive ever to come before the Supreme Court, was baldly and flatly presented. Both sides were looking for an answer to the constitutionality of the long-held and long-hated "separate but equal" theory of education.

Opponents of segregation in fact abandoned all claims to constitutional inequality in one case, that of Kansas schools, by agreeing that the physical facilities were equal. Robert L. Carter of New York, as attorney for those involved in the Kansas challenge, told the court: "We abandon any claim of constitutional inequality except for segregation itself."

In the Kansas case, the lower court had said "segregation with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system." Nothwithstanding this admission, the lower court rejected attempts to outlaw segregation in Kansas.

In all five cases the question was squarely before the court: Does segregation in itself put the stamp of inequality on Negroes? The plaintiffs and their friends, including the CIO, said, "Yes." The opponents led by Davis said, "No." The justices, who followed the arguments intently and asked many questions, were, as Marshall put it, the "only testing ground" on which this basic question could be resolved.

As the hearings continued, there was repeated references to "threatened resentment by some whites" if the court were to abolish segregation. In its brief the CIO had gone directly into this question and had suggested that:

"CERTAINLY the experience of the CIO supports the view that the dire consequences which are so often predicted are merely phantoms. The CIO, through its Southern Organizing Committee, is proving daily that the myth of incompatability between white and Negro is but a myth.

"There are frictions and tensions to be sure. But they are not nearly of the magnitude usually pictured. We have proved that it is possible for free men, white and Negro, to associate themselves together voluntarily without conflict, in the absence of compulsion by the state."

4 Arrested In Miami Terrorism

Four persons were arrested by U. S. marshals in Miami last week as result of 1951 bombings of Negro homes, Catholic churches and Jewish synagogues.

They were charged with perjury or false statements in testimony before the grand jury investigating the bombings, which included the killing of Harry T. Moore, Negro leader, and his wife.

One of the persons arrested was a Mrs. Helen Russell, described by the Justice Dept. as a "civic leader" and socialite. The three other men were identified by the department as Ku Klux Klan members.

Negro Minister Beaten On Bus Near Atlanta

ANOTHER reminder that brutal attacks on Negroes are not a thing of the past came last week in a news story of a vicious assault on the Rev. Amos H. Carnegie of Washington, D. C., on a bus en route from Atlanta, Ga., to Chattanooga, Tenn.

Rev. Carnegie is the 67-year-old president of the National Hospital Foundation. He had been in Atlanta calling on state and medical school officials to discuss the Foundation's plans for getting improved hospital facilities for Negroes.

His face bruised and swollen, Carnegie told reporters in Chattanooga that two white men—after a whispered talk with the bus driver—slugged and kicked him because he refused to take a seat in back of the bus. Two policemen curtly brushed off his request for aid, and ordered him "to get in the back."

Rev. Carnegie said that he would start legal action for the violation of his civil rights. The Washington bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked the Justice Dept. to investigate the case.

Brewers Expand

The CIO Brewery Workers have established a Canadian regional office in Vancouver, with E. C. Sims as director.

A "DATE" WITH CIO—United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers LIU 78, covering food processing workers in California and Arizona, signs first union contract in date industry with Valley Date Gardens, Indio, Calif. Signing (from left) were LIU 78 Business Agent Bertha Adams, CIO Field Rep. Syd Rose, CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, and E. E. Smith and S. B. Wasmuth for the company.

ICFTU Plans For World Congress

LEADERS of the worldwide free labor movement were back in their home lands last week, preparing to put into effect decisions made the previous week at the meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' executive board in New York.

Sir Vincent Tewson, the president, and Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, at ICFTU headquarters in Brussels made the first preparatory moves for the 1953 ICFTU general congress. The executive board voted to hold it in Stockholm, Sweden, early in July. Sessions will be held in the Swedish Parliament.

The secretariat also was preparing to carry out the board's decision to open an office in Tokyo as a means of helping democratic Japanese trade unions combat Communist infiltration. In addition, it was considering expansion of the Asian trade union training school at Calcutta, likewise ordered by the executive board.

Among other decisions, the executive board rejected any relations with Democratie Combattante, known in English as Fighting Democracy, the "peace" organization created by Leon Jouhaux.

Jouhaux, president of the free French union Force Ouvriere, is a member of the board. However, he did not attend the New York meeting, and had asked that action on Fighting Democracy not be taken.

The decision to reject any affiliation was made, despite Jouhaux's request, because of fear of misunderstanding unless action was taken. Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe and an alternate IGFTU board member, criticized the methods by which Fighting Democracy had sought support. He declared the name of the CIO had been used incorrectly to give the impression of endorsement.

The same complaints were made on behalf of the AFL by Irving Brown, that group's European representative. Criticism also was voiced by Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO unions in Canada are affiliated, and by Tewson and Lincoln Evans, president of the British Iron and Steel Workers Federation. Tewson pointed out that "as far as we are concerned there is only one peace movement—the United Nations."

JOUHAUX'S own FO has refused to affiliate with Fighting Democracy. Delegates to its convention in November, although re-electing him, declined to join on the ground that it is "an outside non-trade union movement."

The executive board decided to renew its efforts to compose differences between the two free Italian union groups, the Italian Federation of Trade Unions (CISL) and the Italian Labor Union (UIL), in order to promote more effective union action. The CIO and AFL, in a joint message to the two groups several months ago, strongly urged a united program.

CERTIFICATES of accomplishment were presented 33 Washingtonians who attended eight-week session of CIO Conference on White Collar Organizing sponsored by Local 1, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee. Ruth Harvey Wood, of Local 1, receives her award from GCEOC Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray. Looking on are Jack Barbash, administrative director of the Senate Subcommittee on Labor, and Milton Zatinsky (right), conference director.

Resentment Grows Over Tunisia Unionist's Slaying

RESENTMENT swept North Africa in a series of widening waves last week following the brutal assassination of Farhat Hached, 39-year-old founder and secretary of the General Union of Tunisian Workers (UGTT) and leader of moderate nationalist forces throughout the Middle East.

Hached was machine gunned and beaten to death on Dec. 4 while driving from Tunis to a union meeting in a suburb. Had the French government not refused to permit him an exit visa, he would have been in New York attending the meeting of the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, of which he was a member.

Violence, kept down in Tunis by a French-imposed three-day curfew and a UGTT general strike of the same length, broke out in neighboring Moroco.

Several score persons, both Arab and European, were killed in a series of clashes that spread when the French used force to quiet demonstrations. Several hundred natives, including many union leaders, were jailed. Outbreaks occurred in Casablanca and in the city of Beni Mellal, 100 miles away.

IN TUNISIA where other labor leaders were rounded up and clapped into jail before the general public was aware of Hached's murder, a train was machine gunned shortly after the curfew was lifted. Extreme Arab nationalists—the sort from whom Hached dissociated himself—were blamed.

Meantime, French authorities were no nearer discovering Hached's killers than they were when his body was found. Native leaders blamed the French terrorist organization, the "Red Hand." The French blamed extreme nationalists or Communists.

In separate statements, the CIO, AFL and ICFTU all declared the French government, by refusing to deal reasonably with rising Arab nationalism, could not avoid at least a share of the blame in the killing.

Demands were made for a thorough investigation of the assassination by the United Nations.

Bigots' Rule In Africa Condemned

The CIO convention condemned the South African regime of Prime Minister Malan "as bigotry accepted and installed as official government policy."

The CIO called "upon the people of European extraction in South Africa to reflect seriously on what the results of such a backward and ruthless race policy must be, and to act accordingly while there is still time."

Reds Stage Another Phony Meet

ANOTHER phony conference on "peace" opened Dec. 12 in Vienna under Communist auspices too blatant to be disguised.

It rejoiced in the resounding name of the Congress of the Peoples for Peace. It is ostensibly the creation of the World Peace Council, the Soviet-managed front that plumps for disarmament in the free world but thinks it fitting that Russia and her satellites arm to the teeth.

The stated objective is to end international tensions and give everybody a nice feeling of security. Actually, the meeting has been used as a sounding board for bitter attacks on the United States in the hope of splitting it from the rest of the free world—and making it easier for the Russians to extend their imperialistic domination.

The sessions have attracted the usual assortment of party members, party liners, party stooges, pacifists (whom the Reds have been attacking bitterly as enemies of "peace") and plain suckers. The last time the Russians staged a world conference in Vienna, without telling the Austrian government, it didn't draw a line in the local non-Communist press.

Capital CIO Unions Confer On White Collar Organizing

A NOVEL CIO conference on white collar organizing sponsored by Washington Local 1 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee ended last week with presentation of certificates to 31 successful students.

Eight weekly sessions were held during the conference, which got under way in October. During them every phase of white collar organizing, a field in which unions have had only limited success, was explored with the aid of visiting speakers and Milton Zatinsky, Local 1 member and former education director of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Certificates were presented to those who completed the course by Milton Murray, secretary-treasurer of the GCEOC. Jack Barbash, administrative director of the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, was the principal speaker.

Barbash suggested a three-edged attack on the admittedly difficult job of organizing in the white collar field: a year-round, continuing, face-to-face public relations and education campaign for the public; imaginative settlement of grievances of union members, and action by white collar unions to become "in theory and in fact" part of the organized labor movement.

Murray, congratulating the local on its educational venture, assured the students that the GCEOC can count on the continued support of the CIO's new "leadership team." The foundation already laid, he declared, is one on which much can be built.

"If all federal workers in the District of Columbia were to become members of our union tomorrow," he said, "we still would not have the force we'd have if we were operating in industry. We'd have to have the support and strength of the CIO to attain our goals."

UAW Gains 'Best Contract' At Detroit Tank Arsenal

"THE BEST contract ever negotiated in the tank industry" has been signed by the CIO Auto Workers and the Detroit Tank Arsenal.

UAW said that the agreement provides a wage structure above any other tank plant and in excess of auto rates. It brings the 3000 employes under the National UAW-CIO Chrysler Contract. Chrysler operates the plant, which formerly was run by the federal government.

The pact contains a pension plan providing a $130 maximum monthly pension with the firm paying the entire cost. Previously workers contributed 6% of their wages into the pension fund.

Other contract features are wage increases ranging from 1c to 46c, automatic progression to top rates in 90 days, escalator cost-of-living protection, a 4c annual improvement factor, and group life, sickness, accident and hospitalization insurance with Chrysler paying half of the cost.

Pure Food Protection Is Weakened

PROTECTION for consumers against impure or misbranded foods and drugs was weakened by a U. S. Supreme Court decision last week.

The court, in an 8 to 1 decision citing contradictions of the Food and Drug Law, said food processors could refuse to admit inspectors from the Food and Drug Administration to their plants.

Some 80% of all cases of food and drug pollution are discovered by FDA plant inspections.

Now "protection from the activities of the shady fringe (of food processors) will be substantially reduced," the agency said.

FDA said spot checks of finished food products in shipment are not as effective as factory inspections.

The agency said it would ask the new Congress to amend the Food and Drug Act, to clarify the legal contradictions cited by the court. But Labor Press Associated reported that Dixiegop members of the House Commerce Committee were reluctant to correct weaknesses in the law.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CIO CONVENTION is over. This convention was a history making gathering, in which for the first time in the history of CIO there was a roll call vote for the office of president. Democracy was put to work in its truest sense. The decision was made and it is the duty and obligation of us all to make one CIO team and full steam ahead.

The Organization Dept. will give Pres. Reuther every assistance and cooperation possible to help make his administration a successful one. We will continue serving all our members and all our unions as we have done in the past, rendering service in every way possible.

Let us all unite now for a stronger and bigger CIO, we will be stronger then in our search for organic unity with the AFL. We must apply ourselves, large union and small union alike, in making a better CIO. As was the closing note of the convention, let us all join in the spirit of "rolling our union on." Our beloved Philip Murray would have us do this and in his memory we will not fail.

★

SEC.-TREAS. James Lawson, CIO Stone & Allied Products Workers, reports that the USAPWA-CIO won a representation election at the Arnold Stone Co., Greensboro, N. C., by a vote of 43 to 13, and at the Harbison-Walker Co., Clearfield, Pa., by 21 to 3.

Reg. Dir. Mike Livoda reports that employes of the Shell Chemical Corp., Denver, Colo., voted for the CIO Oil Workers in a representation election by OWIU 227, AFL 1, independent union 49, no union 11.

Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports that the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers won a big representation election at the Atomic Energy Plant, Paducah, Ky., over the AFL by a vote of 301 to 223. This plant will employ approximately 3500 workers at peak production. The campaign was directed by the CIO Regional Office and credit for this victory goes to UGCCW Rep. Thomas Fee, and CIO Field Reps. Carl Beck and Bob Christofferson.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE representation election victories: National Co., Inc., Malden and Melrose, Mass., IUE-CIO 439, no union 279, void 5, challenged 5; American Measuring Instrument Co., Long Island City, N. Y., IUE 73, no union 13, UE withdrew.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a representation election at the Southwest Manufacturing Co., Little Rock, Ark., by the following vote: eligible 68, UAW-CIO 57, no union 7, challenged 3. This campaign was conducted by Intl. Reps. Jack Crump and William Kimberling.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports representation election victories for the CIO Newspaper Guild and CIO Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers. At the York, Pa., Dispatch the count was Newspaper Guild 22, no union 6, and at the French Jewelry Co., Philadelphia, Pa., PJNW 36, no union 6.

★

VICE-PRES. Claude Ballard reports that in a representation election at the Intermountain Manufacturing Co., Bend, Ore., the workers favored the CIO Woodworkers by a vote of 16 to 8 for the AFL.

At the Frost Lumber Industries, Frost Div. of Olin Industries, Inc., Nacogdoches, Tex., the Woodworkers won by the following vote: eligible 108, IWA-CIO 55, no union 40, challenged 3, void 2. Intl. Rep. Kenneth Snyder directed this drive. In a representation election at the Sells Lumber & Manufacturing Co., Johnson City, Tenn., the IAW-CIO was victorious by a vote of 59 to 45 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports a smashing victory for the CIO Packinghouse Workers over the AFL Butchers Union at the Emge Packing Co., Fort Branch, Ind. Among maintenance and production workers the vote was CIO 345, AFL 31; truck drivers, CIO 27, Teamsters AFL 9. Intl. Reps. Roy Utley and Herman Walker deserve the credit for this victory.

Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst reports that the CIO Utility Workers won a representation election at the East St. Louis and Interurban Water Co., by the following vote: eligible 45, UWA-CIO 28, AFL 5, 1 challenged. CIO Field Rep. Willard Murphy was in charge of this election.

Reg. Dir. Ed McCrone reports that the UAW-CIO won a representation election at the American Machine and Foundry Co., New Haven, Conn., by a vote of 41 to 1 for no union. Intl. Rep. Sid Gunning conducted the drive.

Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports a tremendous victory for the UAW-CIO at the jet engine plant of the General Electric Co., Cincinnati, O., by the following vote: UAW-CIO 2641, AFL 455, independent 109, no union 105, challenged 62, void 8. The election was conducted by Intl. Rep. Al Busch and Pres. George Jent of the local, who are to be congratulated for the fine job.

Reuther Offered Good Wishes Of AVC

The American Veterans Committee last week extended congratulations to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on his election.

Writing for the veterans organization, National Exec. Dir. Charles H. Slayman, Jr., said: "It is pleasant to recall the good associations we have enjoyed in the past and to look forward to continued cooperation for attaining our goals of a more democratic and prosperous America with just and lasting peace in the world."

Supreme Court Dodges Ruling On State Powers Under T-H Act

THE AUTHORITY of state courts to enjoin alleged violations of the Taft-Hartley Law remained unresolved last week as the U. S. Supreme Court tossed out a test case.

Ruling that the Alabama case before it did not involve a final order of a lower court, the Supreme Court dismissed it on a 7-to-2 vote, without commenting on its merits.

The CIO had filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the case, contending Congress had never intended to "entrust to the courts of the 48 states the power to enforce the Taft-Hartley Act."

Thus the Supreme Court left the question of overlapping jurisdiction of state and federal enforcement up in the air. The majority decision was that the high court never should have agreed to consider the case. Justices Douglas and Black dissented.

The specific case arose in Montgomery, Ala., where a State court issued a temporary injunction prohibiting picketing of an apartment house construction project, charging it violated the Taft-Hartley Act. Pointing out that the anti-picketing order was a temporary and not a permanent injunction, the court ruled it could not act on orders which were not final.

In its brief, the CIO contended that to allow state courts to enforce Taft-Hartley (a federal law) would be to "authorize an unprecedented expansion in the business of strike breaking by preliminary injunction."

In their dissenting opinion, Justices Douglas and Black held that the power of the state court to issue a temporary injunction was the question involved, and that this question could be decided without reference to future proceedings.

Justice Douglas, who wrote the dissent, said that "the mischief of temporary injunctions in labor controversies is well known," and that the damage done by them was "often irreparable."

Steel Union To Test T-H

PRES. TRUMAN last week instructed the Justice Dept. to seek a Taft-Hartley injunction against striking CIO Steelworkers at the Dunkirk, N. Y., plant of the American Locomotive Co.

His action came after a fact-finding board's report that national emergency existed as a result of delay in production of nickel pipe for use in Atomic Energy Commission projects.

Resumption of production was necessary, the board said, to maintain the AEC's schedule of operations. The strike started on Aug. 29.

The Steelworkers were prepared to oppose granting of any injunction, Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg said, and would immediately seek a review testing the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley Act if an injunction were issued.

For the first time, Goldberg said, the act would be challenged on the grounds that, by judicial degree, a perfectly lawful strike was being declared illegal. He made it clear the Steelworkers would obey any injunction which might be issued while they tested its legality in the courts.

CIO, Unions In Capital Get New Phone Numbers

Washington telephone numbers were changed last week. Following is a listing of new telephone numbers for CIO unions in the nation's capitol:

National CIO	EXecutive 3-5581
CIO-PAC	ADams 4-0832
Auto Workers	EXecutive 3-3522
CWA	HUdson 3-9200
CIO Maritime Committee	LIncoln 7-9090
Govt. Workers	NAtional 8-5364
Insurance Workers	MEtropolitan 8-1888
IUE	EXecutive 3-6096
Marine Engineers	LIncoln 4-2600
Oil Workers	STerling 3-4458
Textile Workers	NAtional 8-9574
Chemical Workers	REpublic 7-5034
Railroad Workers	EXecutive 3-3023
Shoe Workers	REpublic 7-1442
Steelworkers	EXecutive 3-5581
Utility Workers	EXecutive 3-5955
Paper Workers	STerling 3-8230

Young Widow Is 5 Millionth To Get Social Security Aid

A YOUNG California widow has become the five millionth person to receive social security checks since the program went into effect in 1937 and began to pay benefits in 1940.

She is Mrs. Dolores Plaa, 23, of San Rafael, mother of two young children. Her husband, a telephone foreman, was killed accidently a month ago. On receiving her first check, Mrs. Plaa said the payments would permit her to be "both mother and father to the children," Larry James, 4, and Michele Marie, 1.

Under the present law, Mrs. Plaa will receive $63.30 monthly and $52.80 for each child, or a total of $168.90 each month. By the time Michele Marie, the youngest, reaches her 18th birthday, the benefits paid to the children alone will total $20,038, if the benefit scale remains unchanged.

Depending on life expectancy, and whether she remarries, Mrs. Plaa herself may receive payments of from $12,000 to more than $20,000. These payments will be the family's principal income, she said, supplemented by a modest life insurance policy.

FIVE MILLIONTH social security recipient is Mrs. Dolores Plaa, young California widow with her two children.

Belanger Wins Re-election At Bay State CIO Meet

J. WILLIAM Belanger, State director of the CIO Textile Workers, was elected to his fifth term as president of the Massachusetts CIO Council at the 14th annual convention in Boston last week.

He defeated John H. Callahan, chairman of the CIO Electrical Workers' General Electric Conference Board, in a spirited contest. Salvatore Camelio was chosen for another term as secretary-treasurer, and 22 vice presidents were named without opposition.

A highlight of the convention was a requiem mass for the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray offered in Holy Cross Cathedral by Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, Archbishop of Boston. About 1000 delegates and guests attended.

"No man in the American chapter of organized labor's history," he said, "has given it more dignity, prestige and potential for good than has Phil Murray . . ."

In a speech at the convention, Archbishop Cushing urged the delegates to try to restore the workers' "lost love for work."

"Love for work is the only effective inducement for good work," he declared. "Work must not be a drudgery, but the object of love by the workers."

The convention adopted a resolution aimed at helping communities whose textile industries have moved to the South. It urged legislation to "impose upon a liquidating company taxes of such a nature that will discourage financial manipulators from acquiring and using the assets of solvent companies to make profits by liquidation at the expense of workers and communities."

OTHER resolutions asked a fair procedure code for congressional investigating committees, pay-as-you-go taxation with elimination of loopholes and inequities, and greater use of labor representatives at all levels in the State Dept.

Other speakers included Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, Gov. Paul A. Dever, State Labor Commissioner John J. Delmonte, Rep. John W. McCormack, Assistant CIO-PAC Dir. Tilford Dudley, State Treasurer-elect Foster Furcolo, and Joseph A. Salerno, regional director for CIO Clothing Workers.

TWU Backs 2 Big Locals On Shorter Hours

By FRED ROSS

FOUR HUNDRED delegates to the CIO Transport Workers' eighth convention met last week in Philadelphia, on the eve of economic showdowns involving TWU's two biggest locals.

New York and Philadelphia are strongholds of the 100,000-member TWU, and in both cities the Transport Workers are fighting to clinch the eight-hour day.

TWU Local 234 was prepared to strike on Dec. 15 against the big Philadelphia Transportation Co. which operates subway, elevated, trolley and bus lines in the City of Brotherly Love.

In New York, TWU Local 100 was prepared to begin job action the same day against nine privately-operated bus lines.

The TWU's convention gave full authorization and support to transit workers in both cities.

And CIO backing was voiced by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who was to address the convention on its final day, and by Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

TWU's was the first convention of a CIO union since the 12-15

National CIO meeting in Atlantic City, at which Reuther defeated Haywood for the presidency.

"When my people decide, that is final for me," Haywood said. "I support men who are elected by the democratic process. All things that I could give to Phil Murray I shall give to Walter Reuther."

While TWU in Philadelphia was prepared to strike, Local 100 in New York planned job action —in the unique form of deciding not to collect fares. The no-fare "Christmas holiday" for bus riders would continue to Dec. 31, when the contracts expire.

If no settlement is reached by that date, a strike—authorized by the convention—would begin on the nine bus lines.

In both cities TWU is seeking a reduction of the work week from 48 to 40 hours with no decrease in pay. About 45,000 members of the union working for the New York City-owned transportation system went on the 40-hour week last July.

Transit workers throughout the United States are generally working more than the 40-hour week, and the convention action is the kick-off in a drive to obtain the shorter week for them, also.

MORE TIME was devoted to the discussion of the Philadelphia and the New York situations than to any other convention subjects.

The fight was not confined to the convention floor. The Philadelphia Transportation Co. took the fight to the courts and the newspapers.

A Philadelphia court served subpenas on TWU international and local officers, ordering them to appear in court for a hearing Dec. 12 on the company's application for a no-strike injunction.

In their ads, the company reproduced a letter written last January by Quill in which he said the union would observe a 30-day "cooling off" period after the contract expires.

TWU officials said that the letter is not binding because it was written at the direction of the local's executive board, which has been supplanted by a new board.

In Philadelphia, the union is seeking a 32c hourly pay increase to compensate for shorter hours. In New York City, TWU asks a 25c hourly increase in addition to maintaining present wages for the shorter, 40-hour work week. Pension improvements also are asked in both cities.

TWO NEW YORK bus companies called on Theodore W. Kheel, impartial chairman of the transit industry, to order TWU to "conform" to the provisions of the contract, which, they claimed, ruled out any interference with the "normal operation" of the companies until Dec. 31.

Some 175 delegates pledged themselves to give blood Dec. 18 at the Philadelphia Red Cross headquarters "in honor of Philip Murray and the boys in Korea."

Resolutions called for:

- Continuing the fight against the use of injunctions in labor disputes, repeal of the injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, and stopping the use of injunctions by state courts.
- Urging CAB "to draft regulations without delay, requiring all flight stewards, stewardesses and pursers to obtain Civil Aviation Act licenses." (TWU holds contracts with a number of airlines.)

EITHER Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers (left) or Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, must have cracked a joke at TWU convention at Philadelphia.

SEVERAL MEETINGS such as this were held last week by representatives of TWU and the Philadelphia Transportation Co. in an effort to avert a strike at the expiration of their contract. Among those in the picture are: Left to right, seated TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill; PTC Pres. Charles E. Ebert; second row, TWU Board Member Louis Dwyer and TWU's Local 234 Pres. Paul O'Rourke.

$16,500 Given To Murray Fund

The TWU executive board donated $16,500 to the Philip Murray memorial fund, it was announced last week by Sec. Treas. Gustav Faber at TWU's convention at Philadelphia.

The board also called on the locals to contribute to the fund. Among those subscribing was TWU's newest Local 700, parking lot workers, who gave $100 to the fund.

Thanks To TWU, Parking Lot Workers Get Holiday Bonus

APPROXIMATELY 325 Philadelphia parking lot workers will get a "Christmas bonus" of more than $100 each, thanks to the CIO Transport Workers.

The Yuletide windfall will be the retroactive pay dating back to Sept. 10 which employes of the Sley System—largest parking lot operators in the city—will receive under an arbitration award.

THE AWARD also gave them a 15c hourly pay increase, the union shop, two paid holidays, time and a half for four other holidays, a week's paid vacation after one year and two weeks after five years.

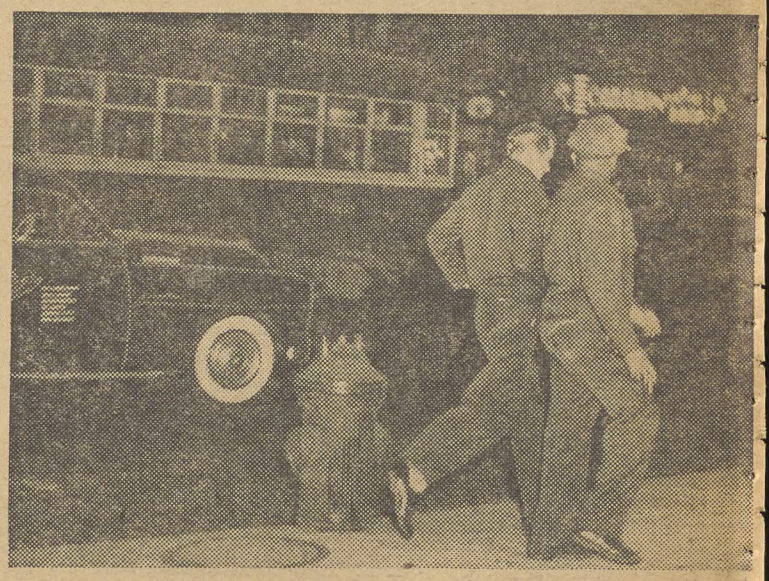
The arbitration decision also paves the way for organizing all the other principal parking lot employes in Philadelphia, according to Louis Dwyer, TWU executive board member stationed there.

Since the award was announced, Lattimore Garage employes have voted for TWU in an election conducted by the Pennsylvania Labor Board.

This Christmas will be a brighter one than last year's for the Sley lot workers. Getting nowhere through a company union, they turned last December to TWU, which won a state board election. By contesting the election results and certification and finally offering a 10c hourly increase without retroactive pay, management stalled the workers until September when they voted to strike.

City officials and federal mediators then arranged a meeting of TWU and Sley management at which it was decided to submit the disagreement to arbitration. Lee Lichliter of the American Arbitration Association was the impartial member of the three-man arbitration board. Dwyer was the union member and Harry Sley represented the firm.

TV-CONSCIOUS TWU paid for televising the opening proceedings at its eighth biennial convention at Philadelphia. Camerman focuses on the stage for sound pictures which later were broadcast from a Philadelphia TV station.



THIS PHOTO will be the basis of a charge of unfair labor practices which TWU will bring before the Pennsylvania Labor Board. TWU claims the day the board held an election for the employes of Eglin's parking lot, the company used its station wagon (in left background) to bring workers to the polling places.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XV WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 22, 1952 82 No. 51

CIO'S CASE for prompt removal of unfair wage controls and ineffective price controls was taken to the White House by Pres. Walter P. Reuther (right) in conference with Pres. Truman. Reuther described conference as "very pleasant," said Truman gave assurance that Wage Stabilization Board will expedite its backlog of 12,000 cases. (More pictures and news story on WSB situation, Page 3.)

In This Issue . . .

President's Commission tells U. S. health needs 2
DiSalle named wage-price chief 3
"Freedom in Concrete," an editorial 4
What GOP "hard money" means to you 7
NLRB faces working-over by GOP 7
Supreme Court nods at wire-tappers 8
Moroccans ask aid of U. S. unionists 9
"Danbury injunction" slapped on TWU 10
Allan Haywood's column 11
Kroll challenges big election spending 12

Steel Union Fights T-H Strike Curb

—See Page 3

HST Board Urges Expanded Health Care

THE BLIND SPOT of the American Medical Association on the nation's inadequate medical care was underscored last week with the release of the report of Pres. Truman's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation.

Five prominent physicians, four other health officials and six laymen making up the commission reported unanimous agreement that many large health needs of the American people are not being met, often because those requiring them haven't the money to pay for such services. The report called for substantial reorganization of medical care and of the methods of financing its cost.

The commission was unanimous in all findings as to the inadequacies of present health conditions. There was only one important dissent in the many recommendations for corrective action which involve policies that have long been bitterly opposed by the AMA and state medical societies.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, a member of the commission, joined the other labor representative, A. J. Hayes, president of the AFL Machinists, and Miss Elizabeth Magee, representative of consumers, in objecting to the majority recommendations dealing with methods of paying for personal health services on the grounds that they are not adequate.

Their dissenting opinion asserts that every state should be required by law to participate in the federal-state program recommended by the commission or else the federal government should either make comprehensive personal health services available in states which do not participate or Congress should see that such services are provided under a National Health Insurance Act.

ALTHOUGH the commission majority rejected national health insurance for the present, it acknowledged that this proposal "must be recognized as one of the outstanding ones," and added, "it must continue to receive study and consideration as a possible solution."

The only other dissents in the entire report were comparatively minor and involved but two of the more than 80 recommendations made. They dealt with the extent of federal aid for health education and the proposed department of health and security, but none expressed outright opposition to the proposals in their entirety.

Created by the President at the beginning of 1952, the commission goes out of existence Dec. 29. Under the chairmanship of Dr. Paul B. Magnuson, distinguished Chicago surgeon, it took millions of words of testimony from experts in many conferences, reviewed previous studies and held public hearings in eight cities.

MANY CIO witnesses testified before its panels, presenting the views about health matters the CIO has long advocated. It is significant that the recommendations of the commission, with the one exception noted, generally support the CIO position against which the doctor's lobby has waged unremitting warfare.

After weighing all the evidence, the commission in its entirety decided "it is well within the economic potential of this country to provide itself with the finest system of health care in the world, (and) that the American people desire this and deserve no less."

Instead, it found that many persons do not get services they need, and that there are not enough physicians, nurses, dentists, hospitals and local public health departments. It also concluded flatly that "the individual often does not obtain health services when the need arises because he simply does not have the money to pay for them."

To meet these needs, the commission majority recommended that for most Americans the costs of medical care should be met through pre-payment health insurance plans which will cover the services of the family physician as well as specialists.

THE REPORT urged the establishment of a "cooperative" federal-state program to assist in financing personal health services. Under it "each state would draw an over-all state plan for assisting the development and distribution of personal health service for all persons, using public or private agencies and resources, or a combination of them."

In its proposals the commission differed sharply with the AMA, which has endorsed health insurance plans providing only limited services. The report also called for greater development of group medical practice in health insurance plans and pointed out that "a hostile attitude on the part of organized medicine" has made the establishment of such programs extremely difficult.

The commission also broke with the AMA in recommending that at least half of the governing bodies of medical insurance plans be made up of the consuming public, as the CIO Community Services Committee recently proposed. The doctors' lobby has insisted on majority control by physicians which it names or approves.

The AMA also has bitterly fought other recommendations, such as federal aid to medical education, federal aid to local health departments, etc.

The recommended program, the commission estimates, would cost the federal government about $1 billion annually.

Labor Members Back Insurance

The dissenting opinion to the health commission's recommendations on the financing of personal health insurance, in which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther joined, declares in part:

"If the basic recommendations in the financing of personal health services section of the commission's report are to be considered as a means of achieving the objectives set forth throughout the report, then the participation of every state must be assured by federal statute, or the federal government must make such health services available in those states which for any reasons do not participate.

"In the event this cannot be accomplished for any reasons, then the objectives set forth throughout the report . . . should be accomplished through a National Health Insurance Act supported by joint employer-employe contributions and tax revenues."

★

With One Dissent—

Reuther Hails 'Courageous' Proposals Of Health Inquiry

The following is the text of a statement issued last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, a member of the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation:

THE REPORT of Pres. Truman's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation is a document that will bring new courage and hope for the millions of Americans denied their basic human rights of a chance at health.

Organized labor will welcome it as a courageous vindication of views it has long held and of policies it has long advocated against the highly financed attacks of the American Medical Association and state arms of the doctors' lobby, backed by drug, insurance and other interests peddling the line laid down by the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

Speaking for the CIO, however, I must reiterate the expression of disappointment which the consumers' representative and the two labor members stated in their dissent over the commission majority's recommendations concerning the financing of personal health services. This is not intended to detract from the many positive positions taken by the commission with a general unanimity of agreement that is impressive in view of the many interests represented among its members, and which face the facts squarely and wisely.

Disease, like fire, however, cannot be stamped out by halfway measures. Many of us knew from experience the vast differences in social responsibility among the verious state governments, as well as in their financial ability to support such a program.

We can have no faith in the efficacy of a proposal which purports to provide "all people equally" with the high quality medical services which are their right by leaving the matter entirely to the "cooperative" willingness of the states. Some form of federal health insurance seems to me to be the only adequate answer.

Despite this disagreement, I nevertheless believe that in all regards the program recommended by the commission falls within the pledges regarding the nation's health programs made by the Republican party in its 1952 platform. Those pledges to the American people called for "a just division between the government, the physicians, the voluntary hospital, and voluntary health insurance" and promised support for scientific research and development of adequate hospital services. The incoming Administration will find the program recommended by the commission a carefully reasoned method, indicating the minimum essential steps, whereby those campaign pledges can be kept.

The statement by the president of the American Medical Association this very week, to the effect that the results of the recent election aided the AMA cause, places the Republican leadership squarely on trial before the American public. Because the commission's findings so thoroughly refute AMA policies, the new President and Congress should seek speedy application of the commission's recommendations as the best means of disproving the implications of this new AMA contention and of showing that the people's interests will be placed before the special interests in the crucial days ahead.

The position taken in the minority report on the commission's recommendations concerning the financing of personal health services, in which I had the honor to join, deserves thoughtful consideration by men and women of goodwill in the medical and health professions as well as by labor and consumers and the American people in general.

"He said I've got a tough row to hoe; so I'll need a lot of Union help!"

★

Recommendations Of Truman Health Board In Summary

Here are highlights of recommendations made last week by Pres. Truman's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation:

1. Federal funds should be made available to overcome the present financial crisis in schools of medicine, dentistry, nursing, and public health; such funds should be forthcoming for modernizing and expanding facilities, to make up operating deficits, and to encourage the development of new medical, dental, nursing, and public health schools where they are needed.

2. To remove the economic barriers which now restrict the freedom of American youth in entering the health professions, federal funds should be made available for scholarships.

3. To meet the need for additional Negroes in the health professions, special programs should be formulated to make better opportunities available for their education and training. Discriminatory bars in some parts of the country which start at the secondary school level and run all the way through post-graduate training, internship and hospital affiliation must be removed wherever they exist.

4. Segregation in the use of hospitals should be eliminated, since it detracts from the efficiency and quality of care.

5. A nationwide system of hospitals and related health facilities adequate to serve all of the people should be developed, utilizing federal grants-in-aid for major construction and modernization and with local responsibility for operation continued.

6. Federal grants-in-aid should be made available for establishment and maintenance of local health departments and aiding in the development of chronic disease control and other new aspects of public health.

7. Organized medicine should review its attitude toward group practice in a spirit of tolerance, and federal loans should be made available to local organizations desiring to institute prepayment plans associated with group practice.

8. Both private and governmental support for medical research should be expanded and allocated to all agencies with promise in this field, including a substantial amount for basic research. Grants should cover a substantial share of the indirect as well as direct costs of research, and emphasis should be placed upon administrative methods, mental and chronic illness, and research into the relation between the social conditions of life and disease.

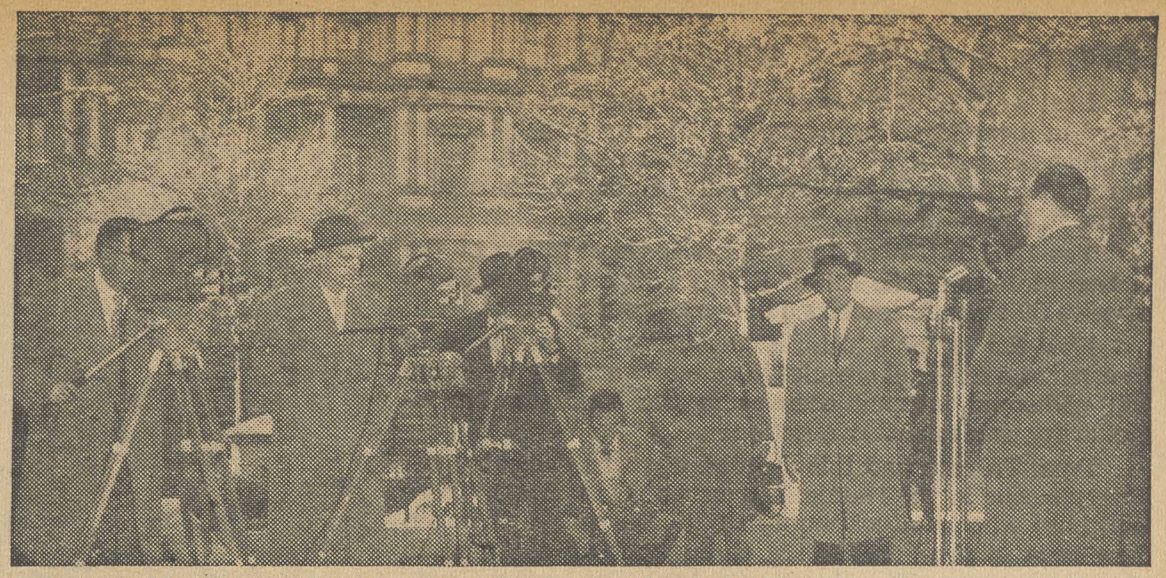
9. Congress should establish both a department of health and security and a Federal Health Commission, and bodies comparable to the latter should be established by states and local communities.

10. The federal-state vocational rehabilitation program should be strengthened and expanded through increased federal appropriations and state matching funds.

11. Prevention of accidents should be given a high priority as one of the urgent health problems of the nation.

12. State workmen's compensation laws should be improved so that they provide coverage of all occupations, adequate medical care including rehabilitation, coverage for all injuries and diseases arising from occupational exposure, and assurance of impartial medical diagnosis with a minimum of legalistic procedures. State and federal health, safety, and labor agencies should be strengthened, with sufficient investigative, code-making and enforcement powers and adequate financial support to achieve minimum health and safety standards in all places of work.

13. The federal government should recognize its responsibility and assist in solving the health problems of migratory labor, in cooperation with state and local governments, employers, and voluntary agencies.



CIO'S "NEW LEADERSHIP TEAM" carried the case for removal of wage-price controls to top government officials in Washington within a week after the recent CIO national convention condemned the wage freeze as unfair after price ceilings had been scuttled by Congress. At left, Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam hears from CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood. At right, Reuther is questioned by television and newsreel reporters and camermen after seeing Pres. Truman at White House.

New Wage-Price Chief

DiSalle Returns To His Old Quipping Grounds

FORMER PRICE Boss Mike DiSalle last week took over the nation's economic stabilization program, 24 hours after a new stop-gap wage controls set-up went into effect.

The wise-cracking DiSalle's appointment, effective immediately, came as Pres. Truman "reluctantly" accepted the resignation of Economic Stabilization Chief Roger L. Putnam. Putnam's resignation had been on Truman's desk for sometime.

A day earlier, Putnam, acting under Truman's direct order, had commissioned the public members of the old Wage Stabilization Board to process wage cases pending since the industry boycott, designed to cripple the controls program, had begun.

The new board immediately attacked the 12,000-case backlog accumulated by the board.

In the first day, the board reported it has broken a one-week log jam, acting on 200 cases. "We will make every effort to get the maximum number of cases out before Christmas," Chairman Charles C. Killingsworth reported.

TRUMAN'S action followed closely on the heels of a pledge he made to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a White House conference. Following the meeting. Reuther reported the President "has given me his assurance that he will do everything possible to expedite the disposition of the 12,000 cases pending before the Wage Stabilization Board."

In a later radio broadcast, Reuther criticized the industry boycott of WSB, calling it "a very serious mistake." He reiterated CIO's hopes that wage controls will be abolished, because prices have been largely decontrolled. But, he added, so long as wage controls continue, the board should remain in operation on a tri-partite basis, with labor, management and public members.

Under the stop-gap setup, only public members act on cases, with the labor members standing by for consultation and "advice on an informal basis," Putnam said.

Killingsworth told reporters the committee members were aware that thousands of workers would like to have any wage increases and retroactive pay involved before the holidays, and that many employers might face year-end tax problems if their cases were not cleared up before New Year's Day.

The industry "strike" against WSB participation followed White House approval of the $1.90-a-day wage increase for the soft coal miners, ordered by the President because of special considerations.

IUE Gains Okeh For 7c Wage Hike

The new Wage Stabilization Committee, in its first major decision, last week approved an average 7 to 8c an hour wage increase under an agreement negotiated by the CIO Electrical Workers and the General Electric Co.

The action paved the way for quick okeh of similar increases for Westinghouse and Sylvania workers. A total of about 210,000 GE employes will receive the pay boost, which approximates 5% on average hourly earnings of $1.60.

Pres. James B. Carey of the IUE-CIO strongly urged GE to give the workers their pay boost before Christmas. Most workers will collect about $40 each in retroactive pay.

Steel Union Challenges Taft-Hartley Strike Curb

CIO STEELWORKERS last week began an important test of the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley anti-strike injunction clause. It was the first major legal challenge of the so-called national emergency section.

The test began in the U. S. District Court in Buffalo, N. Y. There the Justice Dept. had obtained a temporary restraining order six days earlier and had petitioned for an 80-day T-H injunction against the Steelworkers and Locals 2286 and 4498.

Judge John Knight took the case under advisement and it was expected he would announce his decision before the temporary order expires in the afternoon of Dec. 22.

Pres. Truman had ordered the injunction action after a fact-finding board had charged a national emergency existed because of the strike against the Dunkirk (N.Y.) plant of the American Locomotive Co. The board charged that the strike, which began Aug. 29, created a shortage of nickel-plate pipe ordered by the Atomic Energy Commission, thus delaying AEC construction schedules.

In the union's brief, which opposed the T-H injunction, urged the court to dissolve the temporary order and dismiss the complaint, Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg argued the entire national emergency section was unconstitutional. The union had obeyed the injunction and the 1500 workers had returned to work.

Goldberg's contentions could be thus summarized:

1. The national emergency section was unconstitutional since Congress could not lawfully confer upon the courts the power the Taft-Hartley Act sought to confer.

2. Previous cases, upholding the constitutionality of other Taft-Hartley sections, did not apply to this case.

3. The Dunkirk case did not meet the double-barreled test which Congress intended be applied to determine if a national emergency existed.

4. Regardless of other merits, the government's attempt to enjoin individually all members of the USA-CIO, along with the union, was unwarranted.

Goldberg first traced the long history of negotiations with American Locomotive, which began during December, 1951. He showed the company had met the basic steel wage package for one plant, but refused to do so in the Dunkirk plant or other still strike-bound plants. Its sole offer at these plants amounted to 12.5c as compared to the 21.5c package won after the summertime steel strike.

"IN THE face of such an inadequate offer," Goldberg said, "the union struck at Dunkirk after having patiently postponed strike action for seven long months."

Goldberg traced the long history of decisions, in which U. S. district courts and the Supreme Court have declared unconstitutional laws by which Congress ought to confer on them duties which were not judicial and which were not connected with any case or controversy.

He pointed out that so-called national emergency strikes "are not made illegal by this act, or by any other statute: hence no function of deciding the legality of a strike is before the court."

Secondly, he said, the section simply makes the court's coercive powers a cog in the administrative machinery for attempting to settle strikes over which the court can make no final adjudication.

Finally, Goldberg argued, the Taft-Hartley provisions ran counter to the traditional Supreme Court theory that the judiciary branch could not be entrusted with functions which other branches of government could revise or control.

"The courts are empowered to decide nothing" (under this T-H section), Goldberg contented, "and even the 80-day injunction they are authorized to issue must be discharged automatically upon application of the Attorney-General. And the ultimate reliance of the statute is upon referral to Congress."

"ANY ONE of these three defects," he told the court, "is a sufficient ground for holding invalid the Taft-Hartley provisions. Taken together they are absolutely conclusive of unconstitutionality."

In the second section of his lengthy brief, Goldberg argued that the Dunkirk case didn't come within the court's jurisdiction under the so-called emergency section. To do so, he said, a strike must meet two clear tests: it must affect all or a substantial part of an industry and imperil the national health or safety.

The Dunkirk plant, he contended, was neither all or a substantial part of an industry. "The government," Goldberg said, "is seeking to enjoin here the very type of strike which Congress specifically decided to leave unregulated."

Reuther Undergoes Surgery, Due Back On Job Jan. 1

WALTER P. REUTHER, president of the CIO and the Auto Workers, underwent surgery at Harper Hospital in Detroit last week for the removal of his gall bladder.

The operating surgeon was Dr. H. C. Saltzstein and the internist, Dr. Raymond Sokolov.

After the operation, Dr. Saltzstein reported, "the operation went smoothly, and we do not anticipate any complications. Reuther is resting well."

It is estimated that Reuther will remain in the hospital for another week or 10 days and will complete his convalescence at home. He is expected to resume his dual duties as president of the CIO and the UAW shortly after the first of the year.

Dr. Saltzstein said that Reuther had a chronic gall bladder condition and had been undergoing recurrent attacks for more than a year.

UAW spokesmen said that Reuther had delayed surgery until last week because of the relative inactivity in both trade union and legislative affairs during the holiday period.

This Time Just Skip The Letters—

Never mind the letter, just send us the cash. In effect, that was the message sent by CIO Auto Workers to the top brass of Chrysler Corp. recently.

Recalling that in 1951, Chrysler Pres. Tex Colbert had written all production employes, praising them for an outstanding job and extending Christmas greetings, UAW Chrysler Dir. Norman Matthews suggested a new plan for 1952.

It was for time off with pay for all workers on both Fridays following Christmas and New Year's Day. The workers really preferred the tangible expression of the corporation's gratitude, Matthews noted.

Freedom In Concrete

Last week on the eve of Bill of Rights Day, an armed guard in a military troop carrier pulled up at the Library of Congress and—with due respect and ceremony—transferred "the Ark and the Covenant" of our freedoms to a shrine in the National Archives.

The Declaration of Independence, Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights now are encased in a massive 50-ton safe embedded in bomb-proof concrete.

Now the nation's historic documents are presumed to be safe from external enemies in case of war; how well they will withstand internal enemies in the McCarran-Nixon-McCarthy era is another question.

Pres. Truman had this in mind when he dedicated the liberty shrine in the National Archives. He warned "there are those who hate communism but . . . believe it is too dangerous to proclaim liberty throughout all the land to all the inhabitants."

A reminder that freedom needs fighting for is contained in two contradictory rulings last week of the U. S. Supreme Court.

On the one hand, the justices struck down a most extreme version of the so-called non-Communist oath laws enacted in several states—a test oath for teachers and state employes in Oklahoma.

Yet on the same day the high court nodded at the use of wire-tapping evidence in state courts. (See Page 8.)

The familiar instruments of tyranny, in the words of the late Justice Brandeis, "are but puny instruments of tyranny and oppression when compared with wiretapping."

But the court ignored the law—wiretapping is supposedly outlawed by the Federal Communications Act—and its own decisions banning use of evidence obtained by wiretappers in federal court to allow its use in state trials.

This decision lends weight to the recent comment of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther that "freedom is not a luxury; it is a weapon to fight with, a tool to build with."

Six Months To Go

Speaking of the state of civil liberties, Sen. McCarthy agrees with predictions that he'll soon be gunning for President-elect Eisenhower and his GOP Administration. The junior Senator from Wisconsin last week said he plans to "start investigating the Republican Administration within six months or a year" for possible Communist infiltrators. Presumably they'll be wearing "respectable Republican cloth coats."

Wiser Words

A few weeks ago, when Eisenhower headquarters were located on almost every downtown block in voteless Washington, big advertising posters in their windows shouted: "If you don't want your boy to go to Korea, vote Republican."

Now that President-elect Eisenhower has returned from his "I shall go to Korea" trip, and the war goes on, he is talking more honestly to the American people. He says, for example, that "there can be no simple formula for bringing a swift, victorious end to this war."

All of which parallels the words of Adlai Stevenson when he was talking sense and refusing to play politics with the people's fears.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes.

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada.

Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV December 22, 1952 No. 51

Merry Christmas To All

In Other Words

The Cost Of The Casual Era

(Suburban life and early marriages, in America's most casual era, are ruining the high-style dress business, Solomon Barkin, research chief for the CIO Textile Workers, said in a recent interview in This Week Magazine section of the New York Herald Tribune.)

By CLIVE HOWARD

THE MODERN American woman, according to Solomon Barkin, is a terrible problem.

Solomon Barkin is a big, loose-limbed, earnest man who is research chief for the CIO Textile Workers Union. It is his job to keep a constant eye on the state of the clothing business, which means more or fewer jobs for the textile workers—and what he sees nowadays often gives him cause for pause.

"It's the post-war trend," Barkin said. "Cosmetic sales haven't fallen; if anything they're going up. I haven't heard of any mass bankruptcies among beauty shops, and the home permanent industry is just about the biggest success story of the decade. It's just that women nowadays don't feel they have to have a lot of clothes to put on their backs to be in the swim. That may be mixing metaphors a little, but that's the way it is.

"Take the suburban housewife. In the morning she puts on a skirt. Over it she throws a smock—that's a big item in clothing sales nowadays, the smock—and she's ready for her housework. Or if she hasn't too much work to do and she thinks somebody might drop in, she wears a brunch coat over the skirt. That's a kind of three-quarter length housecoat. Looks pretty good, especially when it has gold designs on it.

"In the afternoon she's got a little fancy shopping to tend to, or a bridge party or something. So what does she do? She takes off the smock and puts on a blouse or sweater. Or one of her husband's old shirts—even that's considered perfectly respectable for most purposes nowadays.

"Then she combs her hair and does a careful job with lipstick and vanity case. She feels dressed up just by putting a new face on. That's all that today's customs require."

What does the war have to do with it?

"Well, the dressmaking industry really got started during the twenties. Before that everything was mostly done by hand, by local dressmakers and seamstresses. Then came the machine-made dress. It was cheaper, lasted longer and gave you your choice of just about anything you wanted at any price you wanted to pay.

"Women liked dresses in those days and snapped them up. It was an era of city living. The suburbs didn't amount to much as yet. There weren't too many autos or too many commuters. Life was much more formal than nowadays. If you had a car, you used it to visit friends or just go out for a Sunday drive—and you dressed up to do it. The movies were the biggest form of entertainment—and that meant dressing up again.

"People weren't marrying so young in those days. Women stayed single longer and in a sense were competing for the attention of men. That meant dressing up. I call it 'display competition'—and all fashion is really display.

"The dress industry even grew during the depression. Clothing was cheap; you could afford it even if you couldn't afford anything else."

"THIS IS the most informal and casual era in the history of American clothes. Even the wealthiest people are dressing casually; it's the first time they've copied a style from the lower income group, rather than vice versa."

I was beginning to feel a little sorry for Barkin's workmen in the textile industry, not to mention the businessmen who hire them, and I said so. Barkin grinned.

"Don't worry; we'll lick the problem yet," he advised me. "The real trouble is that the industry just hasn't caught up with trends; it didn't realize what was happening. One of these days the industry will start making clothes designed for our times—and you'll see that there's some life in it yet.

"Besides, who can say how long a trend will last? You know who the most fashion-conscious women in America are today? You may not believe it, but they're the teen-agers. The bobby-sox era is dying. Then teen-agers are taking to quilted dresses and crinolined party dresses with layers of petticoats underneath. They're more high-style conscious today than their mothers—and who knows what will happen when they get a little older?"

CIO's Christmas Message—

'Never Before Has Peace Been So Precious'

Fundamental "principles of religious freedom, political liberty and the brotherhood of man" were reaffirmed by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey in CIO's Christmas greetings to workers of other countries. A digest of his Voice of America world-wide broadcast on Christmas Eve follows.

By JAMES B. CAREY

MORE SOLEMNLY, more reverently, more hopefully than ever before, Americans this year approach the birthday of the "Prince of Peace"—because never before has peace been so precious an inspiration and so urgent a need for all humanity.

The Prince of Peace, whose birthday we celebrate on Christmas, brought to us more than a message of "peace on earth." He taught us that the peace we seek can be won through a brotherhood of man under God.

It is the hand of brotherhood and peace that American workers extend—in this Christmas season of 1952—to our brothers and sisters in all nations. to working men and women all over the world.

Too often in these turbulent times we incline to think of brotherhood and peace as abstractions—as ideals rather than realities. But wherever democratic trade unionism exists in the world, brotherhood becomes a living reality—with a day-to-day meaning. More than any other single thing, democratic unionism is "fraternity in action." If any principle lies at the root of democratic unionism it is the affirmation: "Yes, we are our brothers' keepers!"

But we live in a world today where greed, hatred and the lust for power are concentrated on the suppression of brotherhood. We live in a world in which a small group of tyrants—controlling the lives of millions of men and women—are determined to destroy everything that religion teaches us and that unionism teaches us about the fraternity of man.

We must, therefore, understand anew the monumental meaning—and the strength—that reside in the word "fraternity." We must ask ourselves—with fresh emphasis—"Why is it that totalitarianism, more than anything else, fears and hates the idea of brotherhood?"

The six million members of the CIO have dedicated and re-dedicated their organization to the spirit and the practice of brotherhood.

But we are brothers not simply to the men and women of the American labor movement. We are brothers to the millions of free workers in Europe, Asia, Africa and in our own hemisphere who are joined with us in the fight to preserve and extend democracy.

We are brothers to the millions of workers who are oppressed, enslaved or brutally exploited.

We are brothers to all men—wherever they may be—who are discriminated against because of their color, race, religion or national origin.

We are brothers to all men who are struggling—and who have struggled throughout history—to create a world governed by human dignity, equality and economic justice.

Democratic unionism—like peace—is indivisible. The strengthening of a free labor movement in Europe and Asia not only strengthens free labor movements everywhere else in the world; it strengthens democracy itself wherever it exists or is striving to exist. And we know that wherever democracy is strengthened, Communist tyranny and slavery are that much more weakened.

December also marks an anniversary for Jews all over the world, the celebration of Hanukah, or the Feast of Lights. With communism's bloody despotism now openly espousing anti-Semitism, the "Feast of Lights" should be a time of sacred importance not only to Jews but to all believers in freedom.

All of us—regardless of our varying faiths—Jewish, Catholic, Protestant, Moslem and others—might well take this holy period of the year as a personal time of rededication to the principles of religious freedom, political liberty and the brotherhood of man.

We of the CIO and of the American labor movement pledge ourselves not only to the realization of these goals. We pledge ourselves to the achievement of these goals by our solidarity with democratic unions everywhere in the world—and by standing shoulder-to-shoulder, hand-in-hand with freedom-loving men and women of every nation, race and religion.

This is our dedication and rededication to human brotherhood.

Vigorous PAC, Education Drives Set By Texas CIO

By AL HEIKEN

AN AMBITIOUS program of political action, education and public relations for CIO in industrially-growing Texas was approved by more than 200 delegates at the Texas CIO Council's 16th convention in Galveston last week.

The convention directed council officers to lead an intensive drive—in the political off-year of 1953—to register all CIO union members and to build up grassroots political strength in preparation for the '54 congressional elections.

EXPANDED radio and television programs were authorized to back up the PAC program.

And a program of progressive state labor legislation—including higher unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits and redrafting and liberalizing of state labor laws—was projected for the Texas Legislature opening next month.

Like previous Texas Council conventions in Waco and Austin, CIO's Galveston convention was held on an unsegregated basis in one of the city's biggest hotels.

O. A. (Jack) Knight, a CIO vice president and Oil Workers president, told delegates the battle between democracy and totalitarians will be decided "not on the battlefields but on the wheat fields and rice fields."

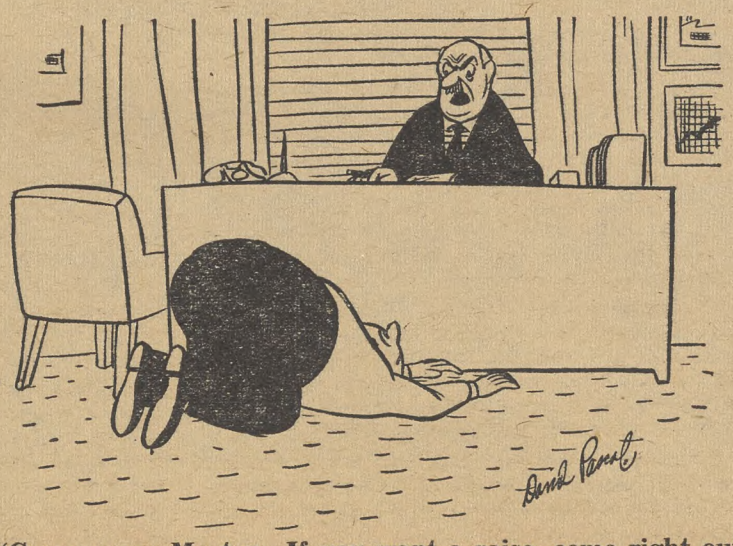
"THE REAL cause for unrest in the world today," he said, "is hunger."

Knight supported U. S. economic assistance to peoples abroad. And at home, he called for a strong fight—in the face of the incoming Republican Administration—for decent legislation, including replacement of Taft-Hartley with "fair and impartial" labor legislation.

Texas CIO heard a plea for expanded union organization among workers of Mexican descent from Dr. Hector Garcia, head of a Mexican-American organization known as GI Forum. He urged vigorous action to stop job exploitation of "wetbacks" and widespread discrimination against people of Mexican origin in the state.

Pres. Paul G. Gray, of the Communications Workers, Fort Worth, and Sec.-Treas. D. Roy Harrington, OWIU, Port Arthur, were re-elected. Elected to the new offices of administrative vice presidents were Roy Evans, Auto Workers, Dallas; James Smith, Steelworkers, Houston; and Charles Tipton, Packinghouse Workers, Dallas.

The convention was opened with a brief memorial service for Philip Murray, late CIO president, and closed with a memorial to J. J. Hickman, council secretary who was killed in an auto accident a year ago.



"Come, come Morton. If you want a raise, come right out with it!"

Secrets Revealed—

Maybe There's A Ford In Your Future —But The Profits Are Here And Now

THE VEIL of secrecy, which has for years kept the public from knowing concrete facts about the financial position of the gigantic Ford empire, has been whipped away by the Wall Street Journal.

In a copyright article, the Journal has exposed what it calls "the biggest business secret of modern times"—the sales and earnings of the Ford Motor Co.

Here's what the facts reveal:

- Ford, not Chrysler Corp., is the second largest U. S. automotive enterprise.
- Ford had 1951 sales of $2952 million and profits, after taxes, of $87 million.
- Ford took 11.2c of each sales dollar as profit before taxes last year. This compares with 19.9c-per-dollar for General Motors and 5.9 for Chrysler.
- Ford is the fourth largest U. S. manufacturer in terms of sales, being topped only by General Motors, Standard Oil of New Jersey and U. S. Steel. It overshadows, the Wall Street Journal said, such corporate giants as Du Pont, Swift & Co., Bethlehem Steel, General Electric, Goodyear and National Dairy Products.

REASON for all the secrecy, says the Journal, was founder Henry Ford. He wanted it that way and since only the Ford family were stockholders, he got his wish. Even the ascension of Henry Ford II to the Ford throne in 1945 didn't change the top secret classification on financial figures, says the New York newspaper.

In Detroit, "Young Henry" indirectly confirmed the Journal story. The obviously nettled auto tycoon claimed the figures were inaccurate but agreed that Ford was the second largest auto firm.

The Journal recalled that generations of financial experts have tried without success to crack the secret, with Detroit auto competitors even trying to work spies into the Ford command to learn the inside dope, which was a matter of public record for all other auto companies.

WITH "Young Henry" in command, the Journal says, Ford's sales and profits have zoomed as new, racier models have replaced the one-time standard black Ford. It reports:

"In 1948, just before the big model change, Ford had earnings after taxes from its vast properties of $119 million. In 1949, with the new models in the showrooms, they hit $203 million.

"For 1950, biggest sales year ever for Ford and most auto makers, Ford profits soared to well over double 1948 earnings—to $279 million. Earnings dropped back in 1951 to the $87 million figures, largely—as was the case with other manufacturers—due to federal curbs on auto output and the excess profits tax."

Besides its auto plants, Ford also owns both iron and coal mines, as well as plants making its own steel, glass, and plastics.

Big Firms Managing To Get By

BIG BUSINESS is doing very nicely, thank you. Final quarter profits are expected to be the best of the year, and dividends for the first 11 months of the year were up 3% over the same period in 1951.

Steel producers and fabricators reported declines in net earnings, blaming the 55-day steel strike and high taxes. But Chrysler and General Motors, two of the "big three" in the auto industry, ran up gains of 4 and 19% respectively. The electrical industry wound up 9% ahead of 1951.

Total dividend increases, both in terms of dollars and percentage, came in the petroleum industry, the Commerce Dept. said, on the basis of 11-month reports. Dividends were up $102 million or 16%, while the transportation industry dividend rate was up 13%.

Bowles Tells Gains—

Point Four Brings Hope To India's Millions

The Point Four program, which has brought new hope to millions of the world's depressed, will face the Republican economy bloc when the GOP takes over Congress in January. The following report on how the program has worked in India is from an article by Chester Bowles, U. S. ambassador to India. It is reprinted with permission from the New York Times Sunday Magazine.

By CHESTER BOWLES

ANYONE IN ASIA who watches Point Four in action soon comes to a challenging realization. Point Four is no mere program, however bold and new. Potentially, it is a revolutionary concept.

If we understand and nourish it, Point Four may go down in history as the most important single idea of our generation, the counter-revolutionary movement with which world communism could not cope.

To the hundreds of millions of long oppressed people in Asia, the new surging conviction that a better life is somehow attainable has deep revolutionary significance. It is the driving force and ferment that is changing the face of Asia, and which may change it even more profoundly in the coming years.

In cooperation with effective, progressive Asian governments, Point Four can offer these millions the hope of a better life, and the tools and encouragement to achieve it. It can guide their energies away from explosive frustration, and into tangible opportunities for advancement—bigger crops, more schools, literacy, tube wells, better plows, healthier children, and relief from smallpox and malaria.

POINT FOUR, in other words, intelligently administered and adequately financed, can help accomplish a dynamic, bloodless, non-Communist revolution from poverty, hunger, disease and ignorance. It is little wonder that this program is vigorously berated by Communist agitators who know better than many of us the almost unlimited positive possibilities of this down-to-earth, bullock-and-plow approach to mankind's problems.

Point Four is a tremendous challenge. America, with her vast resources, is the only country that could undertake it. But Point Four is also a great responsibility. We must clearly understand how this dynamic concept must blend with the indigenous forces with which it works, and the awakening drive for human betterment which is rapidly arousing the billion people who live in the so-called underdeveloped areas. There are several points that bear repetition.

CHESTER BOWLES

First, we must realize that Point Four is not a ready-made program that can be exported neatly wrapped, complete with a guarantee to cure the economic and social ills of backward countries. The objectives of Point Four can, however, be simply stated: the conquest of poverty, disease and ignorance through the democratic use of modern tools and technical assistance.

These broad objectives, however, must be worked out in specific terms for each country, and the specific program must be individually tailored to its economy, to its customs and culture, and to its government.

SECOND, we must realize that Point Four is not a charity basket program, but an approach to human betterment based on the most modern principle of social work—self-help. This approach, though sometimes slow and frustrating, is the only enduring way. For unless the people themselves participate, unless they see how by their own efforts, plus a little outside help in money and materials, they can build a better future, the advances gained will never take root, but eventually will lapse in apathy.

Third, in each country Point Four must encourage the broadest possible attack on human problems. What is needed is not model hospitals, model schools and model farms, but a mass attack on the problems of public health, literacy, agriculture, and of stimulation of local industry, built solidly on the participation of the people themselves.

Fourth, we should not embark on a Point Four program in the naive belief that it will enable us to buy favors in the recipient countries or even to win their gratitude. Indeed, the principal reason why some underdeveloped countries hesitate to accept American assistance is the fear that we may attempt to use Point Four to curb their newly won freedom or to influence their national policies.

There is only one basis on which America and the underdeveloped countries can grow closer together, and that is an honest, mutual desire to build a more secure and freer world. If democracy succeeds in Asian, African and South American countries, every American will have increased reason to hope for a better existence for himself and his children.

If we cannot be satisfied with this objective; if we insist on subservient gratitude and return favors, our efforts are doomed to abysmal, tragic failure. We will have lost not only the hundreds of millions of Asians and Africans who wanted to be our friends, but also the hope of a bloodless, democratic revolution.

India, with one-sixth of the world's population, has the most inclusive and largest of all Point Four programs, and here during the past year we have been trying to put some of these precepts into practice. The program that has emerged illustrates clearly the problems and the challenge of bringing the tools of self-help to a nation whose long oppressed millions are on the march in a revolution toward a more hopeful future.

INDIA'S economic difficulties in contrast with those of some other undeveloped countries start with a chronic shortage of agricultural products. Each year the government must spend some $600 million in foreign exchange to purchase the food necessary to maintain the diet of the people at its present inadequate levels. Additional millions must be spent to purchase cotton to keep India's great textile mills operating full time in supplying India's needs.

Thus, India's Five Year Plan (with the target date for completion Apr. 1, 1956) concentrates largely on increased food production.

The first Point Four agreement between India and the United States established a so-called Indo-American Development Fund to which the United States contributed $54 million. An additional $45 million was made available by Congress in June. The Indians are contributing nearly double this amount.

The American dollars are used to pay for the services of American technicians and to purchase equipment, supplies and services outside India. The Indian funds are required to pay for Indian labor, for materials available in India, and for transportation within India. In the last several months 11 specific projects have been agreed to by the two governments. All of these projects are now under way.

The most dramatic: a village-to-village attack on poverty, disease and illiteracy.

BUILDING UP of India's soil so as to boost food production is major aim of Point Four program. Here an Indian agricultural demonstrator shows farmers at Tirrur Kuppam farm how to transplant seedlings which help in fertilizing the soil when plowed under.

SEEDER BUILT in U. S., finished in India with local tools and equipment, is demonstrated by Earle Rambo (right), of Point Four Agricultural Mission, at tractor school in New Delhi. Program is joint undertaking of U. S. and Indian governments to raise living standards.

GOOD FARMING practices are encouraged by turning some Indians into instructors to help farmers increase crop production. One of Point Four's most noted "instructors of instructors" is Horace Holmes (left), one-time Tennessee farmer, shown discussing new type of seeder with some of his students.

Washington Report—

What GOP 'Hard Money' Policy Means To You

By DEWEY ANDERSON AND ASSOCIATES

Public Affairs Institute

THE EDITOR of Business Week predicts "a major business setback" before the end of President-elect Eisenhower's first term. Unemployment of seven million or more is talked about quite generally.

Yet, we have the assurances given by the Republicans in the closing days of the campaign that they would do everything necessary to maintain the highest level of economic activity and to prevent unemployment.

Can they "make good" on these pledges?

More than a hint at the answer to this important question comes from the appointees who will shape monetary policy. Both Joseph Dodge, the fiscal advisor, and Sec. of the Treasury-designate George M. Humphrey are believers in "hard money." To them Gen. Eisenhower's campaign promise to restore "frugality, thrift and efficiency" in government is lifelong gospel. They are loyal members of his crusade "to stabilize money."

The New and Fair Deals are accused of making money "cheap." As a consequence, it is alleged, we suffer now from "inflation." If we decrease the supply of money, goods will become more plentiful in relation to money, prices will come down and the "inflation" will be halted. This will no doubt benefit all who have such "hard money."

How is money made "hard"?

Most of the money we use consists of bank deposits. Deposits are "created" when a bank makes a loan to you or to the local businessman, or invests in government securities. Making money "hard" requires a less liberal lending policy. Loans are made more costly and the supply of funds is reduced by raising interest rates.

Our country is growing rapidly. The needs of the people for homes, schools and hospitals, roads, business services, personal services, etc., are far from having been met. This should be borne in mind as we determine upon any particular monetary policy.

For the effect of a "hard money" policy is to discourage expansion of productive capacity. Funds for such expansion become harder to get. If the policy is tough enough and lasts long enough, consumers' demand may be cut even below existing capacity and, as prices drop, they will handicap businessmen with high priced new capacity. This naturally discourages business expansion.

So, while the "theory" of making money "hard" and thus stabilizing its value seems most desirable, in practice it may mean restricting investment, limiting production and thus continuing shortages of goods and high prices.

Here's how the hard money policy may affect various parts of our society:

- Veterans. Makes a bank loan as costly and as difficult to get for a veteran wanting to build a home as for a syndicate seeking capital to build a race track.
- Small and New Businesses. Hits especially hard the new and small businessmen whose survival may depend upon access to credit on easy terms.
- Business. It raises business costs; forces business to seek economies; makes employers get every ounce of work out of labor, cutting out every job possible. It tends to force business mergers and eliminate competition.
- Government. The federal government is the nation's largest borrower. Making money cost more means making government services cost more. This may mean cutting down what the government does for the country. It could result in cutting back programs covering FHA and VA insured housing loans, RFC and small business defense loans, farm credit, price support, and conservation payments, hospital, airfield and highway construction grants, irrigation, and electric power development.
- Money Lenders. Hard money policies increase the incomes of banks and private money lenders.

Finally, any such sweeping policy as "hard money" isn't as easy to stop as turning off the kitchen faucet. Controlling its effects are mighty difficult. And hard money can be used so easily as an excuse for bypassing the democratic legislative process of determining what services to render the citizens, that the federal, state and local governments can be hamstrung without the people's elected representatives having the opportunity to express their views.

NLRB Faces Working Over By GOP

(First of a series on what the new Republican Congress may mean for key goverment agencies.)

By MILTON PLUMB

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board — chief target of the anti-labor forces who pushed the Taft-Hartley Act through the Republican 80th Congress in 1947—has already been designated for another working over in the 83rd Congress.

Sen. Taft (R. O.), due once again to head the Senate Labor Committee, singled out the board for legislative treatment last month at his first press conference after the election. In fact, the only immediate change in Taft-Hartley he then favored was the addition of two more members to the NLRB, increasing the total to seven.

Taft made no bones about his thinking behind the proposal, acknowledging that the action would speed GOP "control" of the board. Such an enlargement would repeat the basic pattern of the Taft-Hartley Act, which increased the board from three to the present five members.

It is significant, however, that Taft said he is seeking "no other change" at present. There were many post-election reports that more far-reaching attacks on the board were in prospect.

This apparent retreat is in itself an indication of the unhappy state of the present board, which has failed to resist effectively reactionary pressures upon it from industry and Congress. The CIO Legal Dept. has charged the NLRB with an anti-labor bias and, in its report to the last convention, said that the board had:

1. Effectively destroyed the bargaining power of workers in many plants.
2. Replaced stable labor relations with chaos.
3. Markedly favored the AFL over the CIO.

In any case, the move to enlarge the board will provide a vehicle for further assaults on the NLRB from its enemies in Congress, and the firmest kind of Administration leadership is likely to be needed to prevent damaging riders. The big question is whether it will be forthcoming.

On the other hand, preservation of the status quo—which Taft's statement seems to indicate he now advocates—in itself would be harmful to the board. The Taft-Hartley Act placed many discriminatory restrictions on the NLRB which hamper its administration. They must be repealed before it can operate efficiently.

This is clearly shown in terms of the sharp increase in administrative costs which followed the passage of Taft-Hartley. In fiscal 1947, the board's total expenditures and operations were $4,436,650, and that was considerably higher than all previous years. In fiscal 1948—the year of Taft-Hartley—they shot up to $5,538,507 and in 1949, the first full year of operation under the act, they reached $8,455,753. They have stayed above $8 million annually ever since.

The doubling in costs that took place in 1949 occurred before the post-Korean inflation. By holding the board at roughly the same appropriations level since that time, Congress has actually forced cutbacks in operations and a slash in personnel to below former levels. The real need of the board at present is not for more members, but for better members and an adquate staff to do the work.

Built-in Chaos

While much of this increase was due to the increase in labor disputes, and consequent greater board activity, which were caused by Taft-Hartley, a large part represents added costs of operation directly attributable to the inefficient procedures which the act compels the board to follow.

One example of the complex internal regulations which the act prescribed was its abolition of the review section, a common pool of lawyers which served the entire board. In its place, Taft-Hartley substituted instead a group of legal assistants of whatever number needed, 10 or 15 or more, for each board member.

The result is that, instead of one review section trained and supervised by its chief in accordance with general board directives, there are now in effect five separate review sections which must be supervised and directed by the board members individually. This means considerable duplication and overlapping of work. Such wasted effort would only be increased if the board is enlarged.

Still another example of Taft-Hartley's hamstringing of the board is its prohibition against any review of a trial examiner's report by any legal assistant before issuance. There are many other similar restrictive provisions.

No other agency of government has been subject to such highhanded meddling with its administration. In 1946, Congress passed the Administrative Procedures Act which set forth a uniform code for government operations in all agencies.

Ten years of study went into the formulation of this law, and the organization and procedures of the NLRB had been found to be subject to little criticism. The Taft-Hartley Act, however, singled out the board alone for still further internal regulation.

Taft-Hartley created a new and independent office of general counsel, and gave him the final authority to decide whether complaints of unfair labor practices shall issue. The general counsel thus can dismiss any charge, and there can be no appeal to his decision.

No other agency of government has such broad and unreviewable powers. That they can be abused by a general counsel not fully aware of his public responsibilities was demonstrated in the refusal of Robert N. Denham, first occupant under the act, ever to release his rulings.

Trouble Ahead?

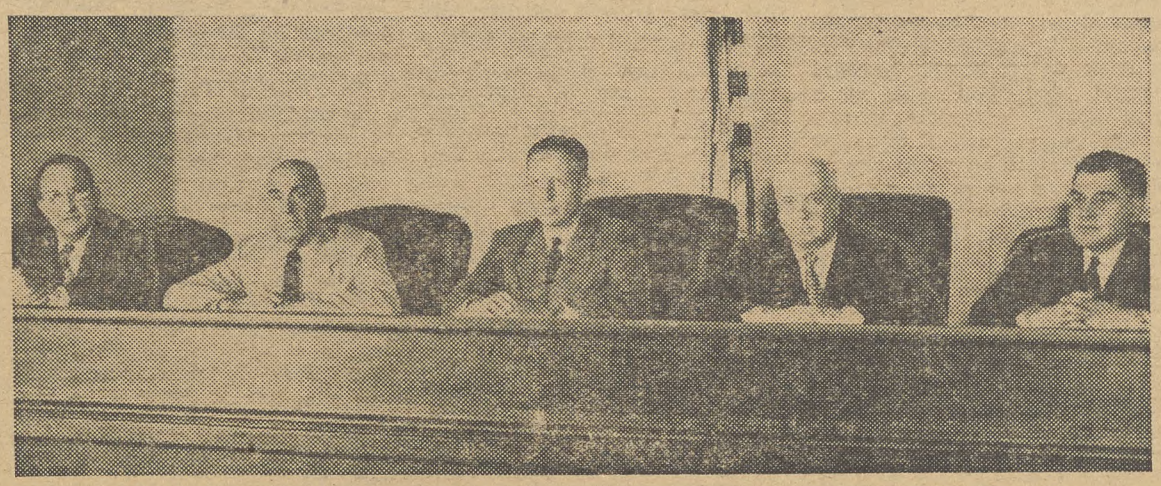
One of the first actions of the present general counsel, George Bott, was to make his decisions public. His readiness to place his rulings in the spotlight of public opinion, however, was a voluntary step, not required by Taft-Hartley.

Those familiar with the current labor scene realize that an effectively functioning—and fair—NLRB may be essential to the preservation of industrial peace in the crucial days ahead.

Both the CIO and the AFL are preparing new, intensive organizing drives. This will bring more work to the board in terms of representation elections.

On top of this, it appears likely that there will be a sharp increase in unfair labor practices among reactionary employers who mistakenly see in the GOP election victory a signal for all-out war on the unions. They will be stimulated in this by the probable leveling off of defense production and a lessening of the tight labor market pressures they have recently confronted.

In such circumstances, the NLRB's intended role of preserving the democratic processes in industry will take on even greater significance. It needs enough money to do the job.



UNCERTAIN FUTURE—National Labor Relations Board, target of Republican 80th Congress, wonders what will happen under GOP-run 83rd. Board members (from left): Paul L. Styles, John M. Houston, Chairman Paul M. Herzog, Abe Murdock and Ivar M. Peterson. GOP control of the NLRB is certain in next two years.

It's Illegal, But—

High Court Nods At Wiretapping

THE SUPREME COURT last week retreated a bit further from its one-time staunch opposition to wiretapping, the 20th century weapon of the cloak-and-dagger boys.

In an 8-to-1 decision, the court ruled that evidence obtained by wiretapping, in violation of the federal law, was still legally admissible evidence in state court proceedings.

Justice Minton wrote the majority opinion, which upheld the conviction of Thomas Schwartz, a Dallas pawnbroker, convicted of masterminding a Texas robbery. Evidence against him had been partially obtained by tapping telephone wires, itself an unlawful act under the Federal Communications Act.

Since 1937, when the court first ruled on this matter, wiretap evidence has been banned from federal trials. This decision was the first bearing on procedures in state courts.

The lone dissenter was Justice Douglas, who used but one paragraph to air his opinion. He said the wiretap evidence "was a search that violated the fourth amendment" to the Constitution and should have been excluded.

Previous decisions in line with the Schwartz decision, he added, "impinge severely on the liberty of the individual and give the police right to intrude into the privacy of any life. The practices they sanction have today acquired a momentum that is so ominous I cannot remain silent and bow to the precedents that sanction them."

The majority felt that because wiretap evidence would be inadmissible in a federal court, "it does not follow that such evidence is inadmissible in a state court."

"Indeed," said Minton's opinion, "evidence obtained by a state officer by means which would constitute an unlawful search and seizure under the fourth amendment to the federal constitution is nonetheless admissible in a state court . . . while such evidence, if obtained by a federal officer, would be clearly inadmissible in a federal court."

Reporter Magazine Says—

'Wiretapping Racket Now Freest Of Free Enterprises'

"WIRETAPPING, a furtive practice that recognizes no legal bounds, has become the uninvited, unsuspected third party to the private telephone conversations carried on by American citizens of all persuasions and beliefs from all walks of life."

That's the conclusion of William S. Fairfield and Charles Clift, whose full-dress expose of wiretapping begins in the current issue of The Reporter magazine.

The Reporter points out that Congress completely banned wiretapping in 1934 but that only one person has ever been prosecuted and convicted under the law. That conviction was 11 years ago.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Jackson, now a Supreme Court jurist, in 1940 summed up the reason why the Justice Dept. had not prosecuted violators.

"I do not feel that the Dept. of Justice can in good conscience prosecute persons . . . for a practice . . . engaged in by the department itself, and regarded as legal by the department," he said.

The Reporter article finds the 1940 reason as the only rationalization for the Justice Dept.'s failure to prosecute violators, for it notes that "wiretapping today is actually the freest of free enterprises."

While it is "highly expensive," the article observes, wiretapping is "indulged in with virtual immunity from federal prosecution by government agents, municipal police, political parties, business firms, witch hunters, divorce lawyers, freebooters, and blackmailers of all sorts."

IF YOU fall in any of the following categories, The Reporter article says, you are "fair game for wiretapping most likely for the specified purposes: a rich man for blackmail; a businessman for competitive information; a union leader for labor espionage; a politician for future attacks by opponents; a public administrator for advance tips on pending decisions; a philanderer for a favorable divorce settlement; a criminal for arrest and prosecution; a Communist or suspected Communist for a security check; a simple nonconformist for compilation of a dossier of his unpopular views; a member of the armed forces or a government employe for a check on personal associations and loose talk; any private employe for testing his efficiency and loyalty to the firm; a taxpayer for information on possible evasions."

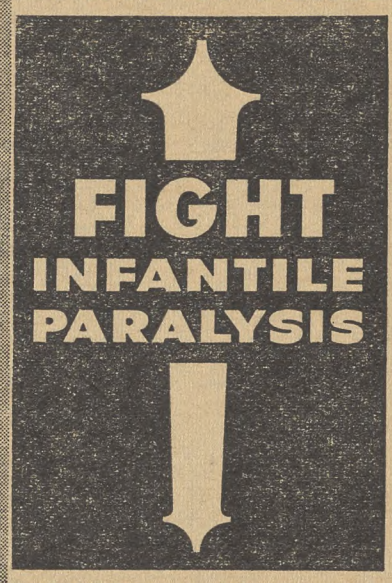
Wiretapping victims, Fairfield and Clift pointed out, are not only those enumerated, but anyone who might engage in an innocent or irrelevant telephone call with the person whose line is being tapped. "The most innocent," they note, "may find their private and sometimes very personal conversations recorded side by side with the business calls of a booker or a procurer."

'Puny Instruments Of Tyranny'

Here's what the late Justice Louis D. Brandeis thought of wiretapping:

"The tapping of one man's telephone line involves the tapping of the telephone of every other person whom he may call or who may call him. As a means of espionage, writs of assistance and general warrants are but puny instruments of tryanny and oppression when compared with wiretapping."

CIO Supports March Of Dimes



FULL CIO SUPPORT for the 1953 March of Dimes campaign to raise funds to combat polio has been urged, on the eve of the annual drive to be conducted during January in communities throughout the nation.

The worst polio epidemic in all time, during the past year, makes March of Dimes contributions by union members and their families more important than ever, said the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Murray's statement, drafted shortly before his death and released last week, said in part:

"As a trustee of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, I fully realize the almost insurmountable difficulties that we face as a result of this year's polio epidemic. Disastrous as this may be, it is also encouraging to know that it is the year of greatest accomplishments in the field of research. Scientists are convinced that if present progress is maintained, polio may be prevented in the very near future.

"The National Foundation has demonstrated and established its meritorious program, not only to the membership of the CIO but to the nation and the world as well. Its care and treatment program, practiced without discrimination, commands the respect of each and every one of us.

"It is therefore a pleasure for me personally and in the name of the CIO to endorse the individual and voluntary program of the National Foundation. I will recommend that our membership be as generous as possible to this great cause."

New York CIO Backs Adlai's Leadership

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council last week called on Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson to continue as leader of the Democratic party.

The executive board, meeting in New York City, adopted a resolution urging him to "continue to be active in framing the party's policies and program."

They urged Stevenson to lead the party "in the unfinished work of building a secure and dignified life for all Americans." His leadership, the resolution said, would "insure that the Democratic party will remain true to its traditions, the party of the common man dedicated to the interests of all the people, not the privileged few."

The board also outlined its legislative program for 1953, with emphasis on upward adjustment of unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation and disability benefits; a state minimum wage of $1.25, accelerated school construction, a state health insurance program and permanent personal registration.

High Court Tosses Out State Loyalty Oath Law

OKLAHOMA legislation requiring non-Communist oaths by teachers and other public employes was declared unconstitutional last week in an 8 to 0 decision by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The law was the first of many similar enactments studied by the high tribunal which was not upheld.

It requires signers to swear they are not members of the Communist Party, and for five years prior to signing had not been members of any body called subversive by the U. S. Attorney General or any "other authorized public agency" of the U. S. They also must swear to take up arms in defense of the country if necessary.

The majority decision was written by Justice Tom C. Clark, who has written previous loyalty decisions. Justices Hugo L. Black, William O. Douglas and Felix Frankfurter wrote separate concurring opinions.

"Under the statute before us," Clark wrote, "the fact of membership alone disqualifies. . . . But membership may be innocent. A state servant may have joined a proscribed organization unaware of its activities and purposes. In recent years, many completely loyal persons have severed organizational ties after learning for the first time of the character of groups to which they had belonged."

THE CASE arose after seven teachers at Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College were discharged on May 21, 1951, for refusal to take the oath, although their contracts still had five weeks to run.

Frankfurter called the Oklahoma law an "unwarranted inhibition upon the free spirit of teachers."

"It has an unmistakable tendency," he said, "to chill that free play of the spirit which all teachers ought especially to cultivate and practice; it makes for caution and timidity in their associations any potential teachers."

Black called test oaths "notorious tools of tyranny."

Higher Wages Seen In U. S. Of 1960

A BRIGHT economic picture for the United States by 1960 — with higher wages and without large defense expenditures — was painted by the National Planning Association in a full-length report released last week.

The report, prepared by the non-profit, non-political organization, warned, however, that a sustained, prosperous economy will not come automatically, when defense spending slackens.

Rather, the NPA said, it "will require a number of constructive adjustments in the attitudes and policies of both government and private groups."

"We need not be afraid of peace, if we can have it," the report emphasizes.

The Washington organization, "devoted to planning by Americans in agriculture, business, labor and the professions," believes the key to continued economic expansion lies in how freely the consumer spends his money.

Briefly, the report excludes the possibility of heightening international tensions, which would call for even greater spending for national security. On the other hand, it assumes there will be no sudden disappearance of the tensions between the great powers, with the result that free countries will continue to build and maintain military strength, but not at the spending level of the past few years.

Thus the report assumes it will be necessary for consumer spending to close the gap between the nation's productive and consumptive rate, making up for the lag in federal military spending. To help promote this spending, the report advocates:

- Tax reductions.
- Government long-range credit and interest policies to promote private investment.
- High-level import and export trade.
- Increased non-defense federal, state and local government projects.

"Steady high employment and expansion need not result in continuing price rises," the association warned.

But it favored rising wages as another source of increased consumer spending. "A rise in both wages and farm income appears essential," the NPA said.

They also pointed out that it is possible to attain full employment and that this is "by no means a utopian goal" as some ultra-conservatives have long argued.

LABOR-BACKED City of Hope exhibit at recent CIO convention was inspected by Pres. Walter P. Reuther (left) and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood (right), with Harry Lopatin, City of Hope field secretary. Convention urged CIO affiliates to back free, non-sectarian medical center near Los Angeles.

Moroccans Ask Help Of U. S. Unionists

THE MOROCCAN delegation in the United States last week asked the support of American trade unionists in the fight of North Africans to throw off the yoke of colonial oppression.

Tension in Tunisia and Morocco continued to grow in the wake of the murder of Farhat Hached, secretary of the General Federation of Tunisian Workers (UGTT) and leader of moderate nationalist forces throughout the Middle East.

The French, which have protectorates over both countries, were meeting protests against Hached's assassination and their own refusal to grant more than token concessions to the nationalists with gunfire, mass arrests of labor leaders, and concentration camps in the Sahara Desert.

Ahmed Balafrej, speaking in New York for the Moroccan delegation, charged the French with supporting the Communists in North Africa—especially in the labor movement—rather than yield to pressure of moderate nationalists.

The labor movements in both countries, sparked by Hached's leadership, have followed a moderate, pro-democratic, anti-Communist course. The iron hand policy of France, plus its gestures toward the Communist-dominated General Confederation of Labor (CGT), may turn North Africa from the West and lead it into the hands of the Soviet Russian imperialists, it is feared.

"The Moroccan working class, which has the active sympathy of the North African population," Balafrej wrote in his appeal for American labor support, "is showing successful resistance to both colonialism, which has been unmerciful in its use of armed force, and to communism, which benefits from all facilities accorded by the French in Morocco."

HACHED won the warm-hearted admiration of the American labor movement, and its strong support, when he visited the United States last April.

After a luncheon in Washington at which he was guest of honor, the CIO and the AFL—the hosts—issued a joint statement declaring that free labor "supports the cause of the trade union movement and the people of Tunisia" in their struggle against "rampant" totalitarian colonialism.

"We are helping the Tunisian trade unionists because their struggle against brutal colonialism is as much ours as the struggle of the oppressed workers behind the Iron Curtain against communism." the CIO and AFL said.

The statement was sharply critical of the U. S. "for demonstrating an unfortunate neutrality" in a case where "our basic traditions should range America on the side of the exploited." It asked the U. S. to reverse its position and use its influence to have France grant home rule to Tunisia.

UN Urges French Talk With Arabs

FRANCE was called upon to open negotiations for the settlement of differences with Tunisia and Morocco in separate actions in the United Nations last week.

The UN General Assembly overwhelmingly called for parleys with Tunisia to settle differences over that protectorate's demands for self-government. The resolution was sponsored by the Latin American nations. It was introduced after a more strongly worded proposal offered by 13 Asian-Arab nations had been rejected.

In a companion action on Morocco, the UN Political and Security Committee approved a similar resolution by the Latin Americans, to which Pakistan managed to add a little strength.

The resolution originally expressed the hope that "the parties will continue negotiations on an urgent basis towards developing the free political institutions of the people of Morocco." The Pakistani amendment injected the phrase "self-government."

The French boycotted debate on the Tunisian resolution, which was passed by 44 to 3 vote with eight abstentions.

European CIO News Says—

Productivity Plans Fail To Gain Friends For U. S. Among Labor

THE AMERICAN productivity campaign in Europe has aroused more fear of speedup among workers than anything else, according to a "random, unscientific" survey by the European Edition of The CIO News.

The survey was conducted among the rank and file of European workers, CIO visitors and American students and scholars.

"In general," an article in the CIO's European publication said, "most of the reporters said they had the feeling that whatever the productivity program is accomplishing in factories, socially it is not making the U. S. any friends down in the rank and file, where the U. S. needs friends.

"With a new set of sights, a different name and a basic belief in democratic unions, things could be different."

The study disclosed that to European workers, a productivity drive "either sounds like wage-cutting and speedup, or it has no meaning at all." In actual practice, improved production has often led to shorter work weeks, something the Communists have seized upon effectively.

"Despite an original willingness to cooperate in the program," the article said, "many people in the free trade unions now say that until now the productivity program has acted to lower costs and increase profits without lowering prices or raising wages . . .

"DESPITE the publicity about the American features of the productivity program, it is actually chiefly run by European employers with employers' money, so that American participation serves chiefly to permit the U.S. to act as scapegoat for the faults and failures of European employers and as a whipping boy for the Communist party."

Americans, particularly, described their government as "naive," according to the article.

"Despite general recognition of the fact," it explained, "that cartels, employer groups and trade associations are responsible for the restrictive practices which have held down production and retarded the development of increasing productivity, these guilty parties are the very agencies chosen for the operation of the productivity programs.

"Workers, well aware of the restrictive practices of their employers, tend to be skeptical of programs that are not accompanied by actions on the part of the companies which would tend to show that they had reformed."

A lot of European workers didn't like the use of the word "productivity" because they connected it wth speedups.

"In operation, despite exhibits of new machinery and publicity about technology," the article recounted, "most workers feel that productivity inevitably boiled down to the introduction of a more scientific incentive pay plan than the preceding one, so that again no matter how the word is spelled it tends to come out as speedup in the workers' apprehension."

Unionists complained the planning is non-cooperative and has tended to end in a technician-run operation outside the collective bargaining relationship; also, that it does not recognize the fact that union know-how is as essential to the success of a program as managerial techniques.

"Requirements for qualifying (managements) for benefits," the article reported them saying, "should include the existence of guarantees for workers against loss of pay, security or working conditions as the result of a productivity campaign."

CIO people ask why it would not be possible to require of participating employers that they bargain in good faith with their employes as an eligibility provision for benefits.

The productivity program also was attacked for its failure to recognize that production is national in character, not the problem of an individual plant, and to consider specific social goals.

ILO Meets On Productivity

Sixteen experts from 13 countries last week ended a 10-day study of methods of increasing industrial productivity at a Geneva meeting called by the Intl. Labor Organization.

They represented labor, management and governments. Their report was not made public, but among other things, they said:

"The full cooperation of all groups (in increasing production) could be expected only in a society which accepted the principle of social justice and in which it was recognized that the fundamental purpose of industry was to serve the needs of society as a whole."

West Germany's Recovery Told By Steel Local's Chief

WESTERN GERMANY has made great strides in its recovery from the war but much work remains, according to Pres. Herman Stassfurth of Cleveland Local 2287, of the CIO Steelworkers.

Stassfurth recently returned from a 30-day survey of labor-management relations and Marshall Plan results in Germany. He made the trip as one of the CIO members of a U. S. labor-management team.

Unemployment is above normal in Western Germany, he found, and is "very high" in West Berlin because of the constant influx of refugees from East Germany.

"We visited 12 cities and were given the opportunity to speak with city, employer, and union representatives about production and living conditions," he reported.

"Most plants, with the exception of those in West Berlin, are fully operated. Some could do more if they had sufficient materials. The workers have to work nine hours a day for five days and five hours on Saturday.

"Skilled workers' wages range from 1.50 marks (a mark is worth slightly less than 24c) to 2 marks per hour. Unskilled labor receives from 1.10 to 1.50 marks . . . Taxes are very high, and therefore the take-home pay in most cases ranges from 40 to 60 marks per week . . . Prices are very high.

"Most Americans make the mistake of figuring the prices in terms of American money, but if one had to live in Germany on German wages, the difference in living conditions in comparison to those of the Americans is appalling.

"THE MARSHALL Plan and other American help has made it possible for the Germans to rebuild their economy. The stabilization of German currency has made it possible for businessmen and manufacturers to reorganize their enterprises. However, the German laboring masses have made the greatest sacrifices to make this recovery possible.

"They have increased productivity many-fold. Now the German trade unions are demanding their fair share of the national income and a voice in management as well. But they face the same opposition from the employers as American workers."

Joint Labor Rally In N. Y. Hits Soviet Anti-Semitism

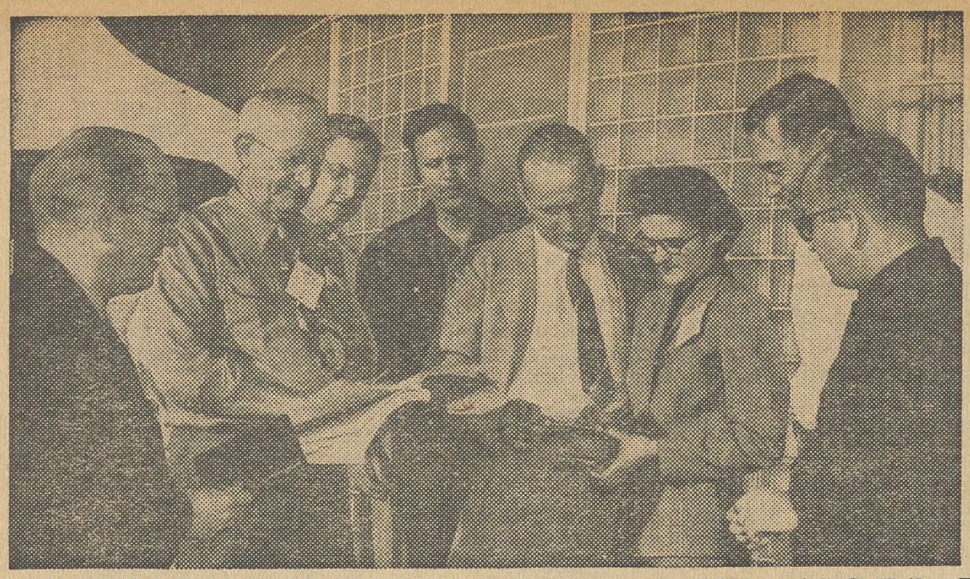
THE CIO this week joined the AFL and a cabinet member in participating in a "Free Labor" meeting in New York City to condemn Communist anti-semitism in the recent Czech purge trials.

Speakers at the weekend meeting included Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council.

The recent CIO convention at Atlantic City urged all free people to "condemn" the Czech trials as the "latest demonstration of Communist contempt for human decency" and called on the U. S. to press for action in the UN.

The meeting called on the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to declare the use of anti-semitism by Soviet satellites a violation of human rights. The gathering was sponsored by the Jewish Labor Committee which represents more than 500,000 Jewish trade unionists in the CIO and AFL.

Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), said anti-semitism is a growing factor in Russia's cold war against the western world. He charged Jews are being used in Czechoslovakia as "scapegoats to attract attention from economic hardships and all sorts of shortages of goods."



SOUTHERN SCHOOL—The CIO Education and Research Dept. held its last school of 1952 at the Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman. In the photo at the left a group of students are discussing problems with C. Friley Peterson, student council president (left); Joy Gibson, council secretary (third from the right), and Ben Segal, CIO associate director of education (right). In the other picture Andrew Brown, assistant director of the Auto Workers Community Services Committee, is conducting a class at the school, which was attended by unionists from three states.

'Danbury Injunction' Blocks TWU Walkout

A DANBURY hatters-type injunction has been slapped on the CIO Transport Workers, banning the 10,000 members of Local 234 from holding any meetings to discuss strike action against the Philadelphia Transportation Co. for a month.

And TWU last week postponed the "free ride" job action on the nine privately owned New York bus lines.

The proposed strike and the job action both had been approved by TWU's eighth biennial convention in Philadelphia in an effort to get a 40-hour work week with no reduction in pay. Both actions had been scheduled for Dec. 15.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the convention that the Philadelphia County Common Pleas Court had made a "tragic mistake in judgment in thinking that the route to industrial peace can be found through injunctions."

John F. O'Donnell, TWU's general counsel, termed the injunction "more sweeping than the injunction issued against the Danbury hatters."

(In the Danbury hatters' case of 1908, the courts imposed a judgment of $234,000 against the members of the union and ordered seizure of the homes and life savings of the individual union members to satisfy the judgment.)

In addition to banning any meeting to discuss striking, TWU and Local 234 officers were forbidden from talking to members of the local and the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia, was enjoined from permitting a meeting planned on the eve of the strike.

REUTHER and Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, attended a conference called by Mayor Joseph S. Clark, Jr., between the union and the company. Clark sought to speed negotiations by withdrawing opposition to higher fares.

TWU attorneys tried to overthrow the injunction, which was issued by Judge Joseph L. Kun, by appealing to the full Common Pleas Court and the State Supreme Court.

Haywood persuaded the executive committee of Local 100 to abandon the free fare action in New York as the "common sense approach" to industrial peace. Theodore F. Kheel, impartial chairman of the New York City transit industry, earlier had ordered the union to abandon the action as a contract violation.

TWU's plan to strike the companies when the contract expires Jan. 1 still stands, union officials said. Meanwhile, the union resumed talks with the companies last week.

In convention action, Michael Quill and Gustav Faber were reelected president and secretary-treasurer without opposition. As a result of a constitutional amendment, TWU's executive board named Matthew Guinan, Local 100 president, as executive vice president.

Reds' Latest 'Peace' Meet Lays An Egg

THE SOVIET Russian propaganda machine chalked up one of its worst flops since the October Revolution at the so-called Congress of the Peoples for Peace in Vienna last week.

It started Dec. 12 in such confusion that delegates couldn't even find anyone to register them, and amid such lack of interest that only a third of the 3000 seats in Vienna's Concert Hall were filled.

At the height of the sessions, one-third of the hall remained vacant. A parade billed as a gigantic demonstration of Austrians for peace turned out to be a march of 8000 shivering workers dragooned from factories in the Russian Zone. Some of the delegates unexpectedly revolted against censorship of their addresses, causing such turmoil that the Communists running the show were forced to concede that remarks during so-called debates did not have to be cleared in advance.

The congress was sponsored by the World Peace Council, one of the Kremlin's less concealed fronts. As expected, it turned into a sounding board of attacks on the U. S. by Communist policy-proclaimers and stooges, and an attempt to stir up trouble among western nations moving toward joint defensive action.

Oklahoma U. Scene Of CIO School

DR. GEORGE CROSS, president of the Univ. of Oklahoma, presented diplomas to two score pupils at the last school for 1952 conducted by the CIO Education and Research Dept.

The school, which was for the southwest region including Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma, was held at the university at Norman, Okla.

"The greatest achievement in the 60-year history of the Univ. of Oklahoma was the admission of Negro students," Dr. Cross said.

Negroes were first admitted as students at the university as a result of a Supreme Court decision two years ago. The CIO filed a "friend of the court" brief in the case on behalf of the Negro seeking admission to the school. This decision also enabled the CIO to conduct its school at the university as Negroes were among the students.

Robert W. McVay, CIO regional director, Oklahoma City, and Charles Smith, Steelworkers' sub-regional director, Tulsa, Okla., took part in a panel on "Labor in the Southwest." Ben Segal and Stuart Brock, CIO associate directors of education, were in charge of the school.

NLRB Action On T-H Oath Protested By CIO

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board does not have the power to punish a union because one of its officers falsely swore he was not a Communist, the CIO contended last week.

The claim was made by David E. Feller, CIO assistant general counsel, at an NLRB hearing on its proposed revocation of board services and certifications to CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 80-A, in Camden, N. J.

The hearing and proposed revocations grew out of the conviction of Anthony Valentino, Local 80-A business agent, on a charge of filing a false non-Communist affidavit as required by the Taft-Hartley Act.

FELLER told the board that the CIO, and with it the AFL, believe "that the board has neither the right nor the authority to revoke certifications issued to a union because an officer of that union has been convicted of filing a false non-Communist affidavit."

"We submit," he maintained, "that such action is not justified by the terms of the statute or its legislative history. Indeed, we believe that the far-reaching implications of such action are directly contrary to the expressed intention of the Congress."

The Taft-Hartley Act, Feller contended, gives the NLRB only the authority to require that an affidavit be submitted.

"The determination as to whether that affidavit was true or false, and the punishment in cases in which it was false," he said, "was left to criminal prosecution of the affiant who swore falsely."

TO PUNISH the union in case of a false oath by one of its officers would be to punish an innocent—and injured—party, Feller claimed.

He also pointed out that the affidavit upon which Valentine's conviction was based was made in October 1949. At that time, he recounted, Valentino was an officer of Local 80 of the Food & Tobacco Workers Union, then in the CIO and expelled on Jan. 15, 1950, because of its Communist domination.

In October, 1950, the local voted to bolt the FTA and received a charter as Food & Tobacco Workers Local 80, CIO. About a year later it became Local 80-A of the Packinghouse Workers. The conviction, Feller claimed, established nothing about the truth or falsity of Valentino's non-Communist oaths filed in 1950, 1951 and 1952.

Eugene Cotton, general counsel for the UPWA, told the board that "you're stepping out of your role."

"The remedy should be directed at Valentino," he maintained. "The union should not be punished."

CWA Sets Policy Rules On Strike Fund Of $500,000

THE NEW strike fund of the CIO Communications Workers last week pushed past the $500,000 mark, only four months after the 300,000-member union put it into operation.

The war chest, made up of per capita payments of 50c a month, is expected to reach the $15 million goal in about eight years. The specific allocations was ordered at the union's convention in Cleveland last June.

Last week the CWA named a seven-member committee to draft rules for administering the fund, which the union says is one of the few specifically-earmarked defense funds set up by a union for use in case of a strike.

Preliminary rules provide that the 700 CWA locals will each carry a small reserve, with the bulk of the money being held in a common fund at the international union level.

Under the program adopted by the convention, 50 cents per member per month goes into the fund until that portion held by the international union reaches a level of $50 per person. Collections then stop until the balance drops to $40 a member, when the per capita is resumed.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said the committee will report to the CWA's next convention. "Establishment of the defense fund," he said, "came from a realization that no union can survive unhurt in a show of economic strength without adequate finances. Under one name or another, a war chest is an absolute must."

Detroit CIO, AFL Back School Aid

CIO and AFL unions in Detroit are among 11 community groups which have supported school board proposals to increase taxes by $11 million a year to improve the school system.

Roy Reuther, CIO Auto Workers PAC director, praised the board's expansion program, saying:

"Detroit cannot afford part-time education or large classes if it is to produce the type of leadership the nation needs. Let's not sell our children short by halfway measures in our schools." (LPA)

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THIS PAST WEEK the writer journeyed to Philadelphia to address the Transport Workers convention. This union under the leadership of dynamic Michael Quill and capable Gus Faber has made tremendous gains for its members throughout the country.

Since 1937, when the writer assisted in setting up this organization, the workers have received wonderful improvements in wages, working conditions and security. Later in the week I returned to Philadelphia and had the privilege of presenting CIO Pres. Walter Reuther to the Transport Worker's convention. Pres. Reuther was received warmly and enthusiastically by the entire delegation.

Every effort is being made by Pres. Quill, Sec.-Treas. Faber and the other officers and members to bring about a settlement of the transportation problems that presently exist in Philadelphia and New York. The union is battling to establish the 40-hour week on the transportation systems in these two cities, a work week already accepted by other industries throughout the country.

I had the honor of attending and addressing the Philip Murray Memorial sponsored by the New York City Industrial Union Council, of which Mike Quill is president and Morris Iushewitz secretary. Pres. David McDonald of the Steelworkers and Pres. Joe Curran of the Maritime Union also spoke. The event was shown over television and people in millions of homes could see the love and affection we of the CIO held for our beloved leader.

Philip Murray was a great, good man, a humble man. He had a humble birth, he lived a humble life and he died a humble death. His was a personal humility—he was humble for himself. When the rights of others were involved, however, when men were being denied justice, then he was humble before no man. He was then, as many a coal operator, and steel baron and government official could testify, a mighty warrior. Phil Murray knew how to fight—whatever the odds.

I wish at this time to extend to each CIO officer and member a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. And may the New Year bring all of us the things we have wanted and have fought for in the years past.

★

REG. DIR. ROY ATKINS reports the following CIO representation election victories: Seidelhuber Steel Rolling Mills, Inc., Seattle, Wash., USA-CIO 29, AFL 20; Swift & Co., Spokane, Wash., CIO Packinghouse Workers 72, AFL 28, no union 1.

Vice Pres. Claude Ballard, CIO Woodworkers, reports the following IWA-CIO representation election victories: Druid Manufacturing Co., Tuscaloosa, Ala., IWA-CIO 29, no union 23, challenged 8; Gray's Lumber Co., Waverly, Va., IWA-CIO 99, no union 8; Trinity National Lumber Co., Eureka, Calif., IWA-CIO 50, no union 7, challenged 4; Van Dusen River Lumber Co., Carlotta, Calif., IWA-CIO 15, no union 6. IWA Organizers Frank Gordon and William Baker handled the last campaign.

Field Rep. James O'Reilly reports that the CIO Optical & Instrument Workers were victorious in a representation election at the American Optical Co., Schenectady, N. Y., by a 5 to 1 vote.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports representation election victories for the IUE-CIO and the CIO Furniture Workers: RCA plant, Los Angeles, Calif., IUE-CIO 151, IAM 41; Superior Sleeprite, Los Angeles, UFW-CIO 87, independent 74. UFW Rep. John McBee and CIO Field Rep. Syd Rose worked on this drive.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports the following victories: Eloy Federal Compress, Phoenix, Ariz., UPWA-CIO 29, no union 0; Arizona Bullet Co., Tucson, Ariz., UAW-CIO 11, challenged 3. The latter campaign was in charge of Intl. Reps. William Gillespie and F. L. Innis.

Reg. Dir. Joe Walsh reports representation victories for the CIO Utility Workers Union in four plants of Scranton Spring Brook Water Co., Gas Div., recently purchased from the Pennsylvania Power & Light Co. Wilkes-Barre steam plant 14 to 10; Wilkes-Barre gas plant 21 to 12; Sunbury gas plant 14 to 8, and Williamsport gas plant 18 to 17. CIO Field Rep. Frank Vrataric and UWUA Rep. Grant Brown handled the campaign.

★

THE CIO REGIONAL office at Charlestown, W. Va., reports that the CIO Retail Wholesaler Union unanimously won a representation election at the Samuel Levi & Son Furniture Co., Portsmouth, O. The organizing was done by Union Rep. Edgar Johnson.

Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood, CIO Shipbuilding Union, reports a representation election victory at the Hinton Equipment Co., Staten Island, N. Y., by a vote of 35 to 4 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that in a representation election at Engelhard & Koenig, Inc., New York, the workers favored the CIO Furniture Workers by a vote of 12 to 3 no union.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE-CIO reports the following representation election victories: Singer Mfg. Co., Elizabeth, N. J., IUE 5139, no union 64, independent union 1201, void 40, challenged 16; Smith Mfg. Co., Philadelphia, Pa. IUE 15, no union O; RCA, Montreal, Canada, IUE 684, IBEW-AFL 156, void 12; Taylor Lock Co., Philadelphia, IUE 71, no union 6, UE withdrew; American Metal Specialties Co., Philadelphia, IUE 225, no union 10, UE withdrew; Alliance Mfg. Co., Alliance, O., IUE 419, no union 13, AFL 367, void 1, UE withdrew; Ward Leonard Electrical Co., Mt. Vernon, N. Y. (runoff), IUE 585, UE 277, void 7, challenged 11; Woods Products, Inc., Rocky Mount, N. C., IUE 25, no union 11, challenged 1.

Growing Maryland CIO Elects CWA Leader As President

THE MARYLAND CIO Council elected its first woman president at the annual convention in Hagerstown the week-end of Dec. 13.

The robes of office fell on Mrs. Audrey Smid, president of Local 2120 of the Communications Workers, Baltimore. She was not entirely unaccustomed to them, however. Several months ago she was named president by the executive board when her predecessor, E. J. Moran, of the Auto Workers, resigned.

The convention was the largest in the council's history, with 169 delegates from more than 50 locals. Fourteen new locals, most of them Steelworkers, affiliated on the opening day and raised to approximately 75,000 the number of CIO members now represented by the Free State Council.

THE CONVENTION passed a resolution expressing its sorrow at the death of of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray after CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender gave a memorial address. The delegates observed a minute of silence, and each was given a picture of the late leader.

Speakers at convention sessions included CIO National Rep. James Leary; Henry Murray and Tilford Dudley, of the CIO Political Action Committee; William Welsh, of the National CIO Community Services Committee; Emil Starr, of the Jewish Labor Committee; Moishe Bitan, general secretary of the Israel labor federation, Histadrut; Reg. Dir. Boyd Payton of the Textile Workers, and Reg. Dir. Tom Starling of the UAW-CIO.

One entire session was attended by a group of girls from Hood College, Frederick, Md., who have been studying the labor movement and were seeking first-hand knowledge of how it works.

Twenty-two resolutions were adopted dealing with workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, the union label, organization and other matters of direct interest to the members.

Charles A. Della was reelected to his fourth term as secretary-treasurer. Three incumbent vice presidents were chosen again: E. T. Michael of the UAW-CIO, for the Hagerstown area; Nettie Mehaffey, Clothing Workers, for the Eastern Shore, and, Harry Castle, Rubber Workers, for the Cumberland area. A fourth vice presidency was created for the Baltimore area and filled by the election of Albert Mattes, of the UAW-CIO.

Principal speakers at the convention banquet and dance were CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CWA-CIO. Michael presided.

Carey ridiculed newspaper stories printed during the National CIO convention in Atlantic City that the CIO "was split wide open" by its search for a new president.

"THE TRUTH is," he declared, "the CIO came out of its 14th convention completely and devotedly united. The CIO finished its convention more determined than ever before to build a greater, a stronger CIO increasingly able to serve American working men and women and the nation as a whole."

Beirne paid high tribute to Murray.

"Philip Murray lives in the CIO," he said. "The greatest memorial we can pay to his memory is to build the CIO bigger and better. No more fitting tribute can we pay than to expand numerically and spiritually."

NEW OFFICERS and part of the next executive board of the Maryland CIO Council. Seated, from left, Sec.-Treas. Chas. A. Della, Pres. Audrey M. Smid, Vice-Pres. Albert Mattes and Harry Castle.

City FEPC Adopted In Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH has adopted a Fair Employment Practices Commission ordinance after months of concerted effort by CIO and other labor and liberal organizations.

The ordinance, which goes into effect on Jan. 1, prohibits discrimination in hiring, salary, promotion, tenure and firing by any business, union or association operating within the city limits.

Councilman Patrick J. Fagan introduced the ordinance, which is patterned after those existing in Philadelphia and three other Pennsylvania cities. It will be administered by a five-member commission.

Among those leading the fight for FEPC was Frank Shane, civil rights director of the CIO Steelworkers.

Meantime, the Pennsylvania CIO Council opened a campaign to raise funds for the 1953 campaign to win a State FEPC law. Pres. Harry Boyer urged contributions to the special fund, saying "the need is great and the cause is just."

Order For Your Union

Murray Memorial Now On Records

Recordings of the CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention memorial session to the late Philip Murray are available through the CIO Publicity Dept.

These recordings are available in 15-minute and 30-minute productions and are suitable for radio broadcasts on public service time and for use in union meetings. They include memorial address of Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson and those of other speakers.

Recordings are available in sizes and speeds for professional record players, tape recorders and home record players. Orders can be placed by clipping and mailing this coupon:

CIO Publicity Dept.
718 Jackson Place, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the Philip Murray memorial record as follows (check type recording desired):

	15-minute	30-minute
Broadcast transcriptions
(33⅓ rpm on a 16-inch disc)	☐ $6.50	$13.00 ☐
Tape recordings	☐ $6.00	$10.00 ☐
Home record players
(78 rpm)	☐ $8.00	$16.00 ☐
(33⅓ rpm)	☐ $6.00	$12.00 ☐

☐ Check Inclosed ☐ Bill Us Later

Name.....

Address.....

City..... Zone..... State.....

Organization.....

Young Fortunes Into Peanuts

Kroll Urges Real Curb On Big Political Spending

THE CIO Political Action Committee wants Congress to end the legal fiction by which political candidates spend young fortunes to get into office and then report their expenses in terms of peanuts.

It can be done, PAC Dir. Jack Kroll told the House Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, by a simple set of laws. In a brief filed with the committee, he recommended:

- That each candidate be made responsible for all expenditures in his behalf.
- That all expenditures without the written consent of the candidate be outlawed.
- That the candidate personally be held accountable for observing the limitation on campaign spending.
- That the candidate personally report all spending on his behalf.

Kroll pointed out that during the life of CIO-PAC "we have witnessed an enormous growth in the cost of political campaigns and we have witnessed additional restrictions placed upon the rights of trade unions to participate in politics."

The trade union political restrictions come in the Taft-Hartley law, Kroll observed. "While similar restrictions are, in theory, placed upon corporations, the equality of such restrictions is more apparent than real," he charged.

He called the T-H limitations "an unwarranted and one-sided interference with the rights of trade unions members to express themselves politically through organizations and means of their own choice."

Kroll lashed at so-called institutional advertisements, placed in newspapers and magazines by corporations. These ads, he said, were "by all realistic standards, political in nature, lacking only the name of the candidate."

In the 1950 Ohio senatorial election in which Sen. Taft was reelected, he said, "expenditures of this nature equalled or exceeded the amount reported spent for direct political purposes."

Kroll suggested the major weakness of laws governing the conduct of election campaigns "lies in their multiplicity and the opportunities presented for evasion and concealment." He called for thorough overhauling of existing legislation as well as the addition of new restrictions.

WHILE he offered no dollars-and-cents suggestion as a limit on campaign spending, the PAC director specifically urged that the limit include institutional ads which were political. He also urged a ban on multiple contributions from wealthy families, many times in the names of tiny children, to a variety of committees.

"I would limit to $5000 the total amount that any individual may contribute or spend for political purposes in any year," he said. "As a part of the same limitation, I would require that only citizens of voting age may make such contributions."

CIO-PAC, Kroll said, views the growing costs of political campaigns as "a limitation on the availability of the best qualified persons for public office at a time when the country requires the best its citizens can offer."

He pledged PAC's cooperation "to the end that elections may be kept as open and as free as possible."

Here's How They Evade The Law

Here's how political candidates evade the laws limiting campaign spending:

They form "numerous committees, all devoted to the election of the same candidate, but headed by different individuals," PAC Dir. Jack Kroll told the House committee probing campaign spending.

"This practice results in a candidate reporting that he spent less than $2000 to win election when actually several million dollars were spent in behalf of that purpose," he charged.

The result of this legal fiction, Kroll said, was to create "much of the cynicism with which American citizens view politics."

SEABEE OF THE MONTH is Russell J. Johnson, veteran member of the CIO Steelworkers from Phillipsburgh, N. J. On the job he supervises reinforced concrete construction. Off the job (inset photo) he's a good piano player.

Skilled Labor's Role Hailed On Seabees' 11th Birthday

THIS WEEK will mark the eleventh anniversary of the Seabees, the Navy's youngest component, famous for their fabulous construction performances during and since World War II.

Skilled workers, many from the ranks of organized labor, constituted the Seabees during and since the war. Their skill and ingenuity in advance base construction and their performance in amphibious operations won the Seabees a place as a permanent part of the Navy in 1946.

Typical of the Seabees is Russell J. Johnson, a veteran member of the CIO Steelworkers from Phillipsburg, N. J., who has been awarded the title of Seabee of the Month. He is serving as a supervisor for concrete construction reinforcement.

During World War II the Seabees were 250,000 strong. The Seabee force today is small compared to its World War II strength, but during the past year it has been employed in such far-flung places as Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Guam, Kwajalein, Midway Islands, Alaska, Cuba, Newfoundland and North Africa.

COMPARATIVELY few of the World War II Seabees are still in active service. Most of them returned to jobs in the civilian construction industry during the demobilization period.

The remarkable achievements of the "old Seabees" are an inspiration to the present Seabees, whose work in 1952 won the praise of high Navy officials.

Most of the Seabees are younger men trained in various construction skills at the U. S. Navy Construction Schools at Port Hueneme, Calif. The Navy is interested in the enlistment of older experienced men in the Naval Construction Forces.

Los Angeles CIO Gets Set For City Vote

THE LOS ANGELES CIO Council has already ordered its Political Action Committee into another political fray, thus underscoring the fact that PAC is a day-to-day activity of CIO.

The West Coast city holds its primaries for municipal offices on April 7 and its final election on May 26. Thus filing dates for mayor and other candidates are Jan. 17-31.

For that reason, Council PAC Dir. Henry Santiestevan said, local union PACs have been alerted for the first job—finding good, strong, liberal candidates, whom CIO can endorse and elect.

Candidates will be interviewed by PAC as soon as possible after the filing date, to learn their positions on the major issues, he said, pointing out that new municipal officials will directly affect such issues as rent control and housing, as well as many others.

Rep. Woods Denied Election Recount

A special House Campaign Committee has denied the request of Rep. Woods (R. Ida.) for an election recount. Woods, prominent in the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act, was defeated by Mrs. Grace Pfost (D.) by a 600 vote margin out of 100,000 votes.

Anti-Labor Chiseler Was Just That In Boston Postoffice

A CHISELING Post Office Dept. official in Boston is under bitter attack by United Postal Workers Local 51 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

He used his chisel, it seemed, to break the lock of a bulletin board and, with the help of a saw and hammer, remove a Local 51 bulletin critical of his personnel policies.

The chiseler is Asst. Supt. of Mails William P. H. Flanagan, in charge of the South Postal Annex at the time.

LOCAL 51, an aggressive unit of more than 1400 federal employes, has been conducting a vigorous organizing campaign to build one powerful union in the Boston postal system. The members took action against Flanagan at a meeting following his stunt with the chisel.

First, they adopted a resolution of protest which they directed Local Pres. John Bercury to send to all Massachusetts members of Congress, to GCEOC national officials in Washington and to the Boston newspapers, which gave it a good play.

They also instructed Bercury and a committee to call on the local Postmaster and ask him to investigate the incident. The call was made and the probe is under way.

The members in addition attacked anti-labor policies in the Boston Postal District which they said have seriously hurt morale. Flanagan, they said in the resolution, has exhibited a "contemptuous disregard for the well-being of employes under his supervision by refusing to heed protests of duly authorized representatives of Local 51."

In conclusion, they voted to put the whole question of chiseling and anti-labor practices before the incoming Senate and House Post Office and Civil Service Committees.

Speaking Of Corruption—

The following is the complete text of a memorandum to all members of President-elect Eisenhower's staff, which was posted last week in the general's New York headquarters:

"Sixty RCA portable radios were lent to the Eisenhower special train staff by RCA. To date eight of these radios have been returned.

"It is requested that staff members concerned examine their effects and their consciences and drop off at the business office any product of such examination. RCA was doubtless taking the calculated risk and expected a certain attrition, but an 89% loss is perhaps a little high."

Late reports were that there had been no returns, and a top Ike aide said: "I should have stood in bed before writing that one."

Alger Concedes In Michigan

Republican Fred M. Alger, Jr., last week officially conceded defeat in Michigan's close gubernatorial contest and a half-completed state-wide recount of votes was cancelled.

Alger's election means a third term in the Michigan state house for youthful, liberal Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

Still unresolved is Michigan's senatorial contest, in which Democrats charge fraud. Sen. Blair Moody (D) was officially declared the loser by 46,000 votes to Rep. Charles E. Potter (R). State officials refused a recount and a Senate committee is investigating the fraud charges.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

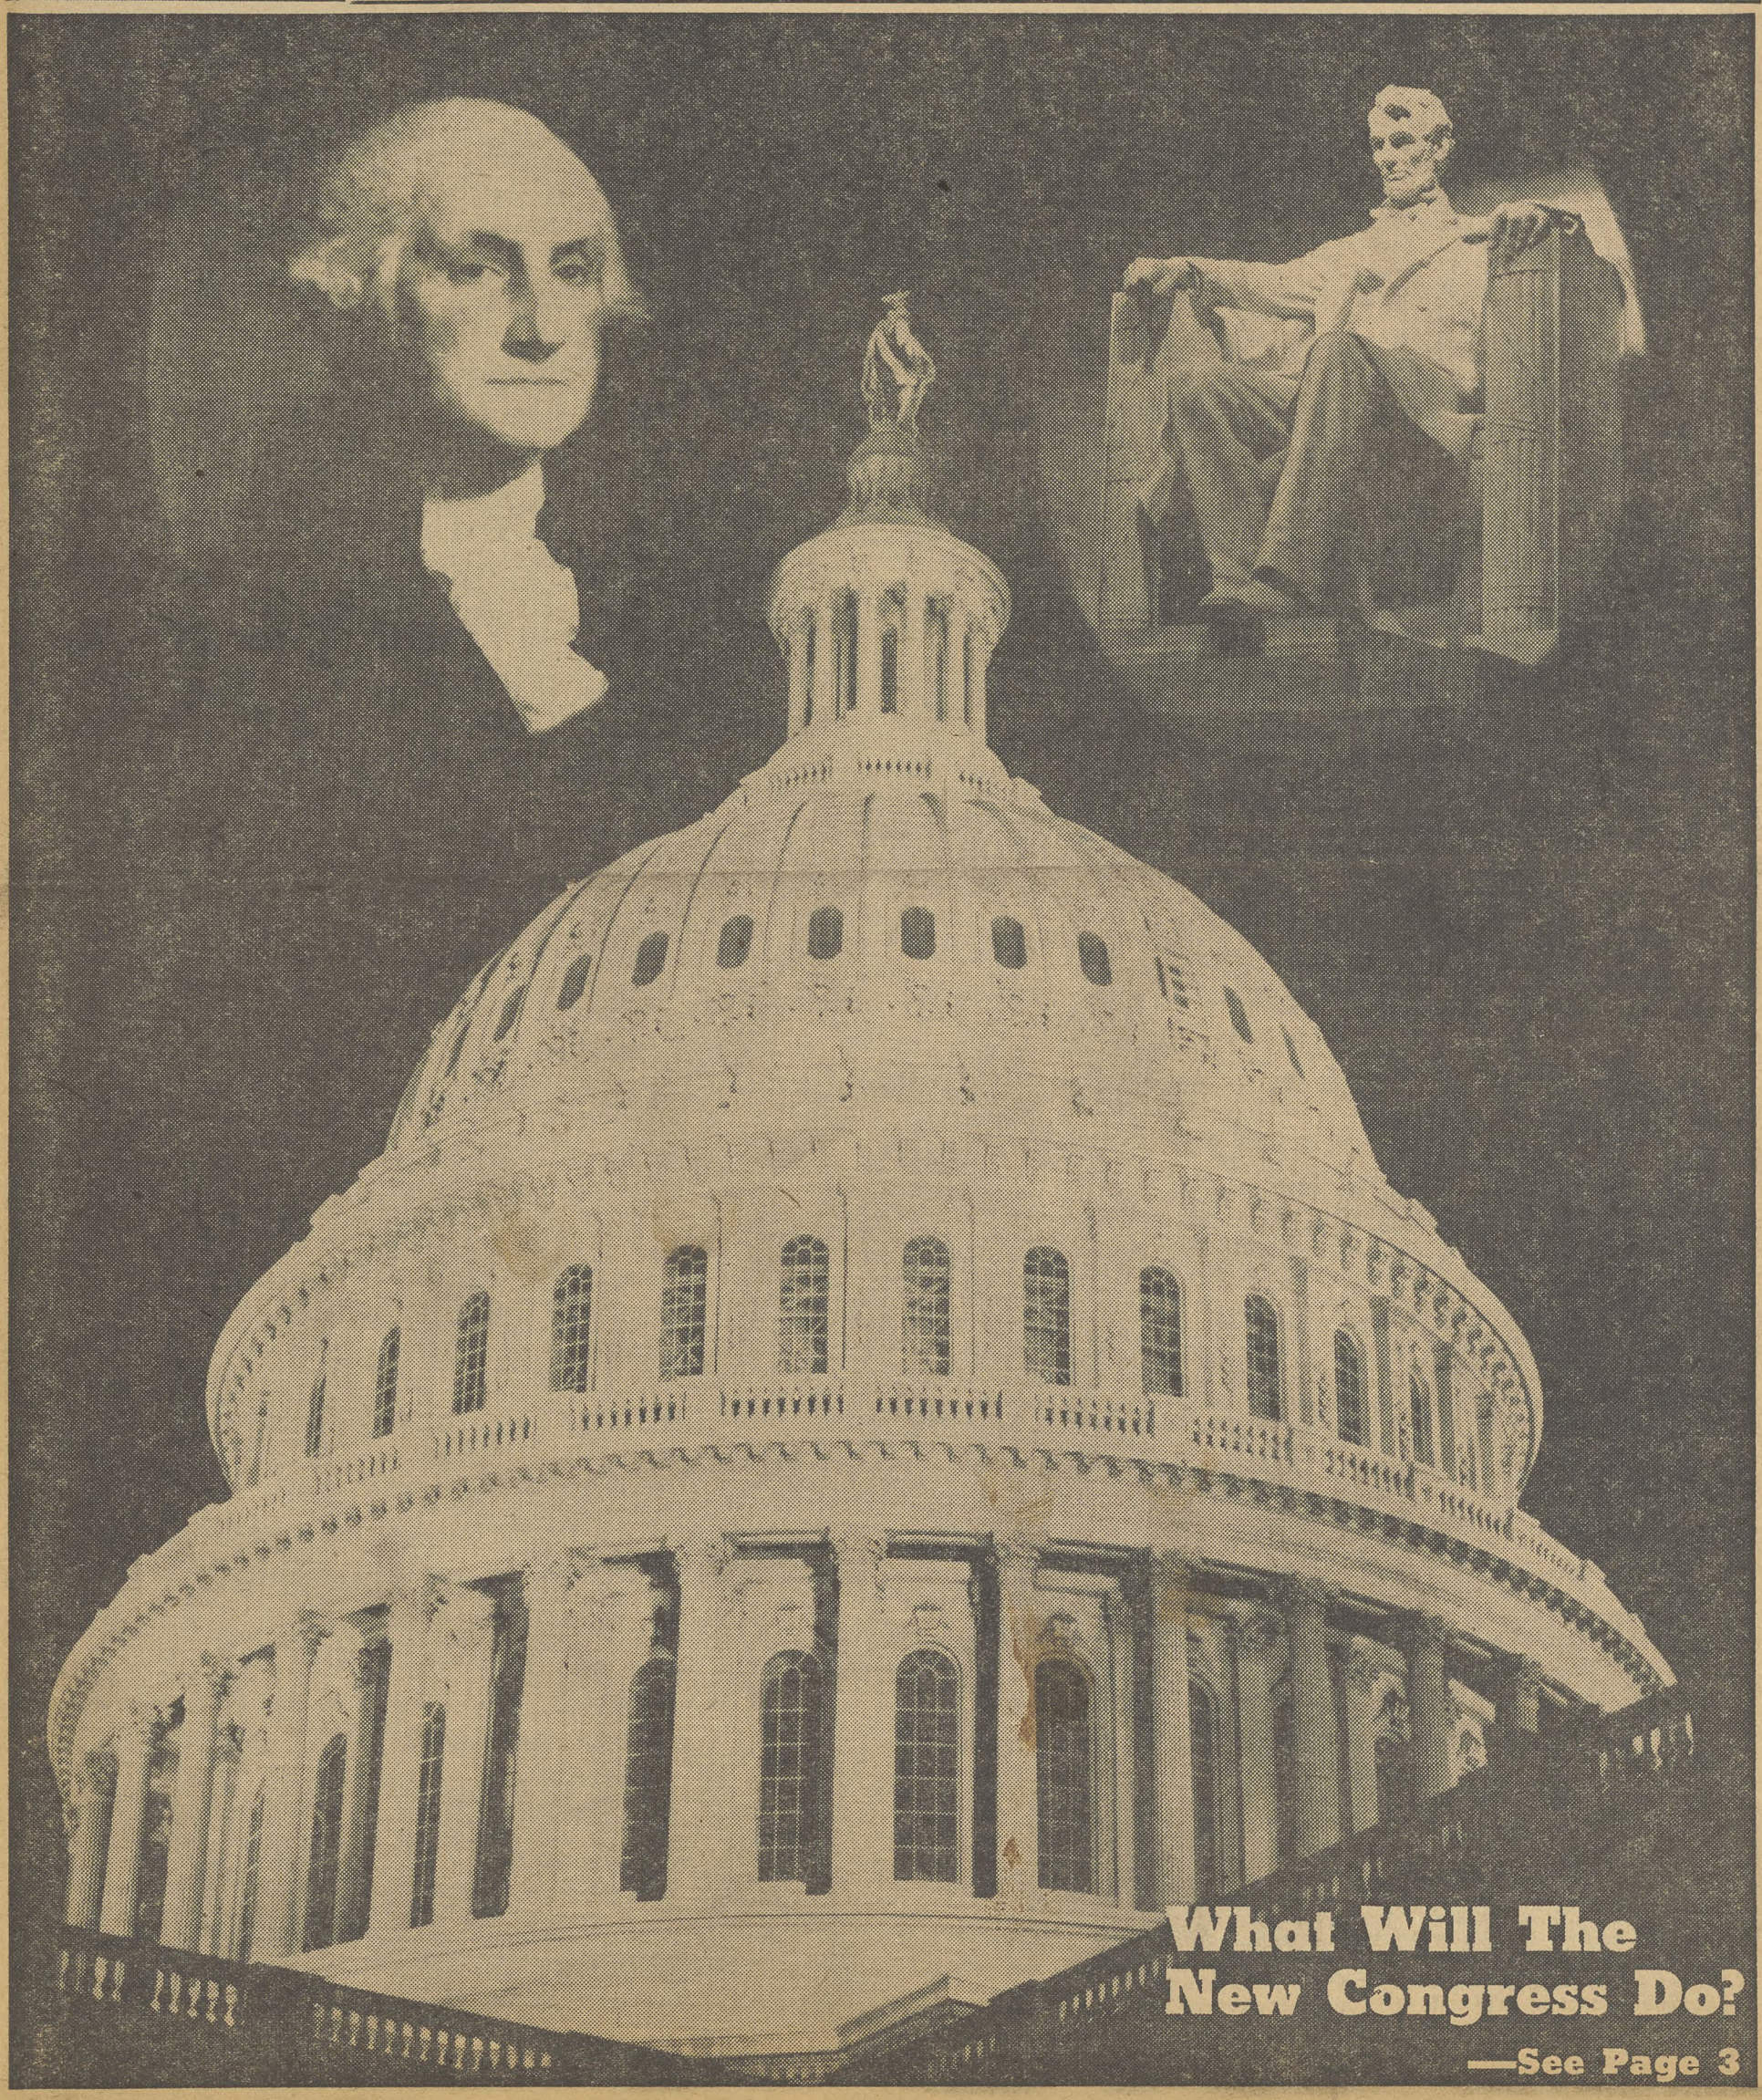
Vol. XV | WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 29, 1952 | 82 | No. 52



What Will The New Congress Do?

—See Page 3

Steel Test of T-H Delayed by Court

THE STEELWORKERS' case, testing the constitutionality of Taft-Hartley national emergency injunctions was delayed last week in Buffalo, N. Y.

District Judge John Knight extended a temporary restraining order enjoining Steelworkers from striking at the Dunkirk plant of American Locomotive Co. while he studied the union's arguments in the first major challenge of the law.

Judge Knight acted less than three hours before the temporary order was to expire, giving no indication of when he would rule. He made no comment on the contentions of the union or the government.

He said, however, that he had extended the temporary order so he would have more time to consider the legal aspects of the case in order that justice would be best served.

MEANTIME, the 1500 CIO workers continued to work in the plant which had been strike-bound for 107 days. The dispute, over wages and a new contract, also involves other American locomotive plants, where no injunctions have been sought. In those plants, the strike continued.

Steelworkers General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg had argued that the government's plea for an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction should be denied and the temporary order dismissed on two grounds. Goldberg contended:

- The emergency national emergency section was unconstitutional.
- But in any case, it didn't apply to the Dunkirk case.

Citing long judicial tradition, Goldberg said the law sought to confer on the courts duties it had regularly rejected as not being judicial. All Taft-Hartley used the courts for, he contended, was as a cog in administrative machinery over which it had no final control.

The Dunkirk case, the union told Judge Knight, failed to meet the two-fold test for national emergency strikes. The law says they must involve all of an industry or a substantial part, plus be a threat to the nation's health or safety.

The plant in question has an Atomic Energy Commission contract for nickel-plate pipe, and the Justice Dept. contended delay of this pipe hampered AEC schedules.

Before the Justice Dept. sought the injunction, Goldberg had told reporters the Steelworkers would take the case to the Supreme Court, if necessary. He indicated the union would seek the swiftest legal avenue, so there would be a determination of the constitutionality before the 80-day injunction period expired and the question became moot.

Bargaining Rights Of Local Revoked

The National Labor Relations Board, disregarding CIO arguments, last week revoked five certificates as bargaining agent in five Camden, N. J., plants held by Local 80-A of the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

The board acted because the agent, Anthony Valentino, had been convicted of falsely swearing to a non-Communist affidavit.

CIO Acts To Step Up Organizing

CIO LAST WEEK initiated steps to intensify organizing and increase the coordination of the organizing campaigns of its 34 unions and committees in 1953.

In a letter to all the unions and committees, Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, said:

"With the unfortunate death of our beloved Pres. Philip Murray, we now conclude the year 1952 and enter the year 1953 with a new president—not new in the trade union movement—Walter P. Reuther, who was elected by the democratic processes at our recent convention.

"IT IS essential now that we unite our forces behind his leadership and intensify our activities so that we may strengthen our unions on all fronts and be in a better position to advance the security of our people and resist any aggression that may be upon us.

"The main objective, of course, is the question of organizing the unorganized. We must, in 1953, devote ourselves diligently to this task. There is still much to be done.

"That is why the unity of our forces is so paramount. All must cooperate in this task of organizing the unorganized which will make our unions strong."

Haywood asked each union and committee planning an organizing campaign to furnish him with vital information.

"Following the receipt of this information, it is anticipated that we will have conferences with the organizations involved to see what can be done to increase the membership of all our unions," Haywood wrote.

TRIBUTE WAS PAID to Philip Murray by CIO officials at a memorial meeting held by the New York City CIO Council. From the left, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union; Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, and Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers.

New York CIO Mourns Murray In TV Session

CIO LEADERS pledged themselves at a memorial meeting held by the New York City CIO Council to build an even stronger CIO as a living tribute to Philip Murray.

Speakers included Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president; Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers; Joseph Curran, CIO vice president and Maritime Union president; Michael Quill, CIO vice president, Transport Workers president and Council president, and Morris Iushewitz, Council secretary-treasurer.

Television sound pictures of the service were broadcast by WJZ-TV on Dec. 21.

HAYWOOD told of Murray's deep interest in the welfare of children everywhere. The CIO executive vice president suggested a fitting, living memorial to Murray—together with the further dedication of the CIO to the work he did on behalf of the labor movement—would be a foundation to help children regardless of race, color, creed or nationality.

McDonald spoke of Murray's great contribution to the labor movement and to his country. He voiced his determination to continue the work of Murray, who was president of the CIO and the Steelworkers, so that the late leader shall not have built in vain.

"Philip Murray left us a strong, powerful organization," Curran said, "which stands as a monument to his own strength, devotion and beliefs. We must do everything in our power to preserve his power, to build our organizations and keep them growing from year to year."

Quill and Iushewitz expressed the sorrow of thousands of CIO members in New York City at the loss of their leader. Quill pledged that the CIO in New York City would continue to work for the betterment of workers to whom Murray had devoted his life.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther sent a message regretting his inability to attend the meeting.

CIO Fights Bias In Texas, Michigan

CIO AFFILIATES last week waged war on discrimination in the North and the South.

The CIO Auto Workers reported three successful developments in its campaign against hiring discrimination by Detroit area employers:

- In a letter of reply to Walter P. Reuther, CIO and Auto Workers president, Gov. Williams of Michigan pledged himself to introduce again Fair Employment Practices legislation.
- Detroit Mayor Cobo and Common Council Pres. Miriani—in reply to a letter from Reuther to the council—said they are referring discriminatory hiring charges to the Detroit Interracial Committee for investigation and for report to the Mayor and the council.
- Detroit area UAW locals reported increased hiring of Negro women since the UAW drive began Nov. 21.

The Texas CIO Council at its recent convention at Galveston unanimously adopted a resolution calling for "the immediate elimination" of all forms of racial segregation in the Texas public schools.

The resolution branded segregation as a violation of "the fundamental Christian belief in the dignity and equality of all human beings."

It charged that school segregation "has resulted in the systematic denial of equal education for many generations of Negro children."

Union Leaders On Board Of HST Library

A DRIVE to raise $1.5 million for a public library building to house Pres. Truman's papers got under way last week with the naming of some 60 trustees and an advisory panel of five historians and scholars.

The CIO is well represented on the new board of trustees, announced by Tom L. Evans, secretary of the Harry S. Truman Library, Inc., after a conference with the President.

Trustees include CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, David J. McDonald, acting president of the CIO Steelworkers, and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Reuther and George Meany, AFL, were named to serve on a 10-member executive committee chosen by the board of trustees. Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson was named honorary chairman of the board.

The President will donate land that is now part of the family farm at Grandview, Mo., for use as the site for the library, which will become both an archives and research center for the Truman papers.

Living Costs Inch Up; BLS Plans New Index In '53

THE COST of living inched up again for the second consecutive month in the 30-day period ending Nov. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The "old" consumer price index, under which cost of living adjustments are made according to most CIO contracts with escalator clauses, rose from 191.5 on Oct. 15 to 191.6 on Nov. 15.

The increase was approximately one-tenth of one per cent. The new figure compares with an all-time record high of 192.4 on July 15 of this year.

The so-called "new" index figure—described as the "adjusted" figure by the BLS—reached a record high of 191.1, compared to 190.9 on Oct. 15.

Both the "old" and the "adjusted" figures for December—which will be issued in January—will be the last. Thereafter, the BLS will issue a new set based on a new market basket containing a number of items not now included, and based on 1949-50 retail costs instead of the present 1935-39 base.

In his report written for the National CIO convention, the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray pointed out that the change-over "will generally require bargaining even under continuing agreements."

His successor, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, said the CIO Auto Workers, which he also heads and which pioneered in escalator contract clauses, "will not accept an automatic change-over to the new index."

Here are the cumulative figures for the "old" BLS Index:

Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4
1943 monthly average	123.6
1944 monthly average	125.5
1945 monthly average	128.4
1946 monthly average	139.3
1947 monthly average	159.2
1948 monthly average	171.2
1949 monthly average	169.1
1950 monthly average	171.2
1951 monthly average	185.9
1952 monthly average	190.7

Period		Index
1950:	June 15	170.2
1951:	June 15	185.5
1952:	Jan. 15	190.2
	Feb. 15	188.3
	Mar. 15	188.4
	Apr. 15	189.6
	May 15	190.4
	June 15	191.1
	July 15	192.4
	Aug. 15	192.3
	Sept. 15	191.4
	Oct. 15	191.5
	Nov. 15	191.6

Nathan Broadcasts Back On Air Jan. 3

"Robert Nathan Reports," the CIO radio portion of the American Broadcasting System's labor-management series, returns to the air waves Jan. 3.

The 15-minute broadcast, airing the views of Nathan, an outstanding economist, will be carried over the entire ABC network from 6:45 to 7 p.m. every Saturday night for a 13-week period.

The New Congress

Will It Measure Up In New Year?

By MILTON PLUMB

A PRAYERFUL HOPE is in the hearts of the American people and a practical question in their minds as the Republican 83rd Congress opens this week in Washington.

The hope, bringing with it universal well-wishes for the Congress, is that the new legislature will rise to the greatness it must show if it is to meet its heavy responsibilities in the critical days ahead.

The question, on the other hand, is whether, in the light of the record of many of its leaders and members, the 83rd Congress will be able to do so.

In campaign pledges and post-election statements, President-Elect Eisenhower has outlined and promised a program under which the social gains of the last 20 years will be not merely maintained, but improved and extended.

Under the Constitution's division of executive and legislative functions, however, the President only proposes. Congress has the final say. Congressional leaders, accordingly, may play a more decisive role than the new President in shaping the nation's future.

Those who doubt the ability of the new Administration to achieve its announced goals point to the blunt fact that the leaders of the 83rd Congress were tested once before and found wanting. They will have to shift sharply from their past practices if America is to move ahead.

TOP GOP leadership in the House will be the same as when Republicans were in control in 1947 and 1948. Reps. Martin (Mass.), Halleck (Ind.) and Arends (Ill.) once again will serve as speaker, majority leader and whip, respectively, and 11 of the 19 standing House committees will have the same chairmen as in the "terrible" 80th Congress.

Although altered more, the Senate top policy posts go to the same men who helped pile up the black record of reaction in the last GOP Congress.

There are a number of reasons, however, for hoping GOP leaders in Congress may now show more responsibility than in the past. These include:

1. A Republican President in the White House. This time blame for Congress-caused shortcomings will reflect directly upon the party in power.

2. The slim majority in Congress. By giving the GOP a bare margin of control in both House and Senate despite Eisenhower's landslide, the American people showed again their distrust of Republican "old guard" policies.

KING OF SWAT—Republican Joe Martin displays some of the gavels he will pound when he takes over as Speaker of the House, as the 83rd Congress convenes Jan. 3. He had the same job in the "Awful 80th."

3. The possibility that even the "old guard" has learned from experience. It is hard to believe GOP leaders will stupidly not recognize that a repetition of their earlier onslaughts against labor and liberal forces will again mean certain rejection of their leadership in 1954.

4. Eisenhower's great personal popularity and influence. Although Sen. Taft (R. O.), probable new majority leader, has already challenged it in his protest against Martin Durkin's selection for Secretary of Labor, he has nevertheless said he wants to be "cooperative."

Against these forces working toward a more moderate and perhaps even constructive approach, however, must be weighed factors moving the other way. Foremost are blind spots in the basic philosophy of government set forth in the GOP platform and the heavy special interest pressures to which the new Congress will be subjected.

On the basis of past performance, lobbyists for big business and reactionary interests expect to shape legislation pretty much their own way. History backs them up, and one needn't go back to the scandals of the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover era for evidence. Roll calls during the last few years of rule by the Dixiegop coalition reveal a strong Republican readiness to vote for the wishes of special interests.

IN JUSTICE to the congressmen, it must be admitted the Republican platform on which they were elected calls for much of such subservience. They are pledged, for example, to give away the $40 billion worth of tidelands oil, long sought by the oil lobby, despite three separate Supreme Court rulings that it belongs to all the people and good constitutional grounds for doubting that Congress has the power to do so.

The real test thus seems likely to be not whether the business interests are favored (all odds are they will be) but rather whether the American people get their just share and fair treatment, too.

Here is where sharpest differences exist between Eisenhower supporters and the old guard. And despite Eisenhower's pledges to extend social gains, the leaders of the 83rd Congress have made it clear since the election that they have no intention of doing so. They indicate that big "economies" rather than improvements are in store.

"We certainly won't have any money to extend social welfare programs," Speaker-designate Martin said last month.

To cover up congressional welshing on campaign promises, GOP leaders are expected to follow the smokescreen course used in the "do nothing" 80th Congress. Plans are already drawn for a wide variety of "investigations" intended to back up GOP charges of communism, corruption and waste by Democrats.

Eisenhower has indicated he is opposed to "witch hunts" and indiscriminate smearing of guilty and innocent alike. If he follows through in trying to protect the rights of persons accused, he will run head-on into opposition from members of the smear bund in Congress.

Ike's Influence Gets Big Test Over Filibuster

THE SINCERITY of the new Republican Congress' professed loyalty to the Eisenhower program will be put to the test in the Senate on Jan. 3. Final plans are being drawn for a bi-partisan effort on opening day to bring about Eisenhower's announced wish for a curb on Senate filibusters.

A frontal attack on Senate Rule 22, which makes it virtually impossible to limit debate, is involved. Dixiecrat Senators have used the rule to block civil rights legislation, but it could be directed against other measures.

SOME GOP leaders fear the filibuster might kill essential parts of Eisenhower's program. As a result, a group of Eisenhower Republicans have agreed to join northern Democrats in seeking a new set of rules making it possible to end filibusters by majority vote.

Dixiecrat Senators are expected to fight the move, contending the Senate is a continuing body and that the old rule still applies. Under it, they could filibuster against the rules change itself.

It will then be up to Vice President Barkley, who remains in office until Jan. 20, to rule on the Dixiecrat position. Whichever way he rules, however, there will probably be an appeal. On appeals, debate is limited and the decision is by simple majority vote.

Upon the outcome will ultimately depend future action on the GOP platform promises on civil rights. These backed up Eisenhower's pledge to end segregation in the District of Columbia and called for federal action toward elimination of lynching and the poll tax.

More immediately significant, however, it will be a clear test of Eisenhower's influence over the Senate.

Headline Issues Facing GOP-Controlled 83rd Congress

THE BIG ISSUES and problems that will arise in the 83rd Congress are already clearly evident. Here is a capsule digest of some of the more important ones:

FOREIGN POLICY. War or peace may hang in the balance as the GOP assumes full control of U. S. foreign relations for the first time since before World War II. Election promises to end the war in Korea could bring a new emphasis to Far East affairs at the expense of Europe.

A survey of the new Congress by the Associated Press showed 90% responding want to reduce aid to allies in the struggle against communism. Eisenhower, who played a major part in building Western Europe's defense, will oppose major cutbacks, but European leaders, noting the new leadership of Taft and other isolationists, are worried.

Tariff laws are also due for a revision when the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, cornerstone of the "good neighbor" policy, expires in June. Some U. S. manufacturers are already calling on the GOP to return to "protective" tariffs.

BUDGET AND TAXES. Election promises to lower government spending and reduce taxes have GOP leaders on the spot, and they are already split on tax policy. All but 17c of each dollar is now going for defense, and Pres. Truman has warned major defense cutbacks would be "very dangerous" to national security. Danger is that GOP may meat-ax appropriations without regard for essential services.

Sens. Bridges (N.H.) and Knowland (Calif.) say the budget must be balanced before taxes are cut and this won't be possible before next year. Sens. Dirksen (Ill.) and Schoeppel (Kans.), however, want sharp tax cuts now with death to the excess profits tax next June. Business groups are driving for a federal sales tax to shift most of tax burden to low-income families.

GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION. Eisenhower wants Congress to extend the Reorganization Act so he can "streamline" government agencies. Chairman-elect Hoffman (Mich.) of the House Government Operations Committee, has said he will oppose such authority. It is estimated $5.5 million annually could be saved by reorganization.

LABOR. If Sen. Taft steps down, as he now says, from chairmanship of the Senate Labor Committee, Sen. Smith (N.J.) will take over. This would place both House and Senate Labor Committees under chairmen believed to be more "moderate" than in the 80th Congress. Big Business pressure to "tighten" labor laws in its favor is great, however, and labor has a hard fight ahead.

Big Business groups demand industry-wide bargaining be banned, but biggest danger appears to be that the Fair Labor Standards and Public Contracts Acts will be seriously weakened. Efforts to cut enforcement appropriations can be expected.

PATRONAGE AND CIVIL SERVICE. Job-hungry Republicans demanded lists of non-civil service posts from government agencies immediately after the election. GOP appetites got so bad that the Federal Bar Association set up a special committee to fight plans for "wholesale dismissals of government lawyers."

Because of civil service reforms since the GOP was last in power, only about 5% of all federal jobs aren't under civil service.

POWER DEVELOPMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES. Biggest "robbery" (Pres. Truman's word) which the GOP is pledged to perpetrate is the gift of tidelands oil worth $40 billion to the oil interests. This probably won't satisfy the oil lobby, and new efforts to enact the Kerr Gas Bill are expected, with no veto likely.

The St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project may squeeze through, with the power lobby getting most of the profits. Private power groups, seeking to stop all future federal power development, also want to turn TVA over to private interests.

ECONOMIC CONTROLS AND HOUSING. Led by the men who successfully wrecked price controls, the new Congress is unlikely to enact stronger price controls when the present one expires. Some standby legislation may be forthcoming to protect the Administration if new inflationary pressure arises. There will probably be a fight over continuing federal rent controls, which the real estate lobby is opposing along with continued aid to public housing.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE. Although Republicans are pledged to extend social security and welfare programs, their pledge to cut government spending makes action in the first session unlikely. Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) has announced he will fight for enactment of the principal recommendations of the President's health commission.

Clouded Crystal Ball

What will 1953 bring to the people of America and the world?

Frankly, our crystal ball is just as clouded as yours.

We don't know whether the war in Korea will be, or can be, ended in an honorable peace. We don't know where or when Soviet aggression will next be on exhibit. We don't know whether democracy throughout the free world will use the abundant means at hand to strengthen its institutions.

We don't know whether President-Elect Eisenhower is going to prove a success or a dud.

We don't know whether the appointment of one labor man like Martin Durkin can offset the cast of big business characters in the Cabinet.

We don't know whether Bob Taft—whose influence in the Republican party, we were solemnly assured last July, was at an end—is going to be the same old Taft or some new Taft during the 83rd Congress.

We do know, however, that the year ahead will be an exciting and provocative 12 months for every American.

And we do know that the CIO, having successfully weathered its day of crisis, is steady on the beam, and prepared to work during each of the next 365 days to protect our American democracy, to strengthen our well-being, to improve the lot of the workers of our nation.

So, taking the plunge into the uncertain hours of another January, we say: "Bring on 1953. And a Happy New Year to you all."

A Shoddy Gift

It's a shoddy Christmas gift that the conservative majority in Congress presented to America in the form of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act, which went into effect December 24.

President Truman vetoed that bill, with vigorous words of condemnation. He pointed out that it is full of discriminatory abuses; that it burdens the government with red tape; that its immigration policy is not very sound; and that it will work hardships on aliens and visitors to our shores.

But the Truman veto was over-ridden, in large part through the votes of reactionary Dixiecrats and reactionary Republicans. The effects are already showing up.

Non-Communist maritime unions in western Europe are voicing protest over the detailed questionnaires that foreign seamen must fill out before they may step on American docks—even if only to deliver passengers' baggage off the ship. European travel agents predict that visits here by the people who might want to study our way of life, or do business with us, will be curtailed.

Students of immigration policy agree that the McCarran-Walter Act won't do much to save America from foreign subversion. It does succeed, to a high degree, in making us look ridiculous around the world.

As Commonweal Magazine said, the other day, about this onerous new law, "The inn is large and blessed by God with abundance, but the caretakers can find little room for those outside the gates."

We'd better fix up our immigration statutes without delay.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes.

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss (on leave), Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XV December 29, 1952 No. 52

Forecast: Foggy

In Other Words—

Our Stake In A Strong UN

America's enlightened self-interest demands it remain in the United Nations, says A. A. Berle, Jr., former high State Dept. official, in an article digested from The Reporter magazine attacking anti-United Nations forces.

By A. A. BERLE, JR.

A CAMPAIGN, first to push the United Nations out of the United States, and then pull the United States out of the United Nations, is now well developed.

It is still covert—the full battery has not been unmasked. But it is clear enough that before long one bloc of American politicians will reveal its true aim of destroying the United Nations, if it can, in a burst of isolationist nationalism.

This writer, no collector of stardust in international affairs, recognizes that the public opinion which supported the U. S. government in organizing the UN was moved by sentiment, aspiring toward a mighty dream. Appeal was made to the straining, eternal, and eternally disappointed hope of the American public that the world could be so governed as to avoid perpetual fear of war and periodic mass slaughter.

Well, it now appears that the hope is not to be immediately realized. From resulting disillusionment comes a return to self-seeking nationalism, and such bitterness can be exploited by politicians. So, say the new flag-wavers, let's give up the United Nations as an impractical, un-American dream.

Cold analysis indicates that these new isolationists may be quite as dangerous to the safety of the U. S. as are Communist conspirators. The case rests not on stardust but on the implacable arithmetic of present reality.

The U. S., to be safe and well off, must work in some sort of composite of many nations besides itself. The question is not whether it moves within the framework of a league of nations. The only question is what kind of a league of nations it must be.

Today a plane can take off from Europe, circle over the United States, and return to base without refueling. Tomorrow, we expect to have atomic-powered airplanes capable of almost unlimited range—and so do the Russians. We might decide not to commit our armies on the far side either of the Atlantic or the Pacific, and to pound away with airplanes based at convenient points on this side of the ocean or elsewhere. So we could. But so could the Russians.

In this hideous long-range artillery duel, fought with atomic bombs (probably H-bombs), the U. S. might arrange not to lose the war. It could hardly arrange to win. Both sides would come out of it wounded beyond imaginable horror. But the Communists would be betting 800 million lives against the Americas' 225 million, and they are just the kind of people to reckon coldly on losing 100 million of their own people if they can kill, maim, or immobilize 100 million Americans. The result could leave them masters of the world.

If, on the other hand, America is part of a composite of nations equal to or greater than half the world, that bitter exchange would not be profitable by Communist reckoning. I respect Communist strategic thinking, little as I like it. They play to win. Unless they see ultimate victory, they do not start. As long as the non-Communist world has organization and reasonable probability of unified action—as much unified action as the UN developed in Korea—the Communists' arithmetic will not take them into a general war, granted that our armament is reasonably strong.

AT THE moment, the campaign against the UN is the primary property of a lunatic fringe of the extreme right, abetted by a few men who ought to know better, and who are constructing "front" organizations taking in groups of people who object to specific uses of the UN. But it is clear that the real objective of these groups is a major political movement to end American membership in the United Nations.

Throughout much of history, the dream of a world ordering of affairs which shall maintain peace has been a dominant ideal. Those periods in history when no such dream found effective expression were periods of sheer, stark anarchy. This is not to idealize. It is to say that historically a peace system, however imperfect, is better than no peace system at all. A dream pursued does lead to some reality, though reality falls infinitely short of the dream. The groups that are now fighting the UN ought to be told, with great bluntness, that their fight injures, weakens, and endangers the U. S.

1952—A Year That Could Have Been Worse

By GERVASE N. LOVE

It's on its way out now, is 1952. Nothing that happens in the couple of days left can make it good, for it just wasn't a good year. But not everything about it was bad.

True, it was a year of death and other losses, of higher prices and strikes, of handouts for big business and injunctions for the workers, of international tensions and of a shift in the political thinking of many Americans. But it also was a year of advances for labor, of better contracts settled peacefully and higher wages, of signs of a new political maturity among workers, of growth of the international labor movement.

Here are some of the things that made it what it was:

JANUARY started with the CIO Steelworkers, unable to negotiate new contracts with the basic industry's Big Four, meeting in a special convention in Atlantic City and voting to postpone a strike. It also started with thousands of CIO members laid off because of faulty planning in the shift from civilian to defense production, and with further job cuts looming in soft goods industries.

Congress returned to tackle some of the most important issues ever to confront the nation—and established a grim record of subservience to the wealthy and the special interests, and of disregard for the great mass of Americans.

FEBRUARY saw the Senate vote to continue its noxious Rule 22, which permits a minority to block a vote on any subject and has prevented action on Fair Employment Practices legislation. The Dixiegops renewed a long and bitter attack on price and rent controls, public housing and other measures essential to the welfare of the general public.

Unemployment continued to increase, especially among Auto Workers, Clothing Workers and Textile Workers. In the latter industry, owners were moving more and more factories from North to South, leaving virtual ghost communities behind. Dr. George W. Taylor was appointed disputes director under the new CIO organizational disputes arbitration program.

MARCH winds blew cold and chill on lengthening lines of laid-off workers as the BLS cost of living index hit an all-time high, relief rolls grew, and Congress weighed legislation to re-fill depleted unemployment compensation funds.

The Wage Stabilization Board proposed a settlement in the steel dispute: a 23c pay raise package, union shop in a form to be negotiated, lower southern differential, better deals on holidays, vacations, shift differentials and Sunday work. The union accepted. Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson attacked it as a threat to the economy.

APRIL saw the steel industry, acting in unison, reject it. Wilson quit in a huff, and the steel union set a strike deadline for midnight Apr. 8. Pres. Truman seized the industry 90 minutes before the scheduled walkout, denouncing management's "greedy" price demands. The industry got an injunction against the seizure, and on Apr. 29 the strike got under way as a long court fight began.

Some 70,000 Communications Workers won $4 to $7 pay raises from Bell Telephone and Western Electric after strikes that affected service in all but five states during the month. About 40,000 Woodworkers struck 726 employers in the five northwestern states, Clothing Workers extended major agreements because of a slump, Auto Workers primed themselves for a fight for the guaranteed annual wage at an educational conference, and 100,000 CIO, AFL and independent oil workers, after months of futile negotiations and three postponements, ended the month by striking.

MAY was barely under way when the steel strike ended, on May 2. The U.S. Supreme Court stayed the lower court injunction against Pres. Truman's seizure while it considered the matter, and Truman called both sides to the White House for bargaining that proved fruitless. The Steelworkers held their convention in Philadelphia, warned the industry that if they got no contract there would be no work; the same week Irving S. Olds, U.S. Steel board chairman, retired at 65 on a pension of $64,399 a year. The industry was insisting on a price increase of $12 a ton if it were to meet WSB recommendations.

A PICTURE OF THIS.—Biggest grin among more than 600,000 CIO Steelworkers belonging to Carmelo Startari, worker in a Pittsburgh mill, after mid-summer settlement of the long steel strike.

CIO Clothing Workers and Textile Workers laid plans to fight unemployment at their conventions, CIO Packinghouse Workers voted to demand pay increases and a guaranteed annual wage. Striking CIO, AFL and independent oil workers settled when the WSB set a 15c an hour ceiling on pay boosts.

JUNE'S second day found Steelworkers on strike—until settlement this time—after the Supreme Court ruled Pres. Truman's seizure of the mills unconstitutional. Truman rejected as "unfair" requests of Senate and House to use a Taft-Hartley Act injunction.

Congress, rushing to adjourn before the political conventions, reversed its killing of a $5 a month increase in social security payments after hearing from the folks at home. It passed a sadly weakened controls bill with more holes than ever, but continued wage controls unweakened; stripped the WSB of its disputes powers and replaced its 18 members with a 12-man board subject to Senate approval. CIO and AFL joined in a plea to free Italian unions to work together for the good of democracy. The CIO Communications Workers set up a $12 million defense fund to back demands on the Bell System, the CIO Electrical Workers a $1 million fund to fight General Electric.

JULY was the month of national political conventions. Republicans practically ignored labor spokesmen, nominated Gen. Dwight Eisenhower over Sen. Taft (O.). Democrats gave labor a full hearing; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of CWA-CIO sat on their platform committee, many labor men were delegates. They nominated Gov. Adlai Stevenson (Ill.).

The steel strike was on the front pages most of the month. On July 24 Pres. Truman called top leaders of both sides to the White House and told them to end the walkout; seven hours later they had an agreement with union pay proposals, a modified union shop and, for the companies, a $5.20 a ton price hike Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam said was given because the industry "held a loaded gun at the government's head." Some northern Textile Workers suffered pay cuts under arbitration awards.

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions met in Berlin, with CIO represented, and mapped further steps to organize the world. CIO Brewery Workers in convention voted an unending fight against AFL raids.

AUGUST was the month in which the CIO formally endorsed Stevenson's candidacy, pushed registration drives in all parts of the country, and began pointing toward the November elections. The Glass Workers held their convention, and negotiations on steel contracts based on the White House settlement got under way. Rent control was a major issue in many communities, and the CIO's first television venture was winning plaudits.

The CIO Rubber Workers won a 10c pay increase and other contract improvements peacefully from many employers, large and small, and after a two-week strike at Goodrich. CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers replaced Pres. Martin Wagner with Elwood Swisher at the annual convention.

SEPTEMBER opened with the usual Labor Day celebrations with a PAC angle. In Detroit, Stevenson called for a "completely new labor law" to replace T-H. CIO Political Action Committees built up full steam for the election, and many internationals formally endorsed the top Democratic candidates.

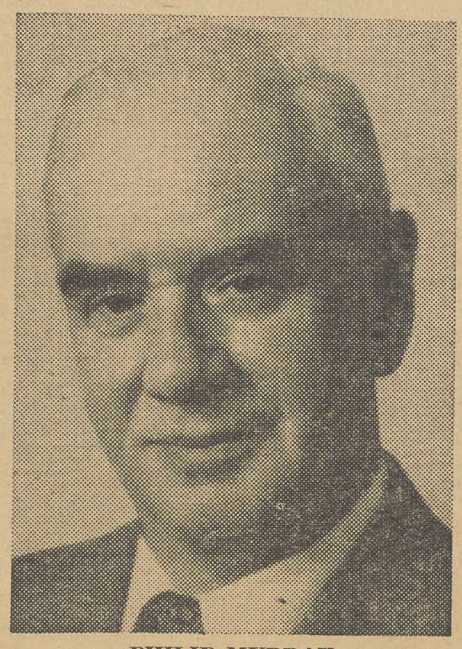
The IUE-CIO settled with Westinghouse for increases of 7.5 to 14c an hour, threatened to strike at General Electric as negotiations proved in vain. The veteran Cyrus W. Ching retired as chief of the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service, was replaced by David Cole, arbitrator. CIO Rubber Workers reelected Pres. L. S. Buckmaster; Oil Workers offered no opposition to top officers, and Woodworkers voted political action to protect contract gains.

OCTOBER and political action were synonymous for the CIO, which reported more CIO members were registered than ever before in history. CIO Packinghouse Workers won 14.5c in a pattern-setting Armour agreement. CIO Shipbuilding Workers proved in convention that it had bounced back from low membership caused by unemployment, reelected top officers; IUE-CIO convention also reelected top officers, increased per capita tax and laid plans to force General Electric to deal decently with it. Some 25,000 Furniture Workers got 12 to 13c hikes.

NOVEMBER was a month of mourning as well as of elections. Philip Murray, president of the CIO and the Steelworkers, died in a San Francisco hotel on Nov. 9, a week before the Naitonal CIO convention was to open in Los Angeles. The convention was postponed. The CIO presidency was left vacant until the convention, and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald became acting president of the Steelworkers. On Nov. 17, AFL Pres. William Green died in Coshocton, O.; he was succeeded by AFL Sec.-Treas. George Meany.

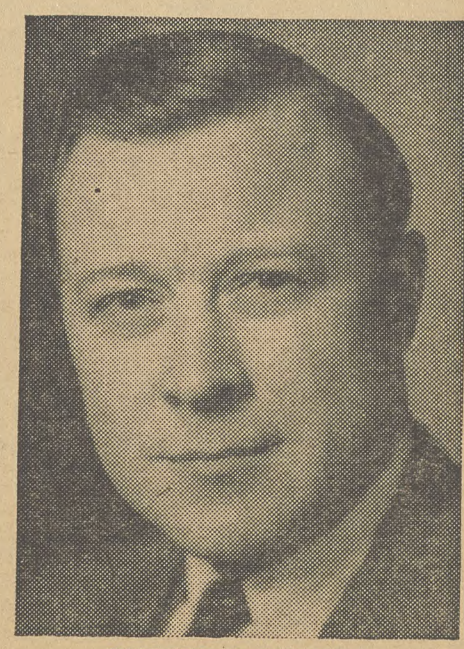
November was also the month when Eisenhower defeated Stevenson in a GOP landslide; both branches of Congress went Republican, with some friends of labor salvaged, others defeated, and a good measure of satisfaction over the defeat of a group of diehard reactionary Republicans. Surveys shower that CIO members generally voted as the CIO-PAC suggested—but their wives didn't.

DECEMBER opened with the CIO convention in Atlantic City. When it ended, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers was the new president, and a strong program for continued advances was drawn up. A memorial service was held in memory of Philip Murray, and a memorial to him was approved. Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey were reelected.



PHILIP MURRAY

MOURNING STEELWORKERS



WALTER P. REUTHER

The death of CIO's and the Steelworkers' president as winter began brought a minute of mourning in the mills. Then CIO's convention elected Walter P. Reuther, head of the Auto Workers, as president to head the "new leadership team."

Yanks On Korean Front Thank CIO For CARE Gift Packages

FROM AMERICAN soldiers on the front lines in Korea and from homes created to house war orphans, the CIO Community Services Committee is receiving almost daily letters of thanks.

The thanks are for the CARE packages, purchased through the voluntary contributions of CIO members and rushed to Korea, Dir. Leo Perlis reported.

"I am sure your packages couldn't have gone any further up front," Sgt. Robert C. Newman wrote expressing the thanks of E company, 180th Infantry Regiment, 45th Division.

Newman, a former member of Local 72, UAW-CIO in Kenosha, Wis., says, "Where E company ends, enemy territory starts."

Thanking the CIO "for your kindness," the sergeant noted, "something a little different than army chow is really welcome."

Letters from chaplains, who distribute the packages, are regularly received by the CIO Community Services Committee.

Chaplain Earl S. Bloxham, who is responsible for several units in the 2d Infantry Division Artillery, reported distributing the CARE packages to the 37th Field Artillery Battalion.

This outfit, he wrote, "recently fired round 555,555 against the enemy." "No other unit in the history of the U. S. Army has ever fired this many rounds," he noted with pride.

"You are able to see," he added, "that these parcels were given to men who have been in the thick of the fighting."

"THE MEN," the chaplain concluded, "are most appreciative of this thoughtfulness on the part of you and the 6 million members you represent."

Lieut.-Col. Henry L. Gillenwaters, chaplain for the 2d Infantry Division, was another to express appreciation. Writing on behalf of the officers and enlisted men of that division, which has seen hard fighting in Korea, the colonel thanked the CIO for "your thoughtfulness and assistance in maintaining high morale among the personnel of UN forces."

From "Willie and Joe," a couple of GI's, the Community Services Committee received a touching "token of our deepest appreciation" for "a small ray of light from home" which "warms our hearts."

"When we all feel lost and everything seems black," they wrote, "a gesture of such compassion proves that somewhere, someone remembers the soldier and the shining goal for which he strives."

"Here in a strange and far off land," they continued, "the horror of war and the ominous presence of death, often obscure the issue for which we suffer innumberable privations. When citizens of staunch and stalwart character of which your organization is comprised are willing to stand beside us, we'll fight to the last bullet, the last drop of blood, the last breath of life to protect the sacred heritage for which you stand."

From I. H. Shim, director of the AAA Children's home, established to care for 300 war orphans, came a letter filled with gratitude expressed in broken English, which did not hide the director's deep feeling.

"Over the hundred of thousand of miles wave," he wrote, "we have received your holy, great relief packages that was donated for Korean war suferes through the American soldier."

KOREAN WAR VETERAN lauds CIO campaign for CARE packages. Sgt. Ralph L. Juliot, a CIO Steelworker from Clairton, Pa., confers with Leo Perlis (left), CIO Community Services Committee director, and Paul Comly French, CARE director.

GI CARE Gifts Honor Murray

Two hundred and 17 fighting men and women in Korea will shortly receive CARE comfort packages in memory of the late Philip Murray, the CIO Community Service Committee reported last week.

Dir. Leo Perlis said all future CARE packages sent to fighting forces in Korea or to Korean civilians who are the victims of war will be in memory of the late president of the CIO.

Carey Lashes Anti-Semitism In Prague Purge Trials

THE ANTI-SEMITISM displayed by the Russian Communists in the purge trials of 14 top Czechoslovak government officials—11 of them Jews—came under bitter attack last week at a labor protest rally in New York sponsored by the Jewish Labor Committee.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, one of the principal speakers, called for the establishment of an international labor group "to investigate the growing evidence that the Kremlin has deliberately fostered and propagated anti-Semitic programs in Russia, in eastern Europe and elsewhere."

His proposal was made after he had charged Russian Soviet leaders with planning the murder of the 2.5 million Jews trapped behind the iron curtain. He also detailed evidence of Soviet anti-Semitism over the last decade—starting with the 1942 executions of Victor Alter and Henrick Ehrlich, Polish labor leaders who were Jews.

At that time, he recalled, at a similar meeting, he also called for an international labor investigation of the killings. The Russians, he recounted, refused to permit it.

Russian anti-Semitism is demonstrated by more than the anti-Jewish character of the Prague trials, Carey declared.

"Proof lies also in the programs of Jewish persecution over recent years in other satellite countries and in Russia itself," he said.

"IT LIES in the vast propaganda campaign designed to prove that all democratic nations are tools of an 'international Jewish-Zionist conspiracy.' It lies in the Kremlin's undisguised hostility to the Republic of Israel in diplomatic relations. It lies in Soviet Russia's . . . encouragement of Moslem violence against Jews wherever the two are neighbors."

In a telegram, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, convalescing from an operation, regretted he could not atttend, "for all who cherish democratic justice must clearly and firmly condemn the decadence, cynicism and moral bankruptcy inherent in the anti-Semitism of the Prague trials."

"It is a complete carbon copy of the Hitlerite anti-Semitism which the free, democratic world had hoped and prayed was destroyed when that evil dictatorship was smashed," his wire said. "Today, this same despicable appeal to mass prejudice has been resurrected by the very government which once condemned it in tones of horror."

USA Nominates McDonald, Thimmes, Abel To Top Posts

BALLOTING for top officers of the CIO Steelworkers was reduced to a formality last week when the nominating deadline passed with no opposition to the incumbents in sight.

Named with the certainty of being elected to succeed the late Philip Murray, president of both the Steelworkers and the CIO, was Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald, who has been acting president since Murray's death. Renominated without opposition was Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, while Dist. Dir. I. W. Abel, Canton, O., was slated to succeed McDonald as secretary-treasurer. The USA-CIO executive board had endorsed the trio.

Members of the union will pick their officers in a nationwide referendum on Feb. 10. They also will fill district directorships, nominations for which were still being compiled by USA-CIO tellers.

McDonald has been secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers since 1936, when it was set up as the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. A one-time steel mill worker, he had served as Murray's secretary when the latter was vice president of the Mine Workers. He has been a member of the National CIO Executive Board for several years, and has served on many important National CIO committees.

WSB OKs Fringe Benefits For UPWA

The Wage Stabilization Commission has approved fringe gains negotiated by the CIO Packinghouse Workers and three major employers—Armour & Co., Swift & Co. and the Cudahy Packing Co. Action followed previous approval of a 4c an hour general wage increase, job reclassifications and reduction of the differential in women's rates.

The commission authorized payments ranging from 1 to 3.5c an hour to reduce certain geographical differentials; increased the night differential from 7c to 9c an hour, and time and a half pay for Saturdays as such, or for another designated day for employes who regularly work on Saturdays.

Congress Of Industrial Organizations

Financial Statement
(October 1, 1951—September 30, 1952)

(Editor's note: Below are printed excerpts from the detailed audit of the books of the Congress of Industrial Organizations for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1952. These excerpts show the organization's total resources and liabilities as of Sept. 30, 1952, and its income and expenditure accounts for the year ending on that date.)

STATEMENT NO. 1

STATEMENT OF RESOURCES AND LIABILITIES

(As of the end of the fiscal year September 30, 1952)

Total Resources	$2,218,713.07
Total Liabilities	98,566.63
Net Worth—Represented by the excess of Resources over Liabilities	2,120,146.44
Net Worth—as of September 30, 1951	1,477,963.75
Net Increase—October 1, 1951 to September 30, 1952	$ 642,182.69

STATEMENT NO. 2

CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

STATEMENT OF INCOME AND EXPENDITURES

OCTOBER 1, 1951 TO SEPTEMBER 30, 1952

INCOME
Per Capita Taxes from National Unions and Organizing Committees for general puposes		$4,612,588.11
Special Per Capita Taxes earmarked for Southern Organizing Campaign
Current Collections	$170,369.41
Add: Decrease in Reserve	85,577.34	255,946.75
Special Per Capita Taxes earmarked for Special Organizing (Current Coll.)	$170,362.45
Add: Decrease in Reserve	375,506.64	545,869.09
Per Capita dues and initiation fees from Local Industrial Unions		335,379.61
Dues from Industrial Union Councils		6,168.75
Charter Fees		525.00
Sales of CIO News		89,236.13
Sales of Educational and Organizational Supplies		41,121.94
Interest Income from Investment Securities		8,057.10
TOTAL INCOME		$5,894,862.48
EXPENSES AND CHARGES
Salaries, Travel Expense, and Subsidies for Affiliated Organizations		$ 816,660.30
Departmental Expenses		1,450,282.48
Contributions		168,841.67
Subsidies for Local Industrial Unions		55,014.50
Supplies for Local Industrial Unions		8,081.28
Regional and Field Offices
Salaries	$680,713.45
Travel Expenses	585,530.32
Rent, Telephone, Telegraph and other office expenses	183,760.31	$1,450,004.08
Southern Organizing Campaign		903,795.48
Provision for possible losses on Notes Receivable		400,000.00
TOTAL EXPENSES AND CHARGES		$5,252,679.79
Excess of Income over Expenses and Charges, October 1, 1951 to September 30, 1952		$ 642,182.69

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE YEAR just ending brought a great loss to both the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor. On November 9, 1952, the officers and members of CIO were shocked by the sudden death of our beloved president, Philip Murray. Three weeks later the American Federation of Labor suffered a loss in the death of William Green.

I had ridden out with Pres. Murray on his last journey, to San Francisco, and was with him the night before his death when he addressed a conference of Steelworkers of the western states.

Philip Murray was elected to the presidency of CIO on Friday, Nov. 22, 1940.

In accepting the nomination he said, in part, "I give to you from this public platform my life, my being, my energy and such little wisdom as God Almighty may have given to me."

Pres. Murray kept that pledge and in doing so brought betterment of life to millions of American workers and their families and raised the hopes of working men and women all over the world.

The twelve years he served as CIO president will go down as among the most crucial years in our nation's history. A little more than a year after he assumed his great burden, our country was plunged into a terrible world war. With our allies we came through victorious. Pres. Murray set our ship of state on the right course prior to the attack on Pearl Harbor and led us through those dark days from 1941 to 1945.

* * *

Since then a new totalitarian menace has arisen to threaten world peace and the freedom of all men. Philip Murray took a leading part in forming a worldwide free trade union movement to resist that Communist menace and to bring a new measure of security, freedom and justice to people everywhere.

In the early hours of Nov. 9, when Philip Murray died, he knew that he had kept the promise made twelve years before. He had given his life, his being, his energy and the wisdom God had given him, in the service of his fellow men. The people of America are richer for his having lived and served. History will record him as one of the greatest men of our time—humble, imaginative, courageous.

A new era has begun for our movement. This month the CIO convention elected a new president, Walter P. Reuther. The writer, after a constitutional amendment, was elected executive vice-president following the first contest and roll call vote in our movement, a vote which demonstrated the virility and soundness Philip Murray had bequeathed it.

We are all united in our determination to build even stronger and nobler the organization he entrusted to us. We will never forget the words of Philip Murray at the AFL's 55th Annual Convention, in Atlantic City, in October, 1935:

"Have we reached the day in our history when this great trade union movement is unwilling to accept its full measure of responsibility and move forward—toward the accomplishment of higher ideals and better days for our people?"

In that spirit of endless striving for continuing improvement, we will push forward. Despite any opposition that may confront us, we will continue to use the resources of this great trade union movement to advance the cause of working men and women.

We will explore every honorable pathway to organic unity for the whole labor movement, but we will never compromise the right of American workers to find the solution to their economic problems through industrial unionism.

* * *

We shall play our part as a constructive force in the domestic affairs of our nation, supporting those vested with the responsibilities of government when we believe them to be right. But we will continue to resist those who would turn back the clock of progress whenever and wherever we find them.

We shall search for and support sincere movements for world peace. In the interest of peace and justice, we will continue to strive for brotherhood among all nations, creeds and races. We will resist every attempt—whatever its source—to enslave men's bodies and minds.

To all the officers and members of CIO and affiliated unions I extend sincere wishes for a happy, prosperous and successful New Year. In memory of Philip Murray, let us continue, with renewed fervor, his work of building a vigorous and progressive labor movement.

* * *

Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports two more representation election victories for the CIO Steelworkers: Graver Boiler & Tank Co., Sand Springs, Okla., USA 39, AFL 19; McNamara Boiler & Tank Co., Tulsa, Okla., USA 123, AFL 27, challenged 5. USA Dir. Charles E. Smith of Sub-District 37 supervised these elections.

Reg. Dir. Clarence Palmer reports that the Steelworkers won a certification election at the Cobalt Smelter, Garfield, Utah, by a vote of 46 to 8.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the CIO Woodworkers won a representation election at the Olin Industries, Frost Lumber Div., Shreveport, La., by the following vote: eligible 249, IWA-CIO 200, no union 17, challenged 7, void 3.

Child Labor Death, Accident Toll Climbs Because Of Legal Loopholes

ONE OF THE most tragic results of the inadequate legal protection and weak enforcement of state and federal child labor laws is the high toll of children killed and injured in occupational accidents, according to the 1952 report of the National Child Labor Committee.

The exact number of young workers who suffer severe accidents on the job is not known for the country as a whole, because few states compile accident data by age groups, the committee says. But reports from states that do keep such records indicate that the total figure is high.

California, for example, reported disabling industrial injuries in 1950 to 1676 children under 18 years. Of these 101 were under 14. Two of the eight children fatally injured were under 16. New York reported 1152 compensation cases involving minors under 18, six of them fatal, and two of them permanent total injuries.

THE COMMITTEE found, in analyzing census figures, that more than two million school-age boys and girls are now working full or part-time in industry and agriculture.

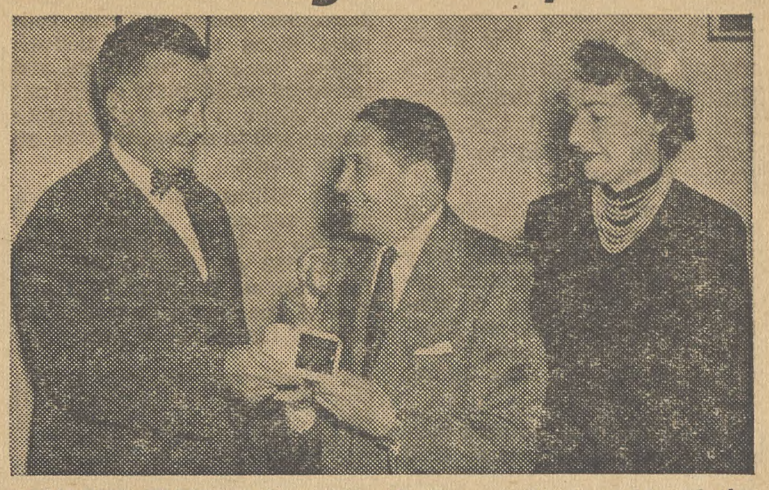
Many of these are employed illegally, as records of the federal Wage-Hour Div. show that violations of child labor laws are frequent. Nearly 10% of the 33,000 establishments investigated by the government were found to be employing minors in violation of the federal child labor law.

More than 7000 children were found to be employed illegally, 2500 of them under 14, and 321 under nine years. Fifteen hundred were 16 or 17-year-olds employed in hazardous jobs.

HIGHEST percentage of underage children doing dangerous work were found in logging operations where the legal age minimum is 18 years. Agriculture, which has a 16-year age minimum for employment during school hours, came next. State labor departments also report extensive violations.

The worst child labor abuses in general occur in agriculture, the committee reported, with the children of migrant workers suffering most of all.

"The large numbers employed, the early age at which they work, their neglected schooling and general living conditions are in bitter contrast to this country's traditional concern for the welfare of its children," the report stated.



BRONZE BUST of Franklin D. Roosevelt, founder of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, is awarded Greater New York CIO for its support of March of Dimes. From left, Ellis Van Riper, drive chairman; Robert Weinberg, March of Dimes, and Mrs. Ruth Cohen, recent polio victim and wife of a CIO Transport Worker.

Draft Rejections, School Lag Back Child Labor Curbs

PROPONENTS of improved educational opportunities and strengthened curbs on child labor have been handed strong ammunition in a report of armed forces rejections during the first year of the Korean war.

These statistics revealed that 19.2% of the 1.5 million draftees examined by Selective Service were rejected because of inability to pass the Armed Forces Qualification Test.

To pass the test, a registrant must be able to read, do simple sums and adjust himself to unfamiliar testing situations. "While a man without formal schooling may pass the test if he has superior ability," the U. S. Labor Dept. says, success in the tests is related "to his total educational experience."

The rejection rates showed a tremendous variation from state to state, ranging from a low of 2.1% in Utah to a high of 58.3% in South Carolina, where educational standards and living standards are among the lowest in the nation.

The 10 southeastern states, hotbed of the labor-hating, Negro-hating Klan, rang up the highest rate of rejections, with percentages running from 31.7 in Florida to the South Carolina high.

Aliens Advised On Registration

Some four million aliens living in the United States must notify the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization of their current addresses by Jan. 31.

The reminder was issued by Atty. Gen. James McGranery, who noted failure to file was punishable by fine or imprisonment. Forms for making the reports are available at any post-office or immigration and naturalization office.

Order For Your Union

Murray Memorial Now On Records

Recordings of the CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention memorial session to the late Philip Murray are available through the CIO Publicity Dept.

These recordings are available in 15-minute and 30-minute productions and are suitable for radio broadcasts on public service time and for use in union meetings. They include memorial address of Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson and those of other speakers.

Recordings are available in sizes and speeds for professional record players, tape recorders and home record players. Orders can be placed by clipping and mailing this coupon:

CIO Publicity Dept.
718 Jackson Place, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the Philip Murray memorial record as follows (check type recording desired):

	15-minute	30-minute
Broadcast transcriptions
(33⅓ rpm on a 16-inch disc)	☐ $6.50	$13.00 ☐
Tape recordings	☐ $6.00	$10.00 ☐
Home record players
(78 rpm)	☐ $8.00	$16.00 ☐
(33⅓ rpm)	☐ $6.00	$12.00 ☐

☐ Check Inclosed ☐ Bill Us Later

Name.....

Address.....

City..... Zone..... State.....

Organization.....

Oliver Resigns MSA Post To Become Reuther Aide

ROBERT OLIVER, for the past two years a top labor adviser at the government's Mutual Security Administration, has rejoined the CIO staff as an assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Oliver moved into Washington CIO headquarters on Dec. 15. Pending Reuther's recovery from a recent gall-bladder operation in Detroit, he is handling a number of general functions. More detailed assignments will be announced in the future, it is understood.

The CIO official entered government service in August, 1950 as executive assistant to Clinton S. Golden, former steel union vice-president who was then one of the MSA's two labor advisers. After Golden's retirement from that post, Oliver was named to succeed him.

During his two-year stint with the government, Oliver practically commuted between Washington and Europe. He was a strong supporter of, and helped to develop the MSA Production Assistance program. That program is designed to introduce expanding economy principles into the restrictive economies of many European countries, and thus raise living standards through higher levels of production and increased productivity shared out to workers through higher wages, and to consumers through lower prices.

Bob Oliver embarked on a union career at an early age. In 1933 he became a member of Local 333 of the Oil Workers International Union at Baytown, Tex. A year later, he was president of his local. A year after that, in 1935, he became head of the East Harris County Central Union, AFL, and a vice-president of the Texas AFL body.

ROBERT OLIVER

SINCE 1937, Oliver has worked with the CIO. He was a field representative assisting and directing organizing campaigns for the oil workers, the aluminum workers—now a section of the steel union—and the Textile Workers.

In 1940, Oliver was director of TWUA's Carpet Division. In 1942, he was named the union's Washington representative, and a year later was appointed director of the important southern cotton division of TWUA.

During 1944-45, Oliver served with the Army in the European Theater. Post-war, he was named regional director for the CIO in Texas, and later also became state director for the CIO southern organizing campaign. He left those two jobs to take over the key labor job with the Marshall Plan agency.

Oliver is married and has three children.

12-29

IUE Raise Tops Red UE In GE Plants

BECAUSE its officers and negotiating committee showed foresight, the CIO Electrical Workers have won a higher increase for members in General Electric Co. plants than the Communist-controlled United Electrical Workers.

The UE signed a contract with GE early last fall, sacrificing two paid holidays in 1953 for its members. The IUE-CIO held out and settled for wages on a different basis.

When the Bureau of Labor Statistics' price index for Nov. 15 was announced, the total IUE wage increase became 5.27%, compared to 5.16% for the UE, which had used an earlier base date. Based on straight time, the average IUE pay hike was 8.7c an hour, compared to 8.5c for UE; based on average hourly earnings, IUE members will get an average of 9c retroactive to Oct. 13. The IUE increase ranges from 7.5 to 14c and covers 74,000 employes.

At the Westinghouse Corp. a boost of 7.5 to 14c for 50,000 employes, retroactive to Oct. 1, was approved. The IUE-CIO asked both firms to pay the retroactive due before Christmas. Westinghouse promptly agreed to pay $25 on account. GE announced it would pay under its UE agreement, but not the IUE-CIO contract. IUE Pres. James B. Carey promptly charged GE Vice Pres. Lemuel R. Boulware with "a petty imitation of Scrooge."

U. S. Slams Door On New Immigrants

THE McCARRAN Act, the country's new legislation governing immigration and naturalization, became effective Dec. 24—a sad Christmas present for the hopeful in other nations who dream of coming to the United States.

The act is one of the longest on the statute books—and one of the worst. It contains 120 pages of small type in the Federal Register. After a year of study, experts of the U. S. Immigration and Naturalization Service have compiled 123 pages of rules and regulations.

They still don't know all the answers, they say. The courts will have to clarify some of the provisions.

THE ACT was strongly opposed by the CIO because it represented a step backward in the country's immigration and naturalization policy. It was just as vigorously opposed by Pres. Truman, who vetoed it. Isolationists and reactionaries, prodded by manufacturers and financiers who are taking an increasingly dim view of immigration, passed it over his veto. President-elect Eisenhower has promised to support changes in it.

The new law repealed all immigration statutes ever before enacted by Congress. The National CIO convention, in a resolution, pointed out that it constitutes an even less liberal immigration policy than previous laws.

The resolution predicted that fewer immigrants will enter the country than under the previous act, which was passed in 1924. It denounced the continuation of the national origins quota system with its discrimination against all but people from northern Europe. Asiatics, though given token quotas and made eligible for naturalization, are still discriminated against, while new discriminations were enacted against Negroes.

It bars from the country many former totalitarians regardless of their later views and conduct, and, said the resolution, "makes second class citizens out of all naturalized citizens."

There Weren't Any Empty Stockings For These Firms

SANTA CLAUS dropped lush, fat profits into the huge stockings of America's industrial giants all through 1952, the Wall Street Journal has reported in a compilation of the profit picture for 727 companies.

For the first nine months, most of these companies showed profit increases over 1951. Some of the profit increases were:

	Increase over 1951
Floor coverings	222.1%
Radio and television	124.3%
Aircraft manufacturers	96.7%
Electrical equipment	94.7%
Railroads	60.4%
Utilities	27.2%
Building materials	26.9%
Airlines	25.2%
Food products	22.8%
Autos and equipment	20.7%
Rubber	19.9%
Mining and metals	18.9%

CIO CONTEST WINNER gets a Hollywood greeting. Gayle Larson (left), winner of a Kansas CIO Council talent contest, meets screen actress Joan Leslie. Miss Larson, a singer, won over 354 entries.

'Gas' Consumers Face New Hikes

FIRMS IN the big international oil cartel now facing charges of the Federal Trade Commission that they conspired to control world petroleum production, fix prices and restrict competition are out after a multimillion-dollar ceiling price increase for gasoline and fuel oil on the West Coast.

Strangely enough, government agencies appear to be doing all in their power to help them get it although the move would put up to an estimated $100 million a year more into the pockets of the cartel. All of this would come from the pockets of West Coast consumers in the form of higher prices.

Eventually, however, the price hike probably would spread across the country.

Under the recommended hike of 58.8c per barrel for gasoline, for example, the price to consumers would shoot up nearly 1.5c per gallon. Varying hikes also would apply to crude oil, kerosene, asphalt, fuel oil, and other petroleum products.

Among the chief backers of the price rise are Standard Oil of California and General Petroleum, wholly owned subsidiary of Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., which was named in the cartel charges along with the former firm. While virtually every California oil firm is backing the price boost, oil industry spokesmen estimate that nearly half the increased income would go to the cartel firms.

The hike, which has been recommended by the industry-staffed Petroleum Administration for Defense, originally was tentatively scheduled as a Christmas Eve present to the companies. The West Coast Petroleum Wholesale Industry Advisory Committee of the Office of Price Stabilization—also made up of industry spokesmen—met in Los Angeles Dec. 15 and 16 and recommended the boosts.

But last week, when the plan became known, OPS announced that because of the "well recognized interests" of other government agencies as well as consumers, it was giving the recommendations further study and that no action would be taken for "several weeks." A delay for that time will, in itself, save West Coast consumers several million dollars.

IN RECOMMENDING the price hike for the West Coast oil industry, neither the PAD nor the OPS advisory committee referred to the fact that oil companies are the biggest benefactors under the depletion allowance loopholes in the tax laws. These are estimated by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) to net them more than $600 million a year.

On top of that, the oil industry has been one of the big users of the rapid tax amortization "racket" which permits them to write excess profits off over a five-year period in the form of added plant facilities. Last October Standard Oil of California was handed one of these write-off certificates for a new refinery at El Segundo costing $27,270,000.

No one mentioned, either, that the California oil firms are expecting soon to be the recipients of a major share of the $40 billion "gift" the Republicans have promised to vote to the oil industry in the form of a "states rights" tidelands oil bill.

Mayor Praises CIO

Seven CIO local unions in Hoboken, N. J., recently raised $602 in the city's cancer drive, for which they won the praise of Mayor DeSapio.